COMMISSION

TO INQUIRE INTO THE

EXISTENCE OF CORRUPT PRACTICES AT THE LAST ELECTION AND AT PREVIOUS ELECTIONS OF MEMBERS TO SIT IN PARLIAMENT FOR THE BOROUGH OF BRIDGWATER.

VICTORIA R.

Victoria, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith:

To Our trusty and well-beloved Edwin Plumer Price, Esquire, one of Our Counsel, Thomas Chisholm Anstey, Esquire, Barrister-at-Law, and Charles Edward Coleridge, Esquire, Barrister-at-Law, greeting:

Whereas the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, have by a joint Address humbly represented unto Us that Sir Colin Blackburn, Knight, one of the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, and one of the Judges selected for the Trial of Election Petitions pursuant to the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, has reported to the House of Commons, that there is reason to believe that Bribery extensively prevailed at the last Election for the Borough of Bridgwater, and have humbly prayed that We will be graciously pleased to cause Inquiry to be made pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Parliament passed in the sixteenth year of Our reign, intituled "An Act to provide for more effectual Inquiry into the existence of Corrupt "Practices at Elections for Members to serve in Parliament," by the appointment of you, the said Edwin Plumer Price, Thomas Chisholm Anstey, and Charles Edward Coleridge, as Commissioners for the purpose of making Inquiry into the existence of such corrupt practices:

Know ye, that We, in compliance with the Prayer of the said joint Address, have authorized and appointed, and do by these Presents, in pursuance of the powers vested in Us by the said Act, authorize and appoint you, Edwin Plumer Price, Thomas Chisholm Anstey, and Charles Edward Coleridge, to be Commissioners for the purpose of making Inquiry under the said Act into the existence of such corrupt practices in the said joint Address referred to.

Given at Our Court at St. James's, the twenty-third day of June One thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, in the thirty-third Year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,

H. A. BRUCE.

FIRST REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

We, the Commissioners appointed under Your Majesty's Royal Sign Manual to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices at the last election for the borough of Bridgwater and also on former similar occasions, having carried out, up to the present time, as far as circumstances would permit, the inquiry which we were commanded to make, humbly submit this our First Report to Your Majesty.

On account of the provisions in the Corrupt Practices Act limiting the time for the prosecution of offenders to one year from the date of the committing of the offence, we humbly submit this preliminary Report to Your Majesty, limiting our statements as far as possible to portions of evidence affecting four of the principal offenders to whom we have thought right not to grant the protection of our certificate; viz., Henry Lovibond, solicitor; Dr. Hamilton Kinglake; Philip Vanderbyl, and Richard Fenelly.

The candidates at the last election were, on behalf of the Conservatives, Henry Westropp and Charles William Gray; on the side of the Liberals, the former sitting members, Alexander William Kinglake and Philip Vanderbyl. At the close of the poll the numbers were, Kinglake, 731; Vanderbyl, 725; Westropp, 681; Gray, 650; so the two former were returned.

As the present Report is confined to the cases of the four persons above named, to whom we have not given certificates, we propose now shortly to call attention to the evidence as affecting them.

The election took place on Tuesday, November 17th. On the previous Friday a meeting took place at the office of Mr. Henry Lovibond, a solicitor and chief agent for the Liberal party. He acted generally for both Messrs. Vanderbyl and Kinglake, but stated that he was more immediately bound up with the interests of the latter.

At that meeting Messrs. Paul Reed, James Cook, and Eustace Barham, solicitors and agents for the Liberal party, were present. The question of money to be employed for corrupt practices at the ensuing election was then discussed; and on a statement being made by Mr. Eustace Barham that Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money, great dissatisfaction was manifested, and Mr. Lovibond stated that he, at all events, was prepared on behalf of Mr. Kinglake. This statement was corroborated by evidence given before us that arrangements had been made some week or ten days before, between Mr. H. Lovibond and Dr. Hamilton Kinglake, a physician at Taunton, who had always acted as money agent for his brother, the candidate, as to finding money for the purposes of the election.

It was arranged that another meeting should be held that same evening with Mr. Vanderbyl and his partner Mr. Fenelly. This accordingly was held at the office of Mr. Eustace Barham, and Mr. Vanderbyl was at once requested to withdraw into a separate room. Then in his absence the question of spending money improperly was warmly discussed, the parties present being Messrs. Reed, Barham, Lovibond, and Fenelly. Mr Fenelly professed to hold out against spending money on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl, and eventually left the room with the understanding that he should give a final reply in an hour. Messrs. Vanderbyl and Fenelly then left together, and in the course of an hour Mr. Lovibond received a letter, which he read aloud, stating that no money would be spent on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl.

The next day, Saturday, November 14, two meetings of the Liberals, one public and the other private, took place; but nothing immediately bearing on this part of our present Report transpired.

On Sunday evening, the 15th, by pre-arrangement of Mr. Lovibond, a meeting of the heads of the Liberal party took place at the house of a Mr. Henry Nicholls, a large draper and influential supporter of the Liberal candidates. At that meeting the probable result of the election was canvassed, and it was suggested that as the Conservatives, it was thought, would spend money largely in corrupt practices, it would be impossible to carry two Liberal members without a like expenditure. Mr. Lovibond at this meeting told Mr. Thomas Collins, a large cheese factor, that he was prepared, on the part of Mr. Kinglake, to spend money for the purposes of the election. Mr. Lovibond then made a proposition, that a deputation should wait on Mr. Vanderbyl, and request him to retire from the contest, so as to leave the field open to Mr. Kinglake, for whom he was more particularly concerned. After some discussion, a deputation was agreed to, consisting of Mr. Henry Nicholls, Mr. Thomas Collins, Mr. George Wilton, and Mr. Joseph Palmer, all warm supporters of the Liberal party. Accordingly, between 10 and 11 the deputation waited on Mr. Vanderbyl at the Globe Hotel, where he stayed, and remained in discussion with him till midnight.

The time so occupied is material, as well as to state that the latest moment at which a letter for London can be posted with two stamps in Bridgwater is 10.15 p.m., and that the last train leaves at 11.10 pm. Mr. Fenelly, who is a partner in business with Mr. Vanderbyl, and who had been introduced by Mr. Vanderbyl to the different agents and heads of the party named, as his representative and confidential friend, was present at the meeting.

Great pressure was put on Mr. Vanderbyl to compel him to retire. Mr. Vanderbyl then said he had been used very badly by his lawyers, who had caused him to spend a very large sum of money at his former election, as will appear in our future Report, and were again putting pressure on him for money, and he seemed inclined to yield. Mr. Fenelly, however, broke in, and said, "This is an important matter." "Let's have the night to consider it over." This was acceded to, and the deputation retired. As we determined neither to examine Mr. Fenelly or Mr. Vanderbyl, what took place, after the deputation left at midnight is mere matter of conjecture, except that between midnight and 1 a.m. of Monday, Mr. Cook was called out of bed by Mr. Fenelly, and informed that Mr. Vanderbyl was prepared to spend money. At 8 o'clock, or soon after, next morning (the nomination day), Mr. Fenelly left for London. Previously to the meeting on Sunday night last alluded to, Mr. Fenelly had written to another partner of himself and Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Redfern, to say, "If I telegraph for bales, a bale shall mean 100*l.*" Before Mr. Fenelly arrived in town, Mr. Redfern received a telegraph from Mr. Fenelly, "Send 15 bales, and send Thomas," meaning a clerk called Lomas, "to meet me on the Paddington platform." On the arrival of the train between two and three at Paddington, Mr. Redfern and Lomas were at the station awaiting Mr. Fenelly's arrival, with a black bag contained 1,500 sovereigns. That money had been obtained by a cheque in the name of the firm of Fenelly, Redfern, and Co., from the Consolidated Bank.

Messrs. Fenelly and Lomas returned to Bridgwater by the 4.50 p.m. train, reaching there at 9.15, and carrying the bag of sovereigns with them. They went that night with the money to the offices of Messrs. Reed and Cook, where it was arranged that Lomas should return to the inn where he was staying, and there make up the money into 10*l.* packages; and a private signal was agreed upon. Mr. Lovibond had been apprised on the morning of the nomination that money would be forthcoming on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl, and observed, "that comes of last night's meeting." The same evening another scene was being enacted on behalf of Mr. Kinglake. Dr. Kinglake, of whom we have spoken, sent after banking hours for Mr. John Prior, the junior partner in the banking firm of Sealey & Co., of Bridgwater, and stated to him that he wished to raise 1,000*l.* to assist his brother's election on the ensuing day. Dr. Kinglake had no account with that bank, but, nevertheless, Mr. Prior, without any consultation with his senior partner, consented to advance the amount, upon Dr. Kinglake giving a cheque on Stuckey's Bank at Taunton for a similar sum.

It was at the same time arranged between them that the money should be at the disposal of Mr. Henry Lovibond.

The following morning (the polling day) the principal bribery agents on the Liberal side assembled at the "Globe" Inn between 10 and 11, and were met by the legal agents, Mr. Henry Lovibond being one of them, and were asked what sum would win the election. At that time the Conservatives were largely ahead. Various sums were mentioned.

Mr. Paul Reed, one of the Liberal agents, then said, in Mr. Lovibond's presence, "If 3,000*l.* will do you can have it." Nothing, however, was definitely settled at that time, and so hopeless was the contest considered by some of the Liberal party, that Mr. Kinglake left the town for London at 1.30. About 12 o'clock on the day of the polling, Dr. Kinglake, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Reed, and a Mr. Mogg had met outside the "Globe," when a conversation took place as to the sum required to win the election, and in the course of that conversation Reed said, in the hearing of all, that the election could be won for 3,000*l.*, and Mr. Lovibond and Dr. Kinglake having withdrawn apart for a short time, Mr. Lovibond returned, and said to Reed, "Kinglake's friends think "his seat of such importance that they would not mind spending 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*"

It is right that we should state that between 12 and 1 the same day, Dr. Kinglake went to Sealey's Bank; saw Prior; told him to cancel his cheque of the night before, and then left. Between one and two the same day another conversation took place between Reed, Cook, and Lovibond, when they all agreed that the time had come, if at all, for spending money, and Lovibond pressed Reed and Cook to advance it from Vanderbyl's coffers. They declined to do so, and Cook said it is not fair to bleed from one lung.

Lovibond then retired, and Reed and Cook about this time began to spend Vanderbyl's money, and whilst so employed Cook complained warmly of the absence of Lovibond, who at about 2.30 was fetched by Mogg, who told him the election was not lost. Lovibond then went out, and meeting one of the bribery agents, Andrew Allan, told him to go home and wait there. Shortly after, about three o'clock he met a Mr. Bate, and asked him to go to Sealey's Bank, and tell them to send 500*l.* to Allan. He refused; but Mr. Mogg, who came up about the same time, took the message to Mr. Prior, and delivered it, by writing down "500*l.* for Allan." Mr. Prior's son took the money in gold to Allan, by whom a portion of it was distributed in bribery at the New Inn. Mr. Prior stated, that but for the transaction with Dr. Kinglake the night before he should not have advanced the money.

Previously to this Lomas had brought 1,500*l.*, done up in packets, as arranged over night, to the Globe Hotel, and there 240*l.* of it was distributed in bribery, with the privity of Reed, Cook, and Fenelly.

The remaining portion was taken back to London the same night, repaid to the account of Fenelly, Redfern, and Company, and the 240*l.* debited to Mr. Vanderbyl's account with the firm, although, as seen by the books, Mr. Vanderbyl's name was afterwards erased, and Mr. Fenelly's substituted, and a corresponding alteration made in the balance of their respective accounts.

Lovibond, Reed, Cook, and Barham had all been guilty of corrupt practices at former elections, and, as far as related to the last election, to the knowledge of Mr. Vanderbyl himself.

We have now reported so much as we deem necessary for the present, and we reserve our further Report, and the complete schedules of the persons guilty of corrupt practices, for a future occasion.

We find that at the election of 1868 corrupt practices extensively prevailed in the borough of Bridgwater.

We find that Philip Vanderbyl, Richard Fenelly, Henry Lovibond, and Hamilton Kinglake were privy and consenting to the corrupt practices that took place at that election.

All of which we humbly submit to Your Majesty's gracious consideration.

SECOND REPORT.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

We, the Commissioners appointed by Warrant, under Your Majesty's Royal Sign Manual, to inquire into the existence of Corrupt Practices at the last Election and at previous Elections of Members to sit in Parliament for the Borough of Bridgwater, humbly beg leave to submit to Your Majesty this our Second Report.

The Commission was opened on the 23rd day of August in the Town Hall of the borough of Bridgwater, and the sittings were continued almost without intermission until October 16th.

On the 11th and 25th days of September last, and the 11th day of October, they were necessarily discontinued for a time; in order to enable us, in compliance with Section Six of the Act of the 16th year of Your Majesty's reign, Chapter 57, to prepare ourselves for reporting certain matters to be laid before Your Majesty's Attorney-General; which reports have since been made. On the 29th day of September last we felt it a due requital of the services received from the local authorities that we should consult their obvious convenience by not requiring the use of their town hall, or the presence of their police, that being the day of the annual fair of Bridgwater; and we therefore adjourned from the day immediately preceding to the day immediately following that date. With those few, and, as we believe, reasonable exceptions, all our sittings at Bridgwater were holden de die in diem.

We take this opportunity to state that our thanks are due to George Bryant Sully, Esquire, the Mayor of Bridgwater, the Corporation and the Town Clerk of the same, and their other officers, the Superintendent of Police there and his subordinates, and the authorities of the Post Office, for the ready courtesy and zeal with which from the outset of our inquiry to the end they have endeavoured—and, as the result has proved, with great success—to support us in the discharge of our arduous duties, and to carry into effect every suggestion which appeared to us likely to forward the objects of our Commission.

At the close of our inquiry there, on the 16th day of October, we adjourned to London, where we had determined to examine witnesses residing in or near to London, and some of whom were for the time out of the kingdom. We, therefore, having obtained the leave of Your Majesty's Home Secretary to fix our first London sitting for the 2nd day of November last, proceeded upon that day and three following days to examine the remaining witnesses. On the twenty-fifth day of November, the last day actually occupied in the taking of evidence, we closed our inquiry, and adjourned to prepare and discuss the draught of our present Report.

Upon this, the last day of our labours, we have the satisfaction of submitting it to Your Majesty, along with the voluminous body of evidence taken in the course of this inquiry.

We ought, in the first place to take notice that we have had the usual difficulties to encounter by which all preceding Commissions of Inquiry have from time to time reported themselves to have been embarrassed, and some of them frustrated, in their endeavours to obtain the information which they sought. Our Court was simply one of inquiry; and the Inquiry had to be instituted and prosecuted to its end by ourselves alone. We neither had nor could allow ourselves to have the aid of agents or advocates:—for it was not an Inquiry of a litigious kind; and we had no parties before us. We were therefore bound to follow the precedent set in 1851 by the Commissioners named in the St. Albans Elections Inquiry Act (14 Vict. c. 106.), and the unvarying practice of Your Majesty's Commissions, appointed under the existing Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 57):—that, namely, of reserving to the Commissioners alone the duty of marshalling and examining the witnesses, and of declining to allow any other person to do so, or, except as a witness, to be heard before us; giving to every person, (with the exception of some who are named in our first Report) and particularly to such as might desire to deny or explain any act of corruption imputed to himself, the fullest opportunity of being heard as a witness; and, with those exceptions, so far as we know, we have not failed to offer it. We are happy to be able to say, that in that regard we have not unfrequently been met with as much candour towards ourselves and obedience towards Your Majesty's Warrant, and the statutes under which it was issued, as we were entitled to demand. But this was not always the case. The inherent difficulties, at which we have hinted, and by which our inquiry was from the outset very seriously beset, were from time to time enhanced and made more embarrassing to us by the attempts of some parties—and some of them in no mean position of life—to baffle all inquiry into the misdeeds of themselves or of their fellows, by any means soever, whether it were by the suppression of evidence, or by the absence of witnesses, or by the destruction of documents, or by conspiracy, or by false evidence upon oath.

We have, however, also the satisfaction to add that, notwithstanding the difficulties alluded to, we have, as we believe, been enabled in the case of every election to which our inquiry extended, to arrive generally at the true conclusion. A patient investigation of the facts in every case has been greatly aided by the confessions of persons long reticent, but now, through various causes, relieved of the interest they once had in screening the borough at large or their particular confederates from detection and disgrace or censure.

We commenced our inquiry with the last election (17th of November 1868). Having found the existence of corrupt practices thereat, to the statutory extent which made it incumbent upon us to inquire further, we have gone back to the two immediately preceding elections (7th June and 12th July 1866), and the next preceding one (12th July 1865), and so, toties quoties, from election to election, back to the first general election after the passing of Lord John Russell's Reform Act (11th December 1832). Into all those contests, their incidents and their consequences, and especially those relating to the two trials (1866 and 1869), the only trials which have taken place of any of the election petitions from Bridgwater, we have made an investigation, as searching as the evidence available to us permitted. That is to say, the results of our investigation have become more minute and detailed, in proportion as the dates of the election contests were nearer to the present time. Beyond the year 1832, we have been contented to make a general inquiry into the merits of elections at Bridgwater. But, even so, we have obtained quite enough evidence to justify us in reporting to Your Majesty that there is much reason to believe that in Bridgwater, within the present century at least, no election has ever taken place except under the influence of practices which, not only by the Lex Parliamenti, but by the common and statute law for the time being in force, were corrupt and criminal practices, and lawfully punishable as such.

The existing constituency of the place was of course very largely increased by the Reform Act of 1867, just as the constituency called into existence by the Reform Act of 1832 had been very largely in excess of the old constituency. Moreover, the ambit of the borough had been very largely increased by the Boroughs Boundaries Act of 1832 and other Acts, insomuch as in fact to extend the parliamentary franchise for the borough to the greater part of the parish of Bridgwater. Lastly, there is shown upon the face of the Population and Census Returns a very rapid yet steady growth of population, and increase in the number of tenements (chiefly small ones), for many years past. Still it is necessary for the due comprehension of the present condition of the place to begin with the past.

Bridgwater is the common name of three places, not conterminous with each other: a parliamentary borough, returning two members to Parliament ever since the 26th year of King Edward I.; a municipal borough, created in A.D. 1200 by a charter of King John, and remodelled by the Municipal Corporations Act of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76; and lastly, a parish, the largest—as the municipal borough is the least—of the three. Before the passing the Reform Act of 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 45.) the elective franchise was vested in the "burgesses" of the place, eo nomine. It had always been exercised by those "burgesses;" except upon one solitary occasion in very ancient times, when the return is said to have been made "by deputation" in the Shire Court of Somerset. The parish and borough of Bridgwater are not conterminous. In 1769 the House of Commons defined the meaning of the term "burgesses;" by determining that "the "inhabitants of the eastern and western divisions of the parish of Bridgwater had no "right to vote; but it was in that division of the parish which is commonly called the "Borough, paying scot and lot within the said division, and in them only."

Thus remained the condition of things down to the passing of Lord John Russell's Reform Act. The constituency was greatly increased by that Act:—still more greatly by the recent statute, the "Representation of the People Act, 1867." From a maximum of about 400 in number, it rose in 1832 to one of 650, and in 1867, to its present number of about 1,500.

In 1801, the Comparative Statement of the census for Bridgwater made it only 3,634; in 1811, 4,911; in 1821, 6,155; in 1831, 7,807; in 1841, 10,430; in 1851, 10,883; and in 1861, 12,018. During the 14 years immediately preceding the first operation of the Representation of the People Act, 1867, the constituency had increased but slowly, when compared with the contemporaneous increase of population. In 1854 it was 619. It was not more than 697 in 1867. The whole constituency for 1868 under that Act has been estimated by the Town Clerk of Bridgwater to amount to 1,484.

We do not discover any connexion between the Parliamentary Borough and either of the two other divisions, called Bridgwater, demanding remark. No evidence was given before us to show that the organization and procedure in municipal or parochial elections were in any way connected with those used in Parliamentary contests.

So far as we have been able to gather any specific information touching the several elections which have come under our review, we see no reason to withhold our concurrence in the opinion expressed by every witness who has spoken as to the comparative state of morality in Bridgwater at the different periods in question. It has never varied. Whether in the old times, when the areas of place and population were narrow, the qualification such as we have stated it, and the constituency small; or at the present time when all those conditions appear to have been extended to the uttermost; or in the intervening period the proportion of local corruption has been always the same. It is always three fourths, at least, of the actual constituency who are said to be hopelessly addicted to the taking or seeking of bribes, and who show by their conduct that the imputation is well deserved:—whilst, of the remainder, a very large part, perhaps by far the largest, are addicted to the giving or offering or negotiating of bribes. Rank and station appear to make no difference. Neither do we find that the needy are more corrupt than the "well to do," nor the latter less prone to corruption. It is the chronic disease of the place:—and not one political party is more or less than any other tainted with the malady. The Tory bribes or is bribed, because he believes that his adversary will forestall him in the race if he attempts to run it upon "purity" principles. The Liberal acts and justifies his action precisely in the same way. The sole distinction attempted between the case of the Tory and that of the Liberal appears to be this. It is said that the former never does succeed, and never can succeed, but by bribery; the prevailing opinion of the place being always Liberalism; and there appears at first sight to be some truth in that. But, more closely examined, even that difference disappears or fails to establish the distinction set up. We found it admitted by some of the most expert and zealous of the Liberal managers themselves, in a confidential paper prepared with great care for the purposes of the last election trial,—and all the witnesses, including themselves, have confirmed upon oath the admission—that the apparent Liberalism of the constituency is thus accounted for. The great bulk of them have always been men entirely dependent for their bread upon the local employers of labour, in the manufactories of the place or in the coasting trade, the two great staples of the prosperity of Bridgwater. Of those local magnates the immense majority are, from tradition, or habit, or interest, strongly attached to the Liberal party. It is upon them and their influence over their dependents that the Liberal party depends for support and triumph; and that reliance has never been disappointed when the counteracting influence of bribery has been withdrawn. In other words it is the battle of undue influence against bribery, that is to say, of one corrupt practice against another, which has always to be fought out. And yet we see great reason to doubt whether the peculiar charm with which bribery has always presented itself to the mass of the actual constituency is not, and will not ever be, more than a match for every dissuasive at the command of all the other influences of the place put together.

Reverting now to the year 1832, when the first Reform Act became law, and retroceding to the year 1688, we find that, in the whole intervening period, there are only four recorded trials of election petitions before the House of Commons or its Committees, whether before or after the Grenville Act; in which the subject matter of complaint was the existence of corrupt practices at Bridgwater. Of these, the first was tried on the 4th November 1692; the second on the 2nd March 1781; the third on the 18th March 1803; and the fourth and last on the 24th March 1808. Taking up the history of the borough at this last date, we can well understand from the evidence before us the absence of any attempt to bring the condition of the borough under the notice of Parliament.

Mr. Astell, the East India director, for 25 years (1807–1831) was member for Bridgwater "on the then Tory side of politics," at first, says a Conservative witness, "as a Mr. Thornton," at the election of the 5th May 1807, but ever afterwards as "Mr. Astell."

"During his reign," we were told, "the people of Bridgwater had a good share of the "good things of India. It was enough to say to him, 'I am a Bridgwater man,' and he "would do anything for you." In his first three parliaments, George Pocock, Esq., was his colleague. The respective dates of return were the 5th May 1807, the 7th October 1812, and the 19th June 1818. But, at the next election, which took place on the 7th March 1820, and was consequent upon the demise of the Crown by the recent death of George the Third, a coalition had been formed between the Tories and Old Whigs, and Mr. Pocock was passed over, and the late Charles K. Kemeys Tynte, Esq., (commonly called Colonel Tynte the elder,) was returned to Parliament as Mr. Astell's colleague;—"free" and without opposition. According to two of our witnesses, this coalition was effected by some gentlemen of Bridgwater, in the determination, if possible, to get rid of that system of bribery and corruption which had been existing, and of which the last election, that of the 19th June 1818, had furnished only the latest examples. To give effect to that determination, however, subscriptions had to be raised and all expenses paid, under the management of a Whig Committee in which one James Bussell, an unscrupulous bribery agent, states himself to have been active for Colonel Tynte alone; whilst it was successfully insisted upon the Tory side, that "the great East India man," Mr. Astell, should be the other member. It may, therefore, be doubted whether the coalition, either then or at the next two elections (9th June 1826, and 30th July 1830) both of which were effected under its influence, was successful to achieve the purpose for which it had been devised. It is stated by one who had the conduct of the election in 1826, a contested one, that some of those who had got up the contest, by inviting down "a third man" upon requisition in writing under their hands, voted for the sitting members, and of course against himself and themselves. It is further admitted that, even so far as respected those sitting members and their interests, by the time that the third election of Messrs. Astell and Tynte, and their last joint election (30th April 1831) drew nigh, it was found that the coalition was at an end, that the expedient had failed, that "money was wanted," and that "money was spent." That was the last time that Messrs. Astell and Tynte were elected together. It was also the last election before the Reform Act of 1832. At the general election which ensued upon the passing of that measure, the same Colonel Tynte and William Tayleur, Esquire, were elected on the Liberal interest, and upon the show of hands, but not without expenditure of money. On the contrary, the object of the Liberal managers being to secure a majority of votes before the polling day, and so to discourage the Tory candidates, Messrs. Chatteris and Twiss, from demanding a poll, large sums of money were freely spent through the ordinary bribe agents. James Bussell told us that he believed that the bribes distributed by himself upon that occasion amounted to "nearly" as much as the monies distributed subsequently by him in like manner at the contest (hereafter to be noticed) of 1835;—when, on the Liberal side, the same Colonel Tynte and John Temple Leader, Esquire, were unsuccessfully opposed by Henry Broadwood, Esquire, and Francis Mountjoy Martin, Esquire, the Tory candidates; and those monies he himself estimates to have amounted to 2,000*l*. The number, however, of the voters "influenced" by the "distribution" must have been at least as large in 1832 as in 1835;—if James Bussell's impression that he spent the money from Mr. Tayleur in smaller sums than he spent the money from Mr. Leader be correct. The result was, that Colonel Tynte and Mr. Tayleur were both returned on the show of hands. The political extinction of Mr. Astell was celebrated by a highly indecent and blasphemous burlesque of the burial service of the Established Church of England, in which the same James Bussell officiated in full canonical attire as minister or priest. A more serious outrage, from which a literary gentleman of some distinction in the Tory party, the late Mr. Bowen of the "Alfred" newspaper, narrowly escaped with life, closed the election day. Under ordinary circumstances we should not at this time of day think it necessary to record or revive the remembrance of facts of that nature. If we do so now, it is because two of the ringleaders who were called before us, the James Bussell already mentioned, and a Mr. James Wood Sully, a wealthy employer of labour, of whom as one of the leading Liberals in the borough much mention is hereafter to be made, and who, since the termination of our inquiry there, has been elected a Town Councillor of Bridgwater, were afterwards indicted and tried with some of their accomplices, the former at Taunton Assizes for conspiracy to commit the riot and battery, the latter at Wells Quarter Sessions for the riot and battery itself. Under the learned judge's direction, upon a point of law the prisoners at the Assizes were acquitted; at the Sessions, against the learned Chairman's summing up, to the astonishment of all present, (and of none more so than the prisoners themselves, as one still surviving, a cordwainer, Mr. Carter Reeves, gave us to understand,) the jury acquitted the whole lot. We had sufficient evidence before us to lead us to the conviction that the jury had been tampered with, and that James Bussell had taken a leading part in their corruption. It only remains for us to remark that no judicial inquiry into the alleged misconduct of the jury ever took place, nor were any of the incidents belonging to that election ever brought to the knowledge of Parliament.

We have already observed upon the rarity of Parliamentary inquiries of that kind before the passing of Lord John Russell's Reform Act had so greatly changed and extended the constituency of Bridgwater. The same remarkable fact offers itself at every stage of its subsequent history. Since the passing of that Act no less than 13 elections for Bridgwater have taken place. Not one of these has been a pure election, nor indeed other than a thoroughly corrupt one. Yet only four election petitions have during that time been so much as presented. Of those four, only two were brought to trial; the petition, namely, of 1865, against the return of Henry Westropp, Esquire; and the petition of 1868, against that of the late sitting members, Alexander William Kinglake, and Philip Vanderbyl, Esquires; and it is a significant fact, that both petitions had the effect of unseating their respondents. Scarcely less significant is the fact, to which we shall more particularly refer in its order of time, that of the two remaining petitions one obtained the immediate submission of the then sitting member, Mr. Broadwood, whose return at the "bye" election of the 16th May 1836 it distinctly impeached for bribery, and whose seat so won it claimed for the defeated candidate; whilst the other was deemed worth while buying off. Whether any money of the then sitting members, Colonel Tynte the younger and Mr. Kinglake, as was stated to us by one witness, was also paid for the withdrawal of the election petition in 1859, we are not able to determine. But it is very certain, and it has been proved to us, as will hereafter appear, that the compromise which secured that concession was one of a very corrupt kind, and clearly illegal in its character. Upon the whole, therefore, we see no reason to doubt the soundness of the opinion, which not a few of the most competent witnesses before us have concurred in, that in the case of Bridgwater at least, the paucity of election petitions, and the still greater paucity of petition trials, are most easily and surely to be explained, by the consciousness which each political party at every election for that borough has had, that its own corruptions were quite equal to those of the adverse party; and by the common knowledge, that on the one hand there was always the danger of a too close inquiry before the election tribunal, and its consequence, the disfranchisement of the borough itself; whilst, on the other hand, not even the most sanguine of petitioners ever hoped that the result of a scrutiny, if a scrutiny were granted, could possibly be the gaining of the seat. "Our own hands are not clean" is a phrase, which at Bridgwater elections has passed into common use.

At the general election of 1834–5, as already stated, Messrs. Broadwood and Martin, on the Conservative side, contested the borough with Messrs. Tynte and Leader, on the Liberal side, and were defeated;—the latter being on the 5th January 1835, returned to Parliament. There is abundant reason to believe that money was corruptly expended upon both sides at that election. The practised bribery agent, Mr. James Bussell, was again, as in 1832, active in the Liberal interest:—and, so far as we can collect it is about this time that, upon the other side, the name of Murliss became associated with the like proceedings. But the head and front of the management on either side would appear to have been with the candidates themselves. Of Colonel Tynte's antecedents we have spoken already. Of his new colleague, John Temple Leader, Esquire, a wealthy stranger from London, it is in evidence before us that, on being remonstrated with, for coming to contest on Liberal principles a borough in whose politics his Conservative relations, "the Luttrells," at that time took so strong an interest, he replied, "Let there be no misunderstanding between us. I have deter"mined to have my election, cost what it will." And in fact he had it;—but, at a cost of "from eight thousand to ten thousand pounds, amongst a constituency of about four "hundred in all;" the numbers for that year being, for some unexplained reason, reduced. Neither Colonel Tynte nor Mr. Leader, both of them residing abroad, appeared before us. The corrupt expenditure of Messrs. Broadwood and Martin, also wealthy strangers, contesting Bridgwater for the first time, is said by another witness to have been equal to that of Mr. Leader. Mr. Broadwood, indeed, thinks that his own expenditure did not exceed in all 2,000*l*. But the statement was one made entirely from memory, and, as he justly observed, not one to which, at so great a distance of time, he wished to be considered as pledging himself with preciseness. His colleague, Colonel Martin, stated his own expenditure to have been 3,000*l*., paid after the election in one cheque to his agents, Messrs. Lyon and Ellis. He was aware, he said, how it had been spent, viz. on corrupt purposes. At all events, their expenditure in that head must have been considerable. For, until the arrival of Mr. Leader, "they had been some days canvassing, and had met

" with support, and were almost certain of carrying the election;" whilst Colonel Tynte, on his side, had so completely abandoned all hope of saving his own seat, that his farewell address was already written and in the printer's hands:—but then Mr. Leader arrived " on a sudden;" the farewell address was withdrawn; and the superior profusion of the Liberal candidates' expenditure gained for them a corresponding superiority at the poll;—that is to say, 234 for Tynte, and 208 for Leader, against 190 for Broadwood, and 162 for Martin. Of the means employed no concealment was affected. " I can remember," says a Conservative solicitor examined before us, Mr. John Trevor, " voters coming out " of the house of a gentleman who is now dead, slapping their pockets, and causing gold to rattle." Two of the surviving parties to the management of the bribery of that election, Mr. James Bussell himself and Mr. George H. Pain, the lawyer, substantially confirm Mr. Trevor's statement. The former must, he thinks, have given away two thousand pounds of Mr. Leader's money with his own hands, in sums of various amounts, but ranging up to 40*l.* or 50*l.* a vote, or, as the puns then went, " Leader's piano fifties," against " Broadwood's piano forties:"—until " Leader was " sickened of it and went to Westminster, where it cost him three times as much." The other (Mr. G. H. Pain), although of opinion that the sum total was less by about one half, substantially agrees with Mr. James Bussell, adding, with some remains of his old admiration for a success so achieved, " I never knew an election better " managed than that." It is very obvious that there could have been no difficulty in setting aside an election return procured by such means, and the proofs of which means were so patent. But the return passed without challenge.

In the same year, the Municipal Corporations' Reform Act becoming law, the ascendency within the borough of Bridgwater passed into the hands of the Liberal party there. On the 1st January 1836 the first meeting of the new Town Council took place, at which the principle was laid down for making " political appointments " to all offices or posts in the gift of the reformed Corporation. It was instantly and ruthlessly applied in the practice. All appointments to vacant offices became " political:"—and where there were no vacancies before, the majority of the Town Council took upon themselves to create such by summarily dismissing the actual incumbents. Mr. John Trevor, who is still Clerk to the County Justices, was the Town Clerk, Clerk of the Peace, and Clerk to the Justices for the borough in 1836. He was one of those so displaced. And he enjoys to this day the " annual compensation," with which, charged on the borough fund, and calculated at " two thirds of the average income of the office " of Clerk to the Justices, the prudent doubts of the majority as to the legality of their proceeding induced them to combine it. A new Commission of the Peace for the borough was issued. Every name in it was that of some political partisan of the Liberal majority in the Town Council by whom it had been recommended. If indeed some personal fitness, real or supposed, had also been imposed as a qualification, the effect of the precedent then just established would have been less fatal to the electoral purity and independence. But how far that was from being the case may be gathered from the following instances. Every name in the new Commission of the Peace is a name also connected with the evidence before us of corrupt practices at some election or elections for Bridgwater. Two attorneys,—the late Mr. Thomas Ford, and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond,—had been guilty, the latter especially so, of organizing and manipulating the bribery machinery in use upon occasions of that kind. The offices of Town Clerk, and of Clerk of the Peace for the borough, vacated by Mr. John Trevor's removal, were filled up by the appointment of Mr. Thomas Ford to the former, and of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond to the latter—favours which had the effect of stimulating their zeal. They continued to be at the head of the electioneering finance to their respective deaths. It appears that neither the new Town Clerk nor the new Clerk of the Peace took the slightest pains to disguise the parts he played, or to dissemble his claims to profit of the gold brought down at election-time by the wealthy strangers whom it was the policy at Bridgwater to invite. The last, if not the worst case, which we think right to specify of these cases of requiting with public monies, and under public authority, the shameful services of standing bribe masters, bribe agents, and offenders against public order, is that of the person already alluded to, Mr. James Bussell. Altogether without experience of public employment of any kind, he has nevertheless become the recipient of the following bounties at the hands of his political friends (bounties, however, the remembrance of which, he admits, has not prevented him from subsequently accepting from their wealthiest adversary at Bridgwater a "kindness" by way of "loan" to the extent of 500*l.*, and thereupon changing his party and his vote). In January 1836, he received from the new Town Council the offices and emoluments of " tester of the weighing machine," and " night constable." In June of the same year, a vacancy in the Borough Gaolership having been created by the transfer of one Mr. Gover, the then gaoler, to the mastership of the Union Workhouse, Mr. James Bussell was chosen to fill it, by the vote of "all present " in the Town Council, including those who proposed and seconded the other candidates." In September 1849, he was appointed Superintendent of the Borough Police. About the same time, (for we pass over his meaner appointments, such as the Keepership of the Recorder's Court Hall, and the like,) the retired bribery agent contrived to obtain a recommendation which secured to him the Bailiffship to the Local County Courts, and the Deputy Bailiffship to the same for his son, Robert Bussell:—to be mentioned by-and-by as a very active bribery agent in and from 1859, but upon the opposite side of politics. There is no doubt that those acts of favour were all designed merely by way of reward for the scandalous services rendered by the elder Bussell to the party which he has since forsaken. It is impossible to doubt that the impression made by these things has been one of lasting prejudice to the chance, always a very feeble one, of the regeneration of Bridgwater. The influence of examples, such as these, set by all of public authority with which the borough is familiar, will endure long after the system which they illustrate shall have passed away. And it has not passed away. It may be somewhat modified by subsequent experiences. But substantially this system of "exclusive dealing" applied to the jobbing of appointments to local offices is now what it was at its introduction in 1835. Even now, Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell, we were told, has some expectation of an office at the first vacancy—if the Liberal majority in the Town Council, which has the patronage, is not gone before the vacancy occurs. The Conservative, Mr. Robert Bussell, holds sundry small posts in the local courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, certainly not conferred upon him because of his character, or for any cause other than that which we have stated. And as certainly the selection has been very little to the advantage of the administration of either civil or criminal justice, if we may judge from the statement volunteered by himself of his having made use of the opportunities afforded him by his father's employment of keeper and his own of hall porter in the Recorder's Court, to bribe a petty juryman in the box whilst engaged in the trial of a prisoner.

Between the general elections of 1834–5, and 1837, a "bye" election for Bridgwater took place on the occasion of Mr. Leader's accepting the Chiltern Hundreds, in order to contest the representation of Westminster against the late Sir Francis Burdett, Bart. The rival candidates at that election were Mr. Broadwood, on the Conservative side, and, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Esquire, also a stranger to the borough, on the Liberal side. The polling day was the 16th May 1837, when Mr. Broadwood was returned. There is no doubt whatever that corrupt practices very largely prevailed at that election. It was stated in the election petition presently to be mentioned, that out of an actual constituency of 568 registered voters, not less than 153 were bribed to vote for Mr. Broadwood, and did vote for him accordingly, and so effect his return. We have no reason for supposing any exaggeration in that statement; and our only reason for supposing that, in that respect, even upon the part of his opponents there was, perhaps, a comparative abstinence from the like practices is suggested by the following circumstances, very unusual in the history of elections for Bridgwater:—(1.) That, on the 23d of the same month of May, a petition was presented by the defeated candidate to the House of Commons against the return; containing the usual allegations of personal and vicarious bribery, and claiming the seat; and that there was every appearace of a serious intention on the part of Mr. Sheridan to prosecute it to the end; and (2) that Mr. Broadwood neither recriminated upon the petitioner, nor traversed the accusations so made against himself or his agents, but by letter dated, "House of Commons, 5th June, 1837," signed by himself, and communicated to Mr. Speaker upon the following day, "declared that it was not his intention to defend his election or return." It is probable that Mr. Sheridan would have been admitted to the seat thus abandoned, but for the accident of a demise of the Crown occurring between that day and the 11th of July;—to which day the order for taking his petition into consideration was, in consequence of such abandonment, and in compliance with the Standing Orders, deferred. Your Majesty's accession, however, having occurred in the interval (20th June 1837), it became necessary, according to the law of that time, to proceed to a new general election within six months from the death of the late King, the utmost limit provided by the statute. This afforded an opportunity of intercepting all further proceedings on the part of the successful petitioner, by preventing him from taking his seat for the borough, during the few remaining days of the last session of the expiring Parliament. On the 28th June, that is to say, eight days after the decease of William the Fourth, a petition from one John Woodland, and five other electors of Bridgwater, praying the usual leave to defend the last return in Mr. Broadwood's stead, was presented to the House of Commons. And, in pursuance thereof, on the 11th July a further postponement of the hearing of the original election petition until the 25th of the month was ordered by the House. Before that day arrived however the Parliament was prorogued, upon the 17th July, and on the same day dissolved by proclamation. Nevertheless, some further inquiry did take place elsewhere. And the result was such as to disclose the main secrets of the conspiracy, and to bring one of the principal movers in it to justice.

Under the then existing bribery laws two Qui tam actions, at the suit of an informer named Webb, were commenced against Richard Smith, the eldest son of a pawnbroker, also called Richard Smith, and, with his son, from that time forth continually mentioned for activity and influence in promoting bribery and corruption on the Conservative side at the various elections for Bridgwater. The defendant was at that time the articled clerk of one Mr. Symes, a Conservative attorney of Bridgwater, and is the same person with the Richard Smith the younger, attorney-at-law, father and partner of Richard Bealey Smith, and brother of Joseph Richard Smith, pawnbroker, alderman, and justice of the peace, whose names reappear in a later portion of our Report, and in connexion with the organization and working of the bribery agencies at so many elections in favour of that side.

So far as we are informed, Webb v. Smith marks the beginning of their career in electioneering malpractices, and on that account alone it would have claim to be specially recorded. But it possesses also a higher importance, namely, as having been the means of bringing first to light the detailed methods of the great organizations for bribery purposes in use at Bridgwater elections at all times, and on both sides of politics. The practices of 1865, 1866, and 1868 are remarkably illustrated by those disclosed in the case of Webb v. Smith when it came on for trial.

The trial took place at the Taunton spring assizes in 1838, before Lord Denman, C.J., and a special jury. According to the uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiff, Richard Smith, the defendant, was actively and extensively employed as a "canvasser" for Mr. Broadwood at this May election in 1837, and as a principal manager of the machinery for bribing the voters. The working of that machinery was as follows:—Leave of absence from his master's employment being given to Richard Smith on the pretext of ill-health "during the election," (that is to say from some time before the polling day,) the latter, aided by his great previous acquaintance with the persons and circumstances of the electors, made such use of the leisure thus obtained as to enable himself to compile, with almost complete accuracy, a list showing the number of electors open to a bribe, their names, their addresses, and the rates at which they were to be had. It being known that money was forthcoming to an amount sufficient to buy the voters entered upon that list, the first thing to be done was to provide a shop or office for the transaction of the business between bribers and bribed. The house of the then Conservative agent, the late Mr. Murless, (whose son and successor in the bribery agency, Mr. John Murless, was examined before us, and gave us much valuable information as to a later election) was hired for that purpose by Mr. Broadwood. On the polling day it was thronged with electors invited personally by the defendant Smith, and he himself was present to receive them. To every man whom he "considered a fit man to be bribed" he gave a ticket signed by himself with a private mark upon it, and this the voter took into a darkened room in the same house, where sate a stranger to the borough, "who had never been there before or since;" who sate at a table, and on the production of the ticket handed to the voter a sealed packet containing sovereigns, (generally speaking, ten sovereigns at that election,) and in the technical language of the local bribe market called a "cartridge." Not a word passed between the mysterious "stranger" and the voter, but the latter retired, leaving with him the ticket in exchange for the "cartridge," and to be used as his voucher at the future passing of the bribery accounts. From the Messrs. Trevor—to whose emphatic disclaimer of personal complicity in those or any other corrupt doings, and whether at that or any other election, we lend entire faith—as well as from Mr. Richard Smith himself, through his wife, we were able to ascertain that the stranger in question was one Croucher, a low fellow from London, not having even the name of party zeal to urge in self defence, but, on the contrary, hiring himself out from borough to borough as "Man in the Moon," at one time to this party and at another to that. In Bridgwater, however, where his name reappears at elections subsequent to May 1837, it was always upon the Conservative side.

The evidence against Smith was, as we have said, not contradicted. His counsel called no witnesses, preferring to rely upon a point of law, which was at once overruled by Lord Denman, under whose direction a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. Another Qui tam action against the same defendant for similar offences, which had been entered for trial at the same assizes, was then withdrawn. The unflinching tenacity with which the defendant and his family have always adhered to the cause of electoral corruption, as it were upon principle, was curiously exemplified by their unanimous refusal to pay, although very well able to pay, either penalty or costs. His body was taken in execution. He removed himself to the Fleet, filed his petition in the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and, after a brief period, obtained his discharge. He returned to Bridgwater, commenced business there as attorney-at-law, on his own account, and, undeterred by the remembrance of Webb v. Smith, resumed, and for more than 20 years longer continued to exercise, and occasionally to direct, at each succeeding election in favour of the Conservative party there, the acts and practices in which, as appears by the above summary, he had, from his youth upwards, been so proficient an expert.

The elections to the first Parliament of Your Majesty's reign took place about two months later, in the same year (1837) with Mr. Broadwood's "bye" election. The polling-day for Bridgwater was the 26th July 1837, when Mr. Broadwood, with Philip Courtenay, Esquire, a new candidate, and, of course, a wealthy stranger appeared on the Conservative side; whilst the Liberal candidates were the same Mr. Sheridan, and a new candidate, (coming forward upon the written requisition of a majority of registered electors and their solemn promises of support,) the late Sir Thomas B. Lethbridge, Bart. The result, however, of the contest proved that it was only a contest which many of the requisitionists intended, and not the success of their candidate nor of their cause, for they voted against both; so that the following grotesque result ensued:—Broadwood, 280; Courtenay, 278; Lethbridge, 5; Sheridan, 2. The Tory candidates, in fact, were returned by the majority promised to the Liberal candidates. It may be reasonably inferred from that very remarkable circumstance that even the shameless men who thus demeaned themselves would have scrupled so to act but for the presence of a bribe. And we have it in evidence that, notwithstanding the large bribery outlay at Mr. Broadwood's "bye" election but two months before, there was again a corrupt expenditure on behalf of himself and Mr. Courtenay at the second election also. It is also proved that Croucher was once more employed. We have no means, however, of ascertaining the probable amount, nor whether Mr. Broadwood, who speaks entirely from memory, is right in supposing it to have been only 500*l.*, and it is even likely that the bribery expenditure in July was less than that in May 1837. But there was a large expenditure in treating, a corrupt practice universally prevailing at Bridgwater elections, and of which we continue henceforth to hear a great deal. And, whatever the amount of the money may have been which was expended at this second election, either in bribery or in treating, there was one circumstance connected with it which seemed to give peculiar importance to every other circumstance. It is the only contest at Bridgwater, so far as we know, at which the London election managers for the two great political parties thought it important for them to assist. It was proved in evidence before us that the late William Holmes, Esq., M.P., formerly "whipper in" for so many years to the Tory party in Parliament, was openly active on the polling day at Bridgwater for his side, and that the late Parliamentary agent Mr. Coppock was also there that day, doing his best for the other side, and endeavouring to escape the recognition, and above all, the greeting of the witness, but in vain. There is reason to believe that the election in question was marked by corrupt practices on the Liberal side, whether or not so much as on the Tory side it does not appear; but quite sufficient to have disqualified, upon a scrutiny, their candidates from claiming either of the seats. In fact, but for a consciousness on their part that this was so, it is impossible to explain the extraordinary course which the two petitions actually presented to the House of Commons by the Liberal electors and Sir Thomas B. Lethbridge, complaining of the two last returns, and the election petition proper, also signed by that candidate and a number of electors, were made to take.

All these petitions were presented upon the same day (1st December 1837). The election petition charged bribery and corruption against the sitting members, and complained of the return at the last election; and the usual order was made for referring it to the Committee of Selection. The two other petitions were addressed to the common law jurisdiction of the House. They impeached, not only the return of Broadwood and Courtenay at the last election in July 1837, but also the return of Broadwood at the "bye" election in May immediately preceding. One of the two petitions was signed by Sir T. B. Lethbridge alone, the other by "156 out of 568 registered voters for Bridgwater;" but the allegations in both petitions were the same, and so was their prayer. Their statements of the corrupt practices prevailing specifically at the two elections of 1837 are substantially in accordance with the foregoing summary of them, so far as it relates to the Conservative party. But they also stated, with reference generally to all former Bridgwater elections, that "at least one half of the electors were accustomed "to demand and receive bribes; that it was well known that they were in the habit of "openly selling their votes to the highest bidder; that thus they could at any time "secure the success of the candidate for whom they voted; and that they were therefore "called Balance Men, and were well known in the books under that appellation. They prayed for an inquiry before a select committee of the House of Commons into "the condition of that borough, and of the constituency;" and that the House would afford "to their agents, counsel, and witnesses, a full and free opportunity of verifying "the charges which had been made, and to secure the purity of election." An important debate then arose upon the presentation of these three petitions, and the due course of proceedings was pointed out by Mr. Speaker to be to take the election petition first, and after that inquiry was ended in the ordinary way, then to take the other two petitions, and determine for or against the extraordinary inquiry mentioned in their prayer. The two last-mentioned petitions were accordingly, by leave of the House, for the present withdrawn.

Neither the ordinary nor the extraordinary inquiry was ever instituted. The election petition was called on at its day, but there was no response, and the order was discharged. Neither of the two other petitions was again presented to the House. Nothing more was heard of the matter, and all our inquiries have failed to gain an explanation of this sudden and suspicious stifling of the most important endeavour ever made, down to the institution of the present inquiry, to promote a thorough investigation into the existence of corrupt practices at Bridgwater, and the remedy.

Amongst the borough electors the feeling then and always was, that what any one of them received at any given election for his vote, each of the others was entitled to ask and have, for giving, or for having already given, his own. The evidence of the witnesses examined before us upon the point is nearly concurrent, as to the existence of a depraved but antient custom to that effect. From time out of mind, "the belief amongst the "people," upon which we know that Mr. Justice Blackburn, in his judgment at the Bridgwater election trial of 1869, laid so much stress ("That, if anything was going, "those who voted first should be paid as well as those who voted later, and received "payment,") appears to have been an existing belief, a general belief, and a belief justified by the unvarying practice at every election. The very phrases which came out in evidence, as used at the last election, and to which his Lordship pointedly referred, "Whether anything was going? What stuff was going?" more than once occur in the language of the inquiries made by voters at former elections in the same sense. Some witnesses, it is true, gave it as their opinion that, notwithstanding the usage, voters who looked for bribes would not be "safe" in voting beforehand, and without a distinct contract; and perhaps not even then unless the money were paid down to them, and in hand. But they did not negative either the existence of the custom itself or of a general confidence in it on the part of the bribable electors, that is to say, about three-fourths of the constituency for the time being. They claimed their bribes as of right; a common right; a right founded not so much upon contract as upon ancient precedent and general practice. It appears to us that in the existence of that belief amongst the electors, have consisted the chief strength of the long-rooted corruptions of the place, and the chief weakness of the law.

The next election for Bridgwater took place in 1841, at the general election of that year. Mr. Broadwood was again a candidate on the Conservative side, and with him another wealthy stranger, in the person of Thomas Seaton Forman, Esq., "a large iron "merchant in Wales." They were opposed by two strangers to the place on the Liberal side, Edward Simcoe Drewe, Esq., "a Devonshire gentleman," and Augustine Robinson, Esq., barrister-at-law, and "a very rich man." The polling-day was the 29th June 1841. Much money was spent in the contest by both sides, and the result was the return of both the Conservative candidates. In reference to the present election it was stated to us by one witness, Mr. James Trevor the solicitor, that in his own recollection bribes ranged from 40*l.* to 50*l.* each, and were taken by "men worth thousands of "pounds." The return was not challenged.

We now come to a remarkable period in the local history. At one time the borough appears to have had, like other boroughs, but perhaps not to the same extent, its class of resident small gentry, an useful and even important element in the structure of the constituency. It seems, however, that for many years that little class had been gradually dwindling away; in so much that in 1847, at least, the chief local influence in all political affairs, and especially in the management of parliamentary elections, had somehow or other passed into the hands of certain local lawyers of the one party or the other, and who worked it of course with all the means at their especial command. Mr. Gabriel Stone Poole, a lawyer of Conservative politics, "has taken no active part in the manage"ment of elections from first to last;"—and the disclaimer, we understood, was meant also to include his partner and brother; and nearly the same thing has been said of himself by Mr. Carslake, a gentleman of Liberal politics, who now fills the office of town clerk. But with those exceptions it would seem that, by the time of the general election of 1847, all the real "patronage" of the parliamentary representation of Bridgwater had been gotten into the hands of the attorneys of the place, Conservative or Liberal, as the case might be. "The lead in election matters," for the Conservative clique, down to that election inclusive, and for some years after, was taken by Mr. John Trevor, as he himself informed us. But he, and his firm, although, according to his statement, in common with others, they had to "wink at it," were always careful to keep them clear of direct part in corruption. The corresponding office in the Liberal clique was always filled, down to a much later period, by the late clerk of the peace, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, who united to his official and professional influence the not less influential character of general money lender. He was fitly aided by his colleague, the late town clerk, Mr. Thomas Ford, a name already recorded in this report. Perhaps there was no real difference between the modus operandi of the Tory attornies and the modus operandi of the Liberal attornies "in election matters;" and the only distinction between them was that what the former "only winked at," the latter openly and avowedly practised before the gaze of the public.

At the general election of 1847 there were three candidates; Mr. Broadwood being the only one on the Conservative side, and a former member for the county, Colonel Charles John Kemeys Tynte, son of the old borough member, with Mr. Serjeant Gazelee, on the Liberal side. But the latter was not supported by Colonel Tynte, on the part of whose "patron" and solicitor, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, a coalition had for some time past privately been formed with the "patrons" of Mr. Broadwood, in order to save each of them an expenditure already become ruinous. The coalition, however, had been rejected altogether by three of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's colleagues,—Mr. Thomas Ford, the late Mr. Bate, a certificated conveyancer, and Mr. Henry Lovibond, now appearing for the first time as a solicitor, distantly, if at all, related to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, but whose professional interests were somewhat adverse to those of his kinsman. His name frequently occurs after this year, as a leader of the Liberal clique at the borough elections, and a manager unscrupulous as to the means. Of all their leaders examined before us, he alone did his best to evade our questions, evincing indeed the greatest determination to defeat our inquiry. We, therefore, abandoned his examination, and he is one of those to whom we refused the statutory certificate. We now wish it to be understood that wherever his name occurs in this Report our information is derived from extrinsic sources, and not from himself.

The consequence of this dissention was a breach which outlasted not only the election of 1847, but also the next election, and had important results. Messrs. Ford, Bate, and Henry Lovibond,—having been advised that the coalition was actually formed,—on the very eve of the election, took measures for bringing down some wealthy stranger from London, as "third man" at the contest on which they were determined. But every overture was declined; and Mr. Henry Lovibond, who went in person on that errand to London, returned on the 28th July 1847, the nomination day, with Mr. Serjeant Gazelee, a "Purity" candidate, in time to be proposed and seconded, and to win the show of hands. The existence of the coalition had been bruited abroad, and was not popular. Nor was the specious pretext, that of making an end to corrupt practices, believed on either side; the antecedents of Mr. Broadwood, of Colonel Tynte's "family," and, above all, of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, being well known to all. In fact, on the next day at the poll, the confederates saw the borough fast passing out of their hands, and Mr. Serjeant Gazelee for some time after it began, although lower on the poll than Colonel Tynte, yet in a small majority over Mr. Broadwood. They found it "necessary" to do two things apparently irreconcilable, to give the Serjeant the open support of Colonel Tynte and his adherents, and to bribe those adherents to vote against the Serjeant. But the voting for him was only "a cloak to conceal the coalition," and was confined to a few of the more prominent men, and, amongst others, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond himself, the most active of all against him. The bribing, on the contrary, was extensive as of old, and upon the accustomed scale. There was some evidence that the means were supplied by "the Tynte family." They are also said to have "bribed at all the Colonel's elections, but always, it is believed, without his knowledge." Neither he nor Mr. Broadwood was then in a position to make a large outlay; and before the next election Mr. Broadwood retired from the representation for ever. But that the money, coming from whom it might, was distributed by the ordinary Liberal and Tory bribe agents, acting for once in concert, to promote the success of the single Tory candidate, and the defeat of the accepted second Liberal candidate, was too clearly proved by the witnesses before us to admit of any doubt. Had there been any doubt it must have been removed from our minds when a document, accidentally discovered by Mr. Bate the younger, in searching his late father's papers for some information relating to our inquiry, was laid before us. It was the petition of 1852 to Parliament, noticed hereafter, bearing, amongst other signatures, those of four Liberal lawyers and of one Conservative lawyer of the place, and affirming that the subscribers knew of and censured the corrupt practices at this election of 1847, amongst others. The petitioners distinctly ascribed them to that unexpected advent of the second Liberal candidate, or "third "man," and to the consequences which followed; viz., the make-believe secession of some of the Liberals from the coalition, and their voting for Tynte and Gazelee, instead of for Tynte and Broadwood. They went so far as to say that the coalition being thus broken up, it had been found "necessary" to return to the corrupt practices of ordinary elections in order to defeat that third candidate. That petition was never presented, without any satisfactory reason being alleged. Nor is it explained by what means it came into the custody of Mr. Bate; who, as mentioned above, was a zealous "patron" and "introducer" of Mr. Serjeant Gazelee, the Liberal candidate, whose coming there made it so "necessary" to bribe. The whole matter is one of the mysteries of elections at Bridgwater.

The coalition was successful. But out of a registered constituency of 529 electors Mr. Serjeant Gazelee polled 196 votes, against 265 polled by Mr. Broadwood and 395 by Colonel Tynte, who was thus placed at the head of the poll. Fifty-five electors did not vote at that election. Mr. Serjeant Gazelee's own expenditure on that occasion amounted to no more than 26*l.* But the lawyers who had brought him forward were perfectly well aware of the corrupt practices of his opponents, and of the evidence by which those practices could be brought home to them. That no petition was presented against the return of either of the sitting members is probably to be explained in the same way as the like forbearance on similar occasions at Bridgwater.

We ought here to state that, until, by a painstaking investigation on our part, we succeeded in eliciting the above facts connected with the election of 1847, we were invariably assured by even the most trustworthy of our witnesses, that it was universally regarded as the one pure election which had taken place at Bridgwater between 1832 and the present time.

In 1852 the next general election took place. At that election, under the same "patronage" as before, Colonel C. J. K. Tynte was one of three candidates on the Liberal side; Lord Henley, who had been invited by an association, formed for the purpose of "opening" the borough, that is to say, of freeing it from the "patronage" of the Liberal attorneys, and who stood upon the principle of "Purity of Election," being the second liberal candidate; and Alexander William Kinglake, Esq., a very great friend of Mr. Sealey the banker, the third; himself enjoying, as we have said, the "patronage" by which his immediate predecessor, Mr. Serjeant Gazelee, had been induced to contest the place in 1847. The Conservative candidates were again two strangers to the place, Brent Spencer Follett, Esq., of the Chancery bar, and John Christopher Mansel, Esq., both brought down by the Tory attornies. It is necessary, however, to state that both these gentlemen signified unmistakably their determination not to countenance any corrupt expenditure, and that they both adhered to that determination to the end, there is no cause to doubt. The rivalry of the three Liberal candidates caused a split in their party, and another coalition between the "patrons" of the Tynte section and those of the Tories by a secret understanding, to which Mr. Follett was not privy, and which was also effectually concealed both from Colonel Tynte and Lord Henley. Each of them was led by Benjamin Lovibond to believe that they stood in the same interest and would receive the same support. Mr. Follett's expenditure, including the cost of a "five months canvass," was 1,150*l.* But, on the other hand, the money of Colonel Tynte's family was again applied to corrupt purposes in furtherance of the coalition, and again, it is said, without his knowledge. An attempt was made to involve Lord Henley in the like practices. On the following day, and after the poll had gone on for some hours, an application for the sum of 200*l.* to be expended in bribery was made to Lord Henley himself by one who had already bribed two voters on Lord Henley's behalf, viz. Lovibond's confidential clerk, Foster, in order to insure the return of himself with Colonel Tynte. This application was promptly and unconditionally refused by his Lordship. There is no evidence before us of any expenditure of that kind upon the part either of Mr. Kinglake or of Mr. Mansel. The former states his expenses to have amounted only to 300*l.*, and the latter is stated by Mr. Follett to have expended nothing at all;—and by Mr. Poole, to have expended 200*l.* only. Mr. Follett altogether denies that he himself defrayed or was called upon to defray any portion of the bribery monies laid out in that contest, and says that, to silence Mr. Richard Smith, he threatened to vacate his seat if he discovered after the election that it had been won by corrupt practices. We see no reason to question his statement. Nevertheless it was proved before us that very large sums of money were spent in bribery, at 10*l.* per vote, and in treating at the different public-houses open in the interests of the coalition, with the privity of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond on the one side, and Mr. Richard Smith upon the other. For both Mr. John Trevor and his brother, —being considered by their professional colleagues in the "patronage" clique far too "scrupulous" to be trusted any longer with the conduct of a contest only to be waged with weapons which they repudiated,—had retired shortly before the election from the leadership of the party;—and the above-named Mr. Richard Smith was chosen in their place. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's position, as sole "patron" and adviser of Colonel Tynte, the other party to the coalition, gave him free scope in the choice of measures on his side, and of instruments to carry them out. His chief confidence appears to have been placed in two known bribe agents, the late William Haslam, of whom it will be needless to say more, and one William Heal, similarly employed at the 1847 election for the same Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and perhaps at former elections also. William Heal is still living. He has been a manufacturer, a brewer, and publican by turns at Bridgwater, and now fills a post of considerable trust, as well as some political power, under the firm of Coulthurst and Symons, at Durston, in the neighbourhood, in which firm one of his brothers-in-law, hereafter to be reported for offences similar to some of Heal's own, is an influential partner. Of this man Heal we shall also at the proper place have to record certain graver offences than those which are now the subject of remark. He has nevertheless assured us that not one of the disclosures of those misdemeanors during the last 20 years ever did him the slightest damage at Bridgwater, either in reputation, or in trust, or in commerce, and that even now "his credit there "stands as high as ever it did."

The whole of the money raised for the purposes of bribery at that election in the interests of Colonel Tynte was entrusted to those two men, Haslam and Heal, for "distribution." It is probable, too, that Mr. Richard Smith confided to them the "distribution" of the funds raised for the like purpose in the interests of Mr. Follett. It is certain, at least, that although the ordinary "tallies" went to the poll sometimes for Colonel Tynte only, those Tories who were in the secret, like Mr. Follett's brother-in-law, Mr. Hennett, of whom Mr. John Trevor makes mention, easily brought them to vote for Follett also, by threatening to "split" upon them for their 10*l.* bribes. In short, the bribery, if not done in the names of both candidates, was done for their joint benefit, and as for votes to be given for both, "so as to prevent any petition." Moreover, William Heal is a man particularly distinguished for his freedom from all mere party prejudices, and for an equal readiness to be "distributor," or rather treasurer, of Conservative as of Liberal gold: and of those dispositions of his ample illustration is contained in the later pages of this Report. At all events there was a large sum of money certainly "distributed" at this election both by Haslam and Heal; although as certainly a large portion of it, in the "distribution," was "stuck to," that is to say, had been embezzled by Heal. He himself seemed to be aware, that as much as 100*l.* had been intercepted by him on that occasion; but, far from feeling ashamed of that, he made it the subject of complaint, that at the subsequent election in 1857, a promise of 40*l.* for bribery work was broken on the part of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and his demand of payment refused, on the ground, as stated by Foster, the clerk who managed the election business, "Bill! you did us last time, and we have done you this time." We have been thus particular in noticing the defalcation in question, because it is the first discovered instance of what was soon to become—if it had not already become —the general practice of bribe agents, and of which several instances will be given elsewhere in our Report.

The result was that, at the end of the polling day (7th July 1852), Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett were returned in that order of precedence, and that of all the candidates Mr. Kinglake stood lowest upon the poll. Apart from his having unhappily selected Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Paul Reed for his agents at that election, there is no evidence to connect him with any corrupt expenditure; and he estimates his own expenditure at about 300*l.* Lord Henley's own expenditure amounted exactly to the sum of 304*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* It is due to Lord Henley that we should record our conviction, that from first to last he remained true to his declaration, and preferred to be accounted the "mean man," whom one or two of the witnesses, unconscious of the effect of their words upon us, thought fit to denounce, rather than swerve from his resolution, to fight the battle upon the principles of "purity of election" and personal independence.

We have had occasion to call attention, in connexion with certain doings at the election of 1847, to the petition to the House of Commons, prepared and signed in 1852, but for some inexplicable reason, laid aside without having ever been presented. It was one of the first petitions for addressing Your Majesty under the Act of the sixteenth year of Your Reign, which had then recently passed; and under which we now hold Your Majesty's Royal Warrant. It affirms in the strongest manner the extensive prevalence of corrupt practices at both the elections of 1847 and 1852. If it had been presented, it is true that the prayer could not have been in terms granted, for no election petition had been presented against the last return. But the committee of privileges and elections is not effete; and there is an authority in the House of Commons, which, evoked, might even then have set in motion the powers of the Legislature, as was done only one year before in the case of St. Alban's, and 10 years before in that of Sudbury, and has recently been done again in that of the city of Dublin.

The open discords which had divided the Liberal lawyers at the general elections of 1847 and 1852 into two hostile sections were not appeased until the ministerial crisis of 1857 arrived; having, as its consequence, an immediate dissolution of Parliament. Colonel Tynte's was by this time distinguished from the other section by the name of "the Tyntites," a name which long survived the membership of the gentleman after whom they so called themselves. The old animosities and jealousies continued to influence the separate action of many long after a reconcilement of their leaders had openly taken place. And we may mention an instance which came under our own view, that of an alleged corrupt negotiation between a Liberal elector for a loan of money from a Conservative candidate (a transaction which had reference to a period so late as the contest of 1865). That applicant, a medical man, told us, as part of his explanation of the affair, that he was neither for nor against either party exactly, "being himself a Tyntite." The coalition with Mr. Follett's party came to an end. The Liberal party was declared to be once more united, and prepared to contest both seats at that election. Still, whether out of their own mutual jealousies, or out of a respect for the understood repugnance of many of their respective supporters to the reconciliation which had so recently taken place, the electors were authoritatively told that the chief Tyntite "patron," Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, would continue to act for his own nominee, Colonel Tynte, and that the Liberal candidate of the other, and so lately the antagonistic section, would continue to receive the support of his own proper "patrons," Messrs. Bate, Henry Lovibond, and Paul Reed;—all of them names either already implicated or about to be implicated very deeply in the corrupt practices by which alone—for so the whole of those still surviving assured us—the success of any political party, or any political cause, at any contest for the parliamentary representation of Bridgwater ever was or ever will be ensured.

Amongst the circumstances of this rearrangement of the Liberal tactics, the selection made of the candidate to be proposed along with Colonel Tynte is by no means undeserving of very particular attention. There were three candidates who, on the part of the Liberal section, opposed to the "coalition," had actually gone to the poll against it; Mr. Serjeant Gazelee in 1847, and Lord Henley and Mr. Kinglake in 1852; and each of those three candidates was still living, without a seat in Parliament, and desirous to obtain, or willing to accept one. The first of the three was passed over it seems without remark; between the second and third a private meeting of "leading electors," that is to say, shopkeepers and others accustomed to obey the real leaders of the party, had to determine. Lord Henley and Mr. Kinglake were both Liberals, and as yet untried in parliamentary life. But Lord Henley was still the representative of the two principles for which he had been selected in 1852, "Independence of Patronage" and "Purity of "Election;" and the way in which that contest had, on his part, been conducted, very plainly showed that he had been sincere in that. Mr. Kinglake was not the champion of "Independence." He was not now more than formerly averse to accept nomination and aid at the hands of that section of "patrons." As for "Purity of Election," he was not as yet pledged irrevocably to that principle. He had not said, nor (save only by his choice of "patrons" and confederates) done anything to the contrary of that principle. His merit, or demerit, in that respect was as yet only of a negative kind. The unanimous opinion of the "patrons" was in favour of Mr. Kinglake; and the "leading "electors" consented to pass Lord Henley over, and to invite Mr. Kinglake. He accepted the invitation. "Lord Henley's friends became as loyal and as much attached to him as "if he had been their man from the beginning." As for Colonel Tynte "there was "a separate agency, and a certain amount of distrust perhaps remaining; and they "canvassed separately;—but still they acted amicably together." Mr. Kinglake's business was done chiefly by Mr. Bate, but also by Mr. Henry Lovibond, and by Messrs. Reed and Cook. He had also the assistance of another gentleman professionally engaged as his attorney at the election, but who, having had no vote hitherto, and being of Conservative opinions, cannot be ranked among Mr. Kinglake's "patrons," and who in fact at every subsequent election appeared prominently among the "patrons" of the opposite side in politics, and, as such, was frequently named in the evidence before us. That gentleman was Mr. Brice. Moreover, Mr. Kinglake's brother, Dr. Hamilton Kinglake, was residing but a few miles off; they, Mr. Kinglake says, "were very much "attached brothers," and "his brother was a far richer man than himself," and "always "acted for him at elections;" and they afterwards "passed the accounts" together. There can be no doubt whatever that to Dr. Kinglake the evil repute of his neighbours at Bridgwater was quite as familiar as according to Mr. Kinglake's evidence it had been to the candidate himself. On his side, Colonel Tynte, for all purposes whatsoever concerning his part in the contest, had but one chief representative or agent. It was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

On the Conservative side Mr. Follett was the only candidate. It was believed,—but erroneously, as he assures us—that he was "disgusted" with the results of former expenditure; this time his own expenditure amounted to no more than 433*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.*; and we have no reason to dissent from the opinion expressed by opponents and supporters alike, that there was less money corruptly expended on that side at this election than at the former election of 1852. Still it must be borne in mind that the management was always in the hands of Mr. Richard Smith, as sole leader of the clique of his "patrons," the Conservative lawyers; having under him the same staff of inferior agents as at former and subsequent elections. And we have it in evidence that, in corrupt treating on that side, the large sum, or very nearly the sum estimated to have been expended on either side at every election, was, on this occasion, expended in that way upon that side at the public-houses "kept open" by the party throughout the contest, that is to say, the sum of 500*l.*

Upon the Liberal side, at least, that amount was certainly expended at the public-houses "kept open" for the like purpose. Mr. Kinglake did not deny the fact. But he assured us that, although frequently about the town upon the polling day, he saw no signs of drunkenness or drinking amongst the electors. The statement is the more surprising when it is contrasted with that of every person, of whatever politics, examined as to the condition of voters when brought to the poll. They all agree that at every Bridgwater election there was much drunkenness exhibited in the streets, and at the polling-booths, and more especially towards the close of the poll when many voters were polled who did not know what they were about.

But the corrupt practices of the Liberal agents at this election were not confined to the debauching of the voters by means of drink. The already mentioned William Haslam and William Heal, and the other bribe agents of the party, were again employed and active; and bribes were asked and offered, given and received. William Heal in particular, according to his own account, so distinguished himself in that way as to give point and meaning to the reproach, recorded in the "Minutes" of the Election Trial of 1866, and again stated before us by Heal and others, to have been addressed to Heal at the intervening election of 1865 by his chief employer, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond himself, with reference to Heal's being about to desert his party, in order to bribe for their opponents; "If you leave us Heal, I am damned if I won't put "up my electioneering shutters." He was not only a bribe agent at the election of 1857, but he took that part in it which generally had been taken by the "Mysterious "Stranger," or, as he is sometimes called, the "Man in the Moon." At the request of the late Mr. Foster, a lawyer's clerk, but at election times chiefly employed extensively and confidentially for bribery purposes by his master, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, Heal, who was no longer an elector, having been for some time past domiciled at Gloucester, left that place in January or February 1857, to resume his old occupations at Bridgwater, especially with reference to the election of that year, then but a few weeks distant. He was to receive 40*l.* "for his trouble." Arrived there he received the requisite instructions through Foster: and "some hundreds of pounds," in sums of various amounts, but how much in all he could not or would not tell us, were by Foster placed in his hands. In conformity with those instructions he began to "distribute" the money in bribes. The scene of his principal exploit was a Liberal public-house at the sign of the "Golden Ball." "It was done," he says, "darkly, not openly." The men to be bribed "were all put to him by Foster in a dark room upstairs" at that place. He himself "did not see one voter in ten" who were so brought to him; but he put out his "hand and gave them the money," at the rate of ten pounds a vote; Foster "referring "them to him," and "pointing them out to him as they came in," and taking upon himself the risk of "some of them whom Heal did not know, or might not believe to be "electors," although he (Heal) "probably might have known some of them." He was or pretended to be "really unable, even if he had the poll sheet before him, to give "us any of the names of those persons: it was so long ago; and he never kept any of "the books; never kept a scrap of paper in his life:"—nor did he think that "if he "saw any of them now he should know them." He admitted that when he came to pass his bribery accounts afterwards with Foster, "he (Heal) was two hundred pounds short" upon the whole of his receipts and disbursements at that election. He bitterly complained to us that Foster thereupon refused to pay him the 40*l.* which he had been promised.

This is the transaction to which we have referred a few pages back. Our own belief is that bribes were given by Heal at that election, under the instruction of Benjamin Lovibond, or of Foster, and in the manner stated. But that, whenever so employed, some of the bribe money "stuck" to Heal's own fingers, and that on this particular occasion the missing 200*l.* so "stuck," we have equally no doubt.

Under the above circumstances, at the polling day (28th March 1857), Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake were returned by large majorities. Mr. Follett, the defeated candidate, never again stood for Bridgwater. No petition was presented against the return, although there would have been no difficulty whatever in setting it aside. We had it in evidence that, in those days, and, in fact, until after the very next general election, that of 1859, concealment of the corrupt practices on either side was not deemed necessary to make an election safe; for "each side knew that the other would not dare to go "on with a petition," even if they presented one. So open and avowed, indeed, was the practice of bribery, that it sometimes led to street encounters between one set of bribery agents and another, which very strongly resembled riots. A remarkable instance of that kind will have to be mentioned with reference to the general election of 1859, the next in order.

A noticeable incident, however, belonging to the election of 1857 deserves first to be recorded. It is the reappearance of the name of Bussell in the pages of the bribery annals of Bridgwater; a name which since the retirement of Mr. James Bussell to the rewards of his long service had not been prominent. But, now having grown up into manhood, at this election his two sons, Messrs. Henry Chapman Bussell and Robert Bussell, appear,—the latter for the last as well as for the first time, on the Liberal side,—zealously engaged in corrupt treating, at the public-house of the former, soon to become so famous—the "Anchor." What was the entire amount so expended, he was unable to recollect, but Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell declared that "no doubt it must have been "about 50*l.*" His labours in that way recommended him to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond for higher employment. His brother, Robert Bussell, had gone over soon after the election of 1857 to the Tories, but Henry Chapman Bussell remained firm to the Liberals. On their part, "because," he says, "they considered that he stood to his faith," Foster was commissioned to prepare him to receive at the very next election employment as one of their most trusted bribe agents, and Foster prepared him accordingly, and not in vain. Between 1857 and 1859 "we were always in conversation; but not about money "until the nomination day, when he asked me if I had any objection to spend a little "money to get the candidates in." From that time forward Henry Chapman Bussell continued to be at every election the chief of the staff of the bribery agents employed immediately under the "patrons," on the Liberal side.

To keep up his local influence, during the same interval, Mr. Kinglake commenced to subscribe yearly to the local charities, and races, and in some cases for the relief of individuals. His outlay in this way from 1857 to 1868, inclusive, averaged, he says, about 110*l.* a year. It began with his election for the place. It ceased when he was unseated by Mr. Justice Blackburn's decision in February 1869, and he informs us that with the single exception of his subscription to the County Infirmary, it is not his intention to contribute any more money for such purposes. To one item of his expenditure in that way, at a much later period, we shall hereafter refer. For the present we have no further remark to make respecting it. We have also to record his statement that from time to time thenceforward, down to the end of his connexion with the borough, every Liberal appointment of a Bridgwater man to the commission of the peace for the borough or the county was made upon his recommendation. The justices so appointed are (for the borough) Messrs. Haviland, Nicholls, Mogg, Ford, and Hammill, and (for the county) Mr. John Browne.

To some of those names it will be our duty to call attention hereafter, in connection with corrupt practices at more recent elections for this place.

We now come to the next in order, the general election of 1859.

At this election Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake presented themselves for re-election. Henry Padwick and Henry Westropp, Esquires, both wealthy strangers, were introduced by Mr. Richard Smith as the Conservative candidates. The election took place on the 30th April 1859, and resulted in the return of Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake; the numbers polled being—

Tynte - -	290	Padwick - -	230
Kinglake - -	279	Westropp - -	208

The number of electors polled was 512; unpolled, 31; dead, 10. The majority for Colonel Tynte over Padwick was 60, and over Westropp, 82; Mr. Kinglake over Padwick, 49, and over Westropp, 71. The published expenses of Mr. Kinglake were 248*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* In addition to this sum, Mr. Henry Lovibond received 100*l.* as a fee for acting as agent. About three months after the election, Mr. Kinglake learnt from his brother, Dr. Kinglake, that Mr. Bate, already mentioned as the friend and recognized agent of Mr. Kinglake, had spent money illegally. Mr. Kinglake was called on to pay 1,125*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.*, being the amount Mr. Bate had so expended, with interest. The sum actually spent by Mr. Bate was 1,070*l.* The whole amount paid by Mr. Kinglake for his election was 1,474*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* It was found impossible to ascertain the amount spent by Colonel Tynte, as his principal agent, Benjamin Lovibond, is dead, and Colonel Tynte is now residing abroad, and we have not been able to examine him, although duly summoned. But we have it in evidence that the Tynte party spent money very profusely, and paid the voters in 10*l.* notes; and we further had evidence from the manager of the Bridgwater Branch of the West of England Bank, that just before the election of 1859, Colonel Tynte himself presented his father's cheque for 700*l.* at the bank counter, and received the change in 10*l.* notes, and that very soon after men and women moving in the humbler ranks of life came into the bank to change 10*l.* notes for gold. So remarkable did the circumstance appear of the sitting member coming in for change of a 700*l.* cheque on the eve of the election, that, on Colonel Tynte leaving the bank, the manager made an observation to his cashier, "That is rather "a bold thing for a member to do." A petition was lodged against the return on the ground of bribery, but the petition was withdrawn at an early stage. It was charged before us that part of the bargain for withdrawing the petition was that a criminal information for which a rule had been granted and made absolute by the Court of Queen's Bench against "The Bridgwater Times" for libel, arising out of the election, should be discontinued; but no conclusive evidence could be obtained on the subject. The fact, however, is that with the withdrawing of the petition the criminal information was abandoned. The libel was that a Mr. Jenkins had bribed 60 voters in the Liberal interest.

The Liberal bribe agent, Henry Chapman Bussell, was now the landlord of the "Anchor" inn, a house which he still holds. He had been, as we have already stated, engaged on the Liberal side by Foster, already named, and received 100*l.* from him for that purpose, which was paid away in sums of 10*l.* Many of the voters bribed by Bussell had previously been bribed by John Murlis to vote for the Conservatives; Murlis having commenced paying the voters a fortnight before the election; the Liberal bribe agents picked them up on the polling day, and so they got paid on both sides. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond being under the impression that the Conservatives had not bought up the "balance men" then took no steps to secure them for the Liberal party until the morning of the following day, when observing that the first tally that went up to the poll were almost all "balance men," he immediately concluded they had been bought, and at once issued orders to his sub-bribe agents and others to barricade the streets leading to the polling place, and seize upon every "balance man" as he came up. There was only one polling place at this election. This was accordingly done, and about 40 or 50 "balance men," who had been paid 10*l.* each on the Conservative side, were thus seized upon, and bribed with 10*l.* by the Liberals, and then polled. The Conservatives being taken completely off their guard by these measures, found to their astonishment that they had really lost the election by 10 o'clock. The bribery at this election was carried on in the most unblushing manner, the money being paid openly in the streets. The principal bribe agents for the Liberals at this election were Henry Chapman Bussell, the clerk, Foster (now dead), John Smith, the grocer, Henry Faun (now dead), William Heal, and Thomas Hill, amongst others.

It has been already stated that Mr. Padwick was introduced to Bridgwater by Mr. Richard Smith, the solicitor, whom we were unable to examine on account of his being paralysed, but from Mr. Padwick we learned that the manner of his introduction was as follows:—Mr. Padwick being interested in the Horsham election on behalf of his friend, Mr. Fitzgerald, called at Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton's office to get some information, and there in the waiting room made the acquaintance of Mr. Richard Smith, who said he was looking out for a candidate for Bridgwater. The result of a short conversation was that Mr. Padwick agreed to stand for the borough. Richard Smith said the cost of a contest would be from 1,200*l.* to 1,400*l.* On the introduction of Sir Frederick Slade, who was then the standing Conservative counsel in electioneering matters, it was arranged that Mr. Westropp should stand as the second Conservative candidate on the understanding that Mr. Westropp should not be called on to pay more than 200*l.* as his share of the expenses in the event of losing, but 1,000*l.* if he was returned. Sir Frederick Slade informed Mr. Westropp, in reply to inquiries as to Mr. Padwick's position, that Mr. Padwick could lay a continuous line of sovereigns from Bristol to Bridgwater. Mr. Padwick went to Bridgwater about three weeks or a month before the election, and the morning after his arrival he placed in Mr. Smith's hands 1,000*l.* At the end of the week Mr. Padwick was informed the 1,000*l.* was exhausted in paying outstanding accounts, and another sum of 1,000*l.* was sent down from London to Mr. Smith by a Mr. Copperd, a friend of Mr. Padwick's. This sum was sent down in gold. Finding the contest going against him, Mr. Padwick left the town in the middle of the polling day. In addition to the 2,000*l.* spent by Mr. Padwick, and the 200*l.* by Mr. Westropp, each paid his own personal expenses. At this election John Murlis, junior, who then kept the "Albion" inn, was employed as the principal bribery agent for the Conservatives. Mr. Westropp was before the constituency about 10 days before Mr. Padwick, and on Mr. Padwick's arrival cards were issued, "Padwick and Westropp." Murlis waited on Mr. Smith, the solicitor, to ask what it meant, and he was told by Smith, "Well, you know those who pay the piper will have first chance"; saying at the same time, money would be going, and Mr. Padwick would find it. Mr. Smith further asked Murlis to take the management of money matters, and Murlis agreed to do so, stipulating that a proper check should be kept. Mr. Smith suggested that Murlis might begin at once to spend money gently among those whom he could trust. Murlis agreed to advance 325*l.* of his own money for the purpose, Mr. Smith telling him he might begin at once, and to pay 10*l.* per head. The 325*l.* was expended in the course of two evenings. At this election Murlis bribed by himself or sub-agents 140 voters. He commenced operations about a fortnight before the election and finished on the nomination day. After the 325*l.* was exhausted he saw Mr. Richard Smith, who told him if he wanted more money to go to Stuckey's bank, and they would let him have money. Accordingly Murlis waited on Mr. Woodland the bank manager, and got 500*l.* on an I O U. At that time Murlis had no account of his own at Stuckey's bank, and nothing was said about any interest. The money was repaid by Smith. When the 500*l.* was gone, Murlis went to Smith and asked for more money. Mr. Smith said, "You will have a parcel either to-day or to-morrow." Accordingly the parcel came, addressed to Mr. Murlis, at the "Albion" inn, labelled, "Samples, glass; with care. This side up." On the parcel being opened, 1,000*l.* in gold was discovered, out of which Murlis paid himself 325*l.* and Mr. Woodland 500*l.*, and spent the remainder in bribery. After this sum of 1,000*l.* was spent, another parcel labelled as before was brought to Murlis' house by a man who looked like a porter, which parcel contained 500*l.*, which was also spent in bribery. Mr. Padwick was put first of the Conservative candidates, and when voters could not be induced to vote for both the Conservative candidates, they were asked to vote for Padwick and Tynte. The principal bribe agents for the Conservatives were John Murlis and his sub-agents, Frederick Temblett, John Waddon, Charles Lear, Robert Pople, John Giles Davis, Frederick Jarman, William Pain, James Leaker, Robert Ford, Edward Denner, Thomas Walkem, Henry William Batten, Joseph Pitman, James Bussell, sen., of whom so much mention has been made on the other side, James Bryant, and Robert Bussell.

About two months after this election Mr. Haviland, J.P., a principal supporter of Mr. Kinglake thereat, and who had proposed him at the election immediately preceding, received a loan of 100*l.* from that gentleman through Mr. Bate, without security and without interest, and two years afterwards Mr. Kinglake converted that loan into a free gift. It is right to add that a majority of our number are of opinion that there was no corrupt motive, either actual or implied, influencing either the giver or the receiver of such loan.

After Mr. Westropp's defeat in 1859 he appears to have formed the idea of "nursing" the borough with the view to a future contest, and accordingly he subscribed liberally to the various charities and race meetings, and also made gifts to private individuals irrespective of party, although remonstrated with by his legal agents that such nursing would be entirely useless, and that he would have to bribe the voters over again, just as Colonel Tynte did, who resided in the immediate neighbourhood, and canvassed the borough from the 1st January to the 31st December. The annual sum spent by Mr. Westropp in thus nursing the borough averaged 370*l.* a year.

In 1863, two years before the next election, Mr. Parsons, "a Tyntite," applied by letter to Mr. Westropp for the loan of 500*l.* upon two life policies to be approved by Mr. Brice; and Mr. Westropp states that he offered in return his vote and interest for some future occasion; that letter, however, was lost in 1865, and Mr. Parsons denies that it contained any promise of his vote and interest. Mr. Brice told us that he subsequently, upon Mr. Westropp's refusal, did raise that sum for Mr. Parsons. A majority of our number wish to state, in regard to this transaction, as they have already done with regard to Mr. Haviland, that they do not see any reason to impute any corrupt motive to Mr. Parsons when he made that request.

When the general election of 1865 became imminent, Colonel Tynte signified his intention to retire, and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, the then principal legal agent for the Liberals, went to London and had an interview with Mr. Travers Smith as to finding an eligible candidate for Bridgwater, and among the late Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's papers was found a list of names in the handwriting of his clerk Fletcher, with the qualification of each candidate, of which the following is a copy:—

"43 Parliament Street, Westminster, S.W.,

"Sir John Villiers Shelley.—Present M.P. for Westminster. Rich country baronet residing at Maresfield Park, Lewes; town address, Brooks's Club. Advanced Liberal, for ballot and abolition of church rates, and a well-considered extension of the franchise. Has been a perfectly consistent supporter of Liberal principles for 15 years in Parliament. Has strong claims on the party for the public spirit shown in his recent retirement from Westminster. Very good speaker, and dashing candidate.

"Sir F. Halliday.—Late Governor of Bengal. An able man, and valuable Indian public servant; good speaker; Palmerstonian; very moderate; new to Parliament; against ballot; for abolition of church rates; rich and good candidate.

"Walter Bagehot.—An able man; editor or part proprietor of 'Economist;' son-in-law of James Wilson, M.P.; a good candidate.

"Lord Milton.—Eldest son of Earl Fitzwilliam; age 26; intelligent young candidate, but not experienced; the highest social and family position.

"All the above are men of wealth and position, who would do credit to any constituency."

It is right that we should state that Mr. Smith expressed strong doubts as to whether he had supplied all the names mentioned in the above document, and denied that the wording was his. At the same time he acknowledged that it might represent the substance of his communication with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. Out of the above names Sir John Shelley was selected as the candidate in the Liberal interest in place of Colonel Tynte. Mr. Kinglake presented himself for re-election, and coalesced with Sir John Shelley. Mr. Westropp was the Conservative candidate. On Sir John Shelley consenting to stand he exacted the most solemn pledge from Benjamin Lovibond that no illegal expenses should be incurred; but during his canvass he constantly met with the reply from voters that they should vote for "Mr. Most."

On some of these occasions the hint was explained and enforced by one or more of the lawyers and canvassers who accompained him on the canvass. Moreover the pledge which as is already stated, he had received from Mr Benjamin Lovibond, was carefully concealed from the electors by Lovibond's bribery agents. Henry Chapman Bussell, who for some days before had learned Sir John Shelley's intention, continued to assure the bribeable voters that the money would be forthcoming by-and-by. John Smith, the grocer, whose house, at every election, according to the description contained in one of his letters to Mr. Kinglake, was open for the purposes of treating in the Liberal interest, continued down to the morning of the polling day to organize the inferior agents and to authorize them to promise the customary bribes. By another letter from the same bribery agent received soon after the election, Mr. Kinglake was made to understand how bitterly the writer and his fellow bribers regretted his defeated colleagues resolution not to bribe, or rather the tardy determination of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond to obey it. Had they known it at five o'clock that morning, instead of at nine, he said they would have taken the matter into their own hands and chanced all results.

Although bribery by direct money payments was not resorted to on behalf of the Liberal candidates, yet treating to a great extent prevailed, and tradesmen in a good position supplied flags, colours, ribbons, &c., to a very large amount without receiving any orders. After the election was over, the bills were sent in headed, "Kinglake and Shelley," but Sir John Shelley refused to pay them, and they stood over until the election of Mr. Vanderbyl in July 1866. And in one notable case, that of Mr. Henry

F. Nicholls, a draper and ship owner, and justice of the peace for the borough, goods were supplied illegally, such as flags, ribbons, handkerchiefs, &c., to the amount of 12*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.*, and the entry in the books was altered from "Kinglake and Shelley," the name of "Vanderbyl" being substituted for the latter. In another case, that of a Mr. Hurman, a draper who supplied goods without authority at Sir John Shelley's contest, was also paid by Vanderbyl after Hurman had made it a matter of strong complaint that his bill had not been paid, and ought to have been before Bagehot's contest. On the Conservative side it was proved that Mrs. Westropp, acting under the advice and in conjunction with Bealey Smith, a son of and partner with the Mr. Richard Smith already named in this Report, provided 1,500*l.* of her own money and caused the same to be conveyed by her sister, Miss Stockwood, to a Mr. Benjamin Humphrys Tromp, who was then a managing clerk to Messrs. Johnson, Farquhar, and Leech, solicitors and parliamentary agents, to be distributed in bribery. This sum of 1,500*l.* had been settled upon her by her husband some years before in her maiden name, and she was thus enabled to deal with it in her transactions with her brokers. Mr. Tromp played the part of "Man in the Moon," and in addition to this 1,500*l.* another sum of 500*l.* was given to him on the night of the nomination day by his receiving an intimation that if he would take a walk in Mr. Richard Smith's garden, he would find something in the summer-house. In addition to these sums, Tromp received 250 guineas for his own services besides his expenses, and also paid several public-house scores is addition. He told us that Mr. Farquhar, now dead, was the only member of the firm who was aware of his, Tromp's, employment at that election.

The contest resulted in the return of Westropp and Kinglake. The numbers being for

Westropp - - - - -	328

The principal bribe agents for the Conservatives at this election were B. H. Tromp, Frederick Harden, Frederick Temblett, John Truman, Francis Jarvis, Frederick Jarman, and others, amongst whom was William Heal.

A petition was lodged against the return of Mr. Westropp on the grounds of bribery and other corrupt practices, and a cross petition on similar grounds was lodged against Mr. Kinglake. The result was that Westropp was unseated and Kinglake duly elected; but the costs of the sitting member were not allowed, the chairman of the committee stating "that there was nothing frivolous about Bridgwater." A report was made to the House that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed at the last election. It is necessary here to state, that after the result of the petition was known in Bridgwater a petition was drawn up by a committee of the Liberal party, headed by Mr. Sealey, the banker and a justice of the peace for the county and borough, and leading man amongst the Liberal party, praying the House of Commons to delay the issuing of the writ, and for a commission of inquiry to issue. This petition was signed by 80 persons, many of whom acknowledged to us that it was got up as a party manœuvre simply to delay the issue of the writ, lest if a new election took place immediately, any candidate who stood on the Conservative side would reap the benefit of Mr. Westropp's bribery. Mr. Baxter, the chairman of the election committee, declined to take any steps in the matter, on the ground, as was stated to us, that the House of Commons had never acted on the report of any commission of inquiry into corrupt practices, and Mr. Kinglake himself, who told us he was quite averse to any inquiry whatever at that time into the state of the borough for which he sat, also refused. Sir Harry Verney was applied to and did make a motion for the delay of the writ, which was defeated by a large majority, and a new writ was accordingly ordered to issue. Mr. Kinglake, not willing to commit himself to any overt act of hostility, or dissent from the motion of Sir Harry Verney, although, as we have before said, himself averse to the threatened inquiry, took the precaution to be absent from the division. The minority in favour of the inquiry was entirely composed of Liberals. Both Conservatives and Liberals voted in the majority for issuing the writ. Mr. Kinglake's published expenses were 207*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*; but his real expenses were 422*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* Sir John Shelley's were about the same.

Two incidents in connexion with the contest of 1865, and the election trial of 1866, deserve particular notice in this place. The first is the case of William Heal, of whom we have already made mention. In the second the character and conduct of Mr. James Wood Sully are again materially involved. At this election William Heal, who had up to that time always acted for the Liberal party, being disgusted with Foster, Benjamin Lovibond's clerk, for not giving him the sum of 40*l.* in 1857, already mentioned in this report, voted for Westropp, and received, among other sums, 250*l.* to bribe with, 200*l.* of which he acknowledged to have kept for himself. He also admitted that he had committed wilful perjury before the election committee in 1866. The second case to which we desire to refer, is one belonging to a class of cases of undue influence of which we had some evidence, but the particular case in question is one of very gross tyranny in the shape of the expulsion of a member from a Baptist chapel on the pretence that the member, one Robert Coles, had committed perjury before the committee of the House of Commons which tried the election petition in 1866, and had also been guilty of bribery at the election. The case is of such a nature that we deem it right to set it out somewhat at length. It appears that the Mr. James Wood Sully who has been previously mentioned in this our Report in connexion with the riot at Mr. Bowen's house was one of the deacons of a Baptist chapel, of which Robert Coles was a member, and who had voted for Mr. Westropp. Coles gave evidence before the committee of the House of Commons, and shortly after his return to Bridgwater, Mr. J. W. Sully requested Coles to attend a private meeting at the house of Mr Perkins, the pastor of the chapel. Coles accordingly attended, and found Mr. Perkins the pastor, and Messrs. Whitby and J. W. Sully, the deacons of the chapel, present. Sully acted as accuser, and said, "he has "been to London with dirty hands as to bribery and perjury." Coles denied the accusation, and asked them to wait until the Blue Book was published, and it was arranged they should do so. The following being sacrament Sunday, Coles was requested not to attend communion. On the Monday the usual monthly church meeting took place, at which, in violation of the arrangement previously come to, not to take any step until the Blue Book was published, the subject of Coles and his evidence was brought up and a vote taken upon it. Coles's son, in addition to the pastor and the two deacons, was the only male person present, the rest of the meeting consisting of eight or nine females. This proceeding was in direct violation of the rules of the church, which orders that no member shall be expelled without a special meeting being called, at which all the members are invited to attend. On the following morning Coles received a letter of which we here subjoin a copy.

"Dear sir, Bridgwater, May 3, 1866.

"Since our interview with you last night, when you denied the charges brought against you, we have obtained a certified copy of the evidence by you taken down by the shorthand writer employed. We grieve to find that the case as stated to you is most fully confirmed. The deacons have likewise had an interview with the gentleman who was present during the whole time of your examination. He also confirms the report of the shorthand writer, and also states his own feeling that your evidence was of the worst description. It was to him, a gentleman standing near him said, he could see from your manner that you were stating what you knew to be untrue. Under these painful circumstances we felt that we could do no other than bring the matter before the church, who have this evening passed a resolution for your expulsion. As we reminded you last night this step taken by them had nothing to do with your voting one way or the other. It is solely taken on the ground of the character of the evidence given by you before the committee which is already the topic of general remark in this town, to the injury of the cause of Christ with which you and we are connected. We most earnestly assure you that we have taken this step in no spirit of unkindness, but solely as a duty we owe to Christ; and our earnest prayer is, and will be, that God will give you repentance to life eternal, and that you may find peace and pardon again through the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin.

(Signed) Joseph Perkins, Pastor.
J. W. Sully
John Whitby } Deacons."

Coles attributed this treatment to his having voted for the Conservatives; and he complained that since the expulsion he had suffered greatly, being looked down upon as one who had been expelled from a religious body, and that his family were often taunted with it. He afterwards brought an action for libel and recovered 50*l.* damages, and on the trial it was admitted that he had not committed perjury before the committee of the House of Commons.

The cost of Mr. Westropp's two contests, and the costs of the petition, amounted to 7,000*l.*, for which he never received any account from Richard or Bealey Smith; in addition to which the cost of nursing the borough, at the average rate of 370*l.* a year for nine years, amounts to 3,330*l.*, making a total expenditure of 10,330*l.* To this must be added the costs of the contest in 1868 and the petition in 1869.

Immediately upon Mr. Westropp's being unseated Mr. Spofforth was applied to by Mr. Bealey Smith and other persons from Bridgwater to find them a candidate to contest

Mr. Brogden had advanced upwards of 2,000*l.*, he told Mr. Vanderbyl that things were beginning to look ugly, and mentioned the amount he had advanced. Mr. Vanderbyl replied that the solicitors were very respectable people and he supposed it would be all right. Mr. Brogden understood that Mr. Vanderbyl left it to his discretion how much money should be advanced. Mr. Brogden would not fix any limit as to how far he would have gone in case more money had been asked for or if there had been a close run between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Patton:—but if Mr. Barham had asked for 1,000*l.* instead of 700*l.* after the close of the poll, he would have given it to him. The last cheque given by Mr. Brogden to Mr. Barham was for 700*l.* after the close of the poll and upon the same Manchester bank. The question was put to Mr. Brogden, "If there "had been a petition, and the whole facts had come out before the House of Commons "Committee, do you not think that you would have been returned as a briber?" To which he answered that he did not; but considered he was completely relieved from responsibility by paying the money to the legal agents. And he also said that his lawyer whom he had consulted on the subject had recently expressed the same opinion. Mr. Sealey, the head of Sealey's Bank, and one of the prime movers in getting up the petition of 80, admitted that on the morning of Mr. Vanderbyl's first election his partner, Mr. Prior, showed him a check for 100*l.* drawn by Mr. Brogden on a Manchester bank, and told him that Mr. Barham wanted gold for it. Mr. Sealey upon that said, "What the devil did you come to me for on such a transaction as that?" By which words Mr. Prior told us he did not nor does now understand that Mr. Sealey meant to express any dissatisfaction with the part taken by Mr. Prior in the cashing of this and the other cheques. Mr. Sealey also admitted that on the same evening he saw a second check of Mr. Brogden's for 300*l.*, which had been cashed, and he did not remonstrate with his partner for cashing it. Mr. Vanderbyl's published expenses were 217*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, his actual outlay being over 4,000*l.* In the result Mr. Vanderbyl was returned, the numbers being for

Vanderbyl	312
	36	Majority.

In a few weeks afterwards Mr. Vanderbyl repaid to Mr. Brogden the sums so advanced to him, with interest charged thereon. It transpired during our inquiry that, whereas Messrs. Reed and Cook received but 50*l.* each for their services from Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham were each rewarded by him with the sum of 200*l.*

The principal bribe agents on this occasion on the Liberal side were Andrew Allan, Henry Chapman Bussell, and the others who acted at the previous election. As to Mr. Brogden, the lapse of time renders him safe from any prosecution under the Corrupt Practices Act. But it still remains to be seen whether it may not be deemed fit to render him amenable in some other form for the part he took in bribing at Bridgwater whilst a Royal Commission to inquire into corrupt practices was pending at Great Yarmouth, the scene of his former exploits in the same direction.

On Mr. Patton's behalf the "Man in the Moon," Tromp, was again employed. Mr. George Thompson as Mr. Patton's friend, provided 2,000*l.* in notes which he handed to Mr. Westropp who got gold for them at the Bank of England, and took them to the "Carlton Club," where he made them up into a packet, and caused the parcel to be carried out by a servant, and handed over to a Mr. Lilley, an auctioneer and justice of the peace for the borough of Bridgwater, who was waiting in a cab outside the club. We think it right here to state that we have no reason to suppose that any other person connected with the "Carlton Club" had any knowledge whatever of Mr. Westropp's proceedings. Mr. Bealey Smith had introduced Mr. Lilley to Mr. Tromp, and it was arranged that Tromp should call at Mr. Lilley's house after he got to Bridgwater for a parcel. Mr. Lilley took the parcel to Bridgwater and Tromp called under the pretence of inquiring about some public-house Mr. Lilley had for sale, and Mr. Lilley under the pretence of going for a catalogue left the room, and Mr. Tromp carried off the parcel containing the 2,000*l.* in gold. The money was spent in bribery by Mr. Tromp and his sub-agents who had also acted at the two previous elections.

The published expenses of Mr. Patton were 158*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* The real cost of Mr. Patton's two contests was 6,150*l.*

Mr. Vanderbyl having, as we have already shown, gained his seat against Mr. Patton in 1866 by the most unblushing bribery, continued to hold it until the general election in 1868. The Conservative party, feeling that their own hands were little, if any, cleaner than those of their adversaries, had declined to petition, and there the matter rested. In 1868 Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake, the then sitting members, determined again to contest the borough. The agents employed on their behalf were Messrs. Lovibond, Barham, Reed, and Cook; but the former, Mr. Lovibond, was more especially in the confidence of Mr. Kinglake, whilst Messrs. Reed and Cook were more immediately identified with Mr. Vanderbyl. Considerable distrust, however, seems to have been felt between the representatives of each of the Liberal candidates, and a system of reticence amongst them, if not of actual intrigue, began to obtain, which seems to have been continued more or less up to the very eve of the trial of the election petition itself. Indeed Mr. Barham told us that he had heard from Mr. Lovibond about two months before the election that he had received a very extraordinary application from Mr. Vanderbyl. This was that he should act as his agent only, and throw over Mr. Kinglake, for whom he had always been concerned. This proposition Mr. Lovibond curtly declined. Mr. Westropp, who after he was unseated in 1866 had declared that he would have nothing more to do with Bridgwater, had been invited early in May of that year to a Bridge Committee dinner, a sort of convivial meeting held annually, and restricted to the leading Conservatives of the town. He there, as he said, "carried away by the hearty "reception he received, in a weak moment promised again to contest the borough."

About six weeks before the election he came down with a London merchant, Mr. Gray, who had been recommended to the party by Mr. W. Toogood, a parliamentary agent, himself a native of the borough of Bridgwater. Mr. Gray was introduced to Mr. Lilly, by this time become alderman, and other leaders of the party by Mr. Toogood (who subsequently received one hundred and fifty guineas for his trouble), and a meeting of their supporters was held. It was, at the last moment, determined by the actual heads of the Conservative party that they should fight a pure election on this occasion; and although it was evident that the voters looked on that determination as a mere blind to the other party, and voted in the hopes of obtaining money thereafter, no money, with the exception of two sums of 3*l.* or 4*l.* paid by Mr. Leaker of the "Clarence Hotel" to voters late on the polling day, was corruptly expended, as far as we could learn, by the Conservatives at that election. No doubt many of the more noisy members of the party talked loudly about money, and how things ought to be, and complained greatly of the unwonted absence of corruption, but it was confined to the underlings as a rule—two of the most conspicuous amongst whom were a small attorney called Pain, and a draper of the name of Hodges, the latter of whom had also issued a circular bearing on the matter in question. Mr. Gray the candidate had also excited vague hopes by a speech he made early in the morning of the polling day at the "Clarence Hotel," wherein he indicated benefits of some sort as likely to accrue to the borough by the success of his election. To the ignorant and venal voters, money and money only was considered a benefit at election times. Indeed amongst the first "tallies" on the Conservative side there were many well-known voters whose practice at all previous elections had been never to poll before they had been bribed either by word or deed. The consequence, however, to the Conservative party of abstaining, on the whole, from bribery, was, that when beaten they thought themselves to be in a condition, for the first time in their lives, really to press a petition to its conclusion, and thereby to unseat both their antagonists.

Mr. Westropp, who depended on his acquired "popularity," was prepared, as he told us, to spend 500*l.*, but Mr. Gray, who depended solely upon his colleague's reflected popularity, was prepared, as he also told us, to spend 1,000*l.* in whatever way his agents might think fit.

We must here revert to what was going on, anterior to the election, on the part of the Liberals. Both parties had continued their canvass throughout a portion of October up to the very week of the election. Both were confident, and both evidently expected that the other side would spend money.

In view of this contingency, some weeks before the nomination Dr. Hamilton Kinglake, who has been before referred to, had had a communication with Mr. H. Lovibond, and had arranged that the necessary sum of money for corrupting the borough should be forthcoming on the part of his brother at the ensuing election. It should be remembered that Dr. Kinglake had always acted as money agent for his brother so far as finding the necessary sinews of war for the purposes of the election was concerned. The election took place on Tuesday, November 17th, in 1868. On the previous Friday a meeting took place at the office of Mr. Henry Lovibond.

At that meeting Messrs. Paul Reed, James Cook, and Eustace Barham were present, as well as Mr. Lovibond. The question of money to be employed for corrupt practices at the ensuing election was then discussed, and on a statement being made by Mr. Eustace Barham that Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money illegally great dissatisfaction was manifested, and Mr. Lovibond stated that he, at all events, was prepared on behalf of Mr. Kinglake.

It was arranged that another meeting should be held that evening, where Mr. Vanderbyl and his partner, Mr. Fennelly, who acted for him in great measure in the conduct of the election, should be present. This accordingly was held at the offices of Mr. Eustace Barham. Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly attended the meeting; but Mr. Vanderbyl was at once diplomatically requested to withdraw into a separate room. Then in his absence the question of spending money improperly was warmly discussed—the parties present being Messrs. Fennelly, Lovibond, Barham, and Reed. Mr. Fennelly professed to hold out against spending money on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl, and eventually left the room with the understanding that he should give a final reply in an hour. Circumstances, however, which subsequently transpired, induce us to suspect that both these gentlemen were at that time prepared to adopt the alternative of spending money, should they find at the last that there was no chance of success without it.

Messrs. Fennelly and Vanderbyl then left Mr. Barham's offices together; and in the course of an hour Mr. Lovibond received a letter, which he read aloud, stating that no money would be spent illegally on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl.

The next day, Saturday, November 14, two meetings of the Liberals, one public and the other private, took place, but nothing of any importance to our Report transpired, with one exception, and that was at the private meeting, where Mr. Lovibond over and over again urged the madness of two Liberals fighting without money, and the absolute necessity for Mr. Vanderbyl's retirement. It ought to be here mentioned that for the greater security and secresy of their communications it had been arranged between the Liberal attornies, that in speaking of Bridgwater and the Liberal candidates, they should call Bridgwater "Taunton," and that the names of the candidates Berkley and James, the gentlemen who were standing for Taunton, should be substituted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

On Sunday evening, the 15th, by pre-arrangement of Mr. Lovibond, a meeting of the heads of the Liberal party took place at the house of Mr. Henry Nicholls, J.P., the draper and influential supporter of the Liberal candidates, to whom we have already referred. At that meeting the probable result of the election was canvassed, and it was suggested that, as the Conservatives it was thought would spend money largely in corrupt practices, it would be impossible to carry two Liberal members without a like expenditure. Mr. Westropp's antecedents were well known, and Mr. Gray was so "insignificant in every "sense," as more than one witness told us, "that unless his name meant money it meant "nothing at all." Mr. Lovibond at this meeting told Mr. Thomas Collins, a large cheese factor, that he was prepared on the part of Mr. Kinglake to spend money for the purposes of the election. Mr. Lovibond then made a proposition that a deputation should wait on Mr. Vanderbyl, and request him to retire from the contest, so as to leave the field open to Mr. Kinglake, for whom, as we have before observed, he was more particularly interested. The pretext put forth for taking this course was, that Mr. Vanderbyl, in his examination concerning the winding-up of the Lundy Island Granite Company, had, upon oath, made statements that tended to discredit his honour and veracity. It is enough to say that on the previous day that very subject had been fully discussed at a public meeting, and a resolution in his favour, nevertheless, unanimously agreed to. After some discussion a deputation was arranged, consisting of Mr. Henry Nicholls, Mr. Thomas Collins, Mr. George Wilton, and Mr. Joseph Palmer, all warm supporters and in some sense leaders of the Liberal party. Accordingly, between 10 and 11 at night, the deputation waited on Mr. Vanderbyl at his hotel, the "Globe," and remained in discussion with him till midnight. The time so occupied is material. It is well also to state that the latest moment at which a letter can be posted, even with two stamps, at Bridgwater is 10.15 p.m., and that the last train leaves at 11.10 p.m. Mr. Fennelly, who is a partner in business with Mr. Vanderbyl, and who had been introduced by Mr. Vanderbyl to the different agents and heads of the party as his representative and confidential friend, was present at the meeting.

Great pressure was put on Mr. Vanderbyl to compel him to retire, and at one time he seemed inclined to yield. He said, however, that he had been very badly used by the same lawyers on the former occasion; that they had caused him to spend a very large sum of money on his first election, and now they were again putting pressure on him for more money, and he would not stand it. He also assented to the observation of Mr. Fennelly's, "It is not the Lundy Island Granite Company, "gentlemen, it is money you want." He seemed, indeed, to prefer giving up altogether; and on making some remark to that effect, which seemed to be understood and adopted by the deputation, Mr. Fennelly broke in and said, "This is an important matter; let us have the night to think it over." Mr. Vanderbyl closed with that suggestion, and the deputation, who also acceded to it, left somewhere about 12 o'clock.

But at that very time Mr. Fennelly had written a letter to his partner, telling him to be prepared with money in the way hereafter described. This letter must have been posted before the deputation arrived; which confirms us in our view that the pretended objection to spending money was not sincere, and only made with a view to see how much could be got out of Mr. Kinglake's pocket. Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly were then left alone, and as we determined to examine neither of those gentlemen, what took place between them is mere matter of conjecture. We know, however, that about an hour after the deputation left, at 1 in the morning, Mr. Fennelly called Mr. Cook up, who was in bed, and told him that Mr. Vanderbyl was prepared to spend money. Now considering that at 12 o'clock that night Mr. Vanderbyl had stated that he preferred retiring to spending money, that Mr. Fennelly prevented his doing so, that he had an hour's private interview with Mr. Fennelly, the inference is obvious, and we cannot but conclude that Mr. Fennelly's arguments determined Mr. Vanderbyl's indecision, and that, armed with Mr. Vanderbyl's authority, Mr. Fennelly made the announcement to which we have above alluded to Mr. Cook. At 8 o'clock or soon after the next morning (Monday), the nomination day, Mr. Fennelly left for London. Nor can we find any evidence to show that Mr. Vanderbyl expressed any surprise or annoyance at his absenting himself for 12 hours at the very most important crisis of events. As we have before stated, Mr. Fennelly, previous to the meeting on Sunday night, had posted the letter of which we have spoken. This letter was to a partner of his and Mr. Vanderbyl's, Mr. Redfern, and in it were the words, "If I telegraph for bales, a bale shall mean 100*l.*" Before Mr. Fennelly arrived in town Mr. Redfern received a telegram from Mr. Fennelly, "Send 15 bales and send Thomas;" meaning a clerk called Lomas, "to meet me at the Paddington station." On the arrival of the train between 2 and 3 in the afternoon at Paddington, Mr. Redfern and Lomas were both on the platform awaiting Mr. Fennelly's arrival, and carrying with them a black bag containing 1,500 sovereigns. That money had been obtained by a cheque in the name of Fennelly, Redfern, & Co. from the Consolidated Bank.

Messrs. Fennelly and Lomas returned to Bridgwater by the 4.50 p.m. train, reaching there at 9.15, and carrying the bag of sovereigns with them. They went that night with the money to the offices of Messrs. Reed and Cook, where it was arranged that Lomas should return to the inn where he was staying, and there make up the money into 10*l.* packages, which were to be called "samples of tea," and a private signal was agreed upon. Mr. Lovibond had been apprised on the morning of the nomination that money would be forthcoming on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl, and observed, "That comes of last night's meeting."

The same evening another scene was being enacted on behalf of Mr. Kinglake. Dr. Kinglake sent after banking hours for Mr. John Prior, at that time junior partner in the banking firm of Sealey and Co., of Bridgwater, and stated to him that he wished to raise 1,000*l.* to assist his brother's election on the ensuing day. Dr. Kinglake had no account with that bank, but, nevertheless, Mr. Prior, without any consultation with his senior partner, consented to advance the amount upon Dr. Kinglake giving a cheque upon Stuckey's bank at Taunton for a similar sum. It was at the same time arranged between them that the money should be at the disposal of Mr. Henry Lovibond.

The following morning (the polling day) the principal bribery agents on the Liberal side assembled at the "Globe" inn, between 10 and 11, and were met by the legal agents, Mr. H. Lovibond being one of them, and were asked what sum would win the election. At that time the Conservatives were largely ahead. Various sums were mentioned.

Mr. Paul Reed, one of the Liberal agents, then said, in Mr. Lovibond's presence, "If 3,000*l.* will do you can have it." Nothing, however, was definitely settled at that time, and so hopeless was the contest considered by some of the Liberal party that Mr. Kinglake left the town for London at 1.30 p.m. He had been told at 1 p.m., as he acknowledges, by Mr. Lovibond, that "Brown & Co.'s workmen" (new voters for the most part) were hanging back, and would not go to the poll without money. That such was then also the current rumour was confirmed to us by other witnesses. Mr. Kinglake did not tell us what was the nature of his reply.

About 12 o'clock in the day Dr. Kinglake, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Mogg, the Justice of the Peace already mentioned, had met outside the "Globe," when a conversation took place as to the sum required to win the election, and in the course of that conversation Mr. Reed said, in the hearing of all, that the election could be won for 3,000*l.*; and Mr. Lovibond and Dr. Kinglake, having withdrawn apart for a short time, returned, and the former said to Mr. Reed, "Kinglake's friends think his seat of such importance that they would not mind spending 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*"

It is right that we should state that between 12 and 1 the same day Dr. Kinglake went to Sealey's bank, saw Mr. Prior, told him to cancel his cheque of the night before, and then left. About the same time of the day Mr. Lovibond had stated to Mr. John Smith, already named in our Report, who reproached him with what he called the mismanagement of the election, "We were prepared for any emergency in the morning, and if there is any fault to be found it lies with Reed and Cook." Between 1 and 2 the same day another conversation took place between Messrs. Reed, Cook, and Lovibond, when they all agreed that the time had come, if at all, for spending money, and Mr. Lovibond pressed Messrs. Reed and Cook to advance it from Mr. Vanderbyl's coffers. They declined to do so, and Mr. Cook said "it is not fair to bleed from one lung,"—meaning, as we imagined, taking money from Mr. Vanderbyl's pocket only. Mr. Lovibond then retired, and Messrs. Reed and Cook about an hour or so afterwards began to spend Mr. Vanderbyl's money—but sparingly,—and whilst so employed Mr. Cook complained warmly of the absence of Mr. Lovibond, who at about 2.30 was fetched by Mr. Mogg, who told him the election was not lost. Mr. Lovibond then went out, and meeting one of the bribery agents, before referred to, Andrew Allan, told him to go home and wait there. Shortly after, about 3 o'clock, he met Mr. Bate, son of the Mr. Bate who has been before mentioned as agent to Mr. Kinglake, and asked him to go to Sealey's bank and tell them to send 500*l.* to Allan. He refused, but Mr. Mogg, who came up about the same time, was more complaisant, and took the message to Mr. Prior, and delivered it by writing down "500*l.* for Allan" on a scrap of paper. Mr. Prior's son took the money in gold to Allan, by whom a large portion of it was spent in bribery at the "New Inn." Mr. Prior stated that but for the transaction with Dr. Kinglake the night before he should not have advanced the money.

He in no way denied that he knew the destination of the money, but his account of why he gave it, how he kept it concealed up to the present time from his senior partner, and the security that he deposited for it, was of the most confused and unsatisfactory character. He maintained, however, to the last that Mr. Sealey never knew anything about it because he never went to the strong room to count the bullion. If he had he would have found in another of the many bags containing each 500 sovereigns a paper debiting himself, Mr. Prior, with that sum, instead of the 500 sovereigns that were in the bag that was taken away. How far such a state of things could exist in a bank for a whole year we are at a loss to conjecture, and it seems impossible to believe but that Mr. Sealey (regard being had to the expressions used by him at the former election, when his bank was made the vehicle of corrupt practices) must have known something of the matter, in spite of repeated denials both by himself and Mr. Prior. Mr. Kinglake, when pressed by us as to what course he meant to pursue as to repaying the 500*l.* advanced by Mr. Prior, at first said that he should like to leave it in the hands of some man of honour to say what he ought to do. Upon a subsequent day, when the penal consequences of his repaying this money, which had notoriously been expended in bribery, were pointed out to him by us, he somewhat qualified his former statement, and seemed doubtful as to whether under any circumstances he ought to make good the money so illegally distributed. Indeed, on the last occasion of our examining him, he seemed altogether irresolute as to what course he should pursue.

Previously to the money above alluded to being sent to Mr. Allan, Lomas had brought 1,500*l.*, done up in 10*l.* packets, "of tea samples" as arranged the night before, to the "Globe Inn," and there 240*l.* was distributed in bribery, with the privity of Messrs. Cook, Reed, and Fennelly. Mr. Vanderbyl was during the whole of this day in a room at the same hotel, where he was in constant communication with Mr. Fennelly. Henry Chapman Bussell and Andrew Allan were the principal agents in the matter, although Lomas also assisted. Bussell gave a most graphic account of their proceedings. By 3 o'clock the majority for the Conservatives, which at one time had been 248, had dwindled to eight; but at that time no money had been spent on behalf of Mr. Kinglake. No doubt vague expectations had been held out, but it was when the voting became close that his money began to go. Bussell was sent by Mr. Reed into a dark room, where was a man who turned out to be Lomas, who said nothing. Bussell went out and complained to Mr. Reed, who went into the room, and then told Bussell to go back, and then Lomas having evidently been primed by Mr. Reed gave him 125*l.* in 25*l.* packages of gold. This he distributed in sums of 10*l.* to persons whose names will appear in our schedules. Bussell subsequently obtained more money from the same source, in all 185*l.*, all of which he expended in bribery.

Whilst Bussell was thus operating at the "Globe," Andrew Allan, having at about 3.15 received 500 sovereigns from young Mr. Prior, went to the "New Inn," and, with the assistance of one George Stacey and Edward Culliford, spent amongst some 30 men or more 315*l.* out of the 500*l.* Robert Garratt was also employed in spending money provided by Lomas to the amount of about 60*l.* The balance of what he received Allan stated that he kept, and still had, not knowing what to do with it, but that had a commission not been pending he should have accounted for it to Mr. Henry Lovibond. Shortly after the threat of a petition Andrew Allan went to America, and did not return until Mr. Justice Blackburn, who tried the case, had left Bridgwater. Bussell also kept out of the way, and received two separate sums of 15*l.* each from John Smith the grocer, who had them from Lovibond for his maintenance. Messrs. Fennelly and Lomas also went abroad and remained until the petition had been tried. The last night that Mr. Fennelly was in England he slept at Mr. Vanderbyl's house in London. Their expenses were defrayed by the firm, and will be debited, as we gather from Mr. Redfern, to Mr. Vanderbyl's account. Neither they nor Allan nor Bussell consequently were examined on the trial of the election petition; but as to the two latter, we have no reason to believe that they came before us with any other intention than that of telling the entire truth.

Mr. Smith, however, had taken no part in this election beyond giving his vote for the Liberals. But he had previously obtained some favours from Mr. Westropp, with whom he had been in correspondence, and in the course of which he had promised by "no act " of his" to injure his chance. This letter will be found set out at length in the Minutes of Evidence.

Their opportune distribution of money eventually turned the scale, and Messrs. Kinglake and Vanderbyl were returned by a good majority. The numbers were as follows:—

Kinglake	731
Vanderbyl	725
Westropp	681
Gray	650

Treating was carried on at this election on the usual scale on both sides.

We have thus shown that 240*l.* of Mr. Vanderbyl's 1,500*l.* was distributed by Lomas to the bribery agents. The remaining portion was taken back to London the same night by Lomas, repaid to the account of Fennelly, Redfern, and Company, and the 240*l.* debited to Mr. Vanderbyl's account with the firm, although, as seen by the books, Mr. Vanderbyl's name was some months after the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn, erased, Mr. Fennelly's substituted, and a corresponding alteration made in the balances of their respective accounts.

Messrs. Lovibond, Reed, Cook, and Barham had all been guilty of corrupt practices, as we have before shown, at former elections, and, as far as related to the previous one, to the knowledge of Mr. Vanderbyl himself. Andrew Allan and Bussell were well known bribery agents, and well known as such to Messrs. Lovibond, Reed, Cook, and Barham.

There is one circumstance in connexion with the election on the Conservative side to which we think we ought to call attention. It tends to illustrate the outrageous way in which the Act of Parliament requiring the publication of all legitimate expenses is constantly evaded. Mr. James Trevor, the election agent, told Mr. Leaker, landlord of the Clarence Hotel, the head quarters of the Conservatives, to return all Messrs. Westropp and Gray's personal expenses as part of his account, thus swelling the total by about 150*l.* This, however, he did not pay out of the money deposited with him for the legitimate expenses of the election, but used the 150*l.* for other purposes in the interest of the candidates unascertained by us. He merely handed over some 20*l.* or so for the use of committee rooms and refreshments for clerks to Mr. Leaker, and left the remainder, up to the time of our leaving Bridgwater, as a debt due to him from Messrs. Westropp and Gray. Messrs. Westropp and Gray both told us that they disputed their liability to pay Mr. Leaker's account, inasmuch as it appeared as already provided for by the money which they had deposited for legitimate expenses.

Shortly after the election a petition was threatened on behalf of the Conservatives, and every conceiveable means was adopted by the Liberal solicitors either to suppress it altogether or compromise it at whatever cost.

So alarmed were the Liberals about the effect of a petition on the borough that a meeting actually took place in London between Messrs. Lovibond, Kinglake, Westropp, Reed, and others. Mr. Westropp there blurted out a fact of which Mr. Lovibond up to that time was ignorant, viz., that negotiations had been carried on just before the election through Messrs. Hennett and Spink for a coalition between him, Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Vanderbyl, and the entire throwing over of the senior member, Mr. Kinglake. There was then an attempt to have the petition turned into a special case for the consideration of the Court of Common Pleas on a point of law as to the validity of certain votes, but as this could only be done under the circumstances by withdrawing the charges of bribery it fell to the ground. Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Trevor, and Mr. Sealy met to consider the matter, but without a conciliatory result. Subsequent endeavours were made to smooth matters over by one of the members retiring; this failed owing to Mr. Vanderbyl refusing to be sacrificed, nor would Mr. Kinglake at that time give way. Eventually things became so desperate and the Liberal case appeared so black that it was all but agreed that both Liberal members should retire. Then came a hitch as to when;—although in the end Mr. Kinglake, in order to save his friends did consent to abandon his seat. Moreover a certain number of Conservative working men sent up a deputation to London to protest against any compromise whatever. Eventually, the day before the trial arrived, and after Mr. Justice Blackburn was in the town, a last effort was made. Mr. Barham, at Mr. Lovibond's request, went to Mr. James Trevor and asked him if he could suggest anything to prevent the terrible exposure impending. He said he could not, and so the trial proceeded, and ended in the two Liberal members being unseated, after being put into the witness box and stating upon oath that they knew nothing whatever of the corrupt practices to which divers witnesses had deposed. Just as Mr. Vanderbyl was entering the box his attorney, Mr. Reed, said to Mr. J. Trevor "For God's sake, Trevor, do not have Vanderbyl cross-examined!"—this was acceded to. Mr. Barham and other witnesses said more than once that the statements, both of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, produced a most painful effect on their minds. But after examining Mr. Kinglake we came to the conclusion that at the time he gave his evidence he was speaking what he then believed to be the literal truth. Mr. Vanderbyl, for reasons which will appear obvious, as before stated, we have declined to examine.

In the result, the learned judge having reported that corrupt practices extensively prevailed at Bridgwater, a Commission, on the joint address of the two Houses of Parliament to Your Majesty, was appointed, and the labours of which it has now been our duty to report.

We think it not out of place to state for Your Majesty's information that we considered it a part of our duty to inquire of those persons whom we considered best qualified to judge how far, in their opinion, the extension of the franchise under the last Reform Act had operated towards the purification of the Borough. We regret to state that in answer we were told that whereas before 1868 the number of voters was about 600, of whom 50 at most would take no part in corrupt practices, at the present time at least two-thirds of the new voters were of a class who are always amenable to money considerations, and that the old voters remained much as they were before. Mr. Barham, indeed, than whom no one was more qualified to judge, stated that when he came into the town on the morning of the election he saw hundreds of the new voters standing about in the cattle market like cattle themselves waiting for the highest bidder. Out of the number of voters bribed for Messrs. Kinglake and Vanderbyl, 34 were members of the Conservative Working Men's Association, and the entire number of them had actually promised their votes to Messrs. Westropp and Gray. We cannot therefore say that with the extension of the suffrage there is any improvement in the moral condition of the borough. The gain in quantity has certainly not improved the quality.

We venture further to call attention to the fact that under the Acts of Parliament disfranchising Yarmouth, Lancaster, Totnes, and Reigate persons found guilty of corrupt practices were prohibited from voting for the division of the county wherein their residence or qualification lay at the time of their disfranchisement, but were not debarred, as we venture to submit would be just, and as was done in the case of New Shoreham, from voting in any other county or borough in which they might thereafter acquire a qualification.

We also have to report to Your Majesty that the following witnesses made statements on oath before us, the falsehood of which was afterwards either acknowledged by themselves, or made plain to us in the course of the subsequent inquiry; viz., John Williams Veysey, Henry Cornelius White, William Heal, Robert Bussell, James Hayward, Peregrine Betty, John Truman.

We have also to report that one of the witnesses, William Symmons, having behaved in a grossly impertinent way to one of Your Majesty's Commissioners, was fined by us 50*l.*, which has since been paid into Your Majesty's Exchequer.

We think it right to add that a person called Cornelius Satterthwaite was summoned before us and refused to obey the summons. A rule for an attachment against his person was granted during the past Michaelmas Term by the Court of Queen's Bench. That rule was enlarged at his request until the next term, upon his submission to appear immediately before us. He has not, however, carried out his pledge, although we have taken the unusual course of issuing a second summons to him.

We should here have made some observation as to the state of the law under which we, Your Majesty's Commissioners, have been called upon to hold our sittings, especially in regard of giving or withholding certificates of indemnity, but as a rule for a mandamus against us in our capacity as Commissioners is still pending in the Court of Queen's Bench, we think it but respectful to that Court to reserve any expression of opinion until judgment has been given upon it.

We have not made out any schedule of persons treating or having been treated at the different elections into which we have inquired, because such a schedule would probably have contained the names of the greater part of the voters in the borough, and a large portion in addition of those who had no such privilege.

With respect to other corrupt practices also, it is only when we come to the more recent elections that a tolerably complete list of the names of the guilty at each election, distinguishing those who are from those who are not now on the register of 1868–9 could be obtained by us. We have no doubt that even as to these there are many names still wanting, and more especially of the bribed.

It remains for us humbly to submit to Your Majesty our findings in respect of the premises.

1. We find that corrupt practices have extensively prevailed at the last election and at every preceding election for the borough of Bridgwater into which we have inquired, up to and inclusive of the earliest in date, that is to say, the general election of the 30th April to 3rd May 1831.

2. We find that the corrupt practices so prevailing at the last-mentioned election took place on behalf of both the candidates thereat, the late William Astell, esquire, and the late Charles K. Kemeys Tynte, esquire, the elder; but whether either of them was or or was not privy and assenting thereto, we are wholly uninformed. Neither have we been able to ascertain the names of any of the parties guilty of the said corrupt practices.

3. We find, in respect of the next in date, that is to say the general election of the 11th December 1832, that the then candidates, the said C. K. Kemeys Tynte the elder, and the late William Tayleur, esquire, were privy and assenting to some of the corrupt practices extensively prevailing at the same.

4. We find, in respect of the same election, that the persons named in Schedule A. to this our Report annexed (with others whose names we have been unable to ascertain) committed corrupt practices and were guilty of bribery at the said election, in regard to the votes of other persons, but whose names we have also failed to ascertain.

5. We find in respect of the same election, that the persons named in Schedule B. to this our Report annexed (with others whose names we have been unable to ascertain) were guilty of other corrupt practices thereat.

6. We find in respect of the next election for the same borough, that is to say, the general election of the 5th January 1835, all the candidates thereat, viz.: the said Charles K. Kemeys Tynte (the elder), John Temple Leader, Henry Broadwood, and Francis Mountjoy Martin, esquires, were privy and assenting to some of the corrupt practices extensively prevailing at the same.

7. We find, in respect of the same election, that the persons named in Schedule C. to this our Report annexed (with others whose names we have been unable to ascertain) committed corrupt practices and were guilty of bribery thereat in regard to the votes of other persons.

8. We find in respect of the same election that the persons named in Schedule D. to this our Report annexed (with others whose names we have been unable to ascertain) committed corrupt practices and were guilty of bribery thereat in regard to their own votes.

9. We find in respect of the next election for the same borough, that is to say, the bye election of the 16th May 1837, the said Henry Broadwood, one of the candidates thereat, was privy and assenting to some of the corrupt practices extensively prevailing thereat, but that the other candidate, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Esquire, was not privy or assenting to any of the corrupt practices so prevailing.

10. We find in respect of the same election that the persons named in Schedule E. to this our Report annexed (with others whose names we have been unable to ascertain) committed corrupt practices and were guilty of bribery thereat in regard to the votes of other persons.

11. We find in respect of the same election that the persons named in Schedule F. to this our Report annexed (with others whose names we have been unable to ascertain) committed corrupt practices and were guilty of bribery thereat in regard to their own votes.

12. We find in respect of the next election for the same borough, that is to say, the general election of the 26th July 1837, that the said Henry Broadwood, one of the four candidates, was privy and assenting to some of the corrupt practices extensively prevailing thereat, but that it doth not appear that the other three candidates, viz., Philip Courtenay, Esq., the late Sir Thomas B. Lethbridge, Bart., and the said Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Esquire, were privy or consenting to any of the corrupt practices so prevailing.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C., THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.,

AND

CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.,

COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO INQUIRE

INTO

THE EXISTENCE OF BRIBERY AT THE LAST ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO SIT IN PARLIAMENT FOR THE BOROUGH OF BRIDGWATER, AND ON FORMER SIMILAR OCCASIONS.

At the Town Hall, Bridgwater.

HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

FIRST DAY.

REFORM CLUB PALL MALL

Monday, 23d August 1869.

The Shorthand Writers sworn were Joseph Nelson Cherer, William Aish Davis, William Cocks, and Thomas Hill.

The Secretary read the Warrant directing the Commission to issue.

(The Chief Commissioner.) We are assembled here under the warrant of Her Majesty, which you have just heard read by our secretary, and which has been issued in pursuance of the Act of Parliament passed in the 31st and 32d year of the reign of Her Majesty, which directs that if the judge who has tried an election petition under the Act states in his report that corrupt practices have, or that there is reason to believe that corrupt practises have, extensively prevailed in any county or borough at the election to which the petition relates, such statement shall, for all the purposes of the Act of the session of the 15th and 16th year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to provide for the more "effectual inquiry into the existence of corrupt "practices at elections of members to serve in "Parliament," have the same effect, and may be dealt with in the same manner, as if it were a report of a Committee of the House of Commons appointed to try an election petition.

Now, in consequence of the report made by the learned judge who presided at the election inquiry which was held in this borough some months ago, this commission has been issued under which we are now sitting here. You will perceive by that Act that the power and authority which are conferred on us are to be the same as those conferred on the Commissioners by the previous Act, the 15th and 16th of Her Majesty, which enacted, that after the report of a Committee of the House of Commons, which was then the tribunal for trying disputed elections, power should be given to commissioners constituted as we are now to inquire into such matters at an election; and here I may mention that our powers are not limited to inquire into corrupt practices at the last election, which has caused the commission to issue, but we may inquire as fully into the conduct at previous elections as we may think it our duty to do. We have power given to us under that Act of Parliament to summon before us all persons whom we may believe can give any information to us respecting corrupt practices and the mode in which elections have been conducted in this borough. We have the same power of punishing for contempt of court, for refusal to give evidence, which any of Her Majesty's Superior Courts have, and we have also power to call before us all persons from time to time whom we may have reason to believe may be able to give us evidence touching the matter of the inquiry.

It may be as well to state here that in perusing the report of the proceedings with reference to the last election for this borough which took place before the learned judge, we find he took occasion to animadvert on the absence of one or two persons who were deeply implicated in the corrupt practices alleged to have taken place, and although they succeeded so far on that occasion in absenting themselves from the box, yet it may be as well that they and all other persons should know that they from absence on any particular day will not be able to frustrate the object of this inquiry, because we have the fullest power to report from time to time, and are not bound to make one report once for all. We may adjourn this inquiry from time to time so as to secure in the end the attendance of any person whom we may think it necessary to examine as a witness.

There is only one other matter that I need mention, and that is that by this Act of Parliament all persons who give to our satisfaction the freest and fullest disclosures with respect to all such matters as to which they shall be examined, will be entitled to receive under the Act of Parliament an indemnity from all ulterior proceedings that might otherwise be taken against them ; but it will depend on the manner in which they make the disclosures whether the certificate, which will be a protection against them from any other ulterior proceedings, shall be granted by the Commissioners or not.

After these observations, I think it will not be necessary to do more to-day, and my brother Commissioners agree with me that we had better adjourn the commencement of the inquiry until to-morrow, and we hope that in the course of this inquiry, and it may be a long one, proper respect for the Court will be observed, because otherwise if we should find any disorderly behaviour take place in the course of the proceedings before us we may think it necessary to adopt such measures as we may think proper for the closing of the Court, and the removal of the disorderly persons.

Now with regard to witnesses, it may be convenient to those who are living here, as well as those who are living at a distance, to know that from day to day the Secretary will affix a list of the witnesses who are those to be examined on the next day in such a place that each of the witnesses may know on what day he will be required, in addition to which he will receive a summons directing his attention specifically to the day on which his attendance will be required.

Adjourned to To-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

SECOND DAY.

SECOND DAY.

Tuesday, 24th August 1869.

PRESENT :

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, ESQ., Q.C.,
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, ESQ., and
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, ESQ.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, ESQ., Secretary.

MR. GEORGE BRYANT SULLY sworn.

1. (Mr. Price.) You are the mayor of Bridgwater ?—I am.

2. And the returning officer ?—Yes.

3. What are you by profession ?—A shipowner and shipbroker.

4. How long have you been mayor ?—Since the 9th November.

5. You were acting returning officer at the last election ?—I was.

6. Have you any books with respect to the election? —No ; they are in the custody of the town clerk ; he will produce them.

7. The candidates last time were Mr. Westropp, Mr. Gray, Mr. Kinglake, and Mr. Vanderbyl ?—They were.

8. Had you acted as returning officer at any previous election ?—I had not.

9. Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray were the Conservative candidates ?—Yes ; and Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl Liberal candidates.

10. I suppose they had committee rooms here ; do you know ?—I have no knowledge that they had committees or committee rooms. I do not think it came out in evidence.

11. They were here sometime before the election commenced,—canvassing ?—Yes, they were.

12. All four of them ?—Yes.

13. For how long before the election ?—I should think the canvass began from five to six weeks before the election.

14. Mr. Gray was a stranger, was he not ?—Mr. Gray was a stranger to the borough.

15. Mr. Vanderbyl had sat for the place before ?—Mr. Vanderbyl had sat for about two years.

16. Mr. Kinglake also had sat for some time ?—For several sessions.

17. When was Mr. Kinglake first returned ?—I do not know that I remember distinctly, but I think it must have been in 1852 or 1853; but I have all the documents here.

18. Are you a native of Bridgwater ?—Yes.

19. You have known the political parties all the time you have been here ?—Yes.

20. Have there generally been contests for the borough ?—Yes, generally. I do not think I remember any election without a contest.

21. Party spirit ran very high I suppose ?—I should say so.

22. Before the last Reform Bill what was the extent of the constituency ?—You will get the exact figures from the town clerk, but it was nearly doubled by the Bill.

23. At that time how had the returns been made, alternately of Conservatives and Liberals, or generally one or the other from the previous Reform Bill to the last ?—I should think, speaking without the returns before me, that in the majority of cases Liberal members had been returned; but there had often been Conservative representations.

24. There had been contests as far as you remember on every occasion ?—I think so.

25. What was the first contested election that you remember ?—I remember many, but the first contested election I can charge my memory with was the election in which Lord Henley was a candidate, Mr. Kinglake was a candidate, Colonel Tynte was a candidate, and two Conservative gentlemen.

26. Five candidates ?—Five candidates.

27. What year was that in?—I think it must have been in the year 1849 or 1850, but I am not quite sure.

28. Was it a general election?—Yes; I am not quite positive as to the date, but I remember the names distinctly.

29. Probably it would be 1847?—Possibly it would be so.

30. That is the first that you remember?—Not that I remember.

31. But took a part in?—That I took a part in.

32. On which side?—I have always been a Liberal.

33. We will assume that that election was the one of 1847.

34. Did you take an active part in all subsequent elections up to the time you were returning officer?—I continued to take an interest, but I would qualify the words you have put in my mouth "an active part;" I took an interest in them, and I can explain that.

35. You took part sufficiently to be able to give a short history of each election?—No, I cannot do that. I can only speak of it as it presented itself to my eye.

36. Were you on the committee of any of the candidates?—No; I accompanied the Liberal candidates in their canvas on one occasion when Sir John Shelley came.

37. Who were returned in 1847?—Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett.

38. That is one and one?—Yes.

39. Mr. Follett being the Conservative?—Yes.

40. Was the next election in 1852 a general election?—Yes, I fancy it must have been, but I am not sure. The first I could speak distinctly about would be the one in which Mr. Kinglake was a candidate and Mr. Follett.

41. That is not Sir William Follett, but his brother?—Mr. Spencer Follett. The next election resulted in Mr. Kinglake taking Mr. Follett's seat. I have no distinct recollection of the controversies. I may have been from Bridgwater at the time.

42. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was returned?—I I believe Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett continued members until Mr. Kinglake took Mr. Follett's seat.

43. (Mr. Price.) Was there a contest?—If there was an election there was a contest.

44. There would necessarily be?—There must have been, but I do not wish to be bound to dates, not having the materials before me.

45. Then you do not remember distinctly between 1847 and 1857 what was the state of the representation?—Yes, from the time Lord Henley contested the borough, Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett retained their seats until Mr. Kinglake replaced Mr. Follett.

46. When was Mr. Kinglake first returned?—It would be 1857.

47. Was there a contest then?—Yes.

48. Do you remember who were the candidates?—Mr. Follett, Colonel Tynte, and Mr. Kinglake. I am not sure whether Mr. Mansell was also a candidate at that time.

49. Was Mr. Mansell a Conservative; Yes; it was either then or previously.

50. With regard to those two elections, 1847 and 1857, what were the majorities, can you tell?—No, I cannot.

51. Were they large? We will find that from the books?—Yes.

52. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were there any petitions after those elections?—I am not aware.

53. (Mr. Price.) Then in 1857 Mr. Kinglake was returned and Mr. Follett displaced?—Yes.

54. Then there was another election, I think in 1859. Do you remember whether it was so?—Yes, I remember two elections following each other at short intervals.

55. Do you remember in 1859 who were the candidates?—I suppose that would be the election when Mr. Westropp and Mr. Padwick were here. I am not sure whether that was the date.

56. Was that the first introduction of those gentlemen to the constituency?—Yes; of both of them.

57. Is Mr. Westropp connected with the town of Bridgwater in any way?—Not at all.

58. Is Mr. Padwick?—Not at all.

59. It is the Mr. Padwick whose name is pretty well known now?—Yes, the same gentleman.

60. In 1859 who were returned?—The two liberal candidates were returned.

61. These were Mr. Kinglake and Colonel Tynte?—Yes.

62. Is Colonel Tynte connected with the borough?—He is near us. His family home is at Taunton about ten miles from us.

63. Therefore at that time the two Conservatives Mr. Westropp and Mr. Padwick were unknown to the constituency except when they came down and were introduced?—Quite so.

64. Who introduced them?—I believe Mr. Richard Smith as their agent.

65. Is he alive?—Yes.

66. And Mr. Follett had then retired altogether. He took some office, I believe?—He had some office in the Court of Chancery.

67. At all events some office which deprived him of the power of sitting again?—Yes.

68. Did Mr. Westropp and Mr. Padwick stand on the last occasion as coalition candidates?—Yes, they stood together.

69. And Mr. Kinglake and Colonel Tynte?—I should think they were not so intimate in their coalition as the Conservative candidates were, because there had been some difference between the two sections of the Liberal party.

70. Then was there any change after that?—I think the next election was when the Parliament had expired.

71. That would be 1865?—Yes.

72. Who were the candidates then?—Colonel Tynte did not come forward in 1865. Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley were in the Liberal interest and Mr. Westropp in the Conservative interest.

73. Alone?—He was alone for some time; indeed, I suppose I ought to say alone. There was an appearance of an address from a second candidate, but I believe it only lasted a few days—a Mr. Edwards. There was no nomination of a fourth candidate.

74. Therefore the whole contest was between Mr. Westropp, Mr. Kinglake, and Sir John Shelley?—Yes.

75. Sir John Shelley was introduced for the first time?—He was introduced for the first time.

76. Was he unknown except by introduction?—Except by his parliamentary career, he was unknown entirely to the town of Bridgwater.

77. That resulted in the return of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

78. Then the Reform Bill took place?—No; prior to that we had an election. On the return of Mr. Westropp a petition was presented, and the result of an inquiry before the Committee of the House of Commons was the unseating of Mr. Westropp, and then came the election to supply the vacancy, and there were two candidates, the present Lord Advocate Patton and Mr. Walter Bagehot.

79. What was the result of that election?—The result of that election was the return of Mr. Patton.

80. A Conservative?—Yes.

81. Was Mr. Bagehot a stranger?—No; his family reside in the neighbourhood about ten miles off, and have large business connexions with the town. Personally and individually I should think he might be a stranger to many though known to some of us.

82. Then Mr. Patton accepted office as Lord Advocate?—Yes.

83. Then he came down again?—He returned for re-election and was opposed by Mr. Vanderbyl, and the result was the return of Mr. Vanderbyl.

84. With regard to that election, how long after Mr. Patton announced his acceptance of the office, and therefore his seat became vacated, was the contest got up by the introduction of Mr. Vanderbyl ?—The whole interval, I should think, could only be measured by days.

85. The writ would be moved for in the House on the acceptance of office, and then seven days would elapse. How soon after the issue of the writ was known in the borough, and of course that there would be an election, was it, that Mr. Vanderbyl came ?—I should think he reached the town on the Monday, and the nomination was on the Wednesday. I think I am correct in that.

86. He was a stranger to the borough ?—Yes, I believe up to that time, although he had had commercial connexions with the port, and at Highbridge.

87. What was he ?—I understood that he was a merchant and a bank director.

88. You say that he had commercial relations with the port ; do you mean Bridgwater ?—Yes.

89. What kind of commercial relations ?—He had property at Highbridge, and houses and land also, and was principal shareholder, if not managing director or chairman, of the Lundy Granite Company, whose main depôt was at Highbridge. The stone was brought to Highbridge and put on the railway there.

90. Their depôt is at Highbridge ?—It was at that time.

91. And you say he was managing director if not the chairman ?—He had a very large interest, so I am told ; indeed the steamer was called after his name.

92. Who introduced him to the borough ?—I believe he was introduced by what we should designate the Liberal lawyers. It would be Mr. Henry Lovibond and Messrs. Reed and Cook, and Mr. Eustace Barham at that time.

93. Do you know whether it was in consequence of the request of a deputation to London, or how it was that he came down ?—I heard that it was by deputation who waited upon him in London.

94. It is the same Mr. Vanderbyl who stood for Yarmouth ?—Yes.

95. He was known as the gentleman who had stood for Yarmouth and had been unseated for bribery ?—It is known now.

96. What was the result of the election ?—The return of Mr. Vanderbyl.

97. By a large majority ?—No ; Mr. Westropp's majority, in the first place, was a large one. It was less on the contest with Mr. Bagehot, and was turned into a minority, not a very large one, in the contest with Mr. Vanderbyl.

98. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say it was known then that he had been recently unseated for bribery at Great Yarmouth, and that the invalidity of his election had been decided a few weeks or months before he came down ?—As far as I recollect it was not made known until after his return.

99. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you know it yourself ?—I know it now. I do not say that I knew it then.

100. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not it known that at Yarmouth he had been guilty again and again of corruption, and that he had not claimed the seat ?—Very likely. I do not wish to make any statement in disparagement of anybody unless I know it, and my impression is that the inquiry into the practices of Yarmouth did not take place till after.

101. (Mr. Price.) But the election committee had just unseated Mr. Vanderbyl and some other gentleman ?—Mr. Brogden.

102. That election, however, resulted in the return of Mr. Vanderbyl, and that brings us down to the last election when you say the constituency was nearly double. The result of that election was that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake were returned ? — Yes ; Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake, the old members, were returned.

103. Can you tell us from your general knowledge of the thing—you say there had been contests on almost every occasion—whether it was not almost perfectly notorious that they were very expensive contests ?—I have heard so. I have no knowledge of bribery in Bridgwater. I have never seen any money given in bribery except on one occasion. I was then, as I said just now, acting in the election with Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley, and I was in the committee room when money was brought in by men who had received bribes. That was the only occasion I have ever seen, or as far as I know come in contact with, any persons who had been bribed.

104. Then was it not perfectly notorious to everybody, to a gentleman of your intelligence at all events, that the contests in Bridgwater had been expensive, compared with the size of the place ?—I can only say I have heard so, but I have no knowledge beyond that.

105. Probably the published expenses would give no clue to what the real expenditure has been ?—I am afraid they do not.

106. I do not know whether they were returned to you ?—They were returned to the town clerk's office.

107. Previously to the auditor, but now to the returning officer ?—They are.

108. The Liberal lawyers you say were the parties who got up the contest ?—I think so far as my memory serves me the candidates were always introduced by gentlemen of the legal profession.

109. On both sides ?—Yes, on both sides.

110. How many attornies are there in Bridgwater who take an active part in politics ?—I suppose six or seven.

111. On each side ?—No, not on each side ; together.

112. How many attornies are there in Bridgwater altogether ?—I do not know.

113. About a dozen ?—I should think quite.

114. You think not more than six have taken an active part in electioneering ?—It is very difficult for a layman to know.

115. How many attornies have you seen employed, or taking an active part for the Liberal candidates in these contests ?—Four on recent occasions.

116. One is Mr. Lovibond ?—Mr. Lovibond, Messrs. Reed and Cooke, and Mr. Barham.

117. That is for the Liberal side ?—Yes.

118. Who are generally known as active for the other side ?—Whilst Mr. Smith was in health I believe the arrangement and management of the Conservative party was for some years in his hands and that of his son, since then I believe Mr. Ruddock, and Messrs. Trevor, and Mr. Bryce have been connected with the Conservative side.

119. Those are all you can give the names of as actively employed in electioneering matters ; but are there any other, not appearing prominently but that you know of, who took an active subordinate part under those gentlemen who are attornies in the place on either side ?—I think perhaps I ought to have named Mr. George Pain's son, I think it is Mr. Augustus Pain, I think he was associated with the Conservative solicitors ; he is a practising solicitor ; and I think Mr. Edgar Haviland.

120. And Mr. Bate took an active part ?—Yes ; he is now dead ; he was connected with the Liberal side, and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was, up to his death.

121. Did any one succeed Mr. Bate ?— Yes, his son ; but I do not remember his ever taking an active part.

122. Do you remember anybody else taking a subordinate part, but still an active part, for candidates at the elections ?—There were clerks to those solicitors. I suppose you are not alluding to them, but my memory does not serve me as to any other name.

123. Mr. Vesey, do you know him ?— Oh yes ; Mr. Vesey I know very well.

124. He took an active part ?—Yes.

125. He is a solicitor practising ?—Yes.

126. On which side did he take an active part ?—The Conservative side.

127. When was he first prominently before the public here at elections?—In the election when Mr. Westropp was returned and was petitioned against.

128. That was the election of 1865?—Yes.

130. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not there one who took an active part first on the Conservative side, but of late years on the liberal side, Mr. Boys?—Yes; he is an attorney's clerk.

131. Is not he a partner in a firm at present?—Not that I am aware of.

132. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Brice you mentioned?—Yes.

133. He is an attorney?—Yes.

134. And acted on the Conservative side?—And acted on the Conservative side.

135. One of the prominent men?—Yes.

136. During your knowledge of Bridgwater have there always been as many as four or five attornies employed on each side actively, or more?—I should think so, although I think there have been more attornies employed on the Conservative side since Mr. Smith's illness than before, apparently actively employed.

137. More since his illness than before?—Yes, actively.

138. We may take it that those legal gentlemen have contrived to have a contest on each occasion?—There have been contests, and some of us have been uncharitable enough to put it down to the source that you have named.

139. (Mr. Anstey.) Are there two gentlemen of your name in Bridgwater?—Yes.

140. Were you one of a deputation,—I do not know what you call it,—a small body of influential electors, who conducted a negotiation or two between Mr. Vanberbyl and his opponent Mr. Westropp, or between Mr. Kinglake and the same opponent at the last election?—No, I was not.

141. Which Mr. Sully was it?—I was not aware that either had done so.

142. Were you present for instance yourself?—No.

143. You were not present at any meeting, either at the Globe or at Mr. Kinglake's place, at which the question of a compromise was discussed?—I was not.

144. Then will you give me the Christian names of the other Mr. Sully, and of every Mr. Sully in Bridgwater, to your knowledge?—My uncle's name,—I presume the gentleman you allude to,—is James Wood Sully.

145. Any other?—There is another brother, John Sully.

146. Any other?—Not belonging to our family. I think there are one or two other Sullys but I do not know their names.

147. Have you signed any petition to the House of Commons,—either election petitions or petitions complaining of corruption in Bridgwater,—and requesting the suspension of the writ?—I believe I did.

148. Of which kind, and how many; first, election petitions?—Yes; if I signed an election petition it was against Mr. Westropp, and if I signed a memorial praying for an inquiry it was after Mr. Westropp was unseated.

149. That was 1865 or 1866?—It was in 1866.

150. Give us all the information you can to enable us to put questions to other witnesses. In this petition, printed by order of the House in 1866, you, as one of the petitioners, informed the Honourable House, that should an inquiry be instituted before a Royal Commission, a much larger amount of cases of bribery would be disclosed than is apparent from the evidence taken at the trial of the petition against the return of Henry Westropp, Esq., inasmuch as the case of the petitioners was stopped by the Committee when a few cases only had been heard, and that the only reason of the petitioners for abandoning their intention of proceeding to a scrutiny was the very great expense which they were advised would be very likely incurred. I am sure I need not point out to a gentleman of your capacity that this is a very serious statement to make to the House of Commons unless you are prepared to support it. I therefore wish to ask you to furnish the Commission, if not now by-and-by, with the names of the persons, if you cannot yourself give the information, who you think can give information touching these particulars. You have put your name to these statements, and you are bound by them?—Yes.

151. You will do so?—I shall be happy to do everything I can in my power.

152. Can you give any of these names now off hand?—I can give you the grounds on which I suggested that petition.

153. I would rather you answered my question. Can you give me the names of any person whom you know, or believe to have been guilty, or know or believe to be culpable?—No; I have not before me any paper that would answer that question satisfactorily, but there were lists prepared at that time, and I suppose were published lists,—I understood so at the time,—of the electors who were charged with having been bribed at Westropp's election, and it was in reference to the evidence given on either side to the Committee of the House of Commons that that statement was made. I had, and still have a very strong opinion that there were a large number of electors bribed on that occasion.

154. Where are those lists?—I had not charge of the inquiry. I will say this, that Mr. Henry Lovibond and Messrs. Reed and Cooke were agents at that time for the petitioners, and they must have them.

155. Have you any further intelligence you can give me or suggest beyond what those lists would furnish?—Certainly not.

156. Now, with regard to the history of this borough; have you not omitted a very important name in the number of candidates or members, a Mr. Henry Broadwood?—I have not mentioned him, but I do not know that my evidence went back to his time. I remember his being member for Bridgwater very well.

157. Was not he down in 1852?—I should think not.

158. You are not certain?—No, certainly not. Whilst I had a vote I never voted for him.

159. I understood you to say that you were personally acquainted with, though not taking a personal part in, the first election you named?—Lord Henley's is the first I have a distinct recollection of.

160. Whatever that date was you remember previous elections?—Yes, as a child, I remember the excitement and disturbance.

161. There is another name you have mentioned, that of Mr. John Smith, who used to conduct the electioneering business on behalf of the Conservative candidates?—Mr. Richard Smith.

162. What relation was he, if any, to a certain Joseph or John R. Smith, the defendant in a qui tam action which was tried at the Taunton Assizes in 1838, when two bribery penalties of 500*l.* each were recovered against the defendant, an articled clerk of that name living here?—I think the articled clerk of that name was the Richard Smith to whom I referred.

163. That gentleman is still in existence, and in Bridgwater?—I believe so.

164. I think you have signed an election petition too besides the petition praying for the suspension of the writ?—I believe I did.

165. Which?—The petition against Mr. Westropp.

166. What year?—It would be 1865 the election and 1866 the inquiry.

167. There were two election petitions I think, a petition and a cross petition?—Yes.

168. Your petition was against Mr. Westropp. There it is, James Bryant Sully?—No, my name is George.

169. Then you did not sign it?—I am not aware whether I signed it or not.

170. I am not asking you about proceedings at poll booths or elsewhere, but, as far as your private

SECOND DAY.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

24 Aug. 1869.

influence went, did you take any part in the election last year?—During the election certainly not, nor after I became mayor.

171. When did you first become mayor?—On the 9th of November.

172. When did the election take place?—I think it was on the 16th.

173. But down to the 9th of November you had taken part?—Down to the 9th of November, when we had meetings, I occasionally attended them, many of them, five or six, perhaps; sometimes I spoke, and on one or two occasions I was in the chair.

174. And I think you said the canvassing on both sides had certainly gone on five or six weeks before the 17th of November?—I said not more than five or six weeks.

175. Then knowing, by reputation at least, who are and who are not what are called balance men, and so forth,—by which we understand persons bribing or being bribed in the borough,—it will facilitate our proceedings very much if you will tell us the names of any persons of doubtful reputation who to your knowledge were employed or communicated with on your side during the period when you took part in the preliminary proceedings to the election?—I have not any knowledge of any questionable circumstance or communication whatever.

176. I am not asking as to the persons you know who are or who are not persons of ill fame in that regard; I want to know, whether the ill fame be deserved or not, the names of persons who were employed in any way?—I know of none to my knowledge.

177. Can you give us any information as to who the persons are from whom we could get that information; that is to say, persons whose antecedents were not such as your own, which would make them indifferent to what was said of them, who were the inferior instruments in promoting the return of your candidate?—I would willingly give every information I can, but I do not see how I can answer that question, and perhaps the Commissioners will allow me to say why I do not see my way to answer the question intelligibly. There are some electors on both sides who have for many years earnestly desired that the election should be carried out in a proper and legitimate manner. I believe there are men who are as anxious on the Conservative as on the Liberal side, and there are some of those men on either side who have not only spoken and used their influence but also, as far as they legitimately could, have spent their means to further it. We had hoped, and we had good ground for hoping, that when the franchise was increased we should be able, so to speak, to influence the new class of electors so as entirely to checkmate, using a word which every one understands, what we understood to be the bane of the borough before, the old balance men, and my experience of the meetings we attended was, so far as I could gather, that there was an enthusiastic feeling in favour of the Liberal candidates, and I am bound to say that I never once during my attendance at the meetings, or in private during the continuation of those elections, heard that it was contemplated at our last election to use any other but legitimate means.

178. Did not you know at the last election a certain Henry Chapman Bussell was taking an active part in the proceedings of the election on the Liberal side?—Most certainly not.

179. Was that concealed from you?—Entirely.

180. (Mr. Price.) I suppose the additions to this constituency like others were of a similar class and rank in life to those supposed to have been dealt with in the shape of bribery on former occasions?—I had always the impression that the working men as a class had an element of independence which would have enabled them successfully to resist the attacks which other men had given way to, but perhaps I was mistaken. The 10*l.* householder would not necessarily belong to the working class.

181. He would be higher?—Yes, a small shopkeeper.

182. Then your experience is that the higher the station the more likely the man is to be bribed?—No; my knowledge from what I saw led me to draw the conclusion that men who live in houses of 10*l.* or 17*l.* a year were the men who were susceptible to the influence of money.

183. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean the lower you get the purer you get?—Not necessarily.

184. I mean you draw that inference?—Yes; not necessarily. I mean there would be a stratum above all taint.

185. (Mr Anstey.) You think so no longer?—No.

186. You do not think the contrary?—No.

187. (Mr. Price.) You know Mr. Kinglake's popularity while here, and his long standing; how do you account for the fact that with this number of respectable people in the constituency he left the town in dismay about 12 o'clock thinking the election over as against himself. It is a fact, is it not, that Mr. Kinglake in the middle of the day during the contest left the town in a state of despair as to his chance?—Yes, I saw him pass through the town.

188. What was the state of the poll when he went?—I believe he was more than a hundred, perhaps two hundred behind.

189. Do you believe the constituency was nearly polled out or not?—I should think so. I think there were only 60 pollable voters not polled.

190. Then Mr. Kinglake who had been member for several years seems to have left in despair, and Mr. Vanderbyl stayed behind?—I believe he was here.

191. He did not give up all hope?—No. I did not see him during the day until the declaration of the poll, therefore I cannot say the state of his mind.

192. However, he did not go?—No.

193. (Mr. Anstey.) I asked you just now about Mr. Bussell, did not you know that Andrew Allan, nicknamed "Fortnight," a draper or pedlar or something of that kind, was employed or to be employed?—Certainly not. I did not know until the election inquiry.

194. Then is your ignorance on this subject accounted for by the fact that the business of the election on your side or both was not transacted at all by the nominal committee men but by the knot of attorneys who had got the matter into their hands?—I do not think you are quite right in saying the nominal committee men. I am not aware there were any committee men.

195. But it was worked by a knot of attorneys?——I should think so.

196. Then being so worked by those who were bound by professional ties, you knew nothing of what was done in an indirect fashion which they wished to conceal?—Certainly not. I should be the last to know it.

197. There is only one point raised incidentally just now. You have said the constituency was doubled by the Reform Act of 1867, has not there been a very great increase independently of that Act in the number of voters for the borough during the whole period of your recollection,—I will go back to 1851?—There must have been so, because the population in 1851 was about 3,500, whereas we have now about 13,000.

198. Have you ever had the curiosity to go through what are called the numeration abstracts in the census?—Of the population I have.

199. And the houses?—Yes.

200. Have you a recollection of 1841?—I have a memoranda in my possession as to the population in 1801.

201. They would be useful no doubt; have you them here?—Yes.

202. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have no personal recollection of 1801; I need hardly ask you?—No. I find the comparative statement of the census for Bridgwater is as follows, 1801 3,634, 1811 4,911, 1821 6,155, 1831 7,807, 1841 10,430, 1851 10,883, 1861 12,018.

203. (Mr. Price.) That is the last you have?—Yes.

204. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there not this omission in your memorandum, that you have not allowed for the addition to the borough, made by the Borough Boundaries Act of 1832, of the district of Eastover, or some portion of the parish of Bridgwater, which was not before that time a portion of the borough. Have not those memeranda you have reference only to the ancient borough, and not as at present bounded?—I think they include the whole.

205. Are they voters or inhabitants?—These are inhabitants.

206. Male and female?—Male and female.

207. Look again; these are extracts which I have made taken from the returns themselves, are these numbers right? in 1831 6,953 male and 6,760 female, 1841 31,793, 1851 33,185, 1861 34,397?—Those figures cannot refer to the borough or parish of Bridgwater, they must refer to the union.

208. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the present number of the inhabitants of Bridgwater, the parliamentary borough?—I should think from 13,000 to 14,000.

209. (Mr. Anstey.) Is the parish very much larger than the borough?—Not very much larger in the population.

210. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did the last Boundary Commission increase the borough at all?—Yes; it included a street in the parish of Wembdon, and some addition on the eastern side of the town.

211. How many inhabitants did that bring within the parliamentary borough?—I should not think more than from 800 to 1,000.

212. And are the parliamentary and the municipal borough coterminous, or is that plus?—That is plus.

213. They are not still in the municipal borough, but are in the parliamentary?—Yes; and the parish is wider still.

214. (Mr. Anstey.) With reference to this question of increase of voters, have you found the result of new tenements erected since 1851, or the time you began to interest yourself in the borough, has been to bring into the borough a class of voters distinguished in anyway respecting purity, or otherwise from the rest?—I have understood so.

215. In what way?—That they were less amenable.

216. More of the working class?—Yes; I have heard so.

217. The municipal election of last year and the parliamentary election ran very close together?—Yes; one would be on the 1st of November.

218. Have you any means of getting information on this point, whether there was any corruption on either side, particularly your own, before the municipal election with a view to that, and the parliamentary election too?—I have never heard the assumption or the expression of a thought that it was so.

219. Never since the borough was a borough?—I have never known money spent on municipal elections; I have heard so on one occasion.

220. What election?—Not in connexion with the parliamentary election.

221. That is what I mean?—No; and on the last election I never heard that it was thought there was such a thing.

222. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before you became mayor you were town councillor of course?—Yes.

223. When first you were elected town councillor had you a contest for it?—I believe so.

224. Did it cost you anything?—No.

225. In no shape or way?—No; I was from home.

226. Is there no custom here like at some other places of giving half-a-crown or a breakfast to voters?—I have never heard of it.

227. In fact you have never heard anything about municipal elections which leads you to think there was any corruption?—I have never heard of any, and I have been four or five times councillor, and never heard of anything being spent.

228. You said there was one occasion on which there was a report of corruption at a municipal election?—I have heard so.

229. On what occasion?—I cannot charge myself with the date, but one or two townsmen contested, and then I heard drink was given away.

230. Who was the contest between?—I am trying to recollect.

231. Do these municipal elections take a political aspect? Two tories do not oppose each other, but generally it is one Liberal and one Conservative I suppose?—Generally so.

232. And it is made a political matter?—Yes; but personal also.

233. But still a political matter?—Yes it is; there are parties in the municipal contest.

234. You have not told us the numbers at the close of the day at the last election?—

235. (Mr. Price.) The town clerk will give us the number.

Mr. Carslake will hand it to me. (It was handed to the witness.)

236. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the state of the poll at the end of the day?—Mr. A. W. Kinglake 731 votes, Mr. Philip Vanderbyl 725, Mr. Henry Westropp 681, Mr. Charles William Gray 650.

237. What is the whole constituency of the borough of Bridgwater?—1,484.

238. You say it was polled within about 60?—I think so.

239. At the time Mr. Kinglake left in the middle of the day what were the numbers then?—I have no power or information, and nothing in my control that would give that, because the poll books were only made up at the end of the day.

240. Do not you know as a matter of notoriety that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray were in a large majority in the middle of the day, Mr. Westropp 184, and Mr. Gray 129, over the Liberal candidates?—Yes, I should think so.

241. Do not you know from what you saw taking place when the increase began to come towards the Liberal members?—I think it occurred immediately on Mr. Kinglake leaving. He must have passed me in his carriage within ten minutes of one o'clock.

242. As a matter of repute, do you know to what that sudden influx of Liberal voters may be put down to?—No; I do not know of my knowledge.

243. But as a matter of repute?—As matter of repute I heard there were large numbers of men unpolled, and when they found Mr. Kinglake was gone a large number of those who determined that the election of Mr. Kinglake for the borough should not terminate went to the poll, and so reduced the minority.

244. And did not you also hear they were equally actuated by the money Mr. Vanderbyl spent?—No; I have not heard so.

245. Do you mean as a matter of repute you have not heard that large sums of money were given away between the time Mr. Kinglake went away and the time he appeared at the head of the poll?—No, I have not.

246. Do you mean that there was no report to that effect?—Beyond what I have heard in this hall, I know nothing touching the expenditure of money at that election.

247. In 1866 you signed a memorial to the House of Commons in which you charge the borough with gross practices?—Yes.

248. Do you mean that your opinion was, that the addition of a large quantity of lower-class voters to the franchise had purified the borough between that time and the last election?—I told you my opinion of the addition to the constituency, and I have been informed since that a very large proportion of the men to whom I referred voted on the last occasion without any money at all.

249. Do you mean that on the last occasion you believe the election for Bridgwater was more pure than at the time you pledged yourself to the House of Commons that it was very impure?—Yes, I have believed so, most certainly.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. G.B.Sully.

24 Aug. 1869.

250. Tell us the information out of which you made a very serious charge against the borough in 1866 when you signed your name to that memorial? —On the information contained in the briefs prepared for the committee which unseated Mr. Westropp.

251. Can you tell me at all about the number of people charged with being bribed on that occasion?—I think more than 100 certainly; perhaps more than 200.

252. Had you any information over and above what appeared in the briefs that did not come out before the Committee, as to people who had been guilty of corrupt practices?—Certainly not.

253. Then when you signed you did it upon what might have come out before the Committee, but did not come out?—Yes; what I considered making allowance for the brief being corroborated or otherwise by living witnesses.

254. There must be bribers as well as bribees. Now what number of persons at the time you signed that memorial acted as bribers on that occasion?—As far as my recollection serves me, I understood there were three or four on the conservative side who acted as bribers on that occasion.

255. What were their names?—I understood that Mr. Boys was one, and I understood that Mr. Harden was another.

256. Let us have their christian names?—I think it is Thomas Boys.

257. Is he alive?—Yes.

258. Where does he live?—I think in North Street; he is a clerk to Messrs. Reed & Cook the attorneys.

259. Who next?—I heard that Mr. Frederick Harden had been so engaged.

260. Who is he?—A baker and innkeeper; and I heard that Mr. William Heal was so employed.

261. Where does he live?—I do not know where he lives now. I saw him in town.

262. What is he?—He was an innkeeper at that time and brewer.

263. Who else?—Mr. Vesey I heard. I do not know that he passed money.

264. (Mr. Anstey.) The lawyer, or cattle dealer?—He is a lawyer. I heard he was connected with bribery.

265. (Mr. Coleridge.) Acting on that information, and also the number of people you knew or heard of as bribees on that occasion, you signed that memorial?—Yes.

266. But were not there other bribers on that occasion which you heard of?—I dare say.

267. Cannot you tell us at all that you heard of. I do not ask of your own knowledge?—I think I have heard in connexion with it the name of Mr. Temblett; he is a broker.

268. (Mr. Anstey.) A brother-in-law of Mr. Bussell?—Yes, I think he is.

269. (Mr. Coleridge,) At the time you signed that memorial did you imagine your own side was pure, or that corruption was going on?—I imagined our own side was pure.

270. Entirely?—Entirely pure.

271. And that the whole corrupt practices at Bridgwater at that election were confined to the conservative party?—Entirely.

272. I observed that you changed your mind at the late election?—Previous to that.

273. Between the time of signing the memorial and the late election you had changed your mind as to the purity of the liberal party?—Yes.

274. When did that change in your mind come about?—I made the change in connexion with Mr. Bagehot's election, or Mr. Vanderbyl's first.

275. No; because there was no election between 1866 and 1869. In 1866 you signed the memorial to the House of Commons?—Oh yes; the memorial was signed between the unseating of Mr. Westropp and the coming down of Mr. Patton.

276. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, that was 1866?—Yes.

277. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then when did you change your mind?—After the first return of Mr. Patton.

278. That would be 1866?—Yes.

279. Upon what did you ground that?—I founded it upon a statement made to me, and which was the only statement made at all on the subject, and perhaps you will think it very indefinite.

280. You had better let us have it.—I took an active part in unseating Mr. Westropp, and so far as I was able in the return of Mr. Bagehot, and about five in the afternoon I met some one.

281. Who?—I may remember.

282. Do not you know?—I think it was Mr. Henry Nicholls.

283. You are pretty sure it was Mr. Henry Nicholls?—In the excitement of an election you are not sure. I will not withhold anything I can tell you. He said to me "You know our hands are not clean." I said "No, I have not the slightest idea," and I left the town at once and went home.

284. You were so shocked that you went away?—Yes, having spent the time and money that I had in trying to influence a better basis.

285. You did not ask for any particulars of it?—No.

286. But were contented with this vague expression?—I was.

287. (Mr. Price.) How had you spent money in making all pure?—An election costs money, and costs us money which we subscribe.

288. (Mr. Coleridge.) From what you heard in 1866 you knew that your party was not pure, in 1868 did you think that they would become more pure?—I hoped the introduction of a larger number of working men into the constituency would give us an element of purity sufficient to stem the repetition of occurrences which some had deplored.

289. Then you think the 10*l.* voters would be purified by those coming in?—I had hoped that the working men would exercise an influence over the venal men.

290. You mean that it would have made it impolitic to bribe the 10*l.* householders?—Impossible.

291. (Mr. Price.) It would take too much money?—Well, I hoped they would not be subject to the temptation.

292. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before 1866 you thought the liberal party quite pure?—I think you will recollect that I said I did not take any active part in the Liberal election till 1865.

293. As to 1865 you say until you were shocked by what you discovered you thought the Liberal party were pure?—Certainly.

994. As to elections in which you did not take an active part, former elections, had not you heard of impurity on the part of the Liberals as well as Conservatives?—I had.

295. Then I am to take it that until this 1865 election the Liberal party had been pure as compared with the Conservatives before?—I understood that previously to 1865 there were improper practices on either side.

296. Your opinion was that the 1865 election was pure on the Liberal side until your mind was disabused of that idea by this Mr. Nicholls?—No, it was pure as far as I know; it was the 1866 one that I had this information about.

297. Then you believe the 1866 election was pure until you had this conversation?—Certainly.

298. You said there were several people anxious for purity in the borough?—Yes.

299. You have not told us whether any of the lawyers were among them?—No; but I have no objection to tell you all about it.

300. You have given us the names of 8 or 9 solicitors, but I see there are 18.

301. Is Mr. Benjamin Tuthill Allen one?—He resides at Burnham, and is not a Bridgwater man, and I have not known him to interfere.

302. Has he any property in the town?—Not that I am aware of.

303. Mr. Henry Peter Amber?—He is a partner with Mr. Ruddock. I have not known him engaged in elections.

304. On which side is he ?—The Conservative side.

305. Charles Robert Bate ?—He is son to Mr. Bate. I am not aware that he acted improperly.

306. William Carvill Boyle we have heard of ?—No, I have not heard of him, but he has recently come into the town, and succeeded to Mr. Smith's practice.

307. Mr. Richard Brice ?—I think that gentleman resides at Burnham.

308. I suppose he has a vote here ?—I think not.

309. Mr. William Brice ?—Yes.

310. James Cook junior ?—He is a partner with Mr. Reed.

311. Edgar Haviland ?—I named him.

312. Arthur George Pain ?—That is the gentleman I referred to.

313. Gabriel Stone Pool ?—He is a Bridgwater man. I have never known him to act politically.

314. Which side is he in politics ?—I should call him a Conservative Liberal.

315. Which side does he vote ?—I do not think at all.

316. Then Paul Octavius Reed. Is he the gentleman you have referred to ?—Yes.

317. Mr. John Ruddock ?—Yes.

318. Mr. Richard Bealy Smith ?—Yes.

319. And Mr. John Trevor and Mr. Vesey. Those exhaust the lawyers. Amongst the people anxious to purify the borough can you name any one of those who has been anxious in his attempts to do it in the same way as yourself ?—Yes. In the petition against the return of Mr. Westropp in 1865 the professional men were as active as we were.

320. In what way ?—They subscribed money to further the petition, and procured the evidence on which the briefs were founded.

321. You mean that they subscribed in carrying out the petition against their own political enemy ?—They did.

322. You used the expression "to purify the constituency." Were any steps taken or meetings held ?—Yes, and some declined to subscribe until they had distinct assurance from the professional men who were present that if this matter were prosecuted the Liberal party would never again be placed in any similar position.

323. Did any of these professional gentlemen make speeches ?—Pledged themselves of course.

324. That was to protest against Mr. Westropp ?—And, as far as the Liberal party were concerned, that no practices of an improper character should ever again be followed.

325. And that, unfortunately, they did not keep on the last occasion ?—I am afraid they did not.

326. Did any of the professional gentlemen sign the memorial to the House of Commons praying for the inquiry in 1866 ?—I do not know who signed the petition.

327. Is it a fact that in all political matters here the solicitors are banded on one side and the other, and the destinies of the borough remain with them ?—They are largely.

328. In fact, the borough is in the hands of the lawyers ?—It is an expression which some of us used.

329. (Mr. Price.) If there were no lawyers you think the borough would be pure ? If you got rid of the legal gentlemen you think Bridgwater would be a pure borough ?—Must I answer that question ?

330. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, the Mayor of Bridgwater's opinion is a valuable one on that subject; would it be pure in that case ?—I do not say so. I have had more experience of human nature lately than previously.

331. How many solicitors were actually employed as paid agents on the last occasion ?—I am not aware.

332. (Mr. Price.) Do you know any one who was ?—No.

333. Did all the solicitors vote ?—I believe so.

334. What ! those who were paid ?—I am not aware that any were paid.

335. What became of Mr. Vanderbyl's money ?—I remember having a conversation with one solicitor on the subject. I am not aware whether Mr. Barham or Mr. Lovibond, prior to the election. I know the impression on my mind was that the agents were acting disinterestedly without pay.

336. But from your knowledge of human nature you would not think they would work for nothing ?—I am obliged to believe their statements.

337. However, you do not know of any particular agent ?—No.

338. Is not there any one in the return of expenses ?—I think not.

339. I hold in my hands the returns. Is no other agent mentioned ?—No, I have not examined the previous ones. They have not come into my hands.

340. (Mr Coleridge.) There is one answer which you gave which was not followed up. You say on one occasion you were present, and only on one occasion, when you actually saw money paid for bribery ?—Yes.

341. Will you give an explanation of that ?—I was in the committee room in Fore Street when Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake were candidates.

342. That was the pure year ?—Yes ; as far as the Liberal side went.

343. What took place ?—I saw one or two men, who afterwards gave evidence in London, come into the committee room, and hand over the money they had received for their votes to some one of the Liberal party. I believe to Mr. Lovibond, or his clerk.

344. What were their names ?—Mr. Cooze is one.

345. Is he alive ?—No ; and Mr. Staples was another.

346. Did you hear it stated whom they received that money from ?—Yes ; I think I heard them state it. At any rate I heard them in London before the Committee state that they both received the money from Mr. Boys. I am not quite sure.

347. That was the only time you have guarded yourself that you have actually seen any of the money pass in bribery ?—Yes, it is.

348. Has it been the habit in this borough to subscribe anything towards the expenses of members ?—I have always understood they have borne their own expenses.

349. Do you know what sum of money Mr. Vanderbyl spent at the last election ?—No.

350. Or before ?—No, not the slightest.

351. You say in 1865 there was only a nominal address from Mr. Edwards ?—Yes.

352. Is that Mr. Edwards a solicitor of London who afterwards stood for Barnstaple ?—I do not know ; but his family reside at Rington.

353. Is he the Mr. Edwards who rents Brockley Coombe ?—Yes ; I think so.

354. (Mr. Anstey.) With reference to a question which was put by Mr. Coleridge with regard to the signatures, and the part the attorneys took, you spoke of the part taken by the Liberal attorneys in promoting purity of election after Mr. Westropp's return in 1865,—you know there was a petition presented to the House of Commons,—did you say that the Liberal attorneys signed that petition, or were instrumental in getting it up ?—Yes, certainly.

355. For the suspension of the writ I mean ?—I do not know about that.

356. I have an office copy from the Journal Office of the House of Commons of that petition, and the addresses, and I find the two attorneys who signed it ?—Yes ; I am not aware who the attorneys were.

357. Mr. Eustace Barham and Mr. James Cooke, junior ?—Yes.

358. Is the name of either of those gentlemen connected with the borough, by report or otherwise, with certain proceedings for raising 3,000 guineas, to be spent in facilitating or otherwise in promoting the return of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake at the last election ?—It is the first time I have heard of such a sum or such a fund.

359. Have you ever heard their names mentioned in connexion with it ?—No ; never.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. G.B.Sully.

24 Aug. 1869.

360. With the statement that at the last election it was for procuring the return of Mr. Kinglake representing one section and Mr. Westropp as representing another section of the Liberal party?—I know they were actively engaged for that gentleman, certainly.

361. With regard to this resolution you speak of at the meeting not to indulge in these practices, that was not followed, unhappily, at the last election, you say; I will read this to you, and you will stop me at any name that occurs to you as having been mentioned to you as that of a person engaged either as briber or as bribee, it matters not which, engaged in corrupt practices at the last election two years after signing this petition. I will read them over: "J. L. Seeley, "banker, George Rowe, grocer, W. L. Winter- "botham, bachelor of medicine, G. B. Sully, mer- "chant and shipowner, James Haviland, surgeon, "I. R. Richard, goldsmith, Thomas Collins, cheese- "factor, William Hurman, draper, Henry Collis, "pastrycook, William Jones, schoolmaster, Ambrose "Dyer, nursery and seedsman, Andrew Allan, "draper"?—I heard his name at the last inquiry.

362. Is this Andrew Allen the same man who is reported by the Honourable Colin Blackburn, the judge at the trial of the last election petition, to have absconded and defrauded justice of his evidence?—He is.

363. (Mr. Price.) Has he returned?—Yes; I have seen him in the town recently.

364. (Mr. Anstey.) "William Bowling, tallow chan- "dler, William Plowman, accountant, Edwin H. "Burrington, leather merchant, G. Rossiter, silver- "smith, Charles Head, wine merchant, Richard "Hurley, butcher, John Hodge, railway carrier, H. "J. Rich, bootmaker, Fred. Walters, butcher, Charles "Hunt, shipowner, W. J. Holland, merchant, Charles "Bulpin, accountant, Thomas Towells, shipowner, "John Beale, organ builder, J. J. Allen, accountant, "John Browne (J. P.), merchant, &c., Alex. Thomp- "son, ironmonger, Alfred Nicholls, draper, &c." Is that the Mr. Nicholls who told you he was afraid your hands were not clean?—No.

365. Is it his brother?—It is his brother.

366. "J. B. Hammill, merchant, John Prior, "banker, Thomas Searle, builder, Thomas Redman, "cellarman, Alfred Bounsall, accountant, J. W. Pri- "deaux, surgeon dentist, Henry Bryant, coal merchant, "Robert S. Ling, accountant, John M. Clavey, "potter, James Warn, harbour master, Charles "Hydon, accountant, James Sealy, stoneman, Thos. "R. Richard, shipowner, James Alway, grocer, John "Pitman, butcher, James Budd, grocer, &c., John "Bunter, plumber, &c., Henry Brook, surgeon, "&c., E. Murch, gentleman, Fred. Hodge, baker, "S. C. Jones, tailor, James Richards, porter, Isaac "Lay, bootmaker, Wm. H. H. Akerman, music seller, "James Wood Sully, coal proprietor and merchant, "Eustace Barham, solicitor, Alfred G. Barham, "merchant, James Cook, junior, solicitor, Joseph "Palmer, agent, Joseph White, glover, &c. Wm. "Pine, gentleman, J. J. Calman, wine merchant, "George Bond, bootmaker, C. H. Lott, draper, "R. O. Barkwell, wholesale grocer, Thos. Parminter, "grocer, George Bond, jun., bootmaker, John Roberts, "coach builder, William H. Roberts, coach builder, "Edwin Roberts, coach builder, Edward H. Jones, "independent minister, James Dartridge, chemist, "Wm. Young, yeoman, John Bownsall, independent "minister, H. C. White, accountant, Thomas "Mauchip, cabinet maker, A. C. Parsons, accountant, "Paul S. H. Reed, solicitor." I was wrong. There were three solicitors who signed this. The question I put to you just now with reference to Mr. Cook and Mr. Barham, I will put to you with reference to Mr. Paul Reed. Has his name been mentioned in your hearing in connexion with any corrupt practices, or fund for procuring the return of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl in 1868?—No; I have not heard any of the names that have been alluded to except Andrew Allan, and I have not heard any definite statement with reference to any of the legal gentlemen you have mentioned with regard to any improper practices at the last election.

367. I should like to have from you any indefinite statement that you have heard?—I have heard that improper practices obtained at the last election; and I have known that the gentlemen whose names you have now read acted more or less in the interests of the candidates on that occasion. Of course, the inference to be drawn is that they have more knowledge than I have.

368. You refer us to them?—Certainly.

369. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that a petition entirely got up by the Conservative party?—Entirely.

370. (Mr. Anstey.) After Sir Harry Verney presented the petition, the signatures to which I have just read to you, it is stated, in what I call an answer to the petition, signed by 820 persons, alleging themselves to be electors and other inhabitants of the borough of Bridgwater, that the petition to which theirs is a reply is, both with regard to its spirit and prayer, "in direct opposition to the wishes and feelings "of a very large majority of the electors and others "inhabitants of the town of Bridgwater of all shades "of political opinion," and therefore they pray that the writ may issue, and the writ did issue accordingly, and the election took place at which Mr. Patton was returned. Now do you know anything of that petition signed by 820 persons, presented by Mr. Gore Langton, a few days after this was presented?—I knew nothing of it. I never heard of its having been presented, and I know nothing of the petition nor its prayer.

371. Signed by Mr. J. R. Smith?—Yes.

372. He was a pawnbroker?—He was, but he has retired.

373. John Atlye?—The name does not occur to me at all.

374. That probably is a fictitious name, or is it a misprint?—A misprint I should say.

375. And John Trevor, he is one of the solicitors?—Yes.

376. And 817 more, whose names do not appear. Now, do you happen to know, or have you heard, that by some extraordinary means the original of that petition has been removed from its place in the Journal Office of the House of Commons and is not now to be found?—I have not heard it till this minute.

377. Can you tell me how many of these 820 persons, according to your belief, were bonâ fide electors, and how many were inhabitants, not electors?—No; I have no knowledge on the subject. I neither saw the petition being carried round nor do I know anything of it. I was in communication with Sir Harry Verney at the time and heard that a counter petition was to be presented.

378. It was presented on the 18th or 20th May 1866?—Yes.

379. Now, is it true, or is it not true, that your petition, the one that you signed, was in direct opposition to the wishes and feelings of a very large majority of electors of all political opinions?—I should have said not. I should have said it was in consonance with the feelings of the majority.

380. They were in favour then of the suspension of the parliamentary writ, and of any inquiry like that which is now taking place?—I should say so.

381. Now, with the exception of this petition, and of the meeting or meetings which you have spoken of, at which it was determined (though the determination was not kept), to involve the Liberals no more in these practices, is there anything whatever you can think of or remember which the Liberal party can give themselves credit for, or the Conservative party either, in the way of active steps to put down the corruption of the unsound portion of the community, in the whole period of your recollection?—I could point to the formation recently of two working men's associations which I thought were in that direction. I think there were associations in communication with the Conservative and associations in communication with the Liberal party.

382. And both of them were established at public houses?—I do not know. I believe not.

383. I believe it is in evidence, is it not, before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—I do not think so. I think the working men met at a private room in Gloucester Place. I think most of their meetings were there.

384. I will refresh your memory. Do not you know one of the cases which was proved against Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake on the last occasion was the bringing up 27 navvies from several public houses, one of them called the "Neptune," or some such name?—I do not think you have taken my answer. The Conservative working men usually met at a private room. I believe the Liberal working men met at large public rooms. I attended three such meetings at such rooms, and therefore I know those meetings were held in those large rooms; and I also know the rooms were detached from the house, and there was no drinking, or anything going on, as far as I know.

385. You were only there three times?—Yes.

386. And they were adjoining the public houses?—They were adjoining the public houses, the most of them.

387. Do you not know that on the inquiry before Mr. Justice Blackburn the learned counsel who conducted the respondent's case, that is Mr. Vanderbyl's case and Mr. Kinglake's case, abandoned the defence of the seat upon the evidence, inter alia, of the acts done at those very rooms, or some of those rooms of which you speak, at which the Liberal working men's associations were marshalled or mustered?—Well, if it is so, I was not aware of it. I understood that the defence of the seats was given up in connexion with the evidence which implicated a house kept by Henry Chapman Bussell and his dealings, and also some transactions of Andrew Allan's which were alleged to have taken place at an inn called the "London" inn at Eastover, neither of which houses, as far as I know, were connected with the working men's associations.

388. Do you know, as a matter of notoriety, that many of these attendants at Conservative meetings which met in private halls, notwithstanding they were Conservative, voted at the last election for Mr. Vanderbyl?—No; I never heard it.

389. Have you never heard that a large number of those who returned the two sitting members were composed of Conservative working men?—No, I have not.

390. Is there anything else which you can mention, in the whole course of your experience, in which either the Liberal party or the Conservative party claimed credit for a demonstration of their sincere wish to put down this frightful and demoralizing practice of corruption and bribery at Bridgwater?—Some years ago, before I took a part, there was some association formed for that object I believe, and it was for that purpose that Lord Henley was brought down.

391. How long did it last?—I think not a year.

392. (Mr. Coleridge.) Could Lord Henley succeed?—No.

393. He could not get in upon principle?—No, he did not.

394. (Mr. Anstey.) I will make my meaning more clear. In the blue book, containing the reports of the last election and the next trial before that, and the former trials,—for instance, the penalties action trial at the Taunton Assizes,—a number of public houses, as you have heard, figured as being the permanent seat of these transactions; the "Clarence" on the one side and the "Globe" on the other, and the "Golden Anchor" on the one side and some other house on the other. Have you heard of the magistrates or justices having ever refused the licence in respect of any one of these houses because of the corrupt practices proved at the trial to have taken place?—No, I never have.

395. Have you ever heard of a single movement made by a Liberal or a Conservative purist, or anybody, for the purpose of getting the licences of those publicans stopped?—No, I have never heard of it.

396. Have you ever heard of a single clergyman of the Established Church, or a single dissenting minister, whose duty it is, it is said, to supply zeal wanting in the establishment, preaching against such practices?—Yes.

397. Where, and when?—I have heard that at St. Mary's church (the parish church), prior to the last election, an admirable discourse in that direction was delivered by the acting clergyman (the vicar having been unwell), and I know in some dissenting places in the town it has been the practice on more than one occasion to speak exceedingly plainly against improper practices.

398. Was this a solitary case in the Established Church, the sermon you speak of?—I never heard of more than that one prior to the last election. But, as I do not attend the Established Church, I cannot say anything about that; it is very possible it was not a single instance.

399. Taking the dissenting chapels, how often have you heard it there?—I have heard it in dissenting chapels on the last two or three elections certainly.

400. (Mr. Coleridge.) What chapels do you attend?—I attend regularly a congregational chapel.

401. (Mr. Anstey.) Did it strike you, when I read over this petition, that amongst the names there are the names of two dissenting ministers of religion who signed this, Mr. Jones and Mr. Bounsall?—Yes, I noticed that their names were there.

402. I will ask you therefore, can you form any conclusion as to the amount of zeal on this subject existing amongst ministers of religion generally against these practices, there being only two signatures, and this being the only petition on the subject?—I believe there is a very proper feeling actuating the minds of all the clergy in the town in connexion with this matter, and that they would do anything that lay in their power to improve the moral condition of the borough. I cannot give you any direct evidence for the foundation of that feeling in my own mind, beyond the opportunities I have had of conversing with ministers both of the Established Church and of dissenting places in the town, and, to some extent, testing their feeling upon the matter.

403. Now one question on this subject, as to the persons whose names you have heard,—Andrew Allan, Henry Chapman Bussell, and many others, not to speak of the attorneys,—has any one of them, to your knowledge, lost much weight or credit in the borough by reason of his name having come out in connexion with this notorious bribery and corruption?—Yes; I should say they all have.

404. In what way have they suffered?—They have suffered in reputation.

405. Nothing else? Have they lost a single customer or client?—I cannot say.

406. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is one thing I omitted to ask you. You have said, prior to the election of 1865 you thought the Liberal party were pure?—And during the election of 1865.

407. And during the election of 1865 I was going to say. During the election of 1859 do you know of any illegal expenditure having been made by them on behalf of Mr. Kinglake?—No, I do not.

408. Have you ever heard that a sum of 1,100*l.* and odd were paid, other than the legitimate expenses, by his agent, Mr. Bate, out of his own pocket?—No, I never have.

409. Do you mean you have never heard it currently reported in Bridgwater that a large expenditure to that amount was made on behalf of Mr. Kinglake in the election of 1859?—No, I have not.

410. And if Mr. Kinglake said he had made an expenditure of that money would it be entirely a matter of surprise to you?—Yes.

411. And do you think it would be the same to the generality of electors in the borough?—Yes.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. G.B.Sully.

24 Aug. 1869.

412. You never heard of anything of the kind ?—No.

413. You stated you were made a mayor on the 9th of November, and when you were made mayor you gave up all participation in the election during the preceding weeks. Had you the canvassing ?—No.

414. Did you employ anybody ?—No.

415. How many persons have you in your employ, or under your influence, who have votes ?—I should think 8 or 10.

416. Did not you canvass any of them ?—No.

417. None ?—None.

418. Did they all vote for Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No.

419. How did they vote ?—Some voted one way, and some voted the other.

420. I suppose, in consequence of your being about to become a mayor you took as little part as possible in the election ?—I have never spoken to anybody about the way in which they should vote.

421. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Joseph Smith the lawyer or the alderman ? — Mr. Joseph Richard Smith is the alderman.

422. (Mr. Coleridge). Are there any balance men in your employment ?—Yes.

423. (Mr. Price.) Are those balance men, who wait to turn the scale ?—Yes. They are supposed to be amenable to the weights.

424. They wait till they are wanted ?—Yes.

425. You know what election tactics are. Is it not one of the cardinal principles of electioneering tactics that the candidates shall be put as early as possible at the head of the poll, in order to have a great moral effect ?—Yes. I have always heard that it has a great moral effect.

426. And you have heard Mr. Kinglake had men working for him on this election, as on the last elcction ?—Yes.

427. And although you heard there were a great number went up to poll for him, and others also waiting to turn the scale, and notwithstanding you knew those were the usual tactics, did you believe that Mr. Kinglake's strong supporters voted for him, although he was in such an immense minority as you have stated ?—No. I do not know that I should explain exactly so.

428. I should like you to explain to me how you account for the fact that Mr. Kinglake having been a member so long, and having active electioneering agents likely to pursue the prevailing electioneering tactics, should get into so great a minority in the early part of the day and which was turned into majority by men whom you say were merely waiting ? —Yes ; speaking of my experience up to and prior to the 9th November, I considered Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, the Liberal candidates, would have had a very large majority ; I held that opinion, and I had no reason to alter it. I had nothing to alter it until after the election, and nobody was so much surprised as myself to find that the Conservative candidates had so large a majority at the early part of the day. I have asked for information on the subject, and I have not got much ; but I have been told,—or whether I have heard it by rumour I do not know ; if you asked me who told me I could not say ; I would say if I could do so,—that a large number of the Conservative party voted early who were promised money, and that the others received intimations, either from those who had received those monies or by the other side, that if they would wait they would be paid, and that accounted for the delay in the polling on the other side.

429. (Mr Price.) And that being the way you account for the state of feeling in the borough, have you the slightest doubt that the minority of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake were turned into a majority by the influence of money ?—I have come to feel, and I have tried to feel, that if these things were going to work in that way, that the fact of Mr. Kinglake's leaving, and the certainty of no money being forthcoming, had an influence in inducing them to vote.

430. You say there was a general rumour in the borough that the Conservative party had on the promise of money voted early, and that that was made to the working class generally. Have you any doubt that Mr. Kinglake's minority was turned into a majority in a similar way, by promises of money or the actual receipt of bribes—can you tell me that ? Having told me the strong impression you have as to what was done on the other side, can you say whether the fact of the minority being turned into a large majority was in consequence of promises held out, or the actual paying of money ?—I have told you the conviction I have formed, and that is strengthened by the information I have received, that that is the fact, strange as it is.

431. What is the fact you allude to ?—That the men went up when Mr. Kinglake had gone. I know the great majority went privately, because it is proved ; but the great majority went up after Mr. Kinglake left, to vote for him, having disappointed or misled him.

432. (Mr Coleridge.) And his sudden flight induced them to vote ?—Yes.

433. (Mr. Price.) How was he misled ?—By some information. Some intimation was sent to the Liberal candidates that some money would come, and all they had to do was to wait.

434. (Mr. Coleridge.) All they had to do was to wait ?—Yes.

435. And as they were true patriots they were to wait and vote, and accordingly they went up and voted for nothing ?—Yes.

436. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it not the practice at nearly all the elections, or some of them, that a man, a venal voter we will say, goes and votes for nothing, and that if "anything is to go on," to use the cant phrase of the borough, he is to have precisely the same amount as the venal voter who does not go up till the end of the day ?—That is not my experience. My experience is the other way.

437. Do you mean to say you do not know that in the last election trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn it was deposed that that was the depraved practice of the borough, namely, that if a man was asked to go up and vote, and said, "Is there anything to go on ?" the answer invariably was, "Yes, there is," or, "If there is, you shall have your money all the same" ?—I know it was so said, but all my experience is the other way.

438. I ask you whether it is not notorious in the borough ?—No, it is not notorious.

439. Tell me the name of one witness who deposed to that ?—I do not remember his name, but it was in the court a man said he was down at the Bathbridge Inn where this conversation was alleged to have taken place ; and that is the only case I remember this statement to have taken place.

440. Which election was this ?—The last election.

441. "If there is anything going on you shall have your share" ?—Yes.

442. You say you never heard of it before ?—No.

443. You are not aware that it was deposed to by at least 30 or 40 witnesses at the last election of 1866? —I am not aware of it.

444. You will not swear it is not the depraved custom to give money in that way ?—No ; I only speak as far as my own knowledge is concerned.

445. I am speaking of your knowledge of the notoriety of it ?—I speak from my knowledge of the party.

446. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there no class of men, as was disclosed in the course of the Totnes Commission, a sort of matter-of-course men, who, if they had once taken money, received it afterwards as a sort of reward ?—I do not know.

447. (Mr. Anstey.) As regards yourself, you are the owner of ships, or small craft ?—Yes, I am.

448. The captains are, for the most part, all of your political persuasion ?—No ; some vote one way, and some the other.

449. Do you know that you have authorized or allowed Mr. Bussell to fetch men in your employ from your vessels in order to vote ?—No.

450. You have never authorized him ?—No.

451. Has he done so ?—Not that I am aware of.

452. Do not you know that it came out before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—No ; it was not in connexion with my vessel.

453. (Mr. Price.) I will just call your attention to Mr. Justice Blackburn's report to the House of Commons. Mr. Justice Blackburn says, "I am sorry to "say I must come to the conclusion that corrupt "practices have extensively prevailed. The evidence "has satisfied me of this, that a very considerable "portion of the voters in this borough were, during "the day of the election, making inquiries in the "phrases which have been used, 'Whether any-"thing was going' 'What stuff was going' and "phrases of that sort." Now, does that remark strike you as being quite inconsistent with your knowledge of the state of the town on that day ?—I took exception to it as soon as I saw it in print. Of course, I must not put my judgment at all in comparison with his lordship's, but it did not strike me, having heard all the evidence here, that that was corroborated by all the evidence here. Of course I was a partial listener, and he was an impartial listener.

454. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is it not a part of your electioneering experience if a man spends a large sum of money at one election that that serves to do him some service in an ensuing one in the hope that that would be repeated ?—I should think it would ; but I have not heard it.

455. And do not you believe that if Mr. Kinglake spent something like 1,100*l.* in 1859 that that would have enured to his benefit in 1865 ?—Yes.

456. Should you not say, as a mere matter of common sense, that if 1,100*l.* was spread about the borough in corrupt practices in 1859 that people would expect something of the same sort in 1865 ?—Yes.

457. And I think you have said this is the first time you ever heard that such a sum was spent by Mr. Bate, his agent ?—Yes, certainly.

458. (Mr. Price.) In order to get on our notes what is the nature of the constituency, are there any freemen here ?—There were some scot and lot voters, no freemen ; they are now all absorbed in the new franchise.

459. The additions made by the last Reform Bill would be the addition of a class of men who had been formerly freemen, or scot and lot men ?—Yes, there were 31 scot and lot men at the last election.

460. Were they not freemen at all ?—No ; scot and lot.

461. When did they cease to exist as a distinct body ?—At this last election.

462. They then became merged in the general household suffrage ?—Entirely.

463. But before then there was a class of voters who were scot and lot voters ?—Exactly.

464. As I said just now they were the working class, not 10*l.* householders ?—Not entirely.

465. I mean a great number ?—Yes ; they were men who occupied a different position in life than they did at one time.

466. They are all householders now ?—Yes.

467. (Mr. Coleridge.) Any potwollopers ?—No.

468. I thought there were freemen before the Reform Bill ?—There were freemen before the Reform Bill.

469. They were abolished ?—Yes.

470. I think not. The rights of existing freemen were observed and so on ; they will go on from father to son, providing they serve the apprenticeship, and take up the freedom. I want to know whether there is such a class as that in Bridgwater ?—No, there is only the ordinary class who will come in under the ordinary franchise. There were 31 before the last election who were entitled to vote scot and lot.

471. (Mr. Coleridge.) They have been gradually diminishing. In 1859 do you know how many scot and lot men there were ?—In 1859 there were 70 scot and lot.

472. And in 1865 ?—45. In 1866, 41.

473. What was the constituency in 1859 ?—In 1859 there were 614.

474. And can you tell us how many voted for Mr. Kinglake at that time ?—279.

475. Then the constituency was not polled out on that occasion—not anything like ?—No, they could not be I suppose. The two larger figures are for Colonel Tynte and Mr. Padwick, 290 and 230.

476. And the sum of money which was spent would have to be divided between 279 voters at the outside ?—Yes.

477. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell us what is meant by the Bridge Committee of the Conservative Committee, and what is the number of it ?—No. I know it is the Conservative committee.

478. Does it entirely consist of lawyers ?—I do not know. I should say not.

479. Lawyers and land agents ?—I do not know. I know Mr. Joseph Parker and others met on those committees.

480. Why is it called the Bridge Committee ?—I believe it was in connexion with something in reference to the bridge.

481. What was the object of that petition to the House of Commons ? You petition, as you state in this petition, with reference to the corrupt practices. What was the object you sought to get at ; was it to get a commission to issue, and the disfranchisement of the borough ? When you presented that petition in 1865, when you prayed the House of Commons to issue a commission to inquire into corrupt practices, was the object of your party at that time, if the corrupt practices were proved before the commission, that the borough should be disfranchised ? Had you any idea that it would disfranchise the borough ?—We wanted the borough to be purged.

482. How do you mean "purged" ?—We had an understanding between us, that as long as corrupt practices were carried on on the other side we would petition.

483. I know you asked the House that a Royal Commission should be issued ?—Yes.

484. Such as that which is now sitting ?—Yes.

485. And had you in your view and were you aware of the Royal Commissions at Totnes, Yarmouth, and at Reigate ?—They are all recent.

486. At Sudbury and St. Albans ?—Yes.

487. (Mr. Coleridge.) Gloucester, where the writ was suspended for five years ?—Yes.

488. (Mr. Price.) Did you know that it would lead to the disfranchisement of the borough ?—Of course it was in our minds, but not hoped for or desired—only the disfranchisement of the bribees.

489. The disfranchisement of a certain number ?—Yes, or a Commission issuing.

490. If Mr. Justice Blackburn had found there was extensive bribery and corrupt practices in the royal borough, from your experience of the previous Commissions did you doubt that that would lead to the disfranchisement of the borough ?—Yes, very much.

491. Why ?—Because I thought our borough was not very different from other boroughs, and to expose the black spot was to cure it.

492. Do you know anything of the ancient history of this borough ?—I know something of it.

493. You speak of your borough as not being worse than others. Is it true or not that it has always had an unenviable notoriety as to corrupt practices ?—No.

494. As much as 200 years ago ?—I know there is some reference to it 200 years ago.

495. (Mr. Coleridge.) When these endeavours were being made to establish a system of purity between 1859 and the time you have spoken of had you at any time any communication with Mr. Kinglake on the subject ?—Personally not.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

24 Aug. 1869.

496. Had the Committee, or the managers, to your knowledge ?—I do not know.

497. Did he take a part ? Did you ever hear him, by speech or letters or in any way, express a hope that the place would be purified ?—Yes.

498. Was that between 1859 and 1865 ?—It would be from 1865 to 1866.

499. And can you give us any particulars of what part he took in that ?—I believe, so far as one can judge from the outward action of the parties, that he was as anxious as we were. He knew the object for which we had subscribed, and the object for which we were working. He appeared to assist us in every possible manner.

500. But did he, either directly or indirectly, throw out to you that he had to pay 1,100*l.* during the election of 1859 ?—Never.

501. Did Mr. Bate take any part in the election ?—Yes.

502. And I suppose Mr. Bate never told you anything about the part he took in it ?—No.

503. And you never heard it till to-day ?—No.

504. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you ever heard that the great authorities Serjeant Merewether and Dr. Stephens, in their history of the borough, state that all records of the borough are wanting until the year 1710, so that what we know of the borough is certainly not very pure in the 18th century, and not very pure in the 19th century ; and have you heard of Oldfield's work on the state of the borough in 1816 ?—No, I have not.

505. Do you recollect a very important petition, the last effort possibly of expiring purity in this borough, a petition presented by the late Sir Henry George Ward, then member for St. Alban's, signed by 156 out of 568 then registered voters, immediately after the general election ?—No.

506. Classified according to profession and trade ; does not your recollection go back to 1838 ?—I have no recollection of any incident of that sort.

507. You do not remember that there was a considerable discussion in the House of Commons on that subject, and it was withdrawn to enable an election petition then pending to be tried ?—No.

508. Do you remember the period when Mr. Ayshford Sandford respresented this division of the county of Somerset ?—Yes.

509. Do you remember Mr. Ayshford Sandford presenting a petition some time after this, by Mr. Parrott of Middlesoy, now dead, complaining that the state of the borough was so bad that it affected the neighbouring places, so that they who never before asked for a bribe now asked for one, saying they desired it inasmuch as the voters of Bridgwater were bribed ?—No.

510. Assuming these facts, do you still adhere to your answer that Bridgwater does not possess an unenviable notoriety as to bribery ?—You have much more information than I have on the subject, but that is the opinion I have formed as to this borough compared with other boroughs. I do not wish to add anything.

511. (Mr. Coleridge.) This 1,100 and odd pounds has come upon you by surprise ?—Quite so.

512. (Mr. Price.) You know that when Mr. Patton came down as lord advocate Mr. Kinglake deprecated a contest ?—I have never heard so.

513. But it was quite against his wishes that Mr. Vanderbyl should be introduced to the borough ?—I have heard Mr. Bagehot has done so.

514. Mr. Bagehot objected to Mr. Patton's being opposed after his having so recently obtained office ?—Yes.

515. Who introduced Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I believe Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Eustace Barham.

516. They went up to London for a candidate ?—I believe so.

517. Mr. Bagehot had declined ?—I believe so. I have already explained how it was that I left off taking any active part.

518. Mr. Bagehot declined to contest the borough against Mr. Patton, and in consequence did these two legal gentlemen go up to London to get a candidate ?—I believe so.

519. The last question I have to put to you, is not put to you as a matter of form, and it is one which I put to all the witnesses on this inquiry, and that is, have you any further information from your knowledge and belief to give to us ? I put it to you, not as a matter of form, because, at the end of this inquiry, if we have reason to believe (which I trust we shall not have) that you had other information to give us but which you withheld, it will place you in a different position from other witnesses who have given us all the information they are possessed of ?—I have no wish to keep back anything. On the contrary, I wish to give the Commissioners the most full and perfect information that I can possibly give them on this matter, so that they make a good and complete deliverance.

Adjourned.

(Mr. Sully.) I wanted to make an observation to the Commissioners before they proceed further. The statement which I have to make, and which is rather in the form of an application, is that I have endeavoured to answer all the questions that have been put to me to the full extent of my recollection and knowledge. While I have endeavoured to answer all the questions that you have put to me, and also to give all the information that occurred to me at the time of my examination, I wish to ask whether, should anything occur during the progress of the inquiry which has brought to my recollection circumstances that I have omitted, or any other matter which might tend to elucidate the inquiry, I may be permitted to give such further information.

(Mr. Price.) Certainly.

520. (Mr. Anstey.) If you happen to have recollected anything since we adjourned you had better let us know.

(Mr. Sully.) I have not. I understood from the Commissioners that my examination was to a certain extent completed.

521. (Mr. Price.) All I wished to say was that we hoped you had given us the fullest information. If during the course of this inquiry you recollect anything that you had not present to your mind when you were examined to-day you are perfectly at liberty to state it. It will add to the completeness of our inquiry.

(Mr. Anstey.) I think it right to say for myself, speaking solely and entirely for myself, it will detract very much from the value of any information if it should happen we have already obtained it from any other witness.

(Mr. Sully.) Of course, I feel so.

Mr. John Hawkey Bingham Carslake called.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

422. (Mr. Coleridge.) We won't swear you for the present ; it is only to produce papers ; it wont be necessary.

(Mr. Price.) Just hand those papers in, Mr. Carslake, and the list.

(Mr. Carslake.) You asked for the charters. I went to the gaol last night,—the muniment room,—and found that there were two or three large bulky parchment documents there ; but I have a book here which contains a copy of all the charters. Perhaps that would answer your purpose perfectly. I made it for myself.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We only wanted it as a matter of information.

523. (Mr. Price.) Here is a list of the charters which begin after the year 1200, of King John.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Are these all perfect?

(Mr. Carslake.) We have not got them all, I believe. There are copies in that book which I obtained.

Mr. Price read the following list of charters of the borough of Bridgwater:

Edward II, 1317; Edward III, 1361; Henry IV, 1399; Henry VII. (no date given); Queen Mary, 1554; Queen Elizabeth, 1588; James I. (11th year of his reign); Charles, 1658; Charles II, 1684.

524. (Mr Coleridge.) Then you have all sorts of local acts, I suppose, tollage, and pickage, and so on.

(Mr. Carslake.) We have a Market House Act, and an amended Market House Act.

(Mr. Price.) This is the number of voters on the register from 1854 to 1868.

525. (Mr. Anstey.) Are there any records older than 1760?

(Mr. Carslake.) I do not find any except the ancient rolls.

526. (Mr. Anstey.) There are ancient rolls older than 1710? Have you any idea how that statement has gone abroad then, in all the histories of Bridgwater, that they have all disappeared except the charters.

(Mr. Carslake.) I am afraid our borough has been much maligned in that respect. I have got them to Henry the First. A Commissioner was down from the Record Office, and made a list of them.

527. (Mr. Anstey.) It would be desirable to call Mr. Riley; he is one of the Record Commissioners here examining the Records?

(Mr. Carslake.) He is not here now.

528. (Mr. Price.) This is the list of voters on the register from 1854 to 1868:—

		Voters.	Scot and lot.	Total.
1854.	On the 10*l.* list,	528	91	619
1855.	„	523	84	607
1856.	„	508	81	589
1857.	„	528	74	602
1858.	„	544	73	614
1859.	„	561	64	625
1860.	„	568	61	629
1861.	„	583	54	637
1862.	„	603	52	655
1863.	„	606	50	656
1864.	„	611	45	656
1865.	„	638	41	679
1866.	„	662	35	697
1867.	„	701	31	732
1868.	„	1,484 general list, including lodgers, and 31 scot and lot included in the 1484.

Total constituency in 1868 - 1,484.
Total population in 1851 - 10,883.
„ „ 1861 - 12,018.

(Mr. Carslake.) Perhaps I may as well state that very many of the scot and lot voters in previous years were also on the 10*l.* list. Therefore you won't get, perhaps, a strictly correct test.

529. (Mr. Price.) That would be a double vote?

(Mr. Carslake.) Yes.

530. (Mr. Price.) This is a list of members elected to serve in Parliament from the year 1784 to 1868.

(Mr. Carslake.) That is the earliest duplicate of return I find.

Mr. Price read the following:

531. (Mr. Carslake.) I do not find the duplicate of Mr. Allen's return.

532. (Mr. Price.) It is Colonel Tynte I suppose who is mentioned here?

(Mr. Carslake.) Yes.

533. (Mr. Price.) These particulars that you have handed in are the different numbers who voted at each election since 1857?

Bridgwater, 24th August 1869,
JOHN H. B. CARSLAKE,

534. (Mr Coleridge.) What is Wembdon ?
(Mr. Carslake.) Wembdon is an adjoining parish. A small portion of it is included in the borough, and has been for some time.

535. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has Durleigh come in under the Boundary Act ?
(Mr. Carslake.) A very small portion of it. There is only one voter.
(Mr. Coleridge.) You also hand in a copy of the charters from the date of 1200 in King John's reign up to the year 1694 in the reign of Charles the Second. Have you the election expenses ?
(Mr. Carslake.) The election expenses I have here whenever you wish to see them.

(Mr. Carslake.) I have here several other papers. Am I to take them away again?

538. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are they?

(Mr. Carslake.) They are the return papers, the expense papers, the newspapers with the advertisement of the returns, and so on, all the papers in reference to each election, notices, and so on.

539. (Mr. Coleridge.) Perhaps you had better hand them to the secretary.

(Mr. Price.) They will be in the custody of our secretary. You shall have them back. You need not trouble yourself to take them away now if it is more convenient for you to leave them here.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We may want to refer to them.

Mr. WILLIAM PLOWMAN sworn.

Mr. W. Plowman.

540. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Plowman?—Assistant overseer and collector of rates.

541. How long have you filled that office?—Nearly 10 years.

542. Then you know the borough well, I suppose?—Yes.

543. Is the borough of Bridgwater all one parish?—No.

544. What parishes are there?—Part Wembdon, part Durleigh, and part Bridgwater.

545. Then Bridgwater is the largest proportion of the borough?—Yes.

546. What is the number of persons who are ratepayers in the parish of Bridgwater, apart from the other parish?—At the present time?

547. Yes?—About 2,800.

548. Ratepayers?—Ratepayers.

549. And how many in the other two districts?—That I cannot say. Durleigh has only about one, I think, and perhaps the other has sixty.

550. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the other?—Wembdon.

551. (Mr. Price.) That 2,800 you say is in the parish of Bridgwater?—Yes.

552. Is the parish coterminous with the parliamentary borough?—No.

553. Tell us how that is?—The parish is more extensive.

554. Then how many are there within the parliamentary borough of Bridgwater who are ratepayers?—About 2,512.

555. In the parliamentary borough?—Yes.

556. How do you account for the difference between the fourteen hundred and something voters who voted at the last election and that two thousand?—There are some females, and a great number excused from payment of rates.

557. A great number excused from payment of rates. Would that account for the difference, the number of female ratepayers and the number who are excused?—Yes, with the females.

558. They would not be on the register?—No.

559. When you say "excused," do you mean that anybody is now excused since the last Reform Act?—A great number.

560. Are they still compounding?—No. It is since the composition is done away with.

561. Then how are they excused?—By the magistrates.

562. On the ground of poverty?—Yes.

563. Had you a system of compounding here before?—Up to the time of the passing of the Representation of the People Act of 1867.

564. In those cases the landlord paid the rates, getting a per-centage?—Yes.

565. Then there was no excusing?—No excusing whatever.

566. Since then the magistrates have exercised the power of excusing on the ground of poverty?—Yes.

567. Under what act?—Some Act of George.

568. (Mr Anstey.) A local Act?—No, a general Act.

569. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know what that Act is?—I cannot say.

570. (Mr. Price.) How many persons do you think there are who would be entitled to be on the register who are disqualified for the nonpayment of rates?—Not only is there nonpayment of rates, but there are a great number also of paupers who would be disqualified.

571. Well, how many do you think are persons disqualified either by nonpayment of rates or being paupers?—About seven or eight hundred people I have no doubt.

572. About seven or eight hundred people who are disqualified either by being excused on the ground of poverty or by nonpayment of rates?—They are all excused on the ground of poverty.

573. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then have all these received parochial relief?—Oh no.

574. A great number are excused who are not receiving parochial relief, who are residing in their houses?—Yes.

575. And who knew that if they are excused they would not be entitled to vote?—Yes, they ask to be excused.

576. Knowing at the same time that they would lose the franchise?—Yes.

577. What number are there who knowing that they would be disfranchised ask to be excused?—Four or five hundred the last time.

578. (Mr. Price.) Although knowing at the time they would forfeit the privilege of the franchise if they did that?—Yes.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. W. Plowman.

24 Aug. 1869.

579. Now just after the passing of the Reform Bill were there many persons or not who paid their rates who had not paid before?—Before the passing?

580. (Mr. Coleridge.) No; after the passing of the Reform Bill, when the franchise was made dependent upon the payment of rates; can you tell us whether there was any considerable number or any number of persons who previously to that had not paid the rates themselves, or who had compounded or been excused, who then came and paid their rates?—Yes; a great number.

581. Just tell us how it was?—There were about sixteen hundred houses that were compounded, and out of that first rate seven or eight hundred paid.

582. Paid by themselves or by the electioneering agent?—By themselves as far as I know.

583. (Mr. Price.) Who paid them? Was it a personal payment? Did you receive it from them?—I received it, I suppose, from them.

584. We should like very much to know what proportion of those who had been previously compounded for paid it personally?—You might calculate the whole; one might send another, a neighbour, but I do not believe there was one single case in which an agent paid the rate.

585. Not by his own hand?—Nor by anybody else.

586. These people up to that time had had their rates compounded for by the landlord on the assumption that it would be more worth while for the parish to get it from the landlord than have the trouble of collecting it?—Yes.

587. (Mr. Coleridge.) And the landlord had a rebate of one third?—One half. And nothing was compounded for over 9*l.* rental.

588. (Mr. Price.) What was the rent?—Nine pounds and below.

589. Was the Small Tenements Act in force?—That was under the Small Tenements Act.

590. What was the general rental before the passing of the Reform Bill of that class of voters which we call the ten pounders?—The class of houses you would like to know?

Yes.

591. Simply the 10*l.*?—Simply the 10*l.*

592. Were the houses worth 10*l.*, or put at 10*l.* for the sake of the franchise?—Oh yes, about 10*l.* They were rated at 8*l.* 10*l.* gross.

593. Therefore that would be about half of the voters under the old Reform Bill would be persons who were renting houses exactly at the value that would give the franchise?—Not quite half, because the number would be 740,—the total number. Then over 10*l.* and under 20*l.* there would be about 180; over 20*l.* and under 50*l.*, about 200,—205, or something like that; at 50*l.* and over, fifty.

594. What is the highest rented house in the place?—I suppose the Messrs. Nicholls.

595. The highest rateable value?—Yes.

596. What is that?—About 200*l.*

597. That is higher than the "Clarence?"—Yes.

598. Now will you tell us, Mr. Plowman, what was the rank in life of the 305 whose houses would just give them the franchise?—Oh, various classes.

599. We wish very much to know it?—Mariners, sailors, captains of vessels, foundry men.

600. Working men?—Working men at the foundry.

601. Now give us, as near as you can, the numbers. We will take the class whom you call the captains of ships; the men who work the vessels up and down the river, and the coasting vessels?—That I could not say without going into the matter. I have not been into it in that way.

602. You cannot give us any idea?—No.

603. (Mr. Price.) We should like to have that before we close, very much indeed; and also as near an approximation as you can give us of the rank in life of that 305 who were the exact ten pound men; and we should also like to have that so as to show also, by way of comparison, what rank of life the new persons are who are added under the household suffrage as compared with those before the passing of the last Reform Act.

604. Would there be any agricultural labourers?—Very few.

605. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the average of the agricultural wages?—There are scarcely any agricultural men who live in the borough.

606. I asked you what was the average of the agricultural wages in this neighbourhood?—About twelve shillings.

607. And the average of the foundrymen's wages?—I cannot say.

608. (Mr. Price.) Eighteen shillings a week?—I do not know.

609. That is a very important thing to know, what are the pursuits and occupations of these people. You cannot tell us now, but be good enough to get it. Of these ten pound people, were they people who had shops, as the mayor said, small shopkeepers, or people living by weekly wages; or what proportion of them were of the class, as you say, of captains of vessels who, I suppose, do not earn wages. They work the vessels, I suppose. Are they part owners?—Oh, part owners, and they work vessels.

610. What is the principal mode of getting their livelihood of those people here? What is the great source?—

(Mr. Coleridge.) The staple trade of the place?—Well, the iron foundry employs a great many, and the carriage works.

611. (Mr. Price.) How many men do you suppose are employed by the foundry?—I cannot say.

612. Are the iron foundry men men who lived in 10*l.* houses before the last Reform Act?—A great number, I have no doubt.

613. They would be in receipt of more than a pound a week?—Yes, I think it is very likely.

614. Well now, these carriage works?—Well, I suppose it is similar.

615. The men occupy a similar class of houses?—Very much. It is the station side of the town which is principally occupied by those classes.

616. Have any great number of carriage men or foundry men been added, or were they men who would be likely to have votes before the Reform Act?—Oh, some of each class were added.

617. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is not there a great tan yard business here?—No, there is only one, at which I suppose are a few hands, not many.

618. (Mr. Price.) There is a great brick establishment?—Oh yes, several brick yards.

619. That is one of the staple trades of the town?—Yes.

620. How many men do you suppose are employed in the brick trade, workmen?—That I cannot say at all. I have no idea.

621. Can you give any idea?—I could easily ascertain it.

622. In the first place do you know what wages they get?—Some twelve, some fifteen, some more.

623. And a great number of women are employed in that trade?—Yes, and children.

624. Do you know whether those were men who lived in 10*l.* houses as a rule?—Not many.

625. Would those be the class of men who would be added to the constituency, and who would formerly have been compounded for by living in houses of which the rates were compounded?—A great number, I have no doubt.

626. Could you say whether those are the class of men who have asked to be excused, and who are on the register as ratepayers?—A great number of that class asked to be excused the last time.

627. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is the magistrate's clerk in court?—I saw him here this morning.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He would be able to tell us what is the Act under which they are excused.

628. (Mr. Price.) As you have been overseer a good while I will ask whether that excusing Act was in force whilst the compounding went on?—We did not act upon it.

629. Your impression is that it was in force with Sir William Clay's Act, the Small Tenements Act?—I believe they brought forward that excusing Act on account of the mode in which the compounding had been carried on before. Sir William Clay's Act, the Small Tenements Act, was brought forward on account of the way in which the excusing had been going on, but the other Act remained.

630. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you the Act of George the 3rd or 4th, by which houses let at between 6*l.* and 20*l.* a year furnished, the rates were to be paid by the lessor and not by the lessee? Is that Act in force here?—No.

(Mr. Colerige.) It is at Cardiff. I did not know whether it was in this borough.

631. (Mr. Price.) According to you, then, there is a very considerable number who have asked to be excused, and so forfeited the privilege of the franchise?—Yes.

632. With the knowledge that they did so?—There is no doubt of it.

633. Then what number should you say have been added? Can you give us any idea of what number of what you would call working men are now on the register—working men?—Taking in the whole?

634. Yes?—No, I cannot give it.

635. The constituency has nearly doubled. What I wish to ask you is this: I will put it in this way: As overseer, can you tell us,—the constituency has been nearly doubled?—Yes.

636. Has that been doubled by a simple addition to one class only, namely, the class who were compounded for, and who were working men, but who did not live in 10*l.* houses?—Yes, generally. There might be a very few exceptions.

637. The addition has been from the class who were originally compounded for, and who are working men?—Yes.

638. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told my friend just now that there were very few agricultural labourers in the place. I suppose the persons you refer to as labourers would be almost entirely in the brick field?—Yes.

639. (Mr. Price.) Is that the element that has been thrown into the constituency of the labouring classes—the persons employed in the brick yard?—Not the whole of it.

640. Who else?—Foundry men and the carriage shed men.

641. You think the others were to a great extent on the register before?—No, not to a great extent,—partly off and partly on. A great number was thrown on.

642. They got compounded for before?—The foundry men's houses, and the class of houses near the station where the carriage sheds are, are generally of a better class of houses than the ones which were excused.

643. (Mr. Coleridge.) And very few of the brick-field people were on the register before the Reform Bill?—Very few before the Reform Bill.

644. (Mr. Price.) Then the element, you say, that has been added to this constituency has been almost entirely derived from the class who had no franchise before from the fact that they did not occupy houses of the value of 10*l.*?—Yes.

645. (Mr. Coleridge.) I want to know as to lodgers. How many lodgers are there on the franchise? How many were put on by the revising barrister on the last occasion?—I do not think more than seven or eight.

646. What sort of houses would those be that let lodgings—what value of houses?—There is scarcely any lodgings here of any value in the town.

647. Is there no such thing as unmarried working men living in lodgings?—Yes, but not lodgings that would entitle——

648. Ten pound lodgings?—No.

649. Are there no clerks at the railway station, and so on, who do so?—I have no doubt there are.

650. How many lodger claimants were there?—About eight or ten.

651. Eight or ten were put on by the revising barrister?—Yes.

652. What is the date for putting in lodging claims?—The 25th of this month.

653. Then you cannot tell us the number now until to-morrow, or the day after to-morrow?—No.

654. (Mr. Price.) We should be glad to know whether the number of claimants will show any diminution in the constituency at the next election, if there ever should be one?—I will let you know that after to-morrow.

655. You have been assistant overseer for ten years. Have you ever found at any time—we will take it first of all when you became assistant overseer—in 1859—— ?—That was when I was elected.

656. Before that election do you remember any particular rush to get rates paid shortly before the revising barrister came down?—The election was before I took office.

657. In 1865 was there any special rush to pay rates that had been due and owing for some time, shortly before the election of 1865?—No. When I took office it was suggested that I should make and collect one rate, and collect the whole of one rate before another was made, which has been carried out.

658. I suppose very often the ten pounders did not pay?—They did pay. They were bound to pay the rate, and what did not pay were summoned before the magistrate.

659. But time was given them to pay?—Yes.

660. (Mr. Coleridge.) What has been found at other places is that the agents go round to these fellows and say, "You must pay before a certain "time, or you wont get your vote." Is it not the practice that before the election a great many people come round and pay?—It has been the practice that before that time arrives, in July, ever since I have been in office the qualifying rate has been closed, and a new one in collection some time before the election.

661. But unless that was paid up the man would not have his vote?—It has all been paid up.

662. In 1868 the election took place in November and a rate was made in July?—There was one made in July, but the qualifying rate for the election was made in December 1867.

663. Two months before the election how many ratepayers were still in arrear for that rate?—Some months before the election those parties that were in arrear for that rate, the defaulters, were had before the magistrates, and they were excused, and the rate was thoroughly closed before the date for paying up the back rate.

664. When were they excused?—Several months before.

665. They all lost their votes?—Yes.

666. Did none of those who were defaulters pay their rates when they were had before the magistrates, in order to save their votes?—No.

667. There is no general system, as far as you know, here, of paying up outstanding rates shortly before an election, or before the revising barrister comes down, in order to keep the vote on the register?—Not in my time.

(Mr. Price.) The clerk to the magistrates has sent a document here, but it does not give us the information we want. It merely states that "on a repre-"sentation . . . . &c. . . . ." Then that is signed by the overseers and churchwardens; and then follows a list of the persons whom the churchwardens recommend to be excused.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. W. Plowman.

24 Aug. 1869.

668. (Mr. Coleridge.) How is the consent of the ratepayers got?—I do not know.

669. It does not state under what Act of Parliament it is done?—I could get it for you. Those persons were brought before the magistrates without summons.

670. (Mr. Price.) Yes, the scot and lot men. I need not ask you about them. Were they on the rate books in former days?—Yes, they must be on the rate book, or otherwise they will lose their qualification.

671. They paid their rates. They were never compounded for. They could not have had their vote until they had paid. Is that right?—Yes.

672. They are very much like what the present franchise is supposed to be, the householder paying his rates?—Yes.

673. Well, those have been diminishing and they are now merged in the present household suffrager?—They are all merged.

674. They have been constantly decreasing?—Yes.

675. How do you account for that?—By death.

676. In those days scot and lot men were men who lived in a certain kind of house, and who paid rates for it. What class of house would they live in at that time?—I do not know.

677. (Mr. Coleridge.) Scot and lot men were bound to live six months in the house before the election to entitle them to vote?—Yes. They would die out.

678. How did they become scot and lot men?—(Mr. Anstey.) By a decision of the House of Commons in the middle of the last century.

679. (Mr. Coleridge.) But I mean the men themselves. Did they succeed one another, father and son?—I do not know.

(Mr. Price.) It must have been hereditary. The charter would show us.

680. (Mr. Coleridge.) In your time have you had any instance of a scot and lot voter losing his vote by not paying his rate for two years, in which case his right would be absolutely gone?—No.

681. Have you ever had them losing their vote from any cause?—Yes, leaving the borough.

682. With a scot and lot voter I believe it is sufficient to tender the rate without paying it?—It was never sufficient for me.

683. (Mr. Price.) What are the papers you have got there?—Merely memoranda to refresh my memory.

684. You cannot give us any idea of the number of men who have paid you but of whom you say that your impression is that if they have not paid you personally, they have paid you by friends?—By neighbours.

685. None of the rates have been paid by the known agents of the parties convassing for the borough?—None. I am quite sure of that in my own mind.

686. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many elections have you voted at yourself?—Three.

687. When did you vote first, in 1859?—No.

688. In 1865?—No.

689. When?—In 1866.

690. Whom did you vote for?—Mr. Bagehot.

691. Whom did you vote for last time?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

692. What is the other election at which you voted?—The first time of Vanderbyl.

693. You voted for Mr. Bagehot against Mr. Patton?—Yes.

694. Always Liberal?—Yes.

695. How long have you resided here?—Seventeen years.

696. Well, in 1859 you were appointed overseer; now, in going about as you would do amongst the lower orders did you hear anything about money being paid at that election?—Not having been paid.

697. Did you hear of any being promised?—I cannot tell any particular case.

698. But did you hear any general report that money had been promised in 1859?—Yes; but my collection would not begin till after that.

699. Did you ever reap the benefit of money paid to the voters by the outstanding rates being paid?—No; I never heard of it.

700. You never heard of a large sum of money being paid by Mr. Bate, Mr. Kinglake's agent?—No; not till to-day.

701. In 1865 did you hear anything of money going on the Conservative side?—Nothing in particular.

702. Did you hear that in the general election then money had been given on one side or the other?—As a talk we hear it; as a general talk.

703. Did you hear it as a talk that money had been given on both sides or only on one side?—On one side.

704. Which side?—Mr. Westropp's side.

705. Afterwards Mr. Bagehot and Mr. Patton, you know, had their election. Did you hear of its being given on one side or either side then?—It was a general talk all over the place.

706. Was there a report at the second election. At the first election, that of 1865, Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake were elected. Then Mr. Westropp was unseated. Then in 1866, Mr. Vanderbyl was elected. Did you hear at that election of Mr. Vanderbyl that money had been going then?—Yes.

707. Which side?—Both sides.

708. And when Mr. Patton and Mr. Bagehot stood did you hear that money was going on both sides then?—Yes.

709. Then afterwards when Mr. Patton was unseated on taking office did you hear that money was going then again?—I heard so.

710. And you heard the same thing at the last election, I suppose?—Yes.

711. Did you hear it stated on which side the money was going principally; whether it was on one side, or both, or which?—At the last election?

712. Well, at the elections generally?—Not one thing more than another as far as I am aware of.

713. At the last election you heard it was going on both sides?—Well; I do not know that I did hear of any money on the Conservative side.

714. Did not you hear of anything that turned the people suddenly for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I say not on the Conservative side.

715. But on the other side?—Yes.

716. Can you give us any information?—Nothing more than what has been brought out here.

717. You have not happened to hear any conversation, or to know anything, or to find anybody 10*l.* better off than he was the day before?—They are not in the habit of letting me know, or I should be too tight after the rate.

718. Did you after the first election find the rates paid very easy?—No; we do not find that as a rule.

719. (Mr. Price.) I should like to know—can you tell us at all—whether these men who stayed back, and were stung with regret that Mr. Kinglake left the town, and then went and voted for him in large numbers, were of the brickmaking class?—The new ones.

720. They stayed back till the middle of the day, and then, when their favourite candidate had been beaten, they rushed to the poll after he left?—I have heard different stories.

721. And then those who had never voted had such a love for their old candidate, for whom they had never voted before, that they came and voted in a shoal?—I cannot say.

722. (Mr. Anstey.) I now come to a very grave matter. Your name appears amongst those who undertook in 1866 to instruct the House of Commons as to its duties, and you then put your signature to a petition, to say, that if the House would only join with the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in 1866, you, amongst others, would undertake to show that, whereas the House of Commons, which unseated Westropp on that occasion, had only inquired into seven cases of bribery, there were remaining 173 cases of bribery alleged by the petitioners themselves. Seely is one of the petitioners. There were remaining 173 cases, and you make it a matter of complaint in your petition that the Commons did not inquire into those 173 too; and you go on further to say, that besides those 173 cases, "a larger number of cases of "bribery would be disclosed than is apparent from "the evidence taken, inasmuch as the case of the "petitioners was stopped by the Committee when a "few cases had been heard. Your petitioners" (that is you) "therefore humbly pray that your Honourable "House will be pleased to order that the evidence "taken before the Committee be laid on your table, "and that no writ be issued until your Honourable "House has had an opportunity of considering the "same. And your petitioners further pray that your "Honourable House will be pleased to direct that a "Commission be appointed to inquire into the prac-"tices above referred to, with a view to the adoption "of such measures as may prevent a recurrence of "the same." I ask you this general question, is every syllable which you allege there in that petition of yours to the House of Commons a delusion and a snare put upon that Honourable House, or is it true; and, if so, give us now those particulars which you then promised?—All I can give you is this,—that I heard that the petition was prepared and lying for signature, and I was asked to go and sign it; and I went and read it. I believe I read it all, but I am not sure. But why I signed it was this,—that the writ should be suspended for a time. That was my object concerning it. The town was in rather an excited state, and I thought it would be better that it should be put off for a little while.

723. And do you mean to tell me that your secret and real reason was a reason altogether different from and contrary to that which you solemnly and deliberately stated to the House of Commons, in order to incline the House to act?—That is why I signed it, and nothing more.

724. Then you wish that to go forth, that you stated falsely in your petition to the House of Commons that you desired inquiry and were able to furnish information, whereas your real reason was that there might be no election for some time in the then present disturbed state of the town; that you wish it to go forth to the town that you deliberately put your name to a false statement on that occasion?—Not a false statement.

725. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you know that if a Committee had sat, and had reported that corrupt practices existed here, that the borough would be disfranchised?—That is very likely.

726. You mean to say you do not know whether you read it. Surely you did not sign it without reading it?—It was done in a hurry.

727. Did you, or did you not sign this without reading it?—No; I do not think I did.

728. You have heard this read by my learned friend?—Yes.

729. Did you sign that without reading it?—I recollect signing that.

730. Do you recollect requesting that a commission should be sent down here?—From the fact of my name being there I suppose it is right.

731. Did you know that if a commission had come, and had discovered that such practices had existed, the borough would be disfranchised?—Yes; very likely.

732. Do you still adhere to your statement that you signed that under the misapprehension that you were asking for a suspension of the writ, or did you sign it knowing that you were asking that a commission should come, and if it did, and these practices were discovered, that very probably the place would be disfranchised?—It would be better to have the writ suspended rather than an election just at the time.

733. Did you know when you signed that you were asking, not for a suspension of the writ, but that you were asking for a commission?—It is asking for both. I think it is so.

734. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes. I will read to you the passages, that there may be no mistake about it: "That your petitioners are anxious to prevent the "recurrence of the corrupt practices which prevailed "in the borough at the last election of Members to "serve in Parliament, the existence of which prac-"tices has been reported to your Honourable House; "that your petitioners are informed and believe, that "should an inquiry be instituted, a much larger "number of cases of bribery would be disclosed," &c. That I read to you before?—Yes.

735. "Inasmuch as the case of the petitioners was "stopped by the Committee when a few cases only "had been heard, that the petitioners against the "return of H. Westropp, Esq. were induced to "abandon their intention of proceeding to a scrutiny, "on the ground of the very great expense which "they were advised would be thereby incurred. Your "petitioners therefore humbly pray that your "Honourable House will be pleased to order that "the evidence taken before the Committee be laid on "your table, and that no writ be issued until your "Honourable House has had an opportunity of con-"sidering the same; and your petitioners further "pray that your Honourable House will be pleased "to direct that a Commission be appointed to inquire "into the practices above referred to, with the view "to the adoption of such measures as may prevent "a recurrence of the same. Lastly, your petitioners "venture humbly to suggest that in any legislation "which may take place on the subject of the election "of Members to serve in your Honourable House, it "should be provided, that where a member has been "unseated for bribery, it shall not be necessary for "the candidate next on the poll to establish his elec-"tion by the tedious and expensive process of a "scrutiny, and your petitioners will ever pray." And your name comes very early on that list.

736. (Mr. Coleridge.) There you see you did not put it in your petition in any way in the alternative. You ask for a suspension, and the Commission. Now I ask you did you not, when you signed that, know that the probable effect of a Commission being granted would be disfranchisement of the borough?—Yes.

737. You did?—Yes.

738. Who asked you to sign that petition?—I believe I was going down this very High Street with a friend——

739. I do not care where you were going. Who asked you to sign that petition?—I believe it was a Mr. Collis.

740. What is he?—A pastrycook.

741. What is he in politics, how does he vote?—Liberal.

742. You mean your explanation is, that in reality you signed that petition, having read it, and imagining that you were asking for a commission, or the suspension of the writ in the alternative; is that what you say?—Yes.

743. That is not what it comes to?—No, I see it does not; it is stronger.

744. My friend has read that twice, and you say you have heard of a much larger quantity of bribery than was before the House of Commons. Where did you get that information from?—I have no information of my own knowledge.

745. Upon what instructions, and upon what facts, did you put your name to that solemn document?—I have just given you the reasons.

746. You have given me no reasons, except that Mr. Collis asked you to sign it?

747. (Mr. Price.) What did Mr. Collis say?—He said there was a petition lying in the office for signature asking for the suspension of the writ.

748. (Mr. Coleridge.) And upon that did you sign the petition?—I believe I read it; I was going in that direction.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. W. Plowman.

24 Aug. 1869.

749. You say you read it through before you signed it. Very serious charges are made against your own city in that petition, and I ask you from what information and from what facts you made the charges against the borough of Bridgwater which you there allege. What was it from, Mr. Collis's representations or from what you know yourself?—No.

750. Do you know anything yourself?—I had heard what had taken place on the unseating of Mr. Westropp.

751. Do you know anything more than that. Had you known anything of your own knowledge at all?—Not of my own knowledge.

752. (Mr. Price.) If this petition had been granted, having put your name to it, you would have been ordered to appear as a witness and depose on oath to acts of bribery?—I should not have been in a position.

753. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you had been heard on your oath what would you have been in a position to depose to?—To what I have stated here.

(Mr. Coleridge.) To nothing, in fact.

754. (Mr. Price.) Then you, in common with the rest of those who signed this petition, denounce in this sort of way your fellow townsmen as being guilty of corrupt practices, and you pray the House to grant a commission of inquiry into it. Had they more knowledge than you acted upon?—These things are done hastily.

(Mr. Anstey.) I can only say for myself, not merely with reference to you, but also with reference to any other persons who tell me a story such as you have told me just now, and who have put their names to a statement which is false, if your statement now is true, that I shall not consider at the end of this inquiry that you have answered the questions that have been put to you by me, and I shall act accordingly, and I shall not put my name to anything in the shape of a certificate of indemnity.

755. (Mr. Price.) You have read this no doubt: "That your petitioners are informed." Now, had you, as one of those petitioners, been informed, and had you reason to believe, if an inquiry had been instituted, that this large disclosure of further bribery would be disclosed?—I had no doubt.

756. Why had you no doubt? If a man has no doubt he must have knowledge?—Well, from Mr. Westropp being unseated, and what transpired.

757. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you had no doubt, why cannot you give us any assistance?—I have given you all I can.

758. (Mr. Price.) If you have no doubt you must have knowledge of the facts?—I have no facts to go upon.

759. What do you mean when you say you have no doubt about it, merely from what you heard cursorily in the street?—Merely from the evidence I heard they had against him.

760. Do you mean the list of names given in?—Yes.

761. But you go further than that, because you say that you had no doubt a much larger number of bribery cases would be disclosed than appears in the evidence placed before the committee?—Yes; I can understand your meaning. I did not prepare the document, nor consider it.

762. It is a serious matter to consider, and you have been asked about it, and we will ask you about it again. When you put your hand to that document you must have known a great deal of what was going on, or you would not have been, as a party man, asked to sign a petition, nor would you have been asked to give us information which you must have learnt in the course of your business in the town from your habits and avocations?—I tell you candidly I did not know that there was any such petition in preparation, or lying for signing, not more than three minutes before I signed it.

763. Did you know of your own knowledge, before you signed the petition, that there was notorious corruption and bribery at the election at Bridgwater?—I heard so.

764. You had heard so?—I had heard so.

765. And had you any doubt of the fact?—I had no proof.

766. Had you any doubt of it?—I had no doubt of it.

767. Had you any doubt of it at the time you signed that document?—No.

768. That there had been extensive bribery and corruption?—I had no doubt of it.

769. To what extent, with regard to the number of the constituency?—I cannot say at all.

770. What number of the constituency did you believe were open to receive bribes at the time when you signed that document and asked the House of Commons to have a commission issued. What proportion of this constituency did you believe were open to the reception of bribes that made it important that a commission should come down and inquire, from all you had heard?—I really cannot tell you.

771. 200 or 300 out of the whole number?—I am sure I cannot answer the question. There are all kinds of reports that have gone out.

772. Did you believe at the time, and have you any doubt, that there were about 200 or 300 open to the reception of bribes at any election at any time?—No.

773. You can give us no idea?—No.

774. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you give us any idea how many were ready to be bribers, not how many to be bribed?—No.

775. Can you give us any idea?—Not more than the names I have heard mentioned.

776. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say this:—if the House of Commons or House of Lords had been induced to grant a commission for that year, and that commission had sat, that you were not prepared to have given those commissioners the fullest information as to the names of persons whom you had heard of, or believed to have been engaged in the giving or receiving of bribes, in order that they might find out from competent witnesses the state of the case; would you have refused to give them information, as far as you could, as to the names of those persons?—I had none to give.

777. You told us before that you had heard of the existence of these cases, therefore you had heard of the names of bribers and bribees. Would you have refused to give the names of the persons in order that inquiry might have been made with reference to them?—No.

778. Then please give us the names of those persons without further delay?—I heard of Mr. Boys; those cases that have been given.

779. (Mr. Coleridge.) Never mind that, let us have them again?—Mr. Boys.

780. Give us the bribers first, those who gave the money to those who took the money?—Mr. Frederick Harden and Mr. Temblett.

781. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Temblett the baker?—Yes.

782. What is his christian name?—Frederick Charles.

783. Who else; are those all on one side?—I did not hear of any on the other.

784. Do you mean to say that there is no person known on the Liberal side who acts in the same capacity as those three gentlemen whose names you have given us on the Conservative side?—Are you not confining yourself to the 1865 election?

785. Yes, 1865?—Yes, that is what I thought. I heard of none.

786. None in 1865?—None.

787. Next we come down to the election of 1866. 1865 was the time Mr. Westropp was unseated?—Yes.

788. At that time you say you knew of nobody on the Liberal side who had attempted to bribe?—No.

789. You knew of none?—I knew of none.

790. Nor of any who were bribed?—Nor of any who were bribed.

791. Do you believe that in the election of 1865, when Mr. Westropp was returned, that the bribing was all on one side?—So I heard; yes.

792. You believe that?—I had no reason to disbelieve it.

793. But do you say that that is so, so far as you know?—As far as I know.

794. Now we come down to the election of 1866.

795. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever canvass at all?—Never.

796. (Mr. Price.) Then there was a second election of 1866?—Yes.

797. That was the election when Mr. Vanderbyl came down to oppose Mr. Patton?—Mr. Bagehot first.

798. Do you know anybody on the Liberal side who bribed in the contest between Mr. Patton and Mr. Bagehot, or on either side?—No. I really cannot tell; not to mention parties. I can say nothing except what I have heard in the course of talk.

799. Cannot you tell us anybody? Mr. Patton came down here, and as your returns show, or at least as the returns we have had show us, Mr. Patton got in by the narrow majority of seven?—Yes.

800. Six or seven?—Yes.

801. Now, bearing in mind that Mr. Patton got in by a majority of only six or seven over Mr. Bagehot, a gentleman living in the neighbourhood, do you mean to say you know of no persons who bribed on that occasion, or heard any mention of what was passing?—No, nor did I ever hear anything of the sort.

802. Have you heard now anything of the sort?—No.

803. And has it not astonished you that Mr. Patton, a complete stranger, should come down and beat Mr. Bagehot, a neighbour and a gentleman of position?—There were reports that money had passed on both sides.

804. To a considerable extent?—Yes, I suppose so.

805. Very freely?—Yes.

806. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you hear that any of Mr. Westropp's money after he had been unseated had been used for Mr. Patton's purposes?—No.

807. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear that some had been spent for Mr. Patton on that occasion?—No.

808. Or any approximation?—No.

809. Was it considered a more expensive election than many others?—No, I never heard of any others.

810. You say money was spent very freely?—I really cannot say.

811. But you say money was spent very freely on both sides?—I cannot say at all.

812. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever hear any people say that they believed it was a pure election? I cannot say.

813. You cannot say?—I do not think so.

814. Did you believe it was a pure election?—No.

815. (Mr. Price.) When can you fix a pure election in Bridgwater?—I do not know.

816. Now we come to 1866, that was Mr. Patton and Mr. Bagehot's, and then there was the next election in 1866 when it was Mr. Patton's and Mr. Vanderbyl's?—Yes.

817. And then comes Mr. Vanderbyl who came down on the occasion of the next election, and beat Mr. Patton by a large majority?—Yes, about a month after.

818. (Mr. Coleridge.) All three of those elections were in 1865?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) The Committee sat in 1866.

819. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Patton comes down in 1866 and is elected, then he comes down again after having accepted an office as Lord Advocate, and is beaten by Mr. Vanderbyl by something about 70?—Yes.

820. At that time what was the report as to what money had passed freely?—Just as before?

821. Just as before?—Yes.

822. On both sides?—Yes.

823. Now you having told us that was what passed on each of those occasions, do you mean to say you cannot give us any of the names of the persons who were notorious in the town, who either bribed on the one side or the other in 1866 on that occasion?—There are so many, and there are so many reports, I cannot remember.

824. But can you give us any of the names that were mentioned?—I do not believe a quarter of what I hear.

825. Never mind that, but can you give us the names of any persons or person on the one side or on the other, during the election of 1866, because they can come and give disclosures if their names are mentioned?—They are the proper persons.

826. Give us the names?—I have given you all the names I think that I know.

827. We have heard three names on the Conservative side, now I ask you for the names of those on the Liberal side?—I have heard the name of Mr. Allan.

828. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever heard Mr. Bates's name mentioned?

829. (Mr. Anstey.) What is Mr. Allan's christian name?—Andrew.

830. Who else?—Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell I have heard mentioned.

831. You say Mr. Bate you never heard of?—Never.

832. The old Mr. Bate?—The old Mr. Bate.

833. He is dead?—Yes, I was clerk to him seven years.

834. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you clerk to him in 1859?—Yes, he was a conveyancer.

835. (Mr. Price.) Did he take an active part in election matters?—The old gentleman used to go and canvass.

836. An active part for Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

837. A very active part?—Yes.

838. Was he one of his most active partizans?—Yes.

839. Not a paid agent?—I do not believe he was.

840. He was a certificated conveyancer, and he did not act as a paid agent?—No.

841. You were his clerk?—Yes; I left him in 1859.

842. Were you with him at the time that this contest occurred with Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

843. In what capacity did he act for Mr. Kinglake. What was he agent for?—I believe he was his private agent.

844. Had he the payment of his private accounts?—Not that I am aware of.

845. Used he to go about canvassing?—Yes.

846. Whom did he bank with?—Mr. Seely.

847. Used you to go to the bank and get money for him at that time?—Occasionally.

848. Were the cheques cashed?—I used to pay in moneys.

849. Did you ever go down to get cheques cashed?—No; it was not the custom at all.

850. You never went down with a cheque to cash and get the money?—No, I only paid in money.

851. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much have you paid in?—I do not know.

852. As much as a thousand pounds?—Yes.

853. At one time?—I do not know that.

854. Have you ever paid a cheque for a thousand pounds for Mr. Kinglake?—No.

855. (Mr. Price.) Or anything like it?—No.

856. Have you ever paid in any of Mr. Kinglake's cheques?—I do not believe I did. I do not know that I ever saw one of his cheques.

857. Do you remember about the month of October 1869 paying in money to Mr. Bate's account, any large sum like 1,100*l.* or 1,200*l.*?—No.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. W. Plowman.

24 Aug. 1869.

858. Were you his clerk at that time?—In September I was.

859. Not as late as October?—I left him in October.

860. Did people come to Mr. Bate's office as voters; he had chambers or an office I suppose?—An office.

861. Did people come from time to time to Mr. Bates's office to see him?—Occasionally.

862. In numbers?—Not in numbers.

863. What class of voters?—All classes, some on election matters and some on other matters, all classes of voters.

864. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did Mr. Bate employ as his agents in money matters; you must know as you were with him; whom did he employ going about with him canvassing, and assisting him in one way or another?—We were his solicitors.

865. I know, but who were his underlings who were engaged to do the work of the election?—I do not know.

866. Who were the persons before the election coming backwards and forwards to assist him? solicitors or otherwise?—Mr. Lovibond.

867. Who else?—Mr. Reed.

868. Who else; Mr. Bussell?—No, I never saw him there.

869. And who else?—No one else.

870. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Barham?—No, I do not think so.

871. (Mr. Coleridge.) Used they to come alone?—Perhaps, at times.

872. Did they always see him alone?—That I cannot say at all. His office is upstairs.

873. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Bate at that time a gentleman in a position, so far as you know, to have advanced 1,500*l.* or anything like that,—1,100*l.* or 1,200*l.* out of his own pocket for election purposes in ready money?—He is a man who always had that at his command.

874. He had?—Yes.

875. (Mr. Coleridge.) Used you to see his banking books?—Yes.

876. What sort of a balance used he to have at his bank?—A very large balance.

877. That may be relative, as much as 1,100*l*?—Yes, as much as that.

878. And more sometimes?—Yes, sometimes more.

879. (Mr. Anstey.) How much have you known him to defray in connexion with the election expenses at one time?—I never knew of anything connected with the election expenses.

880. Was your ignorance of Mr. Bate's proceedings a matter of arrangement between you and him, or was it only the result of your own studious prudence, not wishing to be informed of his proceedings; which was it; by an arrangement with him?—No, certainly not.

881. Or did you keep yourself studiously in the dark?—No, I was not to put myself in the way unless I was asked.

882. But yon knew that he was engaged for these election matters?—Oh certainly.

883. And you abstained from making yourself acquainted with the details?—No, certainly not.

884. Then you did make yourself acquainted with them?—I did not abstain from making myself acquainted with them.

885. But you say you did not know anything connected with them?—No.

886. Then you did abstain from becoming acquainted with the details?—Yes.

887. All the time you were in his service?—Yes, other than canvassing and copying, and so on.

888. Who was the person who did attend to these matters?—He had a son.

889. In the office?—Yes.

890. What is his name?—Mr. Charles.

891. What is he now?—He is now in the town.

892. (Mr. Price.) Is his wife alive?—Yes, his widow.

893. When did he die?—Nearly two years ago, two years in September I think.

894. I am reminded that you carried the thing down to 1868. In 1868 do you know of any persons who were actively engaged in bribery, which was disclosed before the learned judge in the early part of this year?—From hearsay,

895. Besides those which you heard reported before the learned judge, do you know of any other persons who have been actively engaged in bribery?—No.

896. I will ask you this;—you no doubt have a pretty accurate idea of what has been spent on different occasions;—was the last election a more expensive one than the preceding ones?—I do not know at all, not a bit.

897. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean, if you do not know what the men got by hearing them talk about what they got, that you did not hear from their wives what they got when you went about collecting rates?—I hear a great deal.

898. (Mr. Price.) What is the largest sum you have heard of on the last occasion?—10*l.*

899. The largest sum?—Yes.

900. What is the largest sum you have heard of on former occasions?—I think I have heard as much as 25*l.*

901. 50*l.*?—No.

902. The highest figure you have heard of is 25*l.*;—Yes.

903. Was that given freely?—That I cannot say.

904. What election was that when the tariff got so high?—I think that was at one of the elections in 1866.

905. Mr. Patton and Mr. Bagehot?—Yes; or one of the others; I cannot say which.

906. Did Mr. Vanderbyl's coming in the town raise the tariff at all?—I think it must have been at that election.

907. Did that raise the tariff?—I think so.

908. It was generally known that Mr. Vanderbyl was one of the gentlemen who parted freely at Yarmouth?—Yes.

909. And then the scale went up?—Yes.

910. (Mr. Coleridge.) You all knew he had been unseated at Yarmouth?—Yes.

911. It was generally known in the town?—Yes, either before or after; it was generally circulated.

912. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you wish us to understand, that since the period when you began to vote, which I think was in 1865 or 1866, you have not heard any persons named as bribers, that is, as bribing agents on your side,—on the Liberal side,—except the two names we have sufficient information of without you, or without anybody else, namely, Andrew Allan and Henry Chapman Bussell; do you mean to say, with the full knowledge of the consequence to yourself of our not believing your statement, that from the year 1865 down to this year of grace 1869 that you never heard the names of any persons mentioned as being connected with the bribery of your party, the Liberal party,—or any bribery, except those two persons twice convicted, Mr. Andrew Allan and Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell?—No agents.

913. You are asked by the chairman of this Commission if you have heard of the names of the persons connected with these shameful practices on your side, and whether you have heard the names of the persons connected with these equally shameful practices on the other side; I ask you, are those the only two persons whose names you have heard of from all your opportunities?—I have so many opportunities, I cannot recollect them; if I was to look over the list no doubt I should recollect more.

914. You mean to say you recollect no more?—No.

915. On your oath?—No.

916. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you know every man, woman, and child in Bridgwater?—No; I seldom see the voters.

917. By whom are the rates paid by to you,—the women?—Yes; I seldom see the voters.

918. (Mr. Price.) Was there any man brought down to do the bribery work, the actual passing of the money?—None that I heard of.

919. None that you heard of?—I might hear of it from two or three people congregated together, but none that I know of.

920. Cannot you give us, according to common rumour, any names excepting the two names we have heard of, Allan and Bussell on the one side, and the names of Mr. Heal, Mr. Vezey, Mr. Boys, and Mr. Harden on the other side? You cannot give us the names of any persons, except Allan and Bussell, who were notorious in bribery?—No; I do not know of them as a fact.

921. You know only of them as proved before the learned Judge in February, or whenever it was, but you cannot give us any other names of persons who have been spoken of?—There were many that have been spoken of.

922. Can you give us the names?—I cannot recollect the names.

923. (Mr. Coleridge.) Give us the name of every clerk who has been with Mr. Bate between 1858 and 1867, every clerk and office boy. It cannot be very difficult; there would not be so many of them?—Perhaps four or five.

924. Give me their names?—One called Robert Squibbs when I was there.

925. Where does he live?—He is there now.

926. Who else?—There is another, James Williams. He is dead.

927. Who else?—Williams, Squibbs, and myself, those were the three, and one came from Cornwall, I do not know his name, you will see it at the office, and another Cornish man called Martin.

928. Who else?—One called Lewis.

929. Is he alive?—Yes.

930, Still there?—I do not think he is; he is in the town.

931. Who else?—Aldridge.

932. Who else?—Squires; he is still there, and one other there, I do not know his name.

933. Which of those should you call, take the time you were appointed overseer, was his confidential clerk of all those?—Squibbs at that time.

934. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you tell me when I asked you his confidential clerk there was his son, and not mention Squibbs?—Not while I was there.

935. (Mr. Price.) Who was, while you were there, confidential clerk; when you left?—I was with him.

936. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you say he reposed no confidence in you about election matters?—I had nothing to do with it.

937. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to represent to us that Mr. Bate, though an active electioneering man, never discussed election matters with his confidential clerk?—He never did.

938. He kept them secret in his own breast?—Yes.

939. And never spoke to you or any confidential clerk?—No, he did not.

940. (Mr. Anstey.) Why mention his son?—His son was there.

941. His son knew about these matters, did he?—He was in the office.

942. Did his son know?—His son would go out sometimes with Mr. Kinglake.

943. Both father and son went out with Mr. Kinglake when you were there?—At times.

944. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Bate alive at the time of the election of 1865 and 1866?—Yes, I think so.

945. Do you know whether he was Mr. Kinglake's agent then?—I think so, but not at the last election. He was dead before.

946. Dead before the last election. Is his son agent in his place?—His son is carrying on the business, and I suppose acting for Mr. Kinglake.

947. Who canvassed you on the last election?—Mr. Lovibond, I think.

948. Did Mr. Bate canvass you?—No.

949. (Mr. Anstey.) Which Mr. Lovibond?—Henry, I think.

950. (Mr. Coleridge.) Used Mr. Kinglake to stay with Mr. Bate when he came to Bridgwater; sleep at his house?—I cannot say for certain; he used to go to his house.

951. As far as you know, did he?—No, I do not think he did.

952. Where used he to stay?—I think at Mr. Allan's, in lodgings.

953. (Mr. Anstey.) Andrew Allan?—Yes.

954. The man who has been spoken of as the notorious briber?—Yes.

955. I will give you one more chance, knowing the names much better than I do. I am prepared nevertheless to give you at least four names reported by the agent. I ask you for the last time whether you cannot call to mind any liberal agent or person guilty of bribing or taking part in bribing, during the last two or three elections, except Andrew Allan and Henry Chapman Bussell?—I have heard of numbers.

956. Then give the name?—I cannot recollect now.

957. You never heard this of persons like Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, Mr. Jarman, Mr. Stroud, and several others I could name to you?—Those names were mentioned in 1865.

958. Then I ask you with reference to 1865, 1866, and 1868. My question is since you began to take a part which you fix at 1865, and I have already named more than you named to me, and you will expect me by-and-by to say I am satisfied with your evidence and to say that you have given answers to my questions; but certainly not; I warn you at this time before it is too late?—I shall be happy to give you all the information I can.

959. I shall not ask you another question, but leave you to the mercy of the qui tam informers who choose to give information.

960. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Plowman, that is the last question we put to you at present, and you have an opportunity of making a full disclosure of everything you know, and before the end of this inquiry you may, if your recollection is refreshed in any way, ask permission to give and will be allowed to give any further information, and it is a matter, you have heard what my colleague has said about it, for your grave consideration; and I ask you now, whether there is anything in the way of information you can give us now which has not been disclosed in the course of your examination?—There is nothing that I can recollect now. If you will give me a chance I will try and look over the list of names; it might occur to one on reading through the different registers.

961. Then we shall not want you any further at present, but you are at liberty, as I have said, if you recollect anything more that will be of service to us in conducting this inquiry, and it will be better for yourself to come and give us information about it fully at once, rather than that we should discover hereafter, by any information we may get, that there are things that you must have known, and that you have kept back?—I have not kept back anything.

Mr. James Trevor called.

Mr. J. Trevor

962. (Mr. Price.) You have had a summons to produce papers and documents in your possession. Will you produce, without being sworn at present, all papers and documents relating to this inquiry both with reference to the last election and any other election?—The chief part are in London, at my agents, Messrs. Vizard and Co's. I believe they are subpœnaed to bring them down. It was arranged with

SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Trevor.

24 Aug. 1869.

Mr. Purcell that they should bring them down. The papers in reference to the petition.

963. Are they with reference to the petition of 1865 ?—No; nothing to do with that.

964. What are they ?—They have reference to the last petition.

965. Are those the only papers you have connected with any of the elections ?—I have no doubt there are other papers at my office relating to the last 40 or 50 years.

966. Then from 1859 down ?—I have very few from that time. It is merely the draft of the election expenses, of which you have the fair copy.

967. 1859 ?—Yes.

968. That is the only document you have with reference to that election ?—Nothing else at all.

969. And the intervening elections ? — I have nothing, merely the account of the election expenses, as agent.

970. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you no drafts of instructions or briefs, and so forth, relating to the election of 1866 ?—No, I had very little to do with that.

971. 1865 ?—No, I have not. Nothing at all, except the draft of the election expenses.

972. (Mr. Price.) Who acted as agent for Mr. Westropp ?—Mr. Smith acted as his chief agent. He was chief agent to Mr. Ruddock, and went to London and assisted him.

973. (Mr. Anstey.) Which Mr. Smith ?—Mr. Bealy Smith ; a young man.

974. He is dead ?—No, he has gone to Australia.

975. Why ?—His mind became rather unsettled, and he took a fancy to go to Australia.

976. How long ago ?—I should fancy as near as possible a year.

977. Before the last election ? — Yes, clearly ; before the last registration I recollect he was gone.

978. When did you part with those papers ?—They went to London some months ago to have the bill of costs made out for taxation.

979. Since the election trial ?—Yes, immediately after.

980. Before you got the summons ?—Yes, months before.

981. Have the costs been taxed ?—They have.

982. And have they been returned to the agents ? —Yes, they have, and I do not think have been out of their possession at all. They were locked up in a box in the taxing master's office a few weeks.

983. (Mr. Price.) Then you have nothing, as I understand, now ?—I think nothing. I have the draft of these election expenses at home.

984. (Mr. Coleridge.) Those we have ?—You have the fair copy of them.

985. (Mr. Price.) You have not produced anything, and we will not swear you or trouble you with anything to-day. We shall probably want you again, and must have the papers which your agents possess sent down to us ?—I will arrange about it in any way you please. I believe they have been at the service of Mr. Purcell ever since I first heard of him, and I wrote to my agents to place them at his disposal. They could not be brought down here because of the taxation. It was fixed before the Commission.

986. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that over now ?—Yes, and they can come any day you wish.

(Mr. Price.) Then we must have them sent or brought down if we want them, and will consider the matter.

Mr. E. Barham.

MR. EUSTACE BARHAM called.

987. (Mr. Price.) You have been summoned to produce papers and documents in your possession. What do you produce ?—I have here every document in my possession.

988. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will you say what they are, as you hand them in, chronologically as far as you can ?—There is nothing before 1868. My papers, this election case, are in the hands of the town clerk, and the bills and receipts ; these papers refer almost entirely to the registration of 1868, and I think there are my canvassing books as well when I canvassed with Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

989. Then this bundle, which I will mark A., are papers referring to the registration and your canvassing book of 1868 ?—Yes.

990. And this is also referring to the registration, which I will mark B. ?—Yes.

991. And this relates to the election of 1868, which I will mark C. And there are some memoranda relating to the petition, which I will mark D. ?—Those are the papers which my clerk tells me are the town clerk's papers. They are simply letters and copies of correspondence and notices concerning the election petition of 1868, marked E.

Mr. J. Palmer.

JAMES PALMER sworn.

992. (Mr. Price.) Are you a carpenter ?—Yes.

993. And live at Back Street, Bridgwater ?—Yes.

994. And you are a voter ?—Yes.

995. How long have you been a voter for the borough ?—The last general election.

996. For the first time ?—For the first time.

997. You are a householder paying rates ?—Yes.

998. And a working carpenter ?—Yes.

999. What wages ?—23*s.* to 24*s.* a week.

1000. Whom do you work for ?—I have been working on my own account for the last five or six months.

1001. As a master ?—Yes ; previous to that for Mr. Serle.

1002. Previous to the election were you working for wages or as a master ?—On wages.

1003. Who for ?—Mr. Serle.

1004. You were receiving then 23*s.* or 24*s.* a week ?—That was about the average I had during the time I was there.

1005. What sort of house did you live in ?—I paid 3*s.* 6*d.* a week.

1006. And no rates ?—And paid rates as well.

1007. You had no vote under the old system ?—No vote under the old system.

1008. Whom did you vote for at the last election ? —Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

1009. Had you been canvassed ?—Yes.

1010. By whom ?—Four candidates.

1011. Had you promised any one to vote ?—I promised Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

1012. Having promised them, I suppose you had not the others ?—No.

1013. Did you see the candidates themselves, or were you canvassed by an agent ?—I saw them all four.

1014. Were you canvassed more than once ?—No.

1015. Were you spoken to after you were canvassed and had given your promise to Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray by the agents on the other side ?—No.

1016. Never ?—The master I was working for merely put the question whom I was going to vote for.

1017. That was Mr. Serle ?—Yes.

1018. And you told him ?—I told him to wait until the day of the trial came.

1019. You did not tell him for Westropp and Gray ? —No.

1020. You told him to wait until the day of trial ? —Yes.

1021. What did you mean by that ?—Because he being a Liberal I did not know how to stand on the matter ; I thought perhaps if I told him I might not be required.

1022. Do you mean to tell us you did not tell him because you thought he would turn you off ?—I do not say he would, but I thought he might have done so.

1023. Therefore you did not tell him you had promised ?—I did not.

1024. Besides Mr. Serle, did anyone else speak to you?—No, none but the candidates.

1025. The day of the election was the 17th November. Did you go and vote early?—No; I voted about half past two, I suppose.

1026. Why did you not go earlier than that?—Because, as I told you before, I hardly knew how to act. The master being a Liberal, I thought I should lose my situation, and that kept me back for a time, but later in the day I determined to go.

1027. Had you heard anything about money going before you went?—No, nothing at all.

1028. You simply abstained because your master was so Liberal?—Yes, that was what kept me back so long in the afternoon.

1029. Did you go to any public house before you began?—To the "Clarence" for a glass of beer.

1030. Anything more?—I went from there to the "Anchor."

1031. What time of day did you go to the "Anchor"?—I cannot exactly say; between two and three, before I had polled.

1032. What made you go?—I went with a friend.

1033. Who?—A foreman of a shipyard in the town, Francis Carver.

1034. How came he to take you down to the "Anchor"?—We strolled down together; that is all.

1035. Did he say anything?—No.

1336. Had you been a customer of the "Anchor" before?—If I passed the house.

1037. Had you been a customer at the time?—No.

1038. Where did you meet Carver?—We met in the town and strolled about together.

1039. Did you tell him you had voted?—Well, I might have done so.

1040. Did you?—Very likely.

1041. Is he a voter?—Yes.

1042. Who for?—I do not know; he said he was going as far as the "Anchor," and I went down the street with him and had a glass of beer.

1043. You said you have no doubt you did tell him?—I have no doubt I told him.

1044. Did he say anything going down to the "Anchor"?—It was merely to have a glass together.

1045. What did he say?—It was merely for a stroll.

1046. Do you know the landlord of the "Anchor"?—Yes.

1047. How long?—Ever since I was a lad.

1048. Henry Chapman Bussell?—Yes.

1049. Did you know he was an active man in election matters?—I understood so.

1050. That you understood he was an active man on the other side?—Yes.

1051. That was about two o'clock?—Yes; soon after.

1052. What did you see when you went down to the "Anchor"?—I saw several people in the room; Captain Bussell and Captain Press, and several others I do not know, in the parlour.

1053. Was anything said to you by Bussell?—Not at all during the time I was in the front room.

1054. Had you anything to drink?—I had a glass of beer.

1055. What was said to you afterwards?—I was called out of the room.

1056. Who by?—Bussell.

1057. What did he say to you?—Called me in and gave me 10*l*.

1058. Where did he call you into?—The room opposite the door.

1059. What did he say to you?—He told me to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

1060. What did you say?—I said, "All right."

1061. Did you tell him you had not voted?—I have no doubt I did, or else he would not have given me the money.

1062. He asked you first, I suppose?—I dare say he did.

1063. You must know?—Of course he would not have given me the money without.

1064. Did you tell him you had promised the other side?—No.

1065. What sort of money was it given in?—Ten sovereigns.

1066. Wrapped up?—No.

1067. Counted out to you?—Yes.

1068. And he said, "Now that is if you go and "vote for Kinglake"?—Yes, that is it.

1069. What did you say to Bussell?—It was more than I expected.

1070. What was it more than you expected?—Because I did not go with the intention of getting money.

1071. Do you mean to represent that you went down to the "Anchor" merely to get a glass of ale?—Yes, that is all.

1072. Knowing that Bussell had been an active man on the other side?—Yes, I knew that.

1073. Had you never heard that he had bribed on the other side?—No.

1074. Did you never hear that he was a man actively engaged in bribing?—No.

1075. How long before that had you been as a customer in his house?—I cannot say.

1076. Six months before?—Yes, I should think so.

1077. You will not undertake to say that you had been within six months?—I would not undertake to say that I had or not. I do not accustom any house in the shape of a public house.

1078. What did you do with the 10 sovereigns?—I took it to Mr. Westropp.

1079. Where?—At the "Clarence Hotel."

1080. Was the "room" you call it, a cellar?—The cellar opposite.

1081. When you got into the passage, did Bussell say anything to you about anybody going to the poll with you?—He said Captain Richards would go.

1082. Who is Captain Richards?—A shipowner in the town.

1083. Was he there?—Yes.

1084. Did you go with him?—A part of the way.

1085. How far?—To near the "Clarence."

1086. Then did you leave him?—I did.

1087. And went into the "Clarence"?—And went into the "Clarence."

1088. When you went into the "Clarence" did you see Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and several other gentlemen?—I did.

1089. And deliver up the money?—I did.

1090. It was not wrapped up, you say?—No, I had it in my hand all the time.

1091. And carried it in the street all the time and handed the sum, 10 sovereigns, over to Mr. Westropp?—Yes; the same 10 sovereigns.

1092. Did you see anybody else at the "Anchor" that you know, a person of the name of Crocker?—Yes; I saw Captain Crocker.

1093. When you gave the money up did you see what was done with it?—Wrapped up and sealed by Mr. James Phelps, the corn merchant.

1094. Did you see Mr. Frederick Jarman there?—No; I do not distinctly remember. I remember Mr. Phelps putting a seal on it in the presence of several gentlemen, and Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

1095. Since the 11th November have you left Mr. Serle?—Yes.

1096. Has he turned you away?—No.

1097. How was it you left?—I heard there would not be anything for me to do.

1098. What do you mean?—On account of what I heard from a shopmate that there would be no more work for me.

1099. A shopmate told you that Mr. Serle did not intend to let you work any more?—Yes; I did not know whether he spoke authentically, but I went to pick my tools up. I went and asked the son, and he said, "Yes, you may as well, as you have been away "all the week, pick up your tools." I did not go until the Friday.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Palmer.

24 Aug. 1869.

1100. You stayed until the Friday when you saw the son ?—Yes.

1101. And the son told you, as you had been away, you might as well pick up your tools ?—Yes.

1102. And that was in point of fact your discharge ?—Yes ; mutually agreed on that point.

1103. Had you any option in the matter ?—I would not say. He did not turn me away.

1104. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you not promised Mr. Vanderbyl to vote for him before you received this bribe ?—Never.

1105. Were not you examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—Yes.

1106. Did not you distinctly tell him that you had promised Mr. Vanderbyl to vote for him, because Mr. Vanderbyl was against flogging in the army ?—No; that is a misprint.

1107. Do you swear that ?—Yes.

1108–9. (Mr. Price.) This is what you said: "I told "Mr. Vanderbyl, 'If I vote in the Liberal interest, "I shall vote for you and you alone,' but that Mr. "Kinglake I would not vote for on any considera-"tion" ?—That is it.

1110. "I heard, in fact I have been given to "understand, that Mr. Kinglake had opposed Mr. "Otway's motion for the abolition of the lash in the "army.—I believe that is what I told Mr. Kinglake "at the time." "You think you told him what ?—I "understood he supported the lash in the army." "Mr. Kinglake did ?—Yes." "And you disapproving "of it gave that as your reason for not voting for "him ?—Yes." "How about Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I "never promised him at all" ?—No; I never did.

1111. "What about the lash in the army with him ? "—Mr. Vanderbyl came to me and said 'I am coming "down to have a flying shot at you.' I said 'Mind "you do not miss your mark.' Was nothing said "about flogging in the army ?—Not then. Mr. Van-"derbyl never made answer."—I never promised either of them.

1112. Now tell us what induced you to go down to Bussell. It could not be to get a glass of ale. You had just had a glass of ale at the "Clarence" ?—It was a sort of general holiday, people were not doing anything, and you must walk from one place to the other to see what was going on, to see people drinking as I had seen at the "Clarence." I did not expect to get any money.

1113. Do you mean to tell us that you went down to Bussell to see people drinking ?—I went down just for a walk along with this friend of mine.

1114. Do you mean all you went for was for a walk ? Why did you not go the other way ?—Well, I had walked the other way previously to that.

1115. Were there only two places to walk to ?—That is about the centre, the "Clarence," and we walked down and up.

1116. And you went to the "Clarence" and from there to the "Anchor" ?—Yes.

1117. Merely for a walk to see what was going on ?—Just strolling about.

1118. You knew it was the Liberal house, did not you ?—Yes.

1119. (Mr. Anstey.) And you had already had your beer at the "Clarence" ?—I had a glass of beer before at the "Clarence."

1120. (Mr. Price.) And had promised two candidates ?—I had several days before.

1121. And not having voted, and it being after two o'clock ?—That is it.

1122. What time did you vote ?—Directly after that.

1123. Did you get anything for the 10 sovereigns ?—I had 10 sovereigns in the place of it.

1124. From whom ?—I will tell you, the gentleman who made the amount up. He handed to Mr. Westropp a certain amount.

1125. Did Mr. Westropp advance you 8*l.* ?—I do not know.

1126. Did he hand you 8 sovereigns saying he had not enough ?—I think it was Mr. Henett.

1127. (Mr. Anstey.) Of the firm of Hennett and Spink, who tried to compromise between the Conservative and the Liberal candidates.

1128. (Mr. Price.) What time did you vote ?—Directly after I had the 10*l.*

1129. That you had in exchange for the 10*l.* you gave up ?—Yes, directly.

1130. Then having the 10*l.* from Mr. Westropp you went and voted for him ?—I voted for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

1131. Up to that time you had not voted and you say you doubted much whether you would ?—Well, that is it. That is the meaning of my stopping so late.

1132. Up to that time had you any doubt which way you would vote ?—I had not any doubt which way they went.

1133. And that removed all doubt ?—I do not know anything about that.

1134. Did it ?—Well, I took the money back.

1135. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you take the money to Mr. Westropp ?—Because they were at the head of the poll in the early part of the day, and in the after part they were in arrear.

1136. Why did you take that ?—Just to show they were bribing.

1137. Had they told you to do it ?—No.

1138. (Mr. Anstey.) They bribed you ?—No.

1139. They gave you 10*l.* without other consideration but your vote ?—No.

1140. You gave them no consideration except your vote ?—Well, I gave the money up to them.

1141. And received it back from them in the shape of 8*l.* and 2*l.* What do you call that but bribery down here ?—

1142. (Mr. Coleridge.) Suppose they had kept the 10*l.* and not given you the 10*l.* back, which way should you have voted ?—I should have voted for Westropp and Gray.

1143. If you had not got the 10*l.* ?—Yes; I had intended to do it. I put the 10*l.* on the table.

1144. And had the other ?—Yes, that is true.

1145. (Mr. Price.) This is what you say, "I had the "money, and of course I placed the money on the "table ; and if I had placed that 10 sovereigns there, "and if they had taken the 10 sovereigns up, of "course I should have been nothing the better for it, "and they would have had the money, and I should "have been out of employment as well, because I "knew I should be turned out of my situation after "that" ?—Yes.

1146. Therefore your view was that you expected to be turned out of your situation immediately that became known to the other side, and therefore you ought to have ten sovereigns ?—I do not know that was exactly the thought I thought, I had no time to consider about the matter.

1147. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had time to make up your mind to stick to the money unless you got something in its place ?—I did not let it go out of my hands.

1148. What did Mr. Westropp say ; "Go and vote for me" ?—No.

1149. What was said ; "If I give you 10 sovereigns "will you give me the 10 sovereigns back ?"—That is it.

1150. Who to ?—The gentlemen present.

1151. Who were they ?—Mr. Westropp and Mr. Hennett.

1152. What answer did any of them make to that ?—I had the 10*l.*

1153. Did they put the 10*l.* down, and not say a word ?—No, they put it in my hand ; nothing about voting.

1154. What did they say at all ?—I cannot remember.

1155. Did they say anything ?—Not that I remember.

1156. Did they tell you to go and vote for Vanderbyl and Kinglake ?—No.

1157. What did they tell you ?—Nothing about voting.

1158. What did they say ?—I cannot remember.

1159. Did they say anything ?—I cannot tell you anything more.

1160. Did they say you should not be a loser by it ?—No.

1161. (Mr. Price.) Then how came Mr. Westropp to pull out his purse, and give you 8*l.* and Mr. Hennett to add 2*l.* ? Was nothing said ?—I told them from whence it came, of course.

1162. Then did you tell them you expected to have 10*l.* in its place ?—I stated that before.

1163. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell them you had not voted yet ?—No.

1164. Did you tell them you were on the way to the poll ?—No, I do not remember speaking at all about it.

1165. Did you tell them, as you said to Mr. Bussell, "all right ?"—No.

1166. Then, when you took the bribe from Mr. Bussell, you said "all right," and when from your own party you said nothing ?—I said nothing on the matter.

1167. I must warn you, as I did the last witness, that if I do not believe you I shall not sign any certificate to protect you against the consequence of your crime ; therefore you had better tell the whole truth. It is a most disgraceful revelation as far as you have gone, and I beg that you will not indulge in such merriment. Answer my question again without that indecent jocularity. Do you mean that when you received the money you confess to have received as a bribe from Bussell the bribing agent you said "all right," leaving him under the impression you were going to vote for Vanderbyl and Kinglake the bribing masters, and when you received the bribe over again on your side you said nothing at all, but went away leaving them in ignorance whether you were going to vote for them or not ?—I remember nothing being said to me about going to vote or not.

1168. You said distinctly that nothing was said ; do you now say that was so, or do you not remember ?—You confuse me ; I do not remember anything being said about going to the poll. I gave the money up.

1169. Have you any doubt that when you left the room, after receiving those sums of 8*l.* and 2*l.* from Mr. Westropp and Mr. Hennett, after the receipt of those two sums, that everybody in that room was under the impression that you were on your way to the poll to vote for Westropp and Gray ?—I promised Mr. Gray and Mr. Westropp as well, therefore I had no reason to doubt that they thought it, but as to speaking about the matter I do not know.

1170. Then you went and voted for Westropp and Gray ?—Yes.

1171. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who first came to canvass you at all ?—Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

1172. Did they come together ?—They were both on the premises when I saw them.

1173. Who came with them ?—Mr. Serle.

1174. Your master ?—Yes; at least after Vanderbyl had been down with me.

1175. Who came first ?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

1176. By himself ?—By himself.

1177. Where were you ?—In the shop.

1178. How long before the election ?—I should think about a week, it might be a fortnight.

1179. What did he say ?—He said he was going to have a flying shot at me.

1180. What did you say ?—I told him to mind and not miss the mark.

1181. How long after did Mr. Serle and Mr. Kinglake come in ?—A few seconds or moments.

1182. What did Mr. Kinglake say ?—I told him I should not vote for him on any consideration.

1183. What did he say ?—He asked me whether I would not.

1184. What did Mr. Serle say to you ?—I remember telling Mr. Serle I had a free and independent vote.

1185. What did Mr. Serle say to you ?—I forget the words now.

1186. What was the purport of them ?—I really cannot.

1187. Did he ask you to vote for Mr. Kinglake ?—He did.

1188. Did he ask you vote for Mr. Vanderbyl as well ?—He asked me to vote for both ; I told him to wait till the day came.

1189. Did he say anything about your work ?—No.

1190. Anything about employing you ?—No.

1191. You are quite sure ?—Quite sure

1192. How long before you went to Bussell did you meet Carver ?—It might be hours.

1193. You walked about with him, and went to the "Clarence"; did he tell you there was money to be got at Bussell's ?—No.

1194, Did he get any himself ?—I do not know.

1195. When did he vote ?—I do not know.

1196. How did he vote ?—I do not know.

1197. Did you go to the poll together ?—No.

1198. And nobody told you that money was going ?—No.

1199. You did not hear that at further elections he had money to give away ?—No.

1200. Do you mean to say on oath that you had not heard that he was a man to distribute money on the Liberal side ?—I never heard anything of the sort.

1201. And have lived in Bridgwater all your life ?—I have not.

1202. How long ?—Several years.

1203. Quite long enough to know the character of the place, and never heard that money was going at an election ?—No ; I will not swear that there were rumours.

1204. Had you heard rumours that Bussell was a person who had had it if there was money going ?—No.

1205. Who then ?—I do not know that I have heard.

1206. But not Bussell ?—No.

1207. You never heard that anything of the sort was going on at the "Anchor" ?—No.

1208. And when you got there he said "here is 10*l.* to vote for Vanderbyl and Kinglake" ?—That is it.

1209. Did not he ask who you had promised ?—No.

1210. Or whether you had been canvassed by Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—No.

1211. Simply said, "here are 10 sovereigns to vote ?—To vote for Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

1212. And you said nothing ?—I said "all right," that is all.

1213. Who was in the house at the time ?—I went in with Carver.

1214. Was Carver present when the money was given you ?—No.

1215. How far off was he ?—I do not know that he was there at all.

1216. You went to the cellar you say. Was the door opened ; could Carver hear in the opposite room ?—No.

1217. Did Bussell speak in a whisper ?—No.

1218. Did he speak in an ordinary tone of voice ?—Yes.

1219. And the passage was about as wide across as this table ?—Yes.

1220. And the door open ?—I do not know whether it was left open when we went in.

1221. But you do not know that it was shut ?—No ; there is only the passage between, but one door is situated here and the other below.

1222. Could you have heard from the cellar to the room ?—I do not know.

1223. Do you think so ?—I think not.

1224. That you swear ?—I swear I think not.

1225. And that is all you swear ; you took the 10 sovereigns, and went up to the "Clarence" with them ?—Yes.

1226. Who did you speak to going up ?—I only spoke to Richards.

SECOND DAY.

Mr. J. Palmer.

24 Aug. 1869.

1227. What did you say?—Mr. Bussell said "Captain Richards will go to the poll with you." He was in the passage.

1228. Captain Richards must have heard what he said if he was in the passage?—I do not know.

1229. Mr. Bussell said, Captain Richards will go with you, and he was in the passage?—Yes.

1230. Did you say "I have had 10*l.*, and you are to take me to the poll"?—No, not a word about money transpired; he took me by the arm, and I said I will not be led.

1231. Were you drunk or sober?—Sober.

1232. What did he say?—He let go of my arm, and we walked on together until I wished him good afternoon.

1233. Where did he leave your arm?—Near the "Clarence."

1334. What did you say until he let go your arm?—I do not know; we had no conversation.

1235. Did you say anything about the election going along?—No.

1236. Anything about the poll?—No.

1237. Do you mean to say not a word was said between you, and the man who was taking you to the poll in the heat of the election, about it?—I will not swear, because there might have been anything said, but I do not remember what.

1238. Will you swear that nothing was said by him about anything?—I will not swear.

1239. Will you tell us something that he said about the matter or anything else?—I cannot remember. I have no doubt he spoke on the road, but as to what I cannot say.

1240. You cannot remember anything but as to what Bussell said, not what Hennett said or Westropp, or Captain Richards. Try and recollect something besides what Bussell said?—I do not recollect anything more than I have stated.

1241. You must tell me; you cannot recollect anything whatever what Captain Richards said to you, or you to him?—I cannot.

1242. With such a remarkable fact of receiving 10 sovereigns in the cellar, and it being told you that he was to take you to the poll, and meeting him in the passage, and going to the poll with him, you cannot remember what he said. Did he not say "Let us come along to the poll"?—No doubt.

1243. You said he said nothing?—Well if he said it.

1244. But did he say it?—I will not say whether he did or not.

1245. Did he say come along with me?—I went with him.

1246. Did he say come along with me?—He might.

1247. Did he say anything or nothing?—He might have said.

1248. Did he say "come to the poll," or "do not go to the poll," or what did he say?—He took me by the arm, he must have tried to lead me along.

1249. You said "I will not be led"?—Yes.

1250. Did he say "Will you come to the poll without being led"?—I said I would go to the poll by myself, I would not be led.

1251. You have never told us that before, but try and recollect?—It is so long ago.

1252. What else did he say when you said you would go to the poll, and would not be led?—He let go of my arm and walked by the side of me, and said "Would I go to the poll"? and I said "Yes."

1253. And that was a lie, and you did not?—I did go afterwards.

1254. But not to vote as you promised?—No.

1255. Did he not try to stop your going into the "Clarence"?—No.

1256. You said you wished him good day?—I wished him good afternoon.

1257. What did he say?—I went away as fast as I could to get into the "Clarence."

1258. Was there a crowd about the "Clarence"?—Yes, about the door.

1259. Then you walked with him until you got to the crowd?—Yes, to the crowd.

1260. Did you run?—No.

1261. Did he go away or stand still?—I did not look behind to see that.

1262. What was his parting word when you said good day? Did he know you were going to throw him over?—I told him I was going into the "Clarence."

1263. What did he say?—I said I wish you good day, I am going into the "Clarence."

1264. Did not he say, "Are not you going to vote "according to your promise, or for the money"?—Whether he knew that I had had money or not I do not know.

1265. Did he not say, "You have had the money, "you ought to vote according to it"?—No, I do not remember it.

1266. That you will swear?—I swear I do not remember any such words.

1267. Will you swear you do not remember anything about voting according to the money given given you?—I do not remember.

1268. Nothing of the sort?—Nothing of the sort.

1269. What did he say?—I said "I shall wish you "good afternoon, I am going in here," and walked as fast as I could.

1270. Did he not make objection, and catch your arm?—No, he did not.

1271. And did nothing to stop you?—No, nothing at all.

1272. When did you next see him?—I have seen him at different times.

1273. When did you next see him afterwards?—I do not think I saw him the same day.

1274. Did you?—No, not to my knowledge.

1275. When next did you see him?—Not to speak to since.

1276. Has he to you?—No.

1277. When did you next see Mr. Bussell after he gave you the 10*l.*?—I do not know.

1278. Did you that night?—No.

1279. The next day?—No.

1280. The day after?—No. I remember standing down by Hook's some days after, and he passed by.

1281. What did he say?—He never spoke, he has never spoken to me.

1282. And never asked you for the 10*l.* back?—No.

1283. I do not suppose you have given it him back?—No. He has never spoken to me since, or me to him.

1284. Then I understand from your evidence that you had 10*l.* for voting for Vanderbyl and Kinglake, and that being illegally given you gave it up to Mr. Westropp, and he gave you 10*l.* to vote for him. Is that it?—At least I had 10*l.* in exchange.

1285. (Mr. Anstey.) Who told you that if you brought money to the "Clarence Hotel" you would get the 10*l.* back?—No one at all.

1286. If you knew so little about the financial affairs of the "Golden Anchor" how came you to know so much of the "Clarence" that you went and made your deposit there?—I knew that was the head quarters where Mr. Westropp was staying.

1287. You had been there that morning?—Yes.

1288. Are you quite sure that neither Mr. Leaker or Mr. Westropp suggested to your going down to the "Anchor" to do this?—No.

1289. Had anything been said to you about your vote?—No.

1290. Had nothing been said, that if you got the money for your vote on the other side, and bring it here, you should not be a loser?—No.

1291. Then whose suggestion was it that you put it down, and did not say a word?—I said I had the 10*l.*

1292. What did you say further when you came into the room. You came in and said I have 10*l.*,—what else?—That I have from Mr. Bussell.

1293. For what?—To vote for Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

1294. Did you go to say I will give it up to you if you will give me a sum of equal amount ?—Some words to that effect.

1295. Did you also say "If you do not give me a "sum equal in amount I will not give it up" ?—No.

1296. Was it your intention to give it up ?—Well I could not have well kept it after showing it.

1297. You would have voted the same ?—I went with the intention of giving it up, not knowing whether I was going to have any exchange or not, and I said something I expect the amount in exchange."

1298. You said "I expect the money in exchange" ?—I put the 10*l.* down like this (describing), and they were going to take it up and I said "I must "have 10*l.* in the place of it."

1299. Upon which Mr. Westropp pulled out 8*l.*, and the other two, and they sealed up the money ?—Yes.

1300. Will your swear that your visit to the "Clarence" that morning was not prompted by the desire to make something out of the election ?—I will.

1301. What did you go for ?—There was a meeting in the morning.

1302. According to your account you went three times, once for that, and secondly to get a glass of beer, and then with this money, and you want us to believe that this was all the inspiration of a moment ?—It was done in the heat of the moment.

1303. Well, I do not believe it at all. What attornies were present, and attornies clerks on this occasion, when this exchange for ten sovereigns took place ? You say that Mr. Westropp was there, and you say that Mr. Hennett was there ; what attornies were there ? Was Mr. Trevor there, or his brother ?—I do not remember seeing Mr. Trevor. I remember seeing Mr. Brice.

1304. Was Mr. Veysey there ?—I do not remember seeing him. It was done in the heat of the moment.

1305. Was Mr. Smith there ?—No.

1306. Any of the family of the Smiths', from the pawnbroker upwards or downwards on that occasion ?—I did not see any of them. I saw Mr. Collett.

1307. Who is Mr. Collett ? — A licensed victualler.

1308. Did any of these attornies take part in the conversation about the 10*l.* ?—They took down the statement.

1309. Which of them ?—Mr. Brice I think.

1310. Mr. Brice took down your statement there and then ?—Yes. That was done in the heat of the moment. I had no doubt of getting the money.

1311. Had you seen Mr. Brice that day ?—No.

1312. Nor any other attorney ?—No.

1313. Have you seen Mr. Bussell since his return from his country excursion ?—I have seen him, but not spoken to him.

1314. I suppose it was mutually thought advisable that you should not enter into any particulars of this case. Have you had any correspondence with him through a friend, or by letter ?—No ; neither message nor letter.

1315. Has anybody reimbursed him the money he so fruitlessly expended on you ?—Not to my knowledge.

1316. You have kept the 10*l.* you received from Mr. Westropp and Mr. Hennett, and not bestowed any farthing of it except on your own pecuniary purposes ?—No.

1317. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you a wife ?—Yes.

1318. Did you tell her anything about this 10*l.* ?—I gave it up to her.

1319. You say this is the first time you had a vote ?—Yes.

1320. At the former election in 1866 were you a messenger ?—No.

1321. Or employed about the election ?—No.

1322. Have you ever been employed about elections ?—No.

1323. Or had anything to do with them ?—No.

1324. (Mr. Price.) I see you were asked, "What "was your object in doing this, with the consciousness that you would lose your situation, and leave "your family destitute ?" Had you that consciousness that you would lose your situation, and leave your family destitute if you went and gave up the 10*l.* ?—I should have been able to go and work.

1325. Then that was not the object you say ?—No.

1326. What was the object ?—To show up the dirt of it. The election had been lost in the early part of the day, and they went and spent money for the election ; that is all.

1327. Then do you mean to say you did not go down there to get some money if you could ?—I did not. I had no intention whatever.

1328. (Mr. Anstey.) You know that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake were buying votes like mad ?—No.

1329. Losing votes like mad ?—No, I did not.

1330. You have sworn it already ?—I knew the Conservatives were losing.

1331. Therefore you knew the state of the poll at that time ?—I do not know the numbers, but I know they were behind.

1332. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know any others who Mr. Westropp gave 10*l.* to ?—No.

1333. Or Mr. Hennett ?—No.

1334. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not hear there was money in the "Clarence" the night before ?—No.

1335. You heard no rumour circulating through the populace, or the respectable classes, to the effect that "Money has come down, and it is here in the house ?"—No.

1336. Are you the only member of the class added by Mr. Disraeli's Act to the constituency of this borough, with the exception of your comrade Mr. Crocker, who has sold his vote at this election, or were there others added to the constituency who have taken the earliest opportunity, like you, to make a market of it ?—I do not know.

1337. Then you want it to go forth to the world that you and Crocker are the only two black sheep among them ?—I do not know about that. I have not heard any more than I have stated.

1338. You have not heard of any who have taken money or had promises of money, except Crocker and yourself ?—No.

1339. And you and Crocker are new voters ?—I do not know about Crocker. I am.

1340. And the first moment you find yourself qualified, you go and make a good thing of it ?—I had no determination. It was done in the flash of the moment.

1341. You say it was done to show up the dirt ?—Yes, so it was.

1342. Then it was not done in the heat of the moment.

Adjourned to to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

THIRD DAY.

25 Aug. 1869.

THIRD DAY.

Wednesday, 25th August 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

1343. (Mr. Sully.) Sir, I wish to place in your hands a schedule of professional papers which I found amongst the documents and books which have come into my possession in consequence of my being the executor of the late Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. On looking over this schedule this morning, I found in two boxes what purport to be papers connected with the borough and municipal elections. Those papers, so far as I have been able to trace them in the box indicated in the schedule, I have brought here, and I now wish to leave them in the custody of the Court; and I also intend, with your permission, to place them in your hands, and tender to you the whole of the boxes of papers which have come into my possession in that capacity. I presume, however, as I am acting in the capacity of executor, that of such papers as you take into your custody you will allow a schedule or memorandum to be made for my security?—(Mr. Price.) Certainly.

Mr. J. Palmer.

JAMES PALMER recalled.

1344. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not tell us what became of the 10 sovereigns after they were shown to Mr. Justice Blackburn in Court.—I believe I heard they were going to be given to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

1345. Who told you that story?—I heard so in the Court. I believe Mr. Justice Blackburn said possibly they would go into his hands.

1346. The hands of the Speaker?—Yes.

1347. Will you swear that you heard Mr. Justice Blackburn say that?—No, I will not swear it, but I thought I heard one of the counsellors.

1348. Did not you get them yourself?—No.

1349. Have you had any further payment from anybody besides the 8*l.* and 2*l.* paid by the hands of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Hennett?—No.

1350. In whose service are you at present?—I am doing work about, jobbing about when I can get a job to do from any person.

1351. Are not you in any employment?—No, doing jobs for gentlemen. I have been clearing a greenhouse for Mr. Brice lately.

1352. Is that Mr. Brice the lawyer?—Yes, and I have been working as well for Mrs. Hutchings, and doing some work for Mr. Humber, that was of course working for him as journeyman.

1353. All those persons are in the Conservative interest, are they not?—They may be so and may not.

1354. But do not you know?—I know Mr. Brice is.

1355. And do not you know that Mr. Humber was a witness against Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl at the late trial?—I know he was examined here.

1356. Then instead of making that stupid answer "it may be so," say whether it is. Are not all the persons who have given you employment since you left Mr. Searle's, parties belonging to the Conservative interest?—Those you mention, but as to the lady I mentioned, I do not know anything about.

1357. How is it you are called by two names; which is the right name Fackerell or Palmer?—Palmer is my right name. I was brought up by an uncle and aunt.

1358. How did you get the alias?—By being called after them. They had me from a child, and I was known by it in the town for years.

1359. (Mr. Coleridge.) But your real name is Palmer?—Yes.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL sworn.

(The Witness.) I have a request to make before I give my evidence, that is, that in examining me you shall confine yourselves, as far as you can, to every election as they come, not to mix up one election with another, because I come with the express purpose of telling the truth, and if you ask me a question concerning one election when I am under examination as to another I may make a mistake.

1360. (Mr. Price.) We will take care to keep the histories of the elections, as far as we can, distinct. What are you?—An inn holder.

1361. You keep the "Anchor Inn"?—I do.

1362. How long have you been holder or landlord of the inn?—Since 1852.

1363. And are a voter for the borough?—Yes.

1364. Have you always exercised the franchise at the elections?—I have.

1365. Have you taken an active part in all the election matters?—All but one.

1366. Which was the one you did not?—In 1852, when there were five candidates here.

1367. How old are you?—47.

1368. In 1852 you took no part?—It was no use. The party I went with were nowhere, and we knew that before we began.

1369. Lord Henley's party?—Yes.

1370. Lord Henley, Mr. Kinglake, Colonel Tynte, Mr. Follett, and Mr. Mansell?—I voted a plumper for Mr. Kinglake.

1371. Take the last election first, 1868. Did you take an active part in it?—I did not take as active part at the last election as at the former ones.

1372. Not as active?—No.

1373. Was your house hired by any of the candidates?—No.

1374. Were there any committee meetings at your house?—No, never.

1375. Did you canvass yourself?—No.

1376. Never?—No, and those witnesses who came into this Court and swore, perjured themselves, everyone.

1377. We want your account. You say you did not canvass any of the candidates?—I did not.

1378. Had you promised your vote?—Yes, I had promised my vote; there was no necessity for asking me.

1379. What were the head quarters of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake?—They had no committee rooms at all.

1380. Where did they have any head quarters for meeting their friends?—Here, at this hall.

1381. Where were they living?—I believe Mr. Vanderbyl was residing at Pightly, and they stopped occasionally at the Globe.

1382. And Mr. Kinglake?—He resided at the Railway Hotel; first of all, I believe, at Andrew Allan's.

1383. How long before the election did they take up their abode here?—I believe 8 or 10 days. Mr. Vanderbyl had been residing in the hotel some time.

1384. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure Mr. Kinglake did not reside at Andrew Allan's as well as at the Railway Hotel?—I say a few days, and then he removed to the Railway Hotel.

1385. Are you quite sure that at the same time he had a room at the Railway Hotel he had no room at Allan's?—I do not know that the rooms were not engaged at Allan's.

1386. Are you quite sure that he did not spend his days at Allan's and his nights at the hotel?—No, I am quite sure of that.

1387. (Mr. Price.) Did I understand that you did not canvass with the candidates at all?—I did not.

1388. During the remaining 10 days that they were here were they canvassing in the town?—They were.

1389. Had you canvassed any of the new voters before they came?—No.

1390. In no way whatever?—In common conversation I may have asked who they were going to vote for.

1391. Is your house made the resort for the voters before the election?—At election times we generally find more come than at other times.

1392. You had numbers there night after night?—Not numbers. We may get perhaps ten or a dozen, and sometimes twenty. You must bear in mind that ours is not a very large house, and we could not have numbers.

1393. You had 10, 12, or 20 of a night previous to an election at your house who were political partizans?—They came in.

1394. Which party; Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake?—Yes, it was a rare thing to get a Conservative coming to the house.

1395. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your character was pretty well known as a Liberal?—Yes.

1396. (Mr. Price.) You say you had not canvassed any new voters; not went round?—No, I never went round canvassing. If a man asked who was coming, I may have stated who he was going to vote for, but I never went round with any person at all to ask who he was going to vote for.

1397. Who were you in communication with on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake previous to the last election?—I never had any communication with any one of them in my life.

1398. But did you hold any communication previous to the last election with any who were partizans of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake?—Previous to the last occasion, only parties we considered as agents.

1399. Who were they?—Messrs. Reed and Cook, Mr. Barham, Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Haviland we considered an agent. He did not take a very active part. No person else.

1400. (Mr. Price.) Did you have communication with them from time to time about election matters?—They may be passing along the street, and I may have asked them a question.

1401. That may be, but the question is whether you did?—They may be passing along the street, and it is very likely I may have asked them how matters were going on at previous elections.

1402. Did you or did you not, that is the question, have frequent communication with them previous to the election?—The last election?

1403. Yes.—No.

1404. You had not?—Not up to the day before the election, no more than merely asking them in the street how they were getting on with the canvass.

1405. Were they canvassing down your street then?—I met them promiscuously in the street.

1406. Where?—Different parts of the town.

1407. Were they canvassing at the time?—No, I made a point of never going into a street where they were canvassing.

1408. Your account is that you used to meet these gentlemen quite promiscuously some days before the election; every day did you meet them?—Yes, there was not very many days, but it was not every day that I spoke to them.

1409. Did you ever go to their offices?—Yes.

1410. Did they come down to your house?—No, I saw them in the street.

1411. If passing your house do you mean to say that none of them whom you call agents ever came into your house on one of the days previous to the elections?—Mr. Barham came in with Mr. Kinglake.

1412. When?—When he was round canvassing.

1413. Mr. Barham came in with Mr. Kinglake, anybody else with them?—No person.

1414. What did they come in for?—They came in as a matter of compliment.

1415. Compliment?—They were passing round; I happened to come in at the time. I was not in when they came in.

1416. Every person knew your politics, and there was no occasion to canvass you?—Well, they merely went in to see my wife out of a compliment, that was their reply.

1417. How long were they there?—Three or four minutes.

1418. That was the only occasion on which any of these gentlemen came to your house?—It is.

1419. The only time?—The only time that any of them was ever in the house at that election.

1420. I ask you again, did you ever go to any of their offices?—Never.

1421. Or their houses?—Never.

1422. Or on any matter concerning the election?—Never.

1423. Never?—Never at that election.

1424. Did Mr. Vanderbyl pay you a compliment?—I have never spoken to Mr. Vanderbyl but twice.

1425. That is not the question; did Mr. Vanderbyl pay you the compliment or your wife the compliment of calling?—He spoke to me in the street.

1426. Did he ever come to your house?—No.

1427. That you are sure of?—Yes.

1428. He had the same agents as Mr. Kinglake?—The same.

1429. Those gentlemen's names you have mentioned were agents for the two?—The same.

1430. You had, according to your account, nothing to do with the canvassing, and you had no communication with the agents or candidates, except on that one occasion when Mr. Kinglake came to pay you the compliment of a visit with Mr. Barham?—Up to the time of the nomination.

1431. Now, on the nomination day, did you have any communication with them?—Yes, I was going up the street and I met Mr. Reed.

1432. Before the nomination or after?—Before the nomination.

1433. Where did you meet him?—About 50 or 60 yards from my own house.

1434. Was he coming down to your house?—He was coming down the town, I was going round the corner.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

1435. Tell us what passed.—Mr. Reed took hold of my arm, and said "All right, Bussell, there will be some money."

1436. Yes, and what did you say?—And with the same Mr. Reed went away. I said "All right."

1437. That was all that passed?—That was all that passed.

1438. Did you see on the nomination day any other gentlemen?—I saw them all.

1439. Did you have any conversation with them?—No, I believe not; no more than that.

1440. Now you say that Mr. Reed took you by the arm and said "All right, Bussell, there will be some money"?—Yes.

1441. Did you understand from your experience of former elections what that meant?—I did.

1442. What did you understand it to mean?—Why, that there would be money to give away.

1443. To bribe?—Yes.

1444. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you understand that you would have it to give away?—Well, he took an active part in those matters.

1445. (Mr. Price.) You understood from that there was money to be given away in bribery, and that you were to have a discretion in using it?—Yes.

1446. That was the only communication you had on the nomination day with any of these gentlemen?—It is. I do not know; when we were on the hustings I may have spoken to them. I cannot charge my memory with it.

1447. When you went home did you get any money sent down?—No.

1448. Not that day?—No.

1449. Did any mention take place on the nomination day that you can tell us with regard to what would be done on the next day?—No, we appeared all sixes and sevens.

1450. Who appeared?—Why, the party altogether.

1451. How do you mean?—There was no money forthcoming, and we did not expect any. There had never been any money on the Liberal side till after the nomination day.

1452. There had not been any money until after the nomination?—No.

1453. Till after the nomination?—Not until after the nomination.

1454. Then why do you say they were all sixes and sevens. Mr. Reed told you in the morning that it would be all right before the nomination, and there would be money?—Yes.

1455. Did you go to the committee room in expectation to get money?—No, I did not.

1456. Where was it that they were all sixes and sevens?—About the town.

1457. Who were all sixes and sevens?—The whole party altogether.

1458. Do you mean the voters?—The parties who were taking an active part in the matter.

1459. Who were they?—What I mean by sixes and sevens is this, that we are getting——

1460. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you go into that question will you answer the question who were the parties who were all sixes and sevens?

(Mr. Price.) What are those papers you have got there?—Some little memoranda.

1461. You have made them yourself?—For charging my memory.

1462. (Mr. Coleridge.) The list of people, you could deal with then?—Some of them. These are the names I have put down since Mr. Purcell came to me in the first place.

1463. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to give us the names of those who took the active part?

(Mr. Price.) Who you say were sixes and sevens about money.—There is myself, Andrew Allan, John Smith.

1464. (Mr. Price.) Where does he live?—York House.

1465. (Mr. Anstey.) John Smith the grocer?—Yes; Charles Bulpin.

1466. (Mr. Price.) Where does he live?—On the quay.

1467. What is he?—He is a clerk, an accountant; Allway.

1468. (Mr. Anstey.) James Allway the grocer?—Yes; Thomas Hill, and others that I cannot charge my memory with.

1469. (Mr. Price.) What is Hill?—A baker.

1470. Where does he live?—John Street.

1471. You say they were active. How were they taking an active part?—They were taking an active part this way, they would get a certain list of men who we think we can deal with them.

1472. That is to say those were gentlemen who, like yourself, made out a list of voters who they thought they could manipulate?—Yes.

1473. Those were to be captains, were they?—You may call them that.

1474. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they take districts?—Oh, yes, they were all over the town.

1475. (Mr. Anstey.) Who appointed you?—Nobody, we appointed ourselves.

1476. Whom do you mean by "we"?—The lot of us. No person appointed us.

1477. (Mr. Price.) Men who had been employed, like yourself, in a similar business before?—We were employed originally by a person of the name of Charles Forter; he is dead.

1478. (Mr. Anstey.) He was an attorney's clerk?—And a lawyer; that is how we came down from that time to the present.

1479. (Mr. Coleridge.) In what year was that?—1865.

1480. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the man about whose alleged embezzlement of 40*l.*, which was intended for a voter of the name of Heal, there was some question?—I do not know.

1481. I want to have this answer of yours explained, you say that you appointed yourselves. You were to be trusted with money, were you not?—Yes.

1482. Well, who appointed you or authorized you to fill these offices, and so to receive the money?—We originally got appointed by Forter, and since then we have come from election to election.

1483. A self-elected body?—Yes.

1484. When you filled up vacancies, who approved of those vacancies?—We, amongst ourselves.

1485. Who intrusted you with the money, you being self-elected?—The lawyers.

1486. Who are they, that is what I want to know?—I have given them. Forter was the person who trusted me with the money first, and I never had a halfpenny of money for bribing a voter from lawyers since.

1487. I am talking of this last election?—The last election. I did not have money from any lawyer. At the last election I received the money at the Globe.

1488. You did not receive any money from the lawyers at the last election?—I did not.

1489. (Mr. Price.) You say the parties were at sixes and sevens that day, not knowing where the money was to come from?—Yes.

1490. Did you discuss the thing together as to what you should do?—Yes.

1491. Where?—At the poll.

1492. But keeping to the nomination day, did you have meetings to discuss what to do?—Oh, we considered it would be all right in the morning.

1493. Did any one of them to your knowledge see any of the agents you have named?—Not to my knowledge. I did not.

1494. You understood in the morning that the matter was all right?—I found out in the morning that it was all wrong.

1495. You said Mr. Reed told you it was all right, there would be money?—Yes.

1496. When did you find out it was all wrong?—About 9 o'clock in the morning.

1497. The nomination?—No, on the following day.

1498. But you say after the nomination you were all sixes and sevens as to where the money would come from on the nomination day ?—Yes.

1499. That was after Mr. Reed told you that it would be all right, that there was money ; then how was it you discovered on the nomination day that matters were all wrong ?—It was on the polling day we discovered that.

1500. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then it was the nomination day you thought that ?—Yes, it was the polling day we discovered that.

1501. Did you go to bed on the nomination day ?—Yes, at 10 o'clock.

1502. (Mr. Price.) You went to bed tolerably satisfied that it was all right ?—Yes.

1503. Did you get up early in the morning ?—At 6 o'clock.

1504. What did you do ?—I expected to see the man who had brought me the money before bring it again.

1505. Who was he ?—Andrew Allan.

1506. Had he always brought you money down on the polling day ?—No, I had only dealt with money at four elections.

1507. Whenever you dealt with it, was he the man ?—At the two elections in 1866.

1508. Then who had you your money from before that ?—From Mr. Forter.

1509. Andrew Allan had been the person who brought you money at two elections in 1866 ?—The two in 1866 ; in 1867 we did not spend money.

1510. Andrew Allan you expected to come down, and he did not come ?—He did not.

1511. There was nothing in 1867 ?—No, 1865 I meant to say, the pure election.

1512. Allan not coming, what did you do ?—I went out about, trying to get up the voters, and I found they were very slack at the poll.

1513. Had you arranged with any voters you had charge of already to come down the night before, after you heard from Mr. Reed it would be all right ?—No, I had not.

1514. You did not state it to anybody ?—I told a certain lot they had better be in the way.

1515. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which was that lot ; give us the names. You told them so on the nomination day ?—Yes, I believe Captain Bryant was one, Captain Baker was another, Captain Deacon was another, Gibbs, Hampson, Maine, Pearse.

1516. Are all these seafaring people ?—Yes, and several others I cannot charge my memory with.

1517. (Mr. Price.) Try and recollect any other name. You must find out all those persons if possible.

1518. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Palmer one ?—No.

1519. (Mr. Anstey.) Or Crocker ?—No.

1520. (Mr. Price.) How many altogether do you think you informed that night ?—I do not think more than about 12 or 14.

1521. (Mr. Anstey.) You have given us 7 names, was Richards one ?—He is a retired shipbroker.

1522. Was he one ?—No.

1523. Any others ?—I believe a man by the name of Brawley was another.

1524. Also a captain ?—No, he voted for the Conservatives, I believe, at the last election.

1525. Who else ?—A man of the name of Strong, I think.

1526. Who else ?—Jennings, Captain Redman, and Captain Jobson.

1527. (Mr. Price.) Any more you have down on that paper which I see you refer to ?—No, it is a matter I did not think I should be called upon.

Let us see that document.—(The witness handed it.)

1528. (Mr. Coleridge.) What do the crosses to these names mean ?—I put them against their names regarding some money they had.

1529. At what election ?—In 1866, the first election.

1530. (Mr. Price.) You say you mentioned it to these men ; did you mention it to these men as persons whom you thought were likely to receive bribes for their votes ?—I did.

1531. That is, you know they had been bribed at previous elections ?—Not all of them.

1532. You knew some of them had, and that all of them would take bribes ?—Oh yes.

1533. What are the names of those that have not crosses there ?—The names I have on this paper refer to two elections.

1534. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do those without crosses refer to the last election, and those with, the 1866 election ?—Both refer to 1866.

1535. What is the difference between those that have crosses and those that have not ?—Those men who have the cross against their names ; there were 17 men that went to the poll, I do not believe there was one of the lot expected a penny.

1536. Those are the men with crosses to their names ?—Yes, and some of them came a long distance, and then it was decided that those 17 men should have 5*l.* a piece.

1537. Did you give it to them ?—Before Mr. Vanderbyl's election I was had to Mr. Henry Lovibond's to have the money to pay those 17.

1538. (Mr. Price.) You were referring to that paper just now when you were giving the list of the names of persons you saw on the polling day at the last election ?—Yes.

1539. Looking at that paper, there are certain names with crosses and some without. Have those names with crosses and names without crosses reference to what you are telling us about the last election ?—No.

1540. You need not look at it then for this purpose ?—No, I refresh my memory from this list, because it is an old list.

1541. And was it the same people voted at each time ?—Each of those two elections in 1866.

1542. Those you spoke to on the nomination day were the same lot you knew had taken bribes in 1866 ?—The principal part of them.

1543. You met them and told them they had better be on the look-out, did you say ?—To be there in the morning.

1544. What do you mean by "there" ?—Why, at my house.

1545. You said, you had better be at my house ?—You had better be here.

1546. Then they were already at your house ?—About there, somewhere in the street outside.

1547. "You had better be here in the morning ?" —Yes.

1548. Did you see any other persons that evening, any of those who acted with you ?—Yes, I saw Smith and Dyer, and White and Hill, and the parties I have named and several others got into conversation together.

1549. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not named White before. Is he one of the people who assisted at this sort of thing at former elections ? — Yes, Joseph White.

1550. (Mr. Price.) Did you come to any arrangement what they should do ?—None. We never make arrangements one with another. Every man took his list and did not have anything to do, if possible to avoid it, outside the list he had.

1551. You saw them and saw they had lists, did you, or knew that they had ?—I knew that they had a list.

1552. Have you the list ?—No, I destroyed all the papers. This is only since Mr. Purcell came to me first. I put those names down from memory.

1553. How many had you on your list altogether ? —I took it off the register.

1554. Give us an idea of how many persons you meant to deal with yourself, or that you could deal with altogether ?—If I had the register I could tell you.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

1555. You shall have it. Is it any particular ward or district that you want to look at?—No; all over the town.

1556. (Mr. Coleridge.) Perhaps in telling us that you will tell us which are new voters under the new Reform Act, and which are the old ones?—Shall I put a mark against them?

1557. Yes, a cross against the new and an ear mark against the old ones you expected to deal with. (The witness went through the register, and marked the names therein.)

1558. These are all the people you could deal with?—Yes.

1559. (Mr. Price.) John Baker, Coffee House Lane?—Yes.

1560. Charles Bennett, of Eastern Quay?—Yes.

1561. Silas Billing of the same place?—I believe so. He is an old voter.

1562. Henry Came is a new one?—Yes.

1563. Francis James Carver of Chilton Road?—He comes under the new list, but has been an old voter.

1564. John Mitchell Clavey of Valletta Place?—Yes, an old voter.

1565. Charles Coates?—A new voter.

1566. James Day of Eastover?—No, Back Lane, I think.

1567. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have marked the new voters on both sides?—I did at the beginning 1568. (Mr. Price.) Jesse Deacon?—An old voter.

1569. William Francis of Valletta Place?—An old voter.

1570. Henry Harris of Eastover?—An old voter.

1571. William Hensley?—An old voter.

1572. Charles Jennings of Russell Place?—An old voter.

1573. James Jobson of Back Lane?—A new voter.

1574. You have marked him as old?—Yes, the first beginning I marked him on that side.

1575. George Luckes?—He is an old voter.

1576. Eastover?—No, Quay.

1577. James Sharman of Russell Place?—Yes.

1578. An old voter?—Yes, I will tell you when it is a new voter.

1579. William Gibbs?—Yes.

1580. Chiltern Street?—Yes, an old voter.

1581. William Hamson, Wembdon Road?—Old voter.

1582. John Hole of Chilton Street?—Old voter.

1583. Stephen Farrance?—No, William Farrance.

1584. William?—Yes.

1585. Of Salmon Lane?—Old voter.

1586. James Harrington, Barclay Street?—Old voter.

1587. John Holdoway, Fryern Street?—He is an old voter, but I do not think,—yes, he is on the last list.

(Mr. Anstey.) Take your hand from your mouth, I really do not hear you.

(Witness.) He is an old voter.

1588. (Mr. Price.) John Peach, Barclay Street?—Old voter.

1589. James Shattock, Wellington Road?—Old voter.

1590. John Strong of St. John Street?—Old voter.

1591. James Studley of George Lane?—Yes.

1592. And Henry Symes of Fryern Street?—That is a new voter. Thomas Symes I suppose it is.

1593. Thomas Symes is it?—Yes, an old voter.

1594. Thomas Symes of Polden Street?—Old voter.

1595. That exhausts the old voters. Now we will take the new ones.—There may be others that I, in looking over in this short time, have missed.

1596. (Mr. Coleridge.) We shall want them all accurately. They will all have to be scheduled.

1597. (Mr. Anstey.) That makes 24 old voters?—I do not know how many it is.

1598. (Mr. Price.) Well now, Henry Came, is he a new voter?—Yes.

1599. Henry Came, Eastover. And Charles Coates of Eastern Quay?—New voter.

1600. And James Cording of Fryern Street and North Street?—He is a new voter.

1601. And James Day of Back Lane?—New voter.

1602. And Thomas Gayler of West Street?—New voter.

1603. William Griffiths of Eastern Quay?—New voter.

1604. And James Hoyle of Prickett's Lane?—A new voter.

1605. And James Luckes of Eastover?—New voter.

1606. And James Nicholas is it?—No.

1607. Henry James Nethercott?—Yes.

1608. Eastern quay?—Yes.

1609. And Henry James Winslade, of Prickett's Lane?—Yes, a new voter.

1610. Edward Baker of Chilton Street?—Old voter.

1611. Old? He is marked here on that side on which you have marked the new voters.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then we must put him down on the old list.

1612. (Mr. Price.) Edward Day, on the old list?—The old list.

1613. Which do you say Day is? Is he new or old?—He is on that list there.

1614. (Mr. Anstey.) You have put him down on both lists.

(Witness.) You called out "Baker" in the first place; he is old. Day is in the new list.

1615. John Brawley, Chilton Street?—He is an old voter.

1616. You have marked him on that side. John Brawley is to be added to the old list?

1617. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many old voters does that make?

(Mr. Price.) Twenty-five.

1618. John Channon of Provident Street?—New voter.

1619. And William Addicott of Barclay Street?—New vote.

1620. William Crossman of Polden Street?—New voter.

1621. Robert Frampton of St. John's Street?—New voter.

1622. And William Frampton of Polden Street?—New voter.

1623. And Henry Guy of Polden Street?—New voter.

1624. Josiah Meaker of Bristol Road?—New voter.

1625. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you marked Palmer and Crocker amongst that lot?—No, I did not anticipate I could do anything with them. I did not try to.

1626. (Mr. Anstey.) Besides those, are there any that you have forgotten, or is this all?—If I were to look over the list carefully at some time I might be able to find others; but I could not looking over the list the same as I did just now. Looking over fourteen hundred names, it is impossible for me in that way to mark every man. I may have made a mistake.

1627. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had better take this list and go through it carefully.

(Witness.) It is impossible for me to take a list of fourteen hundred names and put a mark to them in this way and be accurate. I may have made a mistake in some of those names, but there is no doubt that the names I have marked here would have money if there was money going.

1628. On the Liberal side?—On either side; they are not particular. If we were not spending money they would have it of our opponents.

1629. (Mr. Price.) They were men who you know were open to bribes?—Yes.

1630. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were they men who, if money was going on both sides, would go on the Liberal side or the Conservative side, or either side?—On the Liberal side, every man of them.

1631. But if there was none going on the Liberal side they would go on the Conservative side, if there was money there?—If there was money going they would have it.

1632. (Mr. Price.) They preferred money to politics?—You would not get them to budge before they got the money.

1633. These were men you say that you thought you could deal with?—The majority of them.

1634. That being so, you say you had arranged this the night before the polling morning. When did you first discover there was no money going on the Liberal side?—About nine o'clock.

1635. How did you find it out?—I went to vote about eight o'clock. I found the men were polling very slack. I went to my own polling booth which was at the back of this hall. I afterwards went to the south polling booth; I found that the voters were very slack in polling. I afterwards walked down where there was a large room.

1636. Where was that?—Where there was a room with the list of voters on the table.

1637. Do you call it a committee-room?—There was no person there, only a clerk to strike the names off.

1638. Where was that?—Either at the Three Crowns or the Rose and Crown. The room was distinct from the house although it was belonging to the house, and there was a separate staircase.

1639. Who was the clerk?—I believe it was one of Mr. Barham's clerks.

1640. Do you know his name?—I could not say his name.

1641. Is he here? Do you see him anywhere?—No. He was a young man.

1642. Should you know him again?—I think I should.

1643. You think he was one of Mr. Barham's clerks?—I think he was; but there is no doubt that the lawyers would be able to inform you that they had rooms to check the names as they came in.

1644. Who is the landlord?—I hardly know. I know he is conductor of a 'bus. French is his name, I think, Joel French. You will find his name on the southward.

1645. How did French vote?—On the Liberal side.

1646. What did you say to the clerk? What passed?—I first went in and looked over the list to see whether they were striking out many; and I believe that I made use of the expression "It is slack work." I walked on.

1647. Is that all that passed?—That was all. I came down and went out.

1648. Did the clerk say anything to you?—No.

1649. Nothing at all?—No, I believe not.

1650. Try and recollect?—You see it was a lad; he was a young man that was there, I think about eighteen.

1651. Was he the only person there?—The only person in the room at that time.

1652. But the only person that you say on those premises?—Yes, at that particular time, at nine in the morning.

1653. What did you do after that?—I came out and got round by the market-house. I believe I met Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Barham, and I would not be certain whether Mr. Reed was one; and I said "This is slack work. The people aint going to poll very fast." And I do not know whether it was Mr. Barham or Mr. Lovibond, one of them spoke up, and said they had seen my brother, and he said the bird had flown with the money. There was no money going on the opponent's side.

1654. They had seen your brother, and your brother said to them the bird had flown who had had the money?—Yes; and there was no money going on the other side.

1655. That is your brother Robert?—Yes. He is on the Conservative side.

1656. The bird had flown which had the money, and there was no money going on their side?—Yes.

1657. That is what Mr. Lovibond told you?—Yes; and that we should not spend any. Well, then I went and tried to persuade all I could to go to the poll, and I watched about, and I think about half-past nine or ten o'clock I stood against the Clarence Hotel.

1658. When this was said to you by Mr. Lovibond, did not you say to Mr. Reed, "Why, you told me last night that it would be all right, there was money"?—No, I did not. I never made any reply to them, because I took it for granted as the Conservatives was not going to spend any money there was no necessity for me to do so; because if the Conservatives did not spend any money at all, the Liberals had a very large majority in the borough.

1659. You went away, and looked about. What else? Tell us what you did next.—Then I strolled around the Cornhill to keep my eyes about me to see what was moving, and persuaded all our own men to go I could. About half-past nine, I fancy that must be about the time, I cannot be accurate about the time, but from 9 to 10 o'clock, there was a very large muster came out of the Clarence; a very large muster of men, and they all walked away to poll.

1660. (Mr. Anstey.) From the Clarence?—From the Clarence. And the result of that was that the Conservative candidates got a very large number ahead. All this time our men was holding back. I cannot account for any other cause than that they wanted the money.

1661. (Mr. Price.) You think the only cause was that they wanted the money?—Yes, I believe this, that there had been certain parties on the Conservative side who had been round, saying, that if the people went with them they would have their money. If they would only return the candidates they would be paid afterwards, the same as they had been before.

1662. Then did the Conservatives always pay afterwards, and not on the day?—They have done so.

1663. Always?—No, not always. Sometimes they are paid before.

1664. Sometimes they are paid before, sometimes after, and sometimes on the day?—On the day of the nomination mostly.

1665. The nomination. The day of the poll?—Yes, on the day of the poll mostly.

1666. On this occasion there was no money up to this time that you knew going at all?—I knew very well by the class of voters who went to poll that they would not go to poll without they had some money or a promise.

1667. Those were the voters coming out of the Clarence?—Out of the Clarence.

1668. Did you see any of those whose names you have given us in the lot coming out of the Clarence?—Not one.

1669. Did you see any of what are called "Liberal" voters?—No.

1670. They all seemed to you to be Conservative voters?—No, there was a great many there amongst them, no doubt, wanted to have money if money was going.

1671. Were they men whom you had known as Liberal voters before when there was no money going?—No, the majority were working men. They belonged to two establishments in the town.

1672. What establishments?—The carriage sheds and the iron foundry.

1673. Were they men who had always voted on the Conservative side?—There has been always a report here that the screw has been put on.

1674. Never mind the screw. Were they men who would vote Liberal if they had not any promise?

1675. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you give the names of the establishments you refer to?—Hennett and Spinks

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

foundry, and the carriage works belonging to the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company.

1676. Is that establishment there managed, or the corps of volunteers managed, by somebody who calls himself—— ?—Captain Bridges, and he is a Conservative in politics.

1677. He calls himself "Captain" of a rifle volunteer corps?—He does.

1678. Is he the manager of the carriage factory?—He is.

1679. For the railway company?—Yes.

1680. Whose?—The Bristol and Exeter are the proprietors of the works, but they generally send down the notices that they shall not bias the men in any way at all; but that, you know, is quite useless when there is people in the establishment who take a very active part.

1681. Well, these men whom you saw coming out were principally men from those two works?—The majority of them.

1682. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not at one time Mr. Gard, the Liberal member for Exeter, the Chairman of the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company?—Not that I know of. The Earl of Devon is chairman now.

1683. (Mr. Price.) You saw this lot going down to the poll. What did you do?—I got down somewhere I think about eleven o'clock, down to the Globe.

1684. That is where Mr. Vanderbyl was staying?—Yes.

1685. What time do you think it was when you got to the Globe?—About eleven o'clock.

1686. Whom did you see when you got there?—I believe Messrs. Reed and Cook and Mr. Lovibond. I am not certain whether Mr. Barham was there.

1687. Anybody else?—Oh, a room full.

1688. Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, I never saw Mr. Vanderbyl without I saw him through the window in his room for the day.

1689. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there anybody there except lawyers?—Fifty, I should think, in the room.

1690. (Mr. Price.) Did you have any conversation with anybody there?—Yes, we had a consultation.

1691. Who? Tell us the parties.—There was me, John Smith, Andrew Allan, and I believe Charles Bulpin. That was four.

1692. (Mr. Coleridge.) Henry Lovibond?—Yes, I believe. I am almost sure that Henry Lovibond was there.

1693. Reed and Cook?—Reed and Cook.

1694. Barham?—I am not certain about Mr. Barham. I cannot charge my memory about Mr. Barham being there.

1695. Did you go out of the room where the large party was?—Yes, into a small room.

1696. What did you do when you got there?—The lawyers wanted to know what we considered would carry the election.

1697. Who spoke?—I could not say whether we spoke or they.

1698. Which of the "they"?—The lawyers.

1799. Did they all speak together?—I do not know.

1700. Who took the leading part in the discussion?—It was a common discussion. The conversation was that the Conservative returns had come in, they were then about a hundred ahead; and then the question was, what was on the move. We considered that money was moving, and we told the lawyers that that was so.

1701. I think you said just now—you dropped the term—that the lawyers asked you how much would carry the election?—I will come to that directly.

1702. Go on then.—The conversation began about what was moving on the Conservative side, what we thought. I said "I believe that they must be spending money to get the class of men to go who was polling." And Mr. Lovibond, or one of them, I would not say which, said they did not believe that. They could not make it out. There must be a mystery somewhere or another. Could not we find it out? Then they wanted to know what we thought would carry the election, and I believe we named the price, four thousand. The result of it was that one of them, I do not know which, wanted to know if three thousand would not do it.

1703. Cannot you tell us which one it was?—I cannot. Perhaps some other of the witnesses would be able to have a better memory about it. We considered it would not amongst ourselves. We thought it was not hardly money enough to carry the election. The result of it was that the lawyers went out, and they left us four in the room. I considered they had been out some time, and I said to the rest of them, "I am damned if I am going to be humbugged at all. I shall go, and have no more to do with it." That was my expression to the rest of the three, and they persuaded me to stop, and the result of it was that I did stop. Then the lawyers came back into the room, and they said that they had decided that there was no chance for us to win, and it was no good to spend money. My reply to that was, that I believed with a little money and a little persuasion we could get the election now.

1704. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time would that be?—About 11 o'clock.

1705. You went in at eleven, and they left you some time?—It all occurred in about half an hour.

1706. Between 11 and 12?—Yes.

1707. (Mr. Anstey.) Which of the lawyers was it said, "It is no use to spend money, for we are not going to win the election"?—I believe it was Mr. Lovibond.

1708. Did Mr. Barham say anything of the kind?—I would not swear that Mr. Barham was there.

1709. Mr. Lovibond said so?—Yes, it was Mr. Lovibond; I am certain of that.

1710. Was anything said by Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook?—We joined in common conversation. When five or six parties were together in common conversation they would all join in.

1711. Do I understand that Mr. Lovibond spoke in the name of all the lawyers present, when he asked you that question?—The fact of it was there was seven or eight out of the number away there together, and we was all in conversation together. One put a word in, and another put a word in.

1712. And none of the lawyers protested in any way that it was wrong, and not to be done?—No.

1713. (Mr. Price.) Then you said you thought by a little persuasion and money the thing still could be done?—Yes, I was certain that there was a majority; that the men would not go on the Conservative side if they did not spend money, and with money we could get the election.

1714. What was the state of the poll at that time?—I do not remember.

1715. Had half the constituency polled?—Not half—a little over a third.

1716. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much ahead were the Conservatives? — A hundred. Under the old constituencies we polled more in two hours than we had done up to that time.

1717. (Mr. Price.) You knew that the numbers unpolled were more than sufficient to give you a majority?—I think if you refer to the number on the petition you will find that at 11 o'clock there would be something like eight or nine hundred left unpolled.

1718. Tell us not only of those whom you knew yourself you could deal with, but from your general knowledge of the borough, how many of the constituency then remaining unpolled do you believe could be got for money out of the seven or eight hundred unpolled. I do not mean by you alone, but amongst you out of that lot?—If I could see a list of the men who were polled I could tell you. There is a very small number in this borough that will go without money.

1719. That is what I want to know. How many men do you think there are in the borough, from what you know of it, who will be led by money?—I will tell you what I believe, and I think it is facts, too, that as far as the Liberal party is concerned they can poll about 140 or 150 men without money, that is, under the old constituency.

1720. That is under the old. A hundred and forty would poll without money out of the seven or eight hundred ?—No, six hundred.

1721. What do you think about the new ?—Our opponents would poll from 80 to 85.

1722. Under the old constituency ?—Yes.

1723. When the new element is added, how many then do you say ?—I cannot say. The working men are a difficult class to deal with.

1724. (Mr. Coleridge.) The working men are a difficult class to deal with ?—Yes.

1725. (Mr. Price.) You cannot say how many ?—No.

1726. What made you think that at that hour of the day, when there was a majority of a 100 against your candidates, and there remained 800 to poll, what made you think you could turn that majority into a minority ?—Because the greatest number of the employers are Liberals, and these men worked for them, and they have got to look at their bread and cheese at that particular time.

1727. Then you mean that the voters who were working men, having most of them Liberal masters, would be obliged to vote with the masters ?—No ; but the labouring classes here have always gone with the Liberal party.

1728. You said just now they had to look to their bread and cheese ?—I am speaking about their voting. They would not vote for the Conservative candidate.

1729. Is it because you knew there was a great number of the working classes unpolled whose masters were Liberal, and that they would get them to vote that way ?—Yes, I do think so.

1730. Supposing this majority was to be turned into a minority, how many persons should you have to distribute the 4,000*l.* you wanted amongst ?—It entirely depends.

1731. But I ask you, at the time of this meeting, how many voters did you imagine you would have to distribute it amongst ?—About four to five hundred.

1732. That is how many you thought you could buy over at that hour of the day ?—Yes, four to five hundred.

1733. (Mr. Anstey.) That would be including the new and the old ?—Yes.

1734. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had the greater part of the new voters polled early, more than the old ones ?—No, I do not think there was but very few. I have never seen the list since the election.

1735. (Mr. Price.) You think about 500 could have been dealt with at that time ?—I do.

1736. At 10*l.* a piece ?—Yes.

1737. That would be about the sum that would be required ?—Yes, about the amount.

1738. Now then go on telling us. Finish up the rest of the story. These lawyers asked you that, and then they came back to you, you said. And what happened then ?—Then I went away.

1739. You said you thought by persuasion and money the election might still be carried. Was that all that passed ?—They said they would not spend any ; it was no good.

1740. (Mr. Anstey.) Who did ?—The lawyers.

1741. Which of them ?—I cannot charge my memory as to that.

1742. (Mr. Price.) Very well. Then you parted from them ?—I parted from them.

1743. Where did you go ?—I went out about the town, and when I came to a cluster of voters I swore at them, and told them they were not men, because they did not go to the poll.

1744. Were they working men ?—Yes.

1745. New men ?—Yes, the majority of them, some old voters.

1746. And they went to poll ?—Yes.

1747. How many went to poll upon that remark of yours ?—Oh, a great many.

1748. Tell us how many.—They stood, the majority of them, about the bridge, and a good many went away. They said they would go to poll ; there was plenty of time ; they had until four o'clock. That was the principal answer that I could get out of them, and as long as they polled before four o'clock, that is all we could expect.

1749. Did they go and poll ?—They did.

1750. Directly ?—No ; it appears that the run of the polling was between one and two.

1751. That would be about 12 o'clock or a little after 12 when you spoke to them ?—Yes.

1752. What did you do after that ?—Well, I went up town, and I persuaded those people, and I think about one o'clock some four or five of our townsmen were going to Taunton—going away by the express, and they wanted me to go too, and I said first I would, and then I took second thought, and I thought that having taken an active part the Tories would say I had run away.

1753. What did they want you to go out of the town for ?—They considered we had lost the election, and we had better have a spree down to Taunton instead of having it here.

1754. When did you learn that Mr. Kinglake had left the town ?—Not till after the poll was closed. On my oath of it.

1755. (Mr. Anstey.) How many of your people went away by the express ?—I do not know.

1756. Did Mr. Barham ?—I do not know.

1757. Did Dr. Kinglake go away ?—I never saw Dr. Kinglake.

1758. You said some of your people were going away by express. Let us hear about them. Who were they ?—William King, James Allway, John Bunter, and I believe there were one or two gentlemen of the country, farmers, one by the name of Lane, and another by the name of—Oh, I forget his name, but both King and Allway and Mr. Bunter wanted me to go with them, and I should have gone only I thought that the Tories might go down and perhaps smash my windows in, or something or another, and I stopped home to protect my own house.

1759. This Allway is the man whom you have named as one of the bribing agents ?—Yes.

1760. (Mr. Price.) Where did you go instead of going out of town ?—Home, and had some dinner, and then went out again.

1761. What time was that ?—About two o'clock.

1762. What was the state of the poll then ?—I do not know the state of the poll, for I considered we had lost ; that the men had not gone to poll, and I could not have went into either one of the rooms not until I think about a quarter to three in the afternoon, and I was up in High Street then.

1763. Let us understand. What time did you get in to your dinner ?—Between one and two.

1764. Whilst you were in your house did anybody come to you ?—Nobody came, only people merely coming in and out.

1765. Did Francis Carver come ?—No.

1766. Not at all that day ?—Yes.

1767. What time did he come ?—I think about five or ten minutes past three.

1768. Did Palmer come to you before you went out after your dinner ?—No, they both came together.

1769. Nobody had been to you whilst you were in the house getting your dinner ?—Only the customers coming in and out.

1770. Then you went out again ?—I went up round the town persuading the people all I possibly could to go to poll.

1771. Were these men whom you saw about and tried to persuade to go to the poll new voters ?—The majority of them ; I went up to the western polling booth, and strolling down the lane with a few who wanted to know how things was going and amongst them was a man of the name of Isaac Trapnell, junior. So Trapnell says to me—at the time I was speaking to Trapnell the clock struck three, the church clock,—and Trapnell says, "Oh,

THIRD DAY.
Mr. H. C. Bussell.
25 Aug. 1869.

Captain Bussell, is there anything going?" and I said, "No, there is not. We ain't going to spend a penny." Trapnell says there was he and his father unpolled, and they would not go unless they got something, if it was only a few shillings all. My reply to him was, "We are spending nothing." "Well," he said, "I won't go to poll without I got something." And I left him. I went into the Mansion House. There was a room there; not into the house. I went into a room there; you may call it a committee-room.

1772. What do you call this Mansion House?—A public-house close by here where they had a room distinct from the house. There was the poll sheets for the north ward. I just cast my eye over it, and I said to the young man who was there "What is the state of the poll now?" "Oh," he said, "We are pulling up pretty fast." And I believe I made the reply to him, "Where the devil do they come from?" I believe that was my reply to him.

1773. What, the voters?—"Where did the voters come from." I walked down town, and I went over to the Globe. That was the first time after the time that I have told you already.

1774. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, after the consultation?—After the consultation. When I got into the room I heard them sing out that our minority was eight; and then there was a cry in the room by somebody, "Get all the men you can." Now, I believe, whether it was Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook, I would not like to be certain which one of them said, "Bussell, go out and get all the men you possibly can." Well, I went out. "And if you can get some men, there shall be some money."

1775. Either Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook said that?—One of the two. I went out.

1776. About how many men remained unpolled then, do you think?—I do not know.

1777. You cannot give us any idea?—No, I cannot.

1778. That was about three o'clock?—I came back and went into the Globe. I take it to be a quarter past three as near as can be. I went out and a great many people were standing by, and they were cheering; and I said, "For God Almighty's sake go and get all you can, and take them over to my house." Then I ran over the bridge, and I believe the first two men that I saw was this Palmer and Carver.

1779. Had you taken any money with you from the Globe?—I had not then.

1780. Not then?—Not then.

1781. Had you any money of your own about you?—None, I got two voters at that time.

1782. Before you saw Palmer and Carver had you got any money?—I had money of my own.

1783. How much of your own had you?—I suppose I had sixty or seventy pounds in the house.

1784. (Mr. Coleridge.) In gold?—Yes.

1785. (Mr. Price.) You went home, and the first men you saw were Palmer and Carver?—It was. I said to Carver,—I knew Carver.

1786. Is Carver a Liberal voter?—He has always voted Liberal, but he required money.

1787. You knew Carver, you say. You did not know Palmer?—I know Palmer because I have had Palmer to work for me and he has been working under his master for me, and Carver is repeatedly working for me; that is by his master's instructions. I employ Mr. Gough, his master, very often.

1788. Well, now then, tell us what passed.—I said to Carver and Palmer, "Have you been to vote?" and they said, "We have not." I told them to go into my house. I think very soon there mustered there,—I do not know who brought them in, but in a very few minutes there were ten or a dozen there.

1789. In your house?—Yes.

1790. Can you give us the names of them?—There was this Palmer.

1791. (Mr. Coleridge.) And Carver you have told us?—Yes, I will tell you the names of the men who were brought in before I went out. There was Crocker, Palmer, Carver, Crossman, J. Hayward, H. Guy, William Duddridge, William Haddicott.

1792. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Duddridge in Brown's establishment?—No, he is master of a vessel.

1793. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well, go on.—Walford, J. Jobson, and I fancy that that would be about pretty near the lot, I fancy so.

1794. (Mr. Coleridge.) You cannot recollect any others?—Well, I have got some other names that was here afterwards.

1795. (Mr. Price.) These men came in with Palmer and Carver, or were in the house at the same time?—I believe that Palmer and Carver was the first two men in the house; and these men come in who were brought in afterwards by other people.

1796. About a quarter past three?—Yes.

1797. Palmer you gave ten sovereigns to?—No, I had not got the money then.

1798. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us what took place.—When I found I had got about a dozen I went over to the Globe again, and I saw two lawyers, Reed and Cook. I told them I had got 12 or 14 (I believe I stated the number) over to my house; and they stated that they would give me some money. One of them went in through the door of this room where we had the consultation in the morning, and came out again, (I rather fancy that that was Mr. Reed), and told me if I could get any others I should be all right. He asked me how much money I wanted. I told him I thought about 120*l.* I went in there, and he said the party that I should have the money from would be there. I went into the room. I did not like to speak, or he did not; and the result of it was I went out of the room.

1799. (Mr. Price.) Could you see him?—Yes.

1800. Describe him?—It was rather a tall man.

1801. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he dark?—Yes.

1802. (Mr. Price.) Do you know him?—I never saw the man before or after. He was a stranger.

1803. Describe him. Tell us what he was like.—I believe he was a tall man, I could not describe his features; but there is no doubt at all Messrs. Reed and Cook could tell who the man was.

1804. (Mr. Price.) Was the room darkened?—It was not a very light room. I said to Mr. Reed it was no good to go in there, "the man never spoke, and I have not spoken to him." The result of it was Mr. Reed went in and came out again. I went in and received 125*l.*

1805. In gold?—In gold; in five packages of 25*l.* each. Then I went home; and when I got to the door who should be stood at the door but Palmer. I said, "Hallo, Palmer! What are you doing out here?" He said, "I am not going to be sold by you." I said, "I don't want to sell you. You had better come in here." He said, "You ain't going to humbug me at all. If you don't pay me, I shall go." The result of it was I took him in a cellar; I closed the door, and said "How much money do you want?" He said, "Ten pounds." I said, "We can't give you more than five. We shall win the election." I knew it was very close quarters when we were in a minority of eight. I did not like to lose a vote for the sake of five pounds. I said, "Very well, I will "give you ten pounds; and remember, if you go and "tell anybody I shall tell the truth;" and he said before he would go and tell upon me he would cut his throat. I said, "If you go and split I must go and tell the truth." That was my answer to Palmer; and Palmer said, "Sooner than go and split upon you I will cut my throat." Well the result of it was—

1806. What did you mean by saying you must tell the truth?—I naturally expected we should have an inquiry.

1807. Then you meant to tell everything?—Yes, I did. Well then, I had got hold of Palmer, and the next rub was how to poll him, and there was nobody in the house that I thought I could trust to. I walks out to the front door, and who should I see,—I fancy I sung out to somebody, and there was this

Captain Richards; he was passing by, and he said, "If you want anybody to take the man to poll I will take him." And that is how it was that Captain Richards came to take him up to poll. What became of him afterwards I do not know.

1808. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you to say that when you paid Palmer this money he perfectly understood that there was to be no secresy in the event of an inquiry, and that you would let it all out?—I did.

1809. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on.—I paid 12 men. I paid 14 I believe then, before I went into the house, and I paid them all 10*l.* a piece.

1810. £120 you had got, and 20*l.* of your own?—No, I had 125*l.* I took 15*l.* of my own. I found there were three or four more there.

1811. Did you know these other men to whom you gave this money?—I have got all their names. I will give them to you.

1812. But you had known them before?—All but one.

1813. Palmer was a new voter?—Yes, he was.

1814. Were these other men new voters?—The majority of them.

1815. What did you do with them?—I paid those 14, and they went and polled. I did not go with them.

1816. Did you pay them separately in the cellar or before one another?—I paid them all separately in the cellar, every man.

1817. Finish the account of it.—After I had spent 140*l.* I went over for some more money.

1818. A fresh lot had come?—Yes.

1819. How many more?—Three there must be, because I paid 17.

1820. There were 12 originally?—Yes, about 12 there.

1821. Then you paid the 14. Then there were three more had come?—There were three more.

1822. Then you went to the "Globe" again?—Then I went over to the "Globe" again.

1823. (Mr. Anstey.) For more money?—For more money.

1824. (Mr. Price.) Whom did you see?—I saw Messrs. Reed and Cook.

1825. Did you see this stranger again?—Yes, I saw the stranger.

1826. Tell us what passed between Reed and Cook.—Mr. Cook rather refused. He thought we was going on too fast, and he wanted to know if I had seen Andrew Allan. I did not know that anybody else was spending money then but me. I did not know there was a penny spent. I told him I had not; and in the meantime Henry Lovibond came in, and they had a chat together, and Mr. Lovibond said "Have you seen Andrew Allan?" and I said "I have not." I said "While you are coddling about it, we shall lose the election." The result of that was that some person saw this party again, one of the lawyers, and I had 60*l.*

1827. (Mr. Anstey.) Sixty more sovereigns?—Yes.

1828. Who saw the party?—One of the lawyers.

1829. Saw this stranger?—Yes.

1830. (Mr. Price.) Go on.—I went into the same room again, and this stranger said, "How are you getting on?" and I said, "We shall win.'" Then I paid the remaining portion of the names.

1831. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have given us 10 names, Crocker, Palmer, Carver, Crossman, J. Hayward, H. Guy, William Duddridge, William Haddicott, Walford, and J. Jobson. You paid Crocker?—Yes.

1832. Palmer?—Yes.

1833. Carver?—Yes.

1834. Crossman?—Yes.

1835. Hayward?—Yes.

1836. Guy?—Yes.

1837. Duddridge?—Yes.

1838. Haddicott?—Yes.

1839. Walford?—Yes.

1840. Jobson?—Yes.

1841. Now we want seven more.—When I was paying Carver, Carver says, "There is Howe down at the south polling booth."

1842. (Mr. Price.) Howe, is he a voter?—Yes. "If you will give me the money for him he will go and poll." I said, "Very well, here is the money; and mind he goes to poll." That is 11.

1843. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is 11.

(Witness.) That is R. J. Howe, H. J. Nethercott, H. J. Winslade, J. Kitch, and Hugh Pearce.

1844. That is 15.—Yes. Now there are two men unaccounted for. I gave the money to a person named Fisher to pay it.

1845. How much money?—£20.

1846. (Mr. Price.) What is the Christian name of Fisher?—I do not know. I believe he is a voter.

1847. Where does he live?—He works at the Steam Flour Mills.

1848. You never heard any acconnt of what he did with that 20*l.*?—I made it a rule if I gave a man money never to speak to him afterwards upon it. He took the money to give to J. Hole and Hawkings.

1849. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well now, out of these 17 fellows whom you paid or got paid did all except Palmer vote for the Liberals?—I believe so.

1850. What is this man Fisher?—He is at Spiller and Brown's Steam Flour Mills.

1851. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you did that day?—That was all that I done in the shape of money.

1852. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether any that you bribed had previously promised to vote for Westropp or Gray?—I do not.

1853. Do you know whether any of those men whom you had bribed were, or professed to be, members of the Conservative Working Men's Association?—What I understood about that is that Crocker has got a card.

1854. You mean a card of membership of that association?—Yes, that is the only man that I know.

1855. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Crocker vote for the Liberals?—I do not know who he went to vote for. He went away.

1856. (Mr. Anstey.) He is called "Captain Crocker?"—Yes.

1857. (Mr. Price.) All these men, so far as you know—the majority of them—were working men of the new constituency?—14 out of the 17.

1858. And the other three are —— ?—On the old list.

1859. Then that is all you say you did in the way of money given away to voters?—It is all.

1860. Then did you go and make a report afterwards?—No, I have never spoken to a soul. I have never divulged what I have divulged here now to any living being.

1861. You kept out of the way? You had not much chance?—Yes, I came home the day after the petition was over.

1862. Then you changed your mind about telling the truth if there was an inquiry?—No, I did not.

1863. You went away.—I will tell the reason. After the poll was over I heard J. R. Smith say, "There is that round-shouldered Bussell. I will pledge my word that he shall have two years—the extreme penalty of the law." That was one thing that induced me to go away.

1864. How soon was that after the election?—The same night.

1865. (Mr. Coleridge.) How soon after the election did you go away?—On the 30th of December.

1866. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear there was going to be any inquiry then?—The petition was filed. If I had stopped home here and told the truth my own party would say I was a traitor to them.

1867. Did you see anybody before you went away—any of these gentlemen—Mr. Cook, Mr. Reed, or any of them?—No.

1868. You did not?—No, not one.

1869. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. J. R. Smith a magistrate?—He is.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

1870. And an alderman?—Yes.

1871. Do you happen to know whether he had been guilty of bribery at that election?—I do not know. I know he took a very active part, and there was a report circulated that they had a meeting. I should not like to say anything from memory. They would not allow me to go to any one of their meetings. I came here once, and had liked to get killed.

1872. Had you any reason to believe that Mr. J. R. Smith either gave or promised bribes, or encouraged the voters of southside to look for bribes?—That was the very thing I was going to explain. I believe after—whether it was the same night that he retired from being mayor, or whether it was the next night—there was a meeting at Gloucester Place where the Conservative Working Men's Association was; and J. R. Smith spoke there. This was a report you know. I cannot vouch for the accuracy of it, because they would not allow me to go to their meetings, and there it was distinctly stated that Mr. Smith had made use of this expression, that "the men were to mind M. D., money down, and sugar their plums well.

1873. Was he the predecessor of the present mayor?—He was.

1874. Therefore he went out of office on the eighth or ninth of the month?—Yes.

1875. And the election was on the sixteenth?—Yes, and this was either the night he retired from office or the next night.

1876. You say it was just when he ceased to be mayor that this took place, this meeting?—Yes.

1877. He ceased to be mayor on the ninth.—It was either on the evening of the ninth or the tenth.

1878. On that evening this meeting took place, where?—At Gloucester Place.

1879. What place?—It was originally used as a chapel.

1880. I want to know the names of any persons who can inform me what this late mayor and now alderman and magistrate of the borough really did say with regard to bribery?—I cannot tell you that.

1881. You are coming here to-morrow?—Yes.

1882. If you will come to-morrow, and furnish the names of persons whom we can examine about this gentleman's alleged language, I shall be obliged to you myself?—It is only common report.

1883. (Mr. Coleridge.) In addition to what you have told us about your own side, we want all the information you can give us about the other side.—I intend to do it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I do not want it now.

(Mr. Anstey.) I should like to have the same names myself.

1884. (Mr. Price.) You told us what you did that day, and you told me that was all the part you took?—Yes.

1885. You say you found out afterwards that Andrew Allan had been doing something on the same side; but I wish you to tell us now the names of any persons on the same side who had been doing what you had been doing, acting in the same way.—I believe there was nobody.

1886. I thought you said, just now, that there were?—Under the 1868 election, I believe we were the only two people.

1887. You and Andrew Allan?—Yes.

1888. Only you and Andrew Allan, as far as you know, had anything to do with regard to bribery?—As far as I know.

1889. How much did Andrew Allan pay away?—I do not know. I did not know where he got his money from. I did not know until after the election, when Mr. Andrew Allan had gone, that he had given any money.

1890. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you seen the gentleman, the man who was in the room, and who gave the money, since you got the last sum of money from him?—I never saw him before, to the best of my knowledge, or since.

1891. Not since you got the last sum of money?—Not to my knowledge.

1892. Do you know when he left the place?—No, I do not.

1893. (Mr. Price.) Do you know at all what money Allan had?—I do not. I am as ignorant of that as you are.

1894. (Mr. Coleridge.) You made a point of not knowing that?—No.

1895. I mean you did not talk of it afterwards?—I always made it a rule when an election was over, never to approach the subject to the men to whom I gave the money, nor to the parties engaged in the election. I always furnish an account of the moneys to the parties engaged in the lead.

1896. (Mr. Price.) Have you furnished an account of this expenditure?—I have not, for I have never seen the man since. I should have furnished the lawyers.

1897. Wait a moment. I understand you to say you always furnish an account of the mode in which you spend the money to the parties who take the lead?—To the parties who had given the money.

(Mr. Anstey.) That is what I understand.

1898. (Mr. Price.) How was it you did not give an account?—I never saw the agent to do so.

1899. How were you to do it on former occasions?—If there had not been an inquiry, I should have gone either to Mr. Lovibond or to Mr. Reed.

1900. If there had not been an inquiry, you would have gone either to Mr. Lovibond or to Mr. Reed?—Yes, I should.

1901. You were out of pocket?—I was 15*l.* in.

1902. How was that?—Because I had 15*l.* more than I spent.

1903. In addition?—Yes.

1904. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were you supposed to have for your trouble?—I have taken an active part in every election since 1857, and I have never had from anybody at all the value of that book for all the trouble and loss of time I have incurred.

1905. Then you were not a paid agent?—Never; I never had the value of that book. I defy anybody to come into the box to say so.

1906. (Mr. Anstey.) What have you done with that surplus sum? You say you have a surplus balance in your favour; what have you done with it?—I have got it.

1907. You have not accounted for it to Reed and Cook?—I have not accounted to any living soul. I have not given an account of the transaction till I came here now.

1908. Did you mention to Reed and Cook that you have in your possession a certain surplus, which you, through their means, obtained from this unknown man?—I have not.

1909. Why not?—Because I considered if I did not say anything about it they could not go before any enquiry to say that I had, and I would come and speak for myself.

1910. Oh, I see; you wished to make the disclosure yourself, before they could do so?—Yes.

1911. (Mr. Price.) I understood you to say there were at least 500 men of the present constituency who, you thought, could be bribed?—Yes, I think so.

1912. How many do you say, out of the present constituency, you believe can be tempted, from your experience at large?—Out of the 1,600?

1913. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes.—I suppose something like 1,200 out of the 1,600 would have money, if it was going.

1914. (Mr. Price.) Does that range amongst the class of persons in the rank of life of the old constituency, of the 400 out of the 700; do you think they could be dealt with in the same way?—Some of the old constituency call themselves respectable men.

1915. What are they?—Shop-keepers.

1916. What, in the streets we walk in?—Yes.

1917. Give us their names?—I will give you the name of a man who accepted 30*l.* under Mr. Vanderbyl's first election.

1918. What is his name ?—Hook.

1919. Where does he live ?—In Fore Street.

1920. What is he ?—Provision dealer.

1921. Tell us the rank of life of the old constituency, whom you call in a respectable position of life.—You may call masters of vessels in a respectable position, but wages are not very high, and 10*l.* is of a good deal of use to them.

1922. You have told us about them. What about shop-keepers ?—And there are a number of 10*l.* householders to whom a 10*l.* note is of some importance.

1923. Small shop-keepers ?—No.

1924. (Mr. Coleridge.) Foundry-men and such-like persons ?—Yes.

1925. (Mr. Price.) What is the class of shop-keepers who would take bribes ?—I know a person who calls himself a merchant.

1926. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is his name ?—Shattock.

1927. (Mr. Anstey.) You have given us his name already.—No.

1928. (Mr. Price.) What is he ?—He describes himself a timber merchant.

1929. Where does he live ?—I think his place of business is at East End Quay.

1930. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will he take money ?—Yes ; not only will he take money, but I will tell you what he will do afterwards, he will go to the man Bryant and say he did not give him half so much as he did.

1931. Was this at the last election ?—Yes.

1932. (Mr. Price.) I only ask you as to the class of men. As a general rule you said they were small shopkeepers ?—I think not. There are some shop-keepers. There is a man of the name of Hayward. I am a close neighbour to him. He is a man, I think, from my own experience, having known him for several years, and having been mixed up in a petition inquiry, I should say he is a man who would not vote without he got money.

1933. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you had any experience of a man taking money on both sides ?—Yes.

1934. This last election ?—No.

1935. (Mr. Anstey.) Following up this question about the state of the classes, will you tell me whether any of the professional men, I mean by that, clergymen, lawyers, and so on, have been in the habit of taking bribes ?—No, not to my knowledge.

1936. You have not heard of any cases of that kind ?—No, I have not.

1937. Not among professional men ?—Never.

1938. (Mr. Coleridge.) Professional men have been more on the bribing side than on the bribed ?—I do not know. Unfortunately I and the rest I have enumerated have come under the bribing class.

1939. The professional men come under the class of bribing men ?—Unquestionably.

1940. But you do not know of any instance of their being bribed ?—No.

1941. (Mr. Anstey.) Keep your attention fixed upon the last election, and the last election only. I want you to be as brief as you can. I daresay you have read the evidence which Mr. Crocker gave before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—I read it in the "Times."

1942. Where were you at that time ?—When I paid him the money ?

1943. No, when Mr. Crocker was being examined here, where were you actually residing ?—I do not know whether I was at Hull the day he was examined.

1944. At all events it was in England ; you read it in England, and you read it in the English newspapers ?—No, I did not. I never saw it until I was home, because the report was very meagre in the London newspapers.

1945. Did you on the occasion of which you speak, when a number of voters were at your house, Mr. Crocker amongst them, did you bribe them with a sum of money to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—I did.

1947. What o'clock in the day was that ?—A quarter past three. I believe that Mr. Crocker was one of the men in the first batch of the 14. I am certain of it.

1948. And he then went and voted, did he, for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Well, after I had paid him the money I wanted somebody to go and vote with him.

1949. (Mr. Price.) The best thing for you to do will be to answer the questions, and then you can explain afterwards. The question put to you is, did he vote for Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake ?—I am not certain, I have never seen him ; I do not know, I believe so.

1950. (Mr. Anstey.) You have had no other instance of any other voter whom you bribed, have you, voting contrary to the terms, except Palmer ; he is the only one of the lot you bribed who went and voted for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray instead of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Yes.

1951. All the others voted according to the terms agreed on ?—Yes, to the best of my knowledge.

1952. And as far as you know he had a card of the Conservative Working Men's Association ?—No, I did not know but what he was going to vote for the Liberal candidates.

1953. Had you any communication about this election with Mr. Haviland ?—No.

1954. Or with young Mr. Bate ?—No.

1955. Did Mr. Bate take any part in the election ?—I never saw him with them during the whole of the election.

1956. You said, when I asked you the question in the midst of the Chairman's examination as to which of the lawyers said so and so, you said seven or eight of them ?—No, I could not say that, that is not correct. We have not got that number, we have only five.

1957. How many lawyers altogether from first to last,—I do not say at one time, but from first to last, —were occupied on your side of the question with you at any time previous to or at the election of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Only three.

1958. And those are the persons you have named ?—Yes, I never saw Mr. Haviland take any active part in the election at all, and he never did.

1959. You have stated that already you know. Now tell me the names of the lawyers, you mentioned four. You mean three firms, but four lawyers ?—There are four lawyers.

1960. Three firms ?—I have given the three names.

1961. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have given the firms ?—Yes.

1962. (Mr. Anstey.) And you reckon Reed and Cook as one firm ?—Yes.

1963. Barham another ?—Yes.

1964. And Haviland another ?—Yes.

1965. Give us the names of lawyers clerks who acted in the election.—I do not remember at all.

1966. Do not you remember one who deserted to the other side, a Mr. Boys, who was convicted in the House of Commons in 1866 of having bribed on the other side ?—I know him very well.

1967. Is he not a clerk of Messrs. Reed and Cook's now ?—Yes.

1968. And was he not on that election taking a part ?—Yes.

1969. And did he not take a bribe for a voter on that election on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No, if he had come and asked me for a bribe for a voter I should not have taken notice of him, knowing he was a Conservative.

1970. Did not Foster take a part ?—He has been dead five or six years.

1971. Now, do you know of any further lawyers clerks ?—None at all. I believe the majority of lawyers clerks are Liberal lawyers clerks, and they voted Conservative.

1972. It is not what they voted, but do you remember any clerks of Mr. Bate taking an active part in the election ?—Never.

1973. I have not the names here, but you have heard them mentioned ?—Yes.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

1974. Did they take any active part?—Yes.

1975. Not in the last election?—No.

1976. Now, I want to know, how came those persons whom you represent to have been on your premises, or near your premises, and against whose names you have put crosses, how came they to be there where you saw them the day before the nomination day, or the day before the polling day, which was it?—I have not said so.

1977. You remember the words you said to them were these, "You had better be here to-morrow"?—Oh, that might be all over the town.

1978. Now I will read to you the note I have upon it. "The crosses I have mentioned are against the "names of persons who were present, and who had "taken bribes in 1866. I had told them, 'You had "'better be here to-morrow,'" and I asked you what you meant by "here," and you said "My house or thereabouts," and you gave the names, and one of the names was Bryant. They were not persons whose names were crossed, but they were persons whom you saw near your house that night, or that day, and your words were, "You had better be here to-"morrow"?—Yes.

1979. Who brought them there then so that you could say to them those words, "You had better be "here to-morrow"?—It was the usual place where people stand about in electioneering times.

1980. Your house is?—No, about the bridge and the neighbourhood.

1981. But the old town is about that neighbourhood?—No, it is not.

1982. The "Golden Anchor" is?—Not the "Golden Anchor."

1983. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your house is near to the bridge?—My house is near to the bridge.

1984. (Mr. Anstey.) Is your house near the "Golden Anchor"?—No, it is not.

1985. Now, another thing; have you not made a mistake as to the Christian names of the person who was to take part as in former elections, that is to say of a person of the name of White?—No, I have not.

1986. You said the name was Joseph White, is there not a Joseph White in the leather trade?—Yes, that is the man.

1987. That is the man you mean?—Yes, in the High Street.

1988. In the High Street?—Yes.

1989. I only want to be clear upon that. Now you heard the names of these petitioners, the petitioners of 1866, praying for a suspension of the writ?—Yes, I have.

1990. It was read several times yesterday?—Yes.

1991. Have you not given us to-day, amongst the persons whose names you have identified on the register as being bribable persons, or persons who would bribe,—have you not given us the names of some of the persons who also figure at the foot of this Puritan petition?—I believe I have.

1992. For instance, Baker, is he one? I think not.—No.

1993. Billing is not. Then there is Carver. Then here is one I certainly know, Clavey?—Yes.

1994. Then there are one or two more, however, I will not trouble you with them now; have you any idea from what quarter Messrs. Reed and Cook obtained that money, or the man who was with them?—I do not.

1995. Well I do not say have you any information, but you are a man who was entrusted in times past, and from your knowledge of the machinery of the party, cannot you form a very shrewd suspicion as to whether it came out of the hands of Messrs. Sealy & Prior, or out of the hands of any other banker before it got into that person's hands?—I do not, I should fancy it would be a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl's.

1996. What friend do you suppose; Mr. Fennelly?—I do not know.

1997. Or Mr. Lomas?—I do not know.

1998. Cannot you give us any idea?—No.

1999. What we want is to trace this money as much as possible; if you can give the names of these persons it will render us an immense service.—I can give the names of the parties who know the parties whom they had the money from. I cannot give any other information than that, because I am as ignorant of the matter as you.

2000. (Mr. Price.) But cannot you give us the names of any persons whom we can call before us?—I have done so. I have given you the names of two—Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook.

2001. You say Mr. Reed, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Lovibond?—No, it was the first interview at which Mr. Lovibond was present.

2002. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Reed was a party to it?—Yes.

2003. The name of anybody not a party to it is what I want?—I cannot give it.

2004. Was Mr. George Lovibond, the son of Mr. Henry Lovibond, present at any meeting this day at the "Globe"?—I cannot say.

2005. Had you any communication, direct or indirect, with him during the election?—I never did.

2006. Was it by arrangement between you and the lawyers, that is, between you and the persons who conducted the election, that you were to avoid as much as possible intercourse with them until the day of the election?—No, there were no such arrangements.

2007. There was a tacit understanding I suppose?—No.

2008. But you had made up your mind to do it?—I had.

2009. Why?—Because there was a former inquiry, and they made an attempt to implicate me in it.

2010. Not unsuccessfully, did they?—Yes.

2011. Not unsuccessfully?—Yes, unsuccessfully.

2012. Did not you refer to the election of 1865?—Yes.

2013. Do not you recollect how that election petition turned out?—Why, the member was declared duly elected.

2014. Yes he was, but do not you remember it failed only on the question of agency?—Well, if Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had allowed me to go into the box when I wanted to do so, in the House of Commons, I could always have disproved that, and plenty of other witnesses as well; it was all false that was sworn.

2015. Never mind that, the reason why you avoided all intercourse with all persons on the day of that election was on account of that enquiry?—Yes, it was on account of that enquiry.

2016. So that you might be on your guard on account of that enquiry?—Yes.

2017. So you anticipated a new enquiry with regard to that election?—No, I did not. I thought they had had enough of it; both parties had to pay the costs.

2018. Having this distrust or suspicion towards the lawyers, what made you have any communication at all, either before the nomination day or on the nomination day, or after the nomination day, with them?—I did not. It was made promiscuously—meeting one another.

2019. You went to Mr. Reed's?—No, I did not.

2020. You never went to Mr. Reed's at all?—I did not.

2021. All that you have sworn as to him is untrue?—I went over to the "Globe" Hotel.

2022. You not only went over to the "Globe" Hotel, but you made use of him to get money?—Oh, yes.

2023. Not having trusted him before, what made you trust him then?—Because it came to the last minute.

2024. You would not have trusted him then if you had not been compelled in order to get the money; you would have preferred to have got the money from some other of your friends?—I should.

2025. You had not much confidence either in Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook?—I thought it was better not to get it from the lawyers.

2026. Is it not the fact as to the last, and you may say also as to former elections if you like, but as to the last election, is it not the fact that the borough was worked by the lawyers, and the lawyers only?—It is.

2027. Is it not within your knowledge that they divide, either directly or indirectly pecuniary emoluments for the enormous influence which they appear to exercise over elections?—I do not know.

2028. You do not know one way or the other?—No.

2029. Can you give us the names of those who conducted the election, or rather who controlled the contest on the other side—I mean of those lawyers?—Some of them I can.

2030. Give us the names?—Mr. Boyle first.

2031. Of the firm of Smith and Boyle?—Yes. The next is Mr. William Brice, who took an active part on both sides.

2032. When was he last on the side of the Liberals?—I believe it was in 1865—I believe it was—1857, I mean to say in 1857—1857 or 1859 was the election that Mr. Brice took an active part in on the Liberal side. Since then he has gone on the other side.

2033. Now he has changed over?—Now he has swopped over.

2034. Then Mr. Boyle?—Yes.

2035. Mr. Boys, not Mr. Boyle?—Mr. Boyle; there is no lawyer of the name of Boys.

3036. It is in the blue book. Mr. Boys was formerly the managing clerk of an attorney, and now he is the managing clerk of Messrs. Reed and Cook?—Yes.

2037. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Boys is a clerk?—Yes.

2038. And there is an attorney also of the name of Boyle?—Yes.

2039. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Boys was the person who went over?—Yes.

2040. Mr. Boys went over. Having been a Tory in 1865, in 1868 he appears in the character of an agent on the Liberal side?—I never saw him taking an active part.

2041. (Mr. Price.) What did you say Mr. Boyle had done?—Mr. Boyle was one of the lawyers.

2042. On which side?—On the Conservative side.

2043. And he acted on the Liberal side?—No.

2044. (Mr. Anstey.) I am quite right. The firm of Smith and Boyle were amongst those who controlled the contest on behalf of the Tories at the last election?—Yes.

2045. Now go on?—The next was Mr. Brice, who took an active part on both sides; Mr. Ruddock—

2046. Alderman Ruddock?—Yes; George Hemming Pain, and a person on the Conservative side of the name of Lilly.

2047. He is an auctioneer?—Yes.

2048. He has been examined several times on previous elections?—I believe he has, or at least only one.

2049. At least before Mr. Justice Blackburn on the election of 1866. Mr. Poole took no part in it?—No, he never did to my knowledge.

2050. Then the Trevors?—The two brothers, John and James.

2051. When to your knowledge did the brothers cease to be called Trevor and Son, and called Trevor Brothers; in what year?—I should think it was over 25 years ago.

2052. Before you can recollect?—Yes, before I can recollect anything about it.

2053. Then the two brothers took an active part in the election?—Yes.

2054. Anybody else?—Not as lawyers.

2055. Mr. Veysey?—Yes. I do not call him a lawyer.

2056. I am not asking you as to his professional qualifications.—No, I do not think he took a very active part in the last election, because I do not think they trusted him.

2057. Never mind what you think, but did or did not he take an active part in the election?—He was about using his influence.

2058. That is another thing?—That is about all the lawyers, or at least I fancy so, unless you can bring any other to my memory.

2059. But, as a matter of fact, what your lawyers did on your side theirs did on their side, and the contest was between these two lots of lawyers represented by the respective sets of candidates?—I believe so.

2060. Was there any committee of any kind,—you of course are a practical man, and understand what I mean by that,—was there any committee appointed to manage the committees on behalf of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl from first to last during the last election?—No.

2061. Was there any committee appointed at any time to manage the election on the part of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray from first to last during the election?—I cannot say.

2062. But all that you saw was the lawyers going about?—Yes.

2063. And then Lilley, who is a half lawyer, being a land agent?—Yes.

2064. (Mr. Price.) Are the lawyers the committee then really?—Well, I believe they are. What they say is law.

2065. Answer my next question; are they what is called or are they not what is called the Bridge Committee of this borough? I am speaking of the borough lawyers?—No. It appears that is a club formed some years ago. It is not only the lawyers, but the Conservative party together, and I think they generally have a dinner some time in May.

2067. Are the lawyers, the borough lawyers, members of the Bridge Committee?—I cannot tell you, but I believe they are. They go to the dinner, and they have a jovial feast.

2069. Am I to understand you to say that the Bridge Committee is a very numerous body?—I suppose the lawyers will tell you the number; about 40 or 50, they generally say, sit down.

2070. Are they members or not?—It is only a dinner party.

2071. How many are on the committee managing it?—I do not know, I really cannot tell you that.

2072. You cannot tell me that?—No.

2073. Can you give me the name of any person who can, who is not a lawyer?—There is no doubt Mr. Trueman there (pointing) is one of the party.

2074. What is his Christian name?—John Trueman.

2075. What is he?—A fishmonger.

2076. Is he one of the committee?—I think I have seen his name at the dinner.

2077. (Mr. Coleridge.) I want to ask two or three questions of you. You gave us the names of the people with whom you dealt at the last election?—Yes.

2078. Have you not omitted one?—Not one.

2079. Was there not a man called George Bond, a shoemaker?—George Bond, a shoemaker, take a bribe!

2080. Yes?—Not very likely.

2081. But was he not at your house; that is what I mean?—Not to my knowledge.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

2082. When Mr. Crocker was there, was that about the time you were there?—Yes, that was about half-past one.

2083. Did you see a person of the name of George Bond, a shoemaker, there?—I did.

2084. And you have given us the name of Pearce?—Yes.

2085. And Pearce the same? Was that the time you fixed at which you say George Bond was there; at the time you went out about to get the money?—It was so sharp I had not time to look round the room.

2086. But did you give George Bond any money?—No, he is a respectable person.

2087. Now was the last election the first time at which you received money, as I say, direct from the lawyers?—It was.

2088. I do not want to go into the other elections at present, but that is the first time you received money actually, as I may say, in the presence of the lawyers?—Yes.

2089. Now you have told us just now there are only five lawyers on your side altogether?—That is it.

2090. Do you mean those are the only lawyers out of the 18?—There is the town clerk, but he takes no active part.

2091. You have given us Boyle, Ruddock, Pain, Barham, and Vesey. There are some of these lawyers you have not mentioned as being on the one side or the other. Benjamin Allan for instance?—He is a Conservative.

2092. Charles Robert Bate?—He is a conveyancer.

2093. Still he is a lawyer, is he not?—I have never known the present Mr. Bate take anything.

2094. Then there is Gabriel Stone Poole, do you know that he took any part?—You asked me just now if the lawyers took anything, and I said no.

2095. I understand neither of them took any part?—No.

2096. I understand you to say you imagine the money came from Mr. Vanderbyl on the last election?—Yes.

2097. I want to know why you take Mr. Vanderbyl in preference to Mr. Kinglake?—Because it was in his house.

2098. As I understand you, it was a joint canvass between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

2099. And they never asked for a plumper, or anything of the sort, but a split vote?—I believe so.

2100. And you have no reason for supposing that it came from Mr. Vanderbyl, except from the money being in Mr. Vanderbyl's house. You have no reason to know anything about it except that?—No.

2101. And it is only from the fact of its being in Mr. Vanderbyl's house that you assume the money came from him?—Yes.

2102. Now you told us you went away to Hull.—Oh, to plenty of places.

2103. Where did you go first?—To Guernsey.

2104. Had you any conversation with anybody before you went to Guernsey?—No, I was very anxious to get away.

2105. You left this on the 30th December?—Yes.

2106. Before that, between the election and the 30th December, had you any consultation or any conversation with anybody on the subject of your going away?—Yes.

2107. Who with?—John Smith the grocer. I had a conversation with him on the matter, and I said I should go.

2108. What did he say?—He said he thought it was a very good plan too.

2109. How long after that was it that you went?—A day or two.

2110. Was he the first person to whom you mentioned your going away?—Yes.

2111. Had you been served with a Speaker's warrant then?—No, they had not power then to issue a Speaker's warrant.

2112. Had anybody been to you to see what they could get out of you?—No, it was no good.

2113. Had you seen anybody about endeavouring to see if they could fix anything upon you?—There was John Smith.

2114. That was the day of the election. I want to know what took place subsequently.—Yes, there were five or six men who went up to London, and they went up because the petition was not filed.

2115. Who were they?—The man named Hook, whom I mentioned just now.

2116. And who else?—Frederick Harden, I believe.

2117. Who else?—Henry Clement Heard I think.

2118. All on the Conservative side?—And two others; and then they came back.

2119. Beyond the fact of their going to London, did you know what they had been to London about?—Oh, they came back, and they came with a mob to my house, and I thought they were going to break everything in; they halloed and hooted, and called me everything.

2120. How many were there?—200 or 300; and they followed me down to the station, and if I had been the biggest scoundrel on the face of the earth, they could not have served me worse.

2121. When they came to your house what did they do?—They halloed and they hissed, and called me everything they could lay their tongues to.

2122. What did they call you?—They called me a briber; and I suppose that amongst the lot there was not one who would not take a bribe.

2123. (Mr. Price.) Which do you look upon as the worst, the man who bribes or the man who gives the bribe?—You want a man of some little respectability to give the money to. You cannot trust a man who would take a bribe with the money, because he would be likely to take the money.

2124. (Mr. Coleridge.) If there were to be no bribers there could be no bribees?—No, it is the gentleman who brings the money who is the worst. If they did not bring the money I could not give it away.

2125. When this mob came to your house, did you keep in your house?—Yes.

2126. Did you shut the door?—No; I was afraid to shut the door. I thought it was better to stand away from it, with a poker, to defend myself if they came in.

2127. To defend your castle?—Yes; and I thought it was better for me to be off.

2128. When was this, in December?—Up to very near to the day of filing the petition. That will give you a pretty near idea when it was.

2129. How long afterwards was it that you went to Guernsey?—A few days.

2130. That was through the terrorism of the Conservative party?—Yes, I know that.

2131. Do you mean to say you went to Guernsey because you were frightened for your own safety, or because you thought the petition would be going on?—No, for my own safety.

2132. Have you a wife?—Yes.

2133. And a family?—Yes.

2134. Did you leave them at home?—Yes.

2135. You were not afraid for their safety?—No, not a bit of it.

2136. You mean to tell us that you went away, not because you did not wish to be called on the petition, but because you were afraid of personal violence on the part of the Conservatives?—And being called on the petition as well.

2137. If you had not been afraid of being called on the petition, you would not have gone through being afraid of this mob?—I do not know. This Mr. Joseph Richard Smith is rather a vindictive character, and I did not know but what he might have me taken up; and I did not know what they might do.

2138. If this petition had been withdrawn, should you have gone away?—Yes, I went away because I thought they would take steps against me.

2139. You went away because the petition was on, and not on account of the mob?—Yes.

2140. If this petition had been withdrawn, would you have gone away; would you have been afraid of the mob?—No, because I should have retaliated.

2141. I understand you came back after the petition was over?—I came back on the Sunday. The petition was over on the Friday.

2142. Were the mob aggressive?—No, I did not show myself.

2143. Did you go away again?—Yes.

2144. When?—On the Monday.

2145. Where did you go?—To London.

2146. How long did you stay away then?—Three weeks.

2147. What made you go away?—Because I thought the Conservative party would be a little riled, and I went away till the Assize was over.

2148. (Mr. Price.) You thought the Conservative party would be riled?—Yes, because they would have to pay the costs.

2149. (Mr. Coleridge.) You went away to avoid being served with a subpœna?—Yes, I did.

2150. And you came back a second time, and you went away again because you found the whole thing was not over, and you went away till the Assizes were over?—Yes.

2151. And when you came back, you were in terror of the mob?—No, I was not. When I knew there was a Commission, I knew they could not take any steps against me, because I should have to come here and state all I knew about it.

2152. When did you come back?—The very day the House was asked to grant a Commission.

2153. (Mr. Anstey.) That was before the Assizes?—After the assizes.

2154. (Mr. Coleridge.) After the Assizes at Taunton?—Yes, after the Spring Assizes.

2155. Then you had no terror of the Summer Assizes?—Not a bit, because we have this inquiry now.

2156. If you had been indicted at the Summer Assizes, this inquiry would not have helped you?—I know that very well, because I should have had to come here to suffer, and tell the truth.

2157. The real truth is, you did not wish to be called on the petition, or put into the dock at the Assizes?—No.

2158. And the mob had very little to do with it?—No, it did not. There was no hurry for my going away, because there was no chance of the matter coming on for some time.

2159. You could have been subpœnaed?—No, I could not, not until the trial was fixed.

2160. When did the trial take place?—In March, I think.

2161. Did anybody assist you with money to go away at this time, to spend all this idle time, and to spend money too?—The night before I went away, Mr. John Smith gave me 15*l.*

2162. The grocer?—Yes.

2163. Do you know where he got it from?—No.

2164. Have you got any money from lawyers?—No.

2165. Have you sent in any bill to them?—No, what good is it?

2166. You mean you would not be likely to get it paid?—No, I think it has cost me 15*l.* 10*s.* for travelling expenses. I do not know who to go to.

2167. Either to Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake?—No, and I ought to have asked them for it.

2168. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say the whole of your expenses of going away was 15*l.*, which was given you by Mr. Smith?—Yes.

2169. And he was the only person, as I understand you, whom you consulted about going away?—Yes, when I came back I had the second 15*l.* from Mr. Smith.

2170. That was the Assize job you got that for?—Yes.

2171. When you came back after the Assizes, did you get anything more?—No.

2172. What is Mr. Smith?—A grocer.

2173. Did you suppose that the 15*l.* came out of his own pocket, without his having a chance of its being returned to him?—No.

2174. Have you any notion who is going to return it to him?—No, I do not. I wanted to know, but he would not tell me.

2175. But he told you it was from someone?—Yes, he said, "Here is the money."

2176. You did not know it was his own money?—No, I did not.

2177. You did not say to him, "I do not like to take this money out of your pocket"?—No, I expected it came from some one else.

2178. Whom did you suppose it came from, the lawyers?—My own impression was that it came from the lawyers.

2179. (Mr. Price.) Reed and Cook, and Lovibond?—I should not like to say, because I should not like to say what is not true here.

2180. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said in answer I think to a question from me, I think it was after you had been marking the register, "Did you ask "either Crocker or Palmer, and have you marked "them on the register?" your answer was, "No, "because I do not think I could do anything with "them."—No, because you had it down already.

2181. Your answer was, "I do not think I could do anything with them."—It was a mistake of mine.

2182. Did you expect Crocker would vote for you?—Yes.

2183. Did you expect Palmer would?—No, I did not know who he would vote for; I had no communication with the man until the time I gave him the money.

2184. What made you think Palmer was a doubtful character altogether, more than those other 17 whom you paid?—Palmer having been at work only occasionally for me, I did not know anything of him.

2185. He was a new voter, and you knew nothing about him?—Yes.

2186. Did you know anything of his master?—I did not.

2187. At that time, who was he working for?—I did not know at the time, but I found out afterwards he was working for Mr. Searle.

2188. You said you knew his master, and he came from his master to do a job here and there. Who was he working for in that way?—Mr. Gough.

2189. At the time of the election he was working for Mr. Searle, who was a Liberal?—Oh, I did not know that.

2190. Did not he tell you?—No, I did not ask him.

2191. Did Palmer, a year before the election, use your house?—No, he did not.

2192. Had you spoken to him a year before the election?—No, he was a man I never did speak to. Some years ago, when he worked on board the vessel, I might have told him to do certain work.

2193. What, had you any suspicion he was going to plant upon you?—I had none; I would not have given him the money if I had.

2194. You made use of the expression "I did not "expect to get Palmer, and therefore I have not "marked him on my list"?—That is a mistake of mine.

2195. When you gave him that money did you believe that he would vote true as any other man?—Yes.

2196. You took the precaution to get him to go to the poll with Captain Richards, did you take the same precaution with the other 16?—No, except where I had a doubt about him.

2197. What made you doubt about Palmer?—Because he was a fresh man.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

2198. Out of that 17 you said 14 were fresh men ?—Yes.

2199. Did you say seven of that 14 were doubtful ?—No.

2200. You have told us Palmer was a fresh man ?—I did not doubt his word at all. I said, "If you like to split, and say you have had the money—"

2201. That is not the question. You said the reason you doubted Palmer was because he was a fresh man. You say out of 17 men you paid 14 voters ?—Yes.

2202. You say you doubted Palmer because he was a fresh man ?—I did not doubt him.

2203. How was it you let him go to the poll with Captain Richards, whereas you let the others go by themselves ?—He was a stranger to me.

2204. You have given the reason, because he was a new voter. That was the reason you got Captain Richards to take him to the poll. I say, why did you not take the same precaution with the whole 14 ?—If you have understood me so, that is my mistake.

2205. That is what I have understood you.—I have said, when I paid Clavey, I went out to the door to look for somebody to go to the poll with him, and I fancy I called somebody to go with this man to the poll, and Captain Richards was going by and he said "I will go with him."

2206. Do not imagine I am trying to trip you up. I only want to know why you seem to have taken more precautions with Palmer in sending him to the poll than with the other 14 voters you had paid money to ?—Because he was a stranger.

2207. But he had been working for you ?—That was many years ago.

2208. Do you say the others were better known to you than Palmer ?—All but one.

2209. Who was that ?—A man of the name of Kitch.

2210. Did you send somebody with him to the poll ?—I believe he went away to the poll with somebody he had with him.

2211. It is no use to send anybody but a trusted party ?—In electioneering matters, if you see a man outside to whom you have paid money, and you know he is right, you would intrust him with money again.

2212. Did you send anybody with any of the voters to whom you paid money except this man ?—I believe not. I wanted Crocker to go with him, and he said he would go, because I thought he was right.

2213. And all the reason you give is, because he was a stranger, a new voter ?—Yes.

2214. And you say the same applies to Kitch ?—Yes. Somebody came with Kitch ; I do not know who he was.

2215. All the others, except three, were new voters ?—Yes.

2216. (Mr. Anstey.) Of those new voters, 14 I think you say, were there any, to your knowledge, besides Crocker and Palmer, who had down to that time been reputed to be supporters of Conservative interests ?—No.

2217. Did that influence you in any way in asking somebody to go with Crocker and Palmer to the poll, they being the only two persons known to you to be Conservatives ?—If I had known they had belonged to the Conservative Club I would not have given them the money. I would not have trusted them.

2218. Then that did not influence you ?—No, it did not.

2220. Is it always usual in other elections to have a stranger in the same way ?—No. I never knew there to be a stranger before.

2221. Did you ever know anybody from the office of Baxter, Rose, and Norton being down at this place at the last election, the solicitors for the Carlton ?—No. I have heard they have at former elections.

2222. But have you heard of Baxter, Rose, and Norton at this last election ?—No.

2223. And have you heard the name of the stranger? No.

2224. And you had very few words with the stranger. Just tell me this, I hear you are a Somersetshire man, could you tell by his accent whether he was a Londoner ?—All he said was "How're ye getting on." That is all that took place between us.

2225. Could you tell whether he was a Somersetshire person ?—No; I should think he was a person in the neighbourhood of London.

2226. You should not think he was a person in the neighbourhood of Somersetshire ?—No, I do not think he was.

2227. You thought he was a person from London ? I think he was.

2228. You have told my friend here you made a point of never going into the street while they were canvassing, why did you make that a point ?—The reason I made that promise was, that when I went up to London they went about the town and swore I went about canvassing, when I had not.

2229. I understood you to say the agents did not come to your house, but you went to them ?—No. They have never come there.

2230. Nor at other times ?—No.

2231. You say it was arranged that they should not come to your house; where were you to meet them if they were not to go there ? Take a week before the election, when you were thinking about money, and all that sort of thing ? We do not begin so soon as that, only on the day of the nomination.

2232. Do you mean to say the day of the nomination is the first time ?—We do not talk about it till then.

2233. Do not you know whether the contest is going to be fought, some time before, either with or without money ?—No. I never knew until the day of the nomination whether money was going to be spent in my life.

2234. Until the day of the nomination you never took any part in it ?—No.

2235. On that occasion you met Mr. Reed ?—I was going one way and he the other. We met in the street. I think we met at the telegraph office.

2236. Then in a casual way he told you you would have to deal with money ?—Yes.

2237. On former occasions you have had to deal with Mr. Reed ?—No, never.

2238. Or his firm ?—No.

2239. Never ?—Never. I never had anything to do with him.

2240. On former occasions, when he told you there would be money, you took it for gospel, and believed it ?—I never heard him say so.

2241. When he said there was money you went away and said nothing more about it ?—I believed it was all right.

2242. And you never went to any other office ?—I went to other offices, like a cat watching a mouse.

2243. Exactly. You carry on the business of a professed briber in this place. You did not mix up yourself with the lawyers in this place ?—I did not say I was a professed briber.

2244. I mean as a professed briber, knowing the practices going on, and knowing you would be one of the most active people engaged in that branch, you thought it was better you should not be seen going to other offices ?—Yes.

2245. And you purposely abstained from going to other offices ?—Yes.

2246. (Mr. Price.) Tell me about the number of persons employed to bribe; you have mentioned Andrew Allan ; have you heard, since you were employed to bribe, of a man named Garrett ?—Yes, now you bring his name to my recollection.

2247. Anybody else ?—No.

2248. I take it for granted that it was for Mr. Vanderbyl that employment was ?—Well, Kinglake was my man. I did not care who sank so long as he swam.

2249. (Mr. Price.) Kinglake was your favourite ?—Yes.

2250. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you went to Mr. Vanderbyl's own house, that was what you called it, the Globe, and Mr. Kinglake, you say, you saw nothing of ?—No.

2251. Then were you employed by Reed and Cooke, or either of them, or any one of these whatever, your own wishes were to bribe for Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No, I was not ; there was neither Vanderbyl's nor Kinglake's name mentioned, because they knew if I got anybody to vote it would be for them, and nobody else.

2252. Then why did you not go to Allen's house, which you knew was where Vanderbyl put up ?—For the reason that until half-past three no money was expended, and it took me rather at a nonplus, and I did not know where to go else.

2253. But you went to the Globe ?—That is where it was, I did not want to go to Allan's, because I went to the Globe. I went to the Globe at 11 in the morning.

2254. Why did you not go at 11 to Andrew Allan's, or to the Railway Hotel to see Mr. Kinglake ?—The Globe was the principal committee-room.

2255. Of Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Of both.

2256. Why did you say it was Mr. Vanderbyl's own house ?—Mr. Vanderbyl stopped there ; Mr. Kinglake went in there sometime to see Mr. Vanderbyl ; it is an hotel.

2257. Then do I understand you to say that you were employed to bribe both for Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—I bribed for both ; nobody told me it should be Kinglake or Vanderbyl, but I did for both, and never gave the money unless I knew he was going to vote for the two.

2258. Do you know who employed Allan ?—No.

2259. And who employed Garrett ?—I do not know.

2260. Is it not a fact that each of the three attornies you speak of took a division of Bridgwater, Mr. Barham one, Messrs. Reed and Cook another, and Mr. Lovibond a third ?—They took three districts ; it would be for their clerks.

2261. Did they do it ?—I cannot say.

2262. Do not you know there was a dispute among them, and it was agreed that equality should be made ?—There was a report of it, but I did not hear more than other people say so.

2263. Did you know of these divisions ?—There was a report of it.

2264. Of those divisions ?—Yes, I believe they divided it for the canvass.

2265. Mr. Reed had that by the Globe ?—He had the eastern division.

2266. Is that the Globe division ?—Yes.

2267. Which did Mr. Barham have ?—I do not know.

2268. The working men, was not it ?—The working men are all over the town.

2269. Eastover ?—No, that was the district Reed and Cook had.

2270. And Mr. Lovibond ?—I do not know, but I understood they went and canvassed all together unitedly all round the districts, and when one was not able to call the other did ; but they had three committee-rooms, one was where I told you this morning, the Rose and Crown, that was for the purpose of having the list as they struck off the names of those they polled, and in the north district, and the principal committee-room was at the Globe.

2271. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Garrett present at what you call the consultation at the Globe ?—He was not ; I never saw him for the day.

2272. Did you see him on the nomination day ?—Very likely.

2273. Was he a man who worked in the same way as you on former elections ?—No, I never saw him before ; he was a young man.

2274. Then you did not know of his having one of the divisions ?—No.

2275. Kinglake being your man, supposing it came to a hard push, and any of the "Lambs" you had saying that they would split between Kinglake and the Conservative, would you have given him anything ?—Not a penny if they had not voted for both.

2276. You would not have let Kinglake swim and all sink, you would thorough for the two Liberals ?—To be sure.

2277. And every voter you had an understanding with was that they should vote for both ?—Yes, it was ; I would not give a penny to any man if he did not vote for both.

2278. Therefore you said to Palmer, if you are to split, I shall have to tell all about it ?—I did.

2279. Why did you say that if you thought he was a good man and true ?—I did not know.

2280. It was a curious thing to say ?—Well, he was a stranger to me.

2281. By "split" do you mean tell about being bribed ?—Yes.

2282. What made you suspect ?—He was the first man I paid, and I gave him the caution to begin with which I intended to give to all, but I did not. I gave him the caution because he was the first man I paid money to.

2283. (Mr. Price.) You have told us with regard to the last election all you recollect ?—As far as our own party is concerned ; but there was as active workers on the other side as ours.

2284. We want what you know of the other side. Confine your attention to the last election first before you go into what the other side did. Have you told us all to the best of your recollection everything that took place, to the best of your knowledge, on your own side ?—I believe I have ; I would not withhold anything. I have come here to speak the truth.

2285. I do it as a matter of caution and protection to you, that you should have an opportunity of making the freest and fullest disclosures to us which will entitle you to receive an indemnity at our hands, and if you have omitted to tell us anything from want of memory you shall have an opportunity of coming up again ?—I will come up again, and will not withhold anything.

2286. At present you have told us all in your knowledge with regard to your own party with regard to the last election ?—Yes.

2287. (Mr. Anstey.) Has anything occurred to you we have not asked you about which you would like to tell ?—Well, I have been some time at it now, and I can hardly say what I have said, but if asked the same questions I should tell the same story over again.

2288. (Mr. Price.) You will have an opportunity of reading your evidence before the inquiry closes, and if anything is not disclosed and you wish to do so, you will have the fullest opportunity. Now tell us anything you like to give us information about of what the other side did ?—I will tell you what I did, I forgot that. At 11 o'clock I went on to the bridge when I came down from the "Globe," and there was a lot of men there, and one man, James Redwood.

2289. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he a voter ?—Yes.

2290. (Mr. Price.) Where does he live ?—Crystal Road.

2291. (Mr. Anstey.) What is he ?—A sailor. I did not know his surname then. They had a nickname for him which I forget, which I called him by, and I said "Are you going to poll ?" And he said he would be damned if he would until he was paid. And I said "You are not going to poll." He says he would not by all that was good and great until he was paid. Now that man went to the poll within half-an-hour afterwards, and he had not any inducement, mind, made him to poll. He went to poll for the Conservatives.

2292. Was he a new voter ?—Yes. There were two men, Rogers, father and son, sailors too, in common conversation all along. I asked him for their vote, having to do with them, and they told me they should go for Mr. Most; they did not care who it was.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

2293. Who is Mr. Most?—Why the most money. They went to poll before half past 11 o'clock.

2294. He said he wanted to vote for "Mr. Most"?—I went to the father and son afterwards. I think Robert Rogers was one.

2295. What is he?—A sailor.

2296. And his son?—Yes; I had several conversations with him, perhaps five or six times, asking and trying to persuade him to vote on our side. He would never say he would not vote, but all I could get out of him was, he would not unless he got something. Now they went about half past 11 o'clock, and what made them vote for the Conservatives?

2297. What name and address is it?—Robert Rogers; he lives in Barclay Street. I do not know the name of the son.

2298. (Mr. Anstey.) Are they new voters?—Yes.

2299. (Mr. Price.) You say they went to vote at half-past 11?—Before half-past 11.

2300. (Mr. Anstey.) How do you know?—Because I saw them come back after they went, and they said they had been and polled already.

2301. After you had spoken to them in the first instance?—I did not speak to them on the day of the poll, but some days before, and on the day of the nomination I spoke to them, but I do not think on the day of the poll until after the poll.

2302. And it was some days before the poll they said they would vote for Mr. Most?—Yes.

2303. And then you asked them on the day of polling?—Yes.

2304. And they said they had polled?—Yes.

2305. (Mr. Anstey.) With regard to that expression "Mr. Most," is not it the fact that that term was a well known term at previous elections in Bridgwater, and was not the answer made to Sir John Shelley "I shall "vote for Mr. Most"?—I believe it was Sir John Shelley who has stated it, if I recollect rightly, in the House of Commons.

2306. You are right; his evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons in 1866.—He came down to fight the election on pure principles, and that is what we ought always to have done if it had not been for the Tories.

2307. He said that answer was made most frequently to him in the course of his canvass?—Yes, and we should always have had it so if it had not been for the Tories. I will give you some of the people now who took an active part on the Conservative side; there is John Vesey to begin with, and Frederick Temblett.

2308. Who is John Veysey?—The lawyer. There is a man by the name of Jarvis; I think he is already subpœned.

2309. What is Jarvis?—A clerk in the iron works of Messrs. Hennett and Spinks. There is a foreman of the name of Dennis in the same employ. There is a man of the name of Jarman—I think his name is Frederick—a baker.

2310. What is the name of the man who bribes on the side of the Liberals; is it he?—I never knew a man named Jarman to pay money on the Liberal side. I know Henry Jarman, but I never knew that he gave a penny in his life.

2311. Are they brothers?—No.

2312. (Mr. Price.) There is a brother of your own?—He is on the opposite side.

2313. We are on the opposite side now. He is an active man now, is not he?—Yes.

2314. We will take him?—He is one. There is Wadden, junior, a very active man on the Conservative side in Church Street.

2315. (Mr. Anstey.) What is Dennis' Christian name?—I do not know, there are three here, George, Henry, or John; I know him if I see the man.

2316. Is he in Court now?—Some one says it is Henry; I do not know, and I do not see him here.

2317. (Mr. Coleridge.) What has become of John Cooze and Staples who were found guilty of bribery in 1866?—Cooze is dead, and I have not seen Staples here to-day. I do not know whether he is, he was here some time ago.

2318. Had he a vote on the last election?—No.

2319. What has become of Philip Gilbert?—He is here.

2320. And Frederick Jones?—He is expected here to-day.

2321. Where is he?—At sea.

2312. What has become of Newton?—I do not know where he is to be found; it would be a very good thing if he could be, because he could give you a good deal of information; it would be a good job if you could find him, because he could give you a good bit.

2323. But you cannot say more?—No, I do not know where he is or I would tell you pretty quick.

2324. Is your brother here?—He was just now.

2325. Have you always taken opposite politics?—Yes.

2326. Divided the business between you?—No, I never had anything to do with it of late years.

2327. You had not?—No. If they would only go on the way I persuaded them they would be all Liberals. Then there is Edwin Phillips and Frederick Harden.

2328. (Mr. Price.) Are these men who do the same sort of business as you?—Yes, exactly the same—they took an active part.

2329. In the bribery business?—I believe so. I cannot say what they have done. You ask me what the report is and I give it you.

2330. (Mr. Coleridge.) They seem to have had a shrewd suspicion of what you did?—They knew exactly. Then Thomas Collett; he made himself notorious by going about after the election and saying he had done a good bit at it; whether he did or not I do not know. It is for you to satisfy yourselves.

2331. What is his address?—Commercial Inn.

2332. He went about boasting of what he had done?—Yes, I heard it. I recollect being at Durston once.

2333. We are speaking of the last election?—He was here taking an active part at the last election. Then Henry Jones Truman, a fishmonger, Henry Hayward, William Henry Batten, he is a man in the carriage shed; then there is Chapman, I do not know his Christian name, Mr. Boyle's clerk, he has taken a very active part. Then there is Mr. Henry Frederick Harden, brother of Robert, he is a yeoman, and has been in the town taking a very active part in the election. He may be able to give you some information, and I think at the present time that is pretty nearly the lot.

2334. Is there anything else you wish to tell us with regard to what has been done on the other side. Do you know any instance of money having been paid in the way in which you say you yourself paid men to vote?—No, I know they had some man down here.

2335. A stranger?—Yes, they brought a stranger by the name of Charles Frederick Hankel, I think it is; he came up in the afternoon with flying colours in a cab riding through the town.

2336. Where does he live?—I do not know.

2337. Where does he come from?—He resided in the town.

2338. (Mr. Anstey.) What day was that?—He came in the day of the poll in the afternoon. I think he must have come by the express train, or whether he came later I do not know.

2339. By the express from London?—No, he lives in the neighbourhood. He is a cutter in some establishment in one of the neighbouring towns.

2340. What do you mean by a cutter?—In a tailor's shop.

2341. (Mr. Price.) At Taunton?—He was in one of the rifle corps. I saw him at a review here a few weeks ago.

2342. Who commanded at that review?—Colonel Bruce, I think.

2343. But who was at the head of the corps?—It belonged to the Somerset.

2344. Is that the one you were speaking of just now?—No, I rather fancy he must be down in the neighbourhood of Wellington.

2345. What part do you say he took on the polling day?—In the first place he was not entitled to be on the register, and he had a Liberal employer, and the task he undertook was that he should go to the Conservatives and say that he intended to support them if they would only allow him to remain on the register for the purpose of getting his name on.

2346. That was before the registration?—Yes.

2347. Was he on the register of voters?—Yes. Then he was to go to the Conservative meetings, and let us know what was done there.

2348. He was a spy employed by you?—He was not employed. He offered his services himself. I did not employ him.

2349. He was a spy then?—That is what he intended to do.

2350. How could we get at that man so as to get at the secrets of the camp?—He would be able to tell you what passed at the meetings. I will endeavour to find out; but he was in one of the corps at the review on the third of this month.

2351. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many corps were there?—I cannot say.

2352. (Mr. Price.) You cannot give us the Christian name?—Charles Frederick he said. He is a foreigner by birth.

2353. How does he get on the register?—He got on by being an occupier of a house.

2354. (Mr. Coleridge.) A 10*l.* householder?—I do not know whether he was, or whether he was a lower rate.

2355. (Mr. Price.) Was he an occupier at that time?—Not when he voted, because he had left the town because he was out of employment.

2356. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he a ratepayer?—He was out of position altogether. He was out of the town.

2357. (Mr. Price.) His vote would have been struck off on a scrutiny?—Yes.

2358. But his name was on the register?—Yes.

2359. Therefore he would have been prepared to vote?—Yes.

2360. And you could not have got it examined, and the clerk must have taken the vote?—Yes.

2361. What report did he make to your side?—He never brought a report to me.

2362. Who to then?—To Mr. John Smith.

2363. Then Mr. Smith can tell us the reports?—If there were any.

2364. On the polling day he came in here you say?—Yes, in a carriage. He drove through in a fly, and stood up waving his handkerchief, and bidding us defiance as he went along.

2365. Then he turned round?—Nobody went to look for him on our side.

2366. Can you tell us anything more that was done?—No.

2367. Do you know of any actual money passing?—I do not.

2368. Nor can you give us any idea of who paid money on the part of the Conservatives at all?—I cannot.

2369. Like this stranger?—I cannot.

2370. I will ask you again, if I have done so before, can you give me the least idea from what you have heard since the election of what it cost Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake in bribery?—I cannot give any idea.

2371. £1,000?—No, nor yet half.

2372. Your impression is that it was not 500*l.*?—No.

2373. Should you be astonished to hear that Allan paid away 500*l.*?—I should.

2374. Why?—Because I do not think if he began the same time as I did that there was that number of voters to pay.

2375. But it would depend on what was given. If 10 men got 50*l.* each that would do it?—Yes, but I only paid 10*l.*

2376. Would you be surprised to hear that 500*l.* was paid by Allan?—I should.

2377. Besides what Mr. Garrett paid?—Yes, I should.

2378. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the largest sum you have ever known given for a vote?—£40.

2379. When?—Mr. Vanderbyl's election.

2380. You do not recollect higher?—Yes, I have heard of other heavier sums on the opposite side.

2381. Do you recollect whether it was the election between Mr. Leader and Mr. Broadwood?—It was before my time.

2382. You have heard of that election?—Yes, but I do not know anything about it.

2383. But what was about the sort of tariff?—I will not say anything about what I do not know anything about.

2384. Now the next preceding election to the last, which was the second of the two in 1866, was not it?—Yes, Mr. Vanderbyl's election.

2385. Mr. Patton came down to be re-elected?—Yes.

2386. When did you first hear that there was to be a contest against Mr. Patton's re-election?—Sunday night, I believe, or Monday morning very early.

2387. How long before the election would that be?—I fancy the election was on Wednesday.

2388. Who told you there was going to be a contest?—I saw the addresses; a bill I saw come out first with "Vanderbyl."

2389. Nothing before that?—I knew the lawyers, it was reported, there was a rumour, that the lawyers had gone away to London to get a candidate.

2390. Who were the lawyers?—I believe it was Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham.

2391. Give us, as near as you can, the day and the month when you heard they had gone to London?—If you can give me the dates I can tell you.

2392. The election took place on the 12th of July 1866?—Is that Mr. Vanderbyl's election?

2393. Yes.—I do not vouch for the date of this myself.

2394. No, but how long before the 12th of July, the day of the election, did you hear that the lawyers had gone to London for a candidate?—On Saturday.

2395. They had gone on Saturday?—No. I heard on Saturday that the lawyers were away. I did not know what it was for.

2396. Had the party, as a party, the active men, been called together in that preceding week to consider the question of the contest or not?—No, I believe the lawyers went away on their own responsibility for this very reason, that it was an eternal disgrace to the borough that we lost Mr. Bagehot, and it was their fault, and they went away to get a candidate to retrieve that.

2397. To retrieve the eternal disgrace to the borough?—Yes.

2398. Then to retrieve that they brought down Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, the party were disgusted with it.

2399. With what?—That we had lost Mr. Bagehot.

2400. (Mr. Anstey.) Through the fault of the lawyers you say?—Yes.

2401. (Mr. Price.) When did the lawyers come back. Did you know or not, or ever hear that Mr. Kinglake had deprecated the idea of having any contest at all?—It would not be any good.

2402. Why?—Because I believe the Liberal party were so disgusted with the election before that if the lawyers had not brought a candidate they would have had one of their own here without them, and gone in independent.

2403. But you do not know that Mr. Kinglake had expressed disinclination?—No.

2404. Mr. Bagehot refused to come and contest it?—I do not know.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

2405. Had you heard that?—I heard it stated for the first time in my life yesterday, here; that was the first time I heard he had refused.

2406. And that Mr. Patton being so recently elected, he thought it would be an unhandsome thing to stand against him. You never heard of that?—No.

2407. Nor any of the party?—No.

2408. When you say the lawyers, do you mean Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Cook, and Mr. Barham?—I believe the common talk then was that it was Barham and Lovibond, I would not say Reed and Cook.

2409. When next did you have any communication with the party at all after hearing that on the Saturday?—On Sunday there was no news. On the Monday morning there was a slip out that Vanderbyl was coming.

2410. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the writ moved?—I rather fancy on Friday night, then the election would take place on the following Wednesday.

2411. The writ must have been issued the week before that, because eight days are required.—The election took place about five days afterwards; the election is over before eight days here, I do not know what they do in other places.

2412. (Mr. Price.) It must have been moved for on the Monday or Tuesday?—No, on the Friday or Thursday.

2413. Well, what took place on the Sunday?—Well, there was no news.

2414. Where did you go to try to learn any?—Well, you would naturally expect that sort of news to fly very fast.

2415. Then on Monday?—On Monday morning I got up about half-past 6. I was told that the printer was getting out some slips, that Vanderbyl was coming. I went over to see whether that was true, and there saw him; and I believe he was then prepared to get Mr. Vanderbyl's address out.

2416. What was the printer's name?—Wood.

2417. You saw the slips you say?—Yes, and that night he came down, and a pretty good reception he had.

2418. Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

2419. In the meantime the bills had been posted over the town?—Yes.

2420. Where was he met, at the station?—Yes, I believe so.

2421. Who organized the reception?—It is very little trouble for the Liberal party to organize a reception here; send out one or two to let them know.

2422. Should you for instance?—I told them and others told them, and there were the slips and address.

2423. Did you see any of the heads of the Liberal party?—Yes, I believe I saw Mr. Henry Lovibond when at Wood's with an address.

2424. (Mr. Anstey.) Young Mr. George Lovibond?—Yes; that is who I think I saw there with the addresses, I would not be positive; and he told me he was coming that night; and I believe there were some telegrams passed during the day that he was coming. It was generally known all over the town that he was coming, and news flies fast in election matters.

2425. Did you ever make enquiry as to who Mr. Vanderbyl was?—I knew.

2426. That he was the gentleman who stood for Yarmouth?—Yes.

2427. And the town knew that pretty well?—Yes, the Conservative party carried about red herrings hung upon a string.

2428. (Mr. Coleridge.) They carried about plenty of money too?—Yes.

2429. (Mr. Price.) He was known to be a rich man?—It was understood so.

2430. It was known that if the lawyers went up for any good purpose, it was to bring a rich man down?—Well, it was considered so.

2431. To beat Mr. Patton it would be necessary to bring down a rich man, if a stranger?—Not unless Mr. Patten spent money.

2432. Then it would be necessary that a rich man should be put against him?—Yes.

2434. On the poll as it then was?—Yes.

2435. (Mr. Price.) That is to say if no money was going?—If no money was going, if a pure election. Look at Mr. Kinglake and Colonel Tynte when Mr. Follet was turned away.

2436. You say Mr. Vanderbyl was known to be coming, and he had a reception at the station, and who came down with him?—I believe Mr. Brogden came.

2437. That is the gentleman who stood with him at Yarmouth?—Yes, I believe so.

2438. Who else?—I suppose the lawyers came; I cannot charge my memory. Mr. Barham very likely; you could not see them; the fact is there was a crush and you could not tell.

2439. Where did they go, to the Globe?—No, I think they went up in George Lane, in a place they had a committee-room at that time, and there were so many people they had to have them out on the Corn Hill, and had to have a break and put them in.

2440. That was the Monday?—Yes, I believe so.

2441. And the election was to be on Wednesday?—Yes.

2442. Did you have any communication with anybody on Monday night as to how matters were to go or be conducted?—No, I do not.

2443. Did you on Tuesday?—Yes.

2444. Who did you see?—I saw Andrew Allan, I believe.

2445. Where?—About the town.

2446. What passed?—He said there was plenty of money.

2447. Andrew Allan told you there was plenty of money?—Yes.

2448. Did you state anything to him?—Very likely.

2449. Tell us what?—Very likely I asked him whether there was any money to go.

2450. (Mr. Anstey.) Do not say very likely, but tell us what took place?—Very probably I said to Andrew Allan "Is there any money to go."

2451. (Mr. Price.) And he said "Yes, there is plenty"?—Yes.

2452. What did you do after that?—The nomination took place.

2453. Did you go and see nobody after Allan?—No.

2454. You did not go to any committee-room?—No, there was no committee-room.

2455. Where were the head-quarters of Mr. Vanderbyl?—I believe he stopped at the Globe then, but the principal committee-room was in this room.

2456. What did you do after seeing Mr. Allen,—you went about the town?—Yes.

2457. Did you see nobody that evening and arrange anything or discuss matters about the election business that evening?—Not more than those parties I have named; no, I think not, or parties connected with paying away the money.

2458. Did you go and see the same men whose names you have given us?—I do not think I gave all.

2459. Then let us have them?—John Smith the grocer, Andrew Allan, Thomas Hill, Charles Bulpin, H. C. White.

2460. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is he?—He is a retired tradesman. John Allway, Joseph White, William Gold, and Mr. Dyer the gardener.

2461. Those were all on the Liberal side?—Yes, I rather fancy so.

2462. (Mr. Price.) You saw those gentlemen?—Yes; and we decided on the course of action next morning.

2463. Tell us what course of action you decided?—Allan was to bring us some money that night.

2464. To your house?—No, he brought me some; I suppose he took the others to their houses. I believe Allan brought me 100*l*. I am not certain.

Most likely he will be able to give you the figures by-and-by. I have not anything to charge my memory about the money.

2465. He was to bring you the money at all events? Yes.

2466. And took it to the others ?—Yes, and took it to the others ; he brought us some.

2467. He gave you 100*l.* that night ?—Yes.

2468. (Mr. Coleridge.) In gold ?—Yes, I believe in gold.

2469. (Mr. Price.) Did he say anything about more would be had if more was wanted, or anything of that kind ?—He said there would be plenty.

2470. Having made this arrangement with him, was that all that took place that night ?—That night.

2471. Then the next day ?—Would be the polling day.

2472. What did you do on the polling day ?—The following morning I got up middling early and had a look round, and found that the voters were very scarce.

2473. Holding back ?—Yes, and I went with some of them, and they said they would not go to poll at all until they had their money. They were not going to be done the same to as they had been at the former election, and my answer to them at once was, to some of them, "What was that ?" "Why you had 10*l.* for me and only gave me 5*l.*"

2474. They said that to you ?—Yes. So my answer to them at once was, "I had a good deal of trouble to get that money for you. I never promised you anything at the former election. I had a good deal of trouble after the election to get that money for you, and now you twit me with robbing you of 5*l.*;" and that is the position you place yourself in from being a briber.

2475. That is what you said to them ?—No, I say so to you.

2476. You said to them you had a good deal of trouble about it ?—Yes.

2477. Had you got 10*l.* for them and given them only 5*l.* ?—No, I did nothing of the sort.

2478. What did you say to them when they accused you of this ?—I told them what little money I had I gave them. I never kept a single farthing from any man living. That is what I told them.

2479. Were those men whom you had bribed at the former election ?—Yes, there were 17 who were to have this 5*l.* a piece, and I had 70*l.* handed over to me to give to 17.

2480. They said they would not vote because you kept 5*l.* from them ?—Yes.

2481. How did you agree with them at last ?—I agreed to give the majority of them 10*l.*

2482. The majority of the 17 ?—No, all the 17 are not here. I have not the poll-sheet here. I do not think there was one that was not forthcoming on the former election.

2483. You said you would give them 10*l.* ?—Yes.

2484. Were they satisfied ?—Yes, and I paid them, and they went to poll.

2485. You paid them beforehand ?—Yes.

2486. There and then that morning ?—Yes, I did.

2487. And then they went to the poll ?—Yes.

2488. All of them ?—Yes.

2489. How many men did you give 10*l.* to ?—I cannot charge my memory. Some had more than 10*l.* I can only tell by reference to memoranda, and jotting it down from time to time.

2490. How many do you think you paid 10*l.* to at that time ?—I will give you every one as far as I remember at the present time, as I can carry my memory back. I will give you every man I paid, but there being a previous election I cannot recollect everything done then.

2491. (Mr. Coleridge.) You probably kept no account of such transactions ?—No, I never did.

2492. (Mr. Price.) If you had a register of 1866 would you be able to remember ?—I think most names are here.

2493. Then give us them.—In 1866, Mr. Vanderbyl's election, Captain Barrett, who is now residing at Swansea, John Bryant, Edward Baker, Jesse Deacon.

2494. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the same Captain Deacon you have spoken of ?—Yes. William Gibbs, William Hampson, Peter Lear.

2495. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he the old or young ?—It is William Lear.

2496. You said Peter ?—It is William, of Valetta Place, Charles Jennings, William Maine, a person of the name of Squires.

2497. Is that the clerk of Mr. Bate ?—The father of the clerk of Mr. Bate, I believe ; James North Squires I think is his name. James Sharman.

2498. (Mr. Coleridge.) But your 100*l.* did not come to 10*l.* each to all these ?—No, I will tell you that by-and-by. I am giving you the names of the men I paid money to first. Charles Wills ; I think his name is Charles Henry Lee. A man of the name of Brown.

2499. Would that be James Brown of Barclay Street ?—Yes, I think it is. Henry Harris, Eastover ; Giles Randall, of Russell Place ; a man of the name of Thomas, I think a captain.

2500. Richard Thomas, of Salmon Lane ?—No. I think it was John Thomas of Chilton Street.

2501. Which of those men had the 40*l.* you spoke of ?—Neither one of them. John Strong, of John Street, John Brawley, of Chilton Street, John Hole, of Chilton Street ; a man of the name of Shattock.

2502. (Mr. Coleridge.) A merchant you said ?—Yes, I did not pay this man money myself, but I gave it to another to give him. There are two of them here.

2503. (Mr. Anstey.) Who gave it to him ?—Richard Thomas.

2504. (Mr. Price.) He had to give it to Shattock ? Yes.

2505. James Shattock, Wellington Road ?—Yes, that is the man.

2506. (Mr. Coleridge.) The man you called a merchant ?—Yes.

2507. (Mr. Price.) Richard Thomas, Salmon Lane, is that the one ?—Yes, that is the one.

2508. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Thomas have anything himself ?—No, he had 20*l.* for Shattock and 20*l.* for Bennett, I think, in John Street.

2509. (Mr. Price.) There are Charles, James, and John ; and two live in John Street.

2510. Allow me the list. I think his name must be James (referring), but he resides in Eastern Quay. Then there was a man named Long, since dead, clerk to Carslake and Barham.

2511. What was his Christian name ?—Walter.

2512. Riverside ?—Yes.

2513. He was clerk to Mr. Carslake ?—Yes ; then there was another, John Squires, I believe.

2514. (Mr. Anstey.) What relation was he to the confidential clerk of Mr. Bate ?—Uncle, but he would not have any control over him. You will have his character by-and-by.

2515. There is a John Squire, Holden Street, not Squires ?—No. Charles Haste is the next, Silver Street, I believe that is the man you put him in the box, and I will identify him ; and I believe John Turner, Holden Street ; he describes himself as a draper. Those last three men had 15*l.* each. I think the next is Buttle, and that is the lot.

2516. What was his Christian name ?—He is the father of the others.

2517. (Mr. Anstey.) There are a great many Buttles, are not there ?—I think you will only find one of them at that particular election.

2518. (Mr. Price.) There is only one. Now you have given us the names, tell us how many of them had 10*l.*, how many had 15*l.*, and how many had 20*l.* ?—I cannot charge my memory with the amount they had, but I know none had less. Yes, there was one man had less, a man of the name of Champion, he had from Clifford Simmons 5*l.*

2519. Charles, James, or Jonas ?—I do not know. Mr. Simmons will be able to explain.

2520. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Champion had 5*l.* through Clifford Simmons ?—Yes, I know a man of that lot, I told you who had less than 5*l.* I cannot vouch the name. John Buttle had 40*l.*

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

2521. How came he to have so much?—It appears that some person must have got into negotiation with Buttle, and I was going up through George Lane; very likely you will be able to call witnesses before you who will be able to explain that more fully than I can, and I fancy there was a man named Hodge, and I believe another of the name of Taylor; that is my impression, for I know one man, Hodge, was there, and I believe they had been in speaking to Buttle about his vote.

2522. Were they Conservatives?—No, Liberals. This was well on in the afternoon, between two and three on polling day. I was going through George Lane and ran against those people, and with that they took me, I fancied, by the collar, which is the general way of doing it in these matters, to stop you and have their say out, and he said, "There is Buttle in here," and I said, "What about him?" "Oh, he will not go to the poll." "How much does he want?" "40*l.*" I said, "Oh, 40*l.*, it is better to lose the election than give 40*l.*" There is some other person—I have done all I can to charge my memory—who took a leading part in it, and I cannot bring it to my recollection at all as to who that party was; but I suggested to some one there, perhaps the parties who went with me can tell, I cannot myself, I would if I could.

2523. Who were the two you met?—One was a man of the name of Hodge. I do not know whether his name was Hodge.

2524. (Mr. Price.) Can you tell where he lives?—He was in court.

2525. (Mr. Coleridge.) What other man?—A lad by the name of Taylor. I believe it was either Frederick or John Hodge, one of the two, I cannot tell you where they live. I know them both, and they are brothers.

2526. If we call those witnesses you will know them?—If he will go into the box he will tell you all about it, no doubt. I said it would be better to lose the election. I cannot charge my memory who it was I met, but some one taking an active part in the election, and I said, "Here is so and so wanting 40*l.*"

2527. Did you try him yourself?—I did not know until I took the money.

2528. (Mr. Price.) Had Buttle been a Liberal voter?—I cannot tell unless I had the list before me.

2529. You did not know him before?—Not as a voter.

2530. You did not know which side he voted?—No, this Buttle, whoever the party was, said I was to give the money to him.

2531. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it one of the lawyers?—I cannot say, because I do not recollect, and I will not tell an untruth.

2532. But it must have been some one, from his telling you to give the money, who was in authority.—There is no doubt about that, but there is no use in saying a certain man did it, and commit myself; I want to keep myself to the truth.

2533. But I want to get from you, it was at all events some person in authority?—Yes.

2534. He said you must give it to him?—Yes, and I went to Andrew Allan, and I do not know whether I did go up stairs; and I had the money at Andrew Allan's, and took it him, and paid him in eight notes; and I said, "Hollo, old chap, this is too much money," and he swore out an oath and said he would not go without the money, and I gave it to him, and I rolled up the notes and he said, "Do not be too fast, I am going to see what I have got first," and he turned it and took the notes, and I think put them from one place to another until he found them all right, and when he found them all right, then he went to the poll.

2535. (Mr. Price.) Were they country notes?—I believe so, Stuckey's notes I think.

2536. Not Bank of England notes?—No, country notes. That disposes of the matter of Buttle.

2537. Did Buttle vote?—I believe he voted all right. And now we come to Squires. About one o'clock I find we stood very well on the poll.

2538. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that James North Squires or John?—John; I got into a fly and went to the lower part of the town; our polling booth was at Market House at that time, and I went to look for Squires. I knew he had not voted, and knew he was not a man to go without money, and when I got to his house I found he was gone, and I drove back and went into the house, and I was not in the house very long before I was going out again, but who should come tumbling over the steps but this Squires, Charles Haste, and Turner. These three men had voted for the Conservatives when they could get money. I do not think Haste ever voted for the Liberal party, except at that election, but Squires had voted for them when no money was going. This Turner, the stranger, I do not think had a vote but once or twice before. They come tumbling in, and knowing this Squires was a notorious old scamp, I said "Hollo! old John, what do you do here?" He said "Oh, master, I have come to see whether I can "do anything for you." I said, "Our election is won, "we do not want it, but as you have always voted for "the Tories I do not mind giving you a little."

2539. To vote for the Liberals?—Yes, that was Mr. Vanderbyl, so I had them all three out behind, and they wanted 20*l.* each, and I said "As you have always voted for the Tories I shall give you 15*l.* each, and then the next rub was to pay the money, I had not got it; I had to look for some one to go and get it.

2540. This was between one and two on the polling day?—Yes, so I went out and looked for someone, and I believe it was Henry Cornelius White went for it; I will not be positive, but he stopped a little while longer than I thought he ought to, and I went up for the money myself to be a little bit dapper than he was. I went up to Andrew Allan's, and I saw White there; this is downstairs mind; and I said he was long coming back with their money, we should lose the fellows presently, and he said, "All right, I will come back with you;" and the result was when I turned round these three men were staring me in the face, all three of them in Allan's house.

2541. (Mr. Price.) They had followed you?—Yes, knowing the man had brought them I felt a little annoyed by their coming, and thought it was not right, and kicked up a bit of a shindy about it, and the result was I had them in the back room at Mr. Allan's, and thought I would not be done by them, and that the best way to get these three to the poll was to poll the biggest scamp first, and I said to them all "Now look here, do not let us "have any humbug about this matter; I am not "going to pay you all at once" (they wanted to be paid all at one time); "I shall pay one man first; I "shall go up with him to the poll; if he does not "poll right I will not have anything to do with "the other two, so it rests with the man who goes "first. If he polls right you shall have the money; "if he does not you will have to go about your busi-"ness." The result was I went with Squires first, and polled him.

2542. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay him?—Yes.

2543. Before he polled?—Oh, yes, he would not poll without. Then I paid Haste next.

2544. And polled him all right?—Yes, and the next was Turner.

2545. You polled him all right?—Yes, this man Squires the next day had the impudence to send a note to my house to say I owed him 2*l.* 12*s.* So I walked over to this man, knowing I did not owe him anything, and said "Hollo, Jack, what do you mean "by saying I owe you 2*l.* 12*s.*" He said "So you "do." "What do I owe you 2*l.* 12*s.* for." He said, "Why you know." I said, "That is the very thing "I want to know, because I say I do not owe you "anything." "Well," he said, "Mr. Foster promised "me the money." "What the devil has Foster to "do with me, and I have spoken to him since, and "believe you had the money out of John Smith the "grocer, after the election."

2546. Who is Foster?—He is now dead.

2547. You are under the impression that he went to Mr. Smith and had 15*l.* after the election?—No, he had 2*l.* 12*s.* after the election, which he said was an old account, owing for some flag poles, or something of that sort.

2548. That was an old transaction?—Yes.

2549. You said something about Shattock having 20*l.*?—Yes, I gave Mr. Thomas 20*l.* in the morning for Mr. Shattock, and 20*l.* for Bennett. Mr. Thomas went out, and I believe he paid them this in the morning, I think about 12.

2550. Is Mr. Thomas alive?—Yes, I saw him last night in the town. Those men I considered had gone to poll, but in the afternoon there was a tally coming out from the Commercial Inn and walking up, when I came to turn my eye round, I saw this man walking up as big as could be, with the independents.

2551. With Mr. Patten's voters?—No, with our own. There was a certain tally to see if they were right, of the independent voters over the bridge, and found they were safe for winning.

2552. Who do you call the independents?—People who go to poll without money. They consider we were sold at Mr. Bagehot's election, and would not poll until we were right with Mr. Vanderbyl.

2553. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean they would not poll until they saw you had got a majority?—No, those independents would not; they were sold before, and then they turned back because the lawyers thought enough had been polled to make the election sure, instead of that we lost the election by seven.

2554. (Mr. Price.) These independents had not polled at the former election?—Yes.

2555. How did they feel themselves disappointed or annoyed?—Because they thought we ought to have won.

2556. Did that make them abstain on the second occasion?—They would not go until they saw we were safe.

2557. (Mr. Coleridge.) They only went to swell the majority?—That was all.

2558. They wanted to be on the winning side?—Oh, no.

2559. (Mr. Price.) Were these two men going up to poll then?—They walked up in a tally. I think there were 16 or 18.

2560. They had not polled till then?—No, they went then.

2561. Is that all you did?—Yes.

2562. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have given us the names of 28 you visited on this occasion?—Yes.

2563. Is that all?—As far as I recollect now, I question very much if it is all.

(Mr. Price.) Then you must think it over.

2564. (Mr. Coleridge.) You can help us in this way, if you can tell us what money you spent we can see if it exhausts the money?—This is the exact position I am in. I told you I believed that Andrew Allan had brought me 100*l.*, and then afterwards if I wanted any money I should send some one who was trustworthy to go to Andrew Allan for money, and after the election was over I furnished Allan with the list of every man's name.

2565. Allan has that account?—I do not know that I furnished him with it.

2566. Every man's name, and the sums given?—Yes.

2567. Do you recollect how much you paid away altogether?—I should think about 400*l.*

2568. When you got the money from Allan did you get it from him direct, or was there any stranger?—No, I do not know anything about money. I am not certain about that 400*l.* I never had any money from Allan's house except the 45*l.* which I paid those three men given me by White, and the 40*l.* I had from Allan to pay Buttle. I had no money in Allan's house myself.

2569. How did you get it?—Supposing now, for instance, I was out of money, I would send up to see some one or other.

2570. Do not you recollect whom you would trust on such an occasion as that?—There was a brewer out in the town I think went once or twice.

2571. What name?—Robinson.

2572. What Christian name?—I do not know.

2573. Were Frederick Hodge and Taylor, who told you about Buttle, voters?—Yes.

2574. Did they have anything?—I cannot recollect that I paid them.

2575. I suppose that they did have something?—I cannot answer that, because I do not know.

2576. When they told you about Buttle, did they say that they wanted something themselves?—They had polled early in the morning.

2577. Then perhaps it had been given by some one else?—I do not know about that.

2578. (Mr. Price.) That is all you did that day?—Yes.

2579. Who else was employed that you know of?—I have given you the names.

2580. Did you have any conversation at all about it, or can you give us any idea how much was spent by Mr. Vanderbyl in that way at that election?—I cannot. I adopted the same principle at that election as I told you I did in 1868.

2581. You have given us the names of eight or ten men who did the same sort of work. You say you suppose you had about 400*l.*; do you think they had as much?—Well, I should suspect I paid as much money as anybody did.

2582. You cannot tell us how many altogether were bribed of the constituency?—I cannot.

2583. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the majority at the end of the day?—Something like 30 I think.

2584. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl yourself during the election?—I have never spoken to Mr. Vanderbyl ever since he represented this borough but twice, the first time when he came round to return thanks for his election, and the second time was last election, meeting him in the street.

2585. From all that you recollect of those two elections, the last and the one in 1866, which was the first time you saw him, have you any doubt that he was aware that his money was going in corrupt practices, or have you no doubt that he was not aware that his money was going in corrupt practices?—I should think he was aware of it.

2586. (Mr. Price.) Was it as much as 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.* that he spent?—Well, the report was there was some 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* spent at the time.

2587. By Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes; it might be more for aught that I know.

2588. Do you think it is more likely that 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.* was spent than 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*?—Well, I should think 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.*

2589. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you any money left at the end of the day which you had not paid away?—No.

2590. Were you out of pocket of your own?—I believe that Andrew Allan had to pay me a balance of 10*l.* or 15*l.* I will not be certain.

2591. When did he pay you?—We squared up about two days afterwards.

2592. (Mr. Price.) You say from 3,000*l.* to 4,000*l.* was spent on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl; did you ever hear what the cost on the other side was from what was talked about in the town?—There have been reports about the town, circulated in common conversation, that the Lord Advocate, on the last day when he was nominated last time, brought down 2,000*l.* here, and it was distributed amongst the voters, and they went and voted against him next day. Whether it is true or not I do not know. It was a report.

2593. (Mr. Coleridge.) Of these 28 people you bribed on that occasion, how many had voted for Mr. Patten on the former one?—Squires, Haste, and Turner. I believe that is all.

2594. (Mr. Price.) Then the others you saw they were men who would be sure to vote, if there was money going, for the side that had money?—No, the majority of them would vote Liberal if there was no money going on that side.

2595. But others were men who, when no money was going, had certain political opinions, but if money was going preferred money to politics?—Yes.

THIRD DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

25 Aug. 1869.

2596. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many are on the register now who prefer money to politics?—I cannot say now.

2597. On the old one how many preferred money to politics—the whole place, both sides?—I told you this morning.

2598. About 200, I think, you made it, who did not?—No, more than that, 145 and 85.

2600. But you think about 85 Conservatives would vote without money always for the Conservatives, and about 140 of the others?—140 to 150.

2601. Who would vote also on principle for the other side?—Yes, and then you can tell the number who required to have majorities.

2602. (Mr. Anstey.) About these Buttles, was there not some confusion as to their politics?—I do not know anything about them.

2603. Do you know whether they had voted Conservative before or Liberal before?—I stated that before, that I did not know whether they had a vote before.

2604. My reason for asking you is that I have before me here a paper prepared at Mr. Trevor's office from which it appears that they were always Conservative?—I do not know.

1605. I have Buttle's own evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn, in which they declare they were always Liberal, and I have a third statement according to which they had no votes before the Reform Act of 1867, and therefore could not have voted at the previous election. Which of those statements is the true one?—One of them had.

2606. Which?—The father.

2607. Do you remember at which election a Buttle or more than one was or were bribed under the false impression of being qualified to vote—taking the vote and not being qualified?—I do not know. I never heard of that circumstance, but the way to find out whenever Buttle voted Conservative is to get the list of voters that voted at the election before 1866.

2608. There are misprints in that list, sometimes it occurs as "Brittle" and sometimes "Buttle," is the right name Buttle?—Yes, no doubt the clerk has a list of voters some few years before.

2609. You say you had a balance at that election?—That is my impression, but I will not answer for that.

2610. Have you always had a balance at every election?—I believe it has been so.

2611. Always something in hand?—No, the reverse, a balance against me.

2612. You had at this last election for 1868 a balance of 22*l.* which you accounted for?—No, I did not, I accounted for 15*l.*

2613. But though you had that sum in your hands, when you came back the first time from your trip to Guernsey, you went to Mr. Smith and got another 15*l.* from him?—No, I did not go to Mr. Smith.

2614. Well, you got it from him?—Yes.

2615. You had 15*l.* of Mr. Vanderbyl's money or the anonymous man's money to account for when you got the additional 15*l.* for Smith, the grocer?—I had.

2616. That made 30*l.*?—Yes.

2617. Then you say your expenses came to 22*l.*?—I told you that was my travelling expenses alone.

2618. Then what you have to account for now is less than 8*l.*?—No.

2619. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, you got another 15*l.*?—You could not live for three months without eating.

2620. (Mr. Anstey.) I am not questioning your account, but there seems to be some confusion I want to clear up. You say your expenses came to 22*l.* odd?—I say the travelling expenses alone.

2621. Then you say of the bribing money you got from this anonymous person in the "Globe" there remained 15*l.* in your hands unemployed?—No, I say it cost me more than 50*l.* when I was away. Yes, I got the 30*l.*

2622. You got certain sums of money which you paid away all but 15*l.*?—Yes, I had.

2623. Then the 15*l.* which you got from James Smith the grocer on your first return from Guernsey made the 30*l.* you had received?—Yes.

2624. Against that you have some charges to make?—Yes.

2625. Then in point of fact you have, if the total amount of your expenses was 22*l.*, only a balance of 8*l.* to account for, if it was 50*l.* which you have incurred whilst abroad, then instead of there being any owing to the anonymous person or Mr. Vanderbyl, the anonymous person or Mr. Vanderbyl is indebted [to you?—Yes, to give me more than 50*l.* altogether.

2626. Then how do you propose to get reimbursed the amount owing to you?—I consider it is gone, and shall never have a penny of it.

2627. Not even from Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

2628. Why not?—If he had he would have sent it to me before now.

2629. But you have told us to-day that you kept all this carefully until to-day in order that you might have the merit of publishing it for the first time?—No.

2630. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had the 15*l.* left from the money at the election?—Yes.

2631. Before you went away Smith gave you 15*l.*?—Yes.

2532. After you came back he gave you another 15*l.*, which makes 45*l.*?—Yes.

2633. (Mr. Anstey.) At all events you are a creditor of the party, whoever it is, from whom the money proceeded?—They are indebted to me.

2634. Do you mean to say you made them a present of that balance?—It is no good my going to ask them, I expect.

2635. Have you any doubt in your own mind that the source from which these sums came to you, the bribery money, the money to enable you to go abroad, and the money which you received after your first return from abroad, all came out of one pocket, and that pocket Mr. Vanderbyl's. Have you the least doubt about that?—I cannot say, I will give you the name of the party I got the money from.

2636. Let us have it?—I think Mr. Smith.

2637. An anonymous person, supposed to be Mr. Reed, Mr. Vanderbyl's attorney, in a house which the Liberals had taken, and that is all the information?—Yes.

2638. I ask you whether you have the least doubt that Mr. Vanderbyl was the paymaster?—I cannot answer for but the money Mr. Smith gave me.

2639. Deducting that.—I believe it was Mr. Vanderbyl's money, the money I had over there.

2640. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is the 15*l.*?—Yes, that is the 185*l.*

2641. You had 15*l.* from a mysterious stranger, and 30*l.* from Mr. Smith at two different times?—Yes.

2642. And your expenses were about 50*l.*?—Yes.

2643. And in fact you have had 45*l.* from what your expenses were?—Yes, about my being reimbursed I had never had any. I have had no sympathy for my own party since I came back.

2644. (Mr. Price.) We are going to adjourn till to-morrow noon, in the meantime will you go through the list and the register, and see whether you have omitted any names at the last election of electors whom you dealt with?—I would rather have a little time for going through the register.

(Mr. Price.) Very well, we will take you into the other elections.

2645. (Mr. Anstey.) If you can possibly recollect the names of who were probably present at that meeting at Gloucester Place you have spoken of, let us have them?—If I can find out any information I will give it to you.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

FOURTH DAY.

Thursday, 26th August 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

FOURTH DAY.
Mr. G. B. Sully.
26 Aug. 1869.

Mr. GEORGE BRYANT SULLY recalled.

2646. (Mr. Anstey.) I wish to ascertain from you whether you were under any mistake as to the meaning of some questions I put to you; they are those which, after having examined you as to your opinion of the purity or the impurity of what is vulgarly and most improperly, in my opinion, called the lower classes in society, with regard to these practices, we thought it our duty to put with respect to what is also improperly, in my opinion, called the upper classes of society, and I asked you whether anything had been done by them according to their means and opportunities; for instance, the justices by the refusal of licences and so forth,—what had been done by them to stem the torrent of corruption since you recollected the borough. I then asked you some questions regarding clergymen of the Established Church and the Noncomformist body, and your answers were very important; but a doubt has been expressed as to whether you correctly understood my questions as they were meant with respect to the ministers of religion, as the expression was "not belonging to the Established Church." Did you understand me or not as meaning thereby to include all ministers of all religions not belonging to the established religion; for instance, the newly introduced congregation of Roman Catholics, or that of the Jews, if there be a Synagogue, and that of the Quakers, who though they have no ministers of religion properly so called, are ministers of religion themselves,—those who have no religion at all, but suppose they have religion, as for instance the Mormons, if there be any,—did you understand me as including all those, or as confining the question only to those denominations who generally and vulgarly pass under the common name of Dissenters?—I understood your question to relate to ministers of the Established Church and Dissenting ministers, and my answer was made with that present in my mind.

2647. And not the others?—We have no Mormons, as far as I am aware. I certainly should have included, so far as my knowledge extended, ministers of the Roman Catholic persuasion. We have no Jews.

2648. Quakers?—I have never thought of ministers amongst the Society of Friends, but if I had thought of them I should have been led to the expression of opinion that their influence would have gone very strenuously in the endeavour to purify the proceedings of elections.

2649. With that exception, therefore, are the Commissioners to understand that there is nothing in what I have now suggested to you which in any degree qualifies the answers you have already given to the general questions?—Certainly. To the best of my belief I should say all the ministers of religion in the town would do what they could to make our elections pure and legitimate.

2650. (Mr. Price.) I think I understood you to say that you knew that one gentleman who officiated at the Established Church during the temporary absence or illness of the vicar preached from the pulpit and denounced it?—I think I guarded myself, not being present at the sermon, by saying it was reported to me as being quite in that direction.

2651. (Mr. Anstey.) One clergyman supplying the place of the vicar?—One clergyman supplying the place of the vicar at the parish church.

2652. (Mr. Price.) But at one of the congregations that had been done?—Again and again.

2653. Those are the only instances, I understand, in which anything of the kind was done by any ministers of religion?—From my personal knowledge I can only speak of the Congregational Chapel.

2654. (Mr. Coleridge.) Apart from any preaching about bribery and corrupt practices, were the churches both on one side and the other made use of at all for political purposes on the Irish Church Bill before the last election?—I never heard so.

2655. You never heard of any preaching about it, or any topic introduced about it into any sermon?—Certainly not.

2656. (Mr. Anstey.) At any period?—At any period. I have heard general principles enunciated from the pulpit.

2657. (Mr. Coleridge.) But on the Irish Church?—No; I have not on any political question.

2658. Because, doubtless, you are aware that across the Channel every church was made use of on one side or the other?—I have heard so.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

2659. (The Witness.) I wanted to put myself a little bit right regarding the election of 1868. In the first place I made a statement regarding J. R. Smith making a statement in a place called Gloster Place. You told me yesterday when I left that I must try to get some information, and I found out afterwards that I was able to get the names of two witnesses. One is William Nicholls and the other is Richard Bale.

2660. (Mr. Anstey.) What are they?—I believe they are both labourers.

2661. But I mean as to votes?—I do not know how Bale is, but Nicholls voted Liberal, and it appears that they were at this Conservative Working Man's Association this night when this conversation occurred, and instead of its being Gloster Place it was at a public-house called the "Lamb."

2662. (Mr. Price.) What was the conversation you refer to?—In regard to the "M. D."—money down.

2663. These were the two men?—Yes; I saw Nicholls this morning and simply put the question to him if he was present at a meeting held at any place, and whether "M. D." was made use of by Smith, and the answer I got from him was that he was, and that Smith did make use of that expression, and he went on to make some remark, and I said I would not hear it, he must come to the court and make his own statement.

2664. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is Joseph Richard Smith?—Yes; Nicholls, I think, lives at Provident Place; he is a voter.

2665. (Mr. Anstey.) It was not at Gloster Place?—No, it was at the "Lamb."

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

2666. At a meeting of the Conservative Working Man's Association at the "Lamb" public-house?—Yes.

2667. (Mr. Price.) Is that the place, where the Conservative Working Man's Association generally meet?—I am not up to that very well. I believe they hold their meetings—I fancy so, but I would not be certain—there. There is a paper published there, which I suppose they file, called the "Standard." If you could get hold of that, you would find who were the principal speakers, and I fancy myself that there was a meeting at the "Lamb," at Gloster Place, and I think at the "Golden Lion."

2668. What is the paper?—It is the "Standard," a Conservative paper published here.

2669. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often?—Once a week. I recollect, from seeing the paper from time to time, that they generally gave an account of the Conservative Working Men's Association and who were the speakers there.

2670. Now about what date would the paper be?—I think it all occurred within ten days or a fortnight before the election. It cannot be very long, because it was after the return of his mayorship—about the 9th or the 10th. They had repeated meetings before. Now you asked me, I believe, who were the secretaries. J. R. Smith's son was, I believe, temporary secretary to the Working Men's Association, and he is likewise a clerk in the establishment of Mr. William Brice. Then afterwards I believe that Frederick Jarvis took on. Now with regard to Mr. Smith, I will put in an anonymous letter, and you must please take it for what it is worth (the witness handed in the letter.)

2671. (Mr. Price.) This came to you?—Yes, this morning.

2672. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you say were the names of the late and present secretaries?—I do not know whether the association is in being now. Now there is a little matter personal to myself. I underwent a long examination yesterday, and if I made an error I did not do it wilfully. You inquired of me in regard to the money about my going away; now I want to put myself right on that point. After I went out of this court I began to consider. I believe the questions were late in the day. You inquired of me if I knew any persons besides, mixed up in the matter, that knew I went away. I told you yesterday that I did not, nor did I know any person who was mixed up in the matter, and no person ever said anything to me until I came back after the petition was over; and then, I fancy, but I am not quite certain, whether I went away on the Wednesday or the Thursday. I will not be certain, but I was only home a day or two. Mr. Paul Reed sent for me, and said, "Bussell, I think you had better be out of this "town, because the Conservatives are rather sore."

2673. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was after the petition?—After the petition.

2674. (Mr. Price.) After the judge had gone?—They were rather sore because they had lost. After the judge had gone he said, "I would advise you to "go away until after the assizes are over."

2675. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is Mr. Reed, the attorney?—Yes. This is a little matter which, after the examination I underwent yesterday, you can excuse me for having forgotten.

2676. Did he say anything to you about giving you money to go away with?—Mr. Reed said, if I would make up my mind to go. I believe I said to him I should not stop; I was going. I believe that was the conversation that took place between us. My own impression was that I had better be off, when he said if I did, if I would send my wife up he would see what could be done. I believe those were the words. The result of it was that my wife did go. What the conversation was about between them I cannot say; I do not recollect, but I know this, that I never saw Mr. Reed afterwards, and that Mr. Smith brought me the money, the same as I said.

2677. Your wife did not bring any?—No.

2678. And the only money you received were the two 15*l.* and the 15*l.* in hand?—That is all, I only wanted to put myself right, I spoke to some one else besides John Smith.

2679. (Mr. Price.) About going away?—Yes.

2680. (Mr. Coleridge.) I dare say your wife will remember?—I have not brought the subject to her.

2681. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you wish to say?—I think it is.

2682. Now you yesterday made use of an expression which I should like you to explain a little more, and that is you said that the party were so disgusted with the treatment of Mr. Bagehot, or with the result of the election when Mr. Bagehot was defeated, that it had made them hang back, I think you said, at the second election in 1866, the independents?—There was a certain lot, I think you have them subpœnaed, they will answer for themselves, they said they never would be sold again, they said they were sold in Mr. Bagehot's election by the lawyers.

2683. In what way were they sold?—This was their expression, that some one or other had had their money, and they spent it improperly.

2684. That they had not got their shares?—No, they would not take money themselves, these men who went up in that tally.

2685. How was it then?—For instance, we belong to all one party, and were free and independent men, and there was a lot of others.

2686. What you mean is, the money which they thought ought to be spent in bribing the men who would not vote had not been spent in that way, and therefore they lost the election?—Yes.

2687. (Mr. Coleridge.) At 3 o'clock on the day of Bagehot's election, which we will come to presently, Bagehot was 30 or 40 ahead, was not he?—No; I think, if I remember right, the Conservatives got ahead about 2 o'clock.

2688. When was the last time that Bagehot was ahead?—I cannot recollect exactly, I fancy they kept Mr. Bagehot in the first place in the morning a very large number ahead.

2689. Did not the Liberal lawyers make, or was not there a report that they made so confident of Mr. Bagehot's keeping ahead that they ceased to pay money, and the Conservatives then went in to win, and bought up voters. Is that what you meant by having been sold at Mr. Bagehot's election?—Yes.

2690. (Mr. Price.) Now we come to the first election of 1866, when Mr. Patten came down for the first time against Mr. Bagehot. Mr. Bagehot had not been a candidate before had he?—No, he had not.

2691. He is a gentleman who resides somewhere in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

2692. (Mr. Anstey.) I have some questions which were not put to you yesterday with reference to corrupt practices at the two last elections not included under the name of bribery; the first is treating, the other is undue influence. I would rather put those questions to attorneys and candidates, but as they are not here I will put them to you. Is it true, as stated in the proceedings before Mr. Justice Blackburn, that there was an organized system of treating on both sides in this at the last election?—I never knew less in my life than there was at the last election.

2693. That is not an answer to my question; was there any?—Yes.

2694. Now I will give you the names to save the trouble of reference, and ask you, were those the names of houses on your side which were opened for the purpose of treating, either alone or together, with bribery, "Bath Bridge Inn"?—I have heard so.

2695. The "Mariners Arms"?—I have heard so.

2696. The "New Inn"?—I believe so.

2697. The "Duke of Wellington"?—Yes.

2698. The "Mason's Arms"?—Yes.

2699. The "Queen's Head"?—Yes.

2700. And your own house the "Anchor"?—Yes.

2701. Any other?—I do not know, as far as I am personally concerned. I am a publican, and I do not go into any other man's house in the town, because I do not drink anything myself, and the result of it is I do not know of anywhere else.

2702. You cannot add at present to those names?—No, I cannot, I am not certain; I only go from hearsay, as far as those are concerned.

2703. You have sufficiently guarded yourself already. Now, on the other side, the "Clarence"?—Yes, it is reported so.

2704. Go on?—The "Bristol Arms," the "Bull and Butcher," the "Golden Ball," the "Lamb Inn;" and then there are others on the opposite side of the way. This is a matter I am not well up in with regard to treating, but if you go down the list of the houses I could tell you better.

2705. If you do not recollect them all just now I will defer it?—Then there is on the opposite side, whether it is the "Three Crowns" or the "Rose and Crown" I do not know.

2706. What do you mean by the opposite side?—That is on the south side.

2707. But still on the Conservative side?—Still on the Conservative side; and the "Cheese House," the "Golden Lion," and a house kept by a man of the name of Culverwell, and another kept by a man of the name of Lee over at the railway station, and there is no doubt there are others; but as far as treating was concerned you must bear in mind this, that I know nothing of it, for it would not do for me to go into a Conservative house, I would get my neck broken.

2708. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was the "Railway Hotel" used on either side as to treating?—No, not to my knowledge.

2709. (Mr. Anstey.) If any other names on either side occur to you before the Commission closes I shall be glad to be favoured with them?—There is no doubt that during this inquiry many things will crop up that I shall be able to remember and inform you of.

2710. No doubt, but can you tell me in which of these houses named by me, or by you, on either side, there was bribery as well as treating?—No; there is another house I have omitted naming, perhaps you may not call that treating, I do if you do not; that is if there is a society belonging to a house, and they turn to and go there for a jollification of a night for the new candidates, and spend 17*l.* or 18*l.*, I call that treating to a very great extent.

2711. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean the candidates paying the money?—Anybody belonging to the party.

2712. (Mr. Anstey.) What place was that?—At the "Albion." I have always understood that Edward Lilley gave the order there.

2713. Is that the Shepherds?—I do not know what society it is; it is either the Shepherds or the Odd Fellows.

2714. Take your own house; how was the drink, or food, or whatever it was, paid for?—There was no food.

2715. How were the refreshments paid for, and by whom?—Well, if everything had gone on straight, and the election had ended right, there is no doubt at all that the lawyers would have paid it.

2716. On your side?—Yes, and on the other side the same, I suppose.

2717. As a matter of fact, have you not been paid for the treating in your house?—I have not.

2718. And that forms part of your own unpaid debt?—It does, it is not a very large amount.

2719. (Mr. Coleridge.) What does it amount to?—Perhaps 13*l.* or 14*l.*

2720. That goes a long way in beer, does not it?—It is generally grog at these times.

2721. (Mr. Anstey.) Say yes or no to my question. Can you give me any idea of what the sum would be, and the same question with regard to each of the other houses?—I have heard a report that it has gone on extensively in some houses.

2722. But as to payment?—I suppose they would be all paid the same as I.

2723. You have no reason to believe otherwise?—No.

2724. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have had yours open at former elections?—I have.

2725. Who paid you then, in 1866 for instance?—Mr. Henry Lovibond.

2726. Who paid you the election before that in 1866?—Mr. Henry Lovibond.

2727. Who paid you in 1859?—It is the election before 1865; I believe the money came from Mr. Bate to Mr. Lovibond.

2728. Did Mr. Lovibond pay you on each occasion?—He did.

2729. Without making inquiry as to the items he took your statement?—He did.

2730. (Mr. Anstey.) You believe that the money came to him from the late Mr. Robert Bate?—I do not know whether it did; I know there was some eight or nine of those captains came home, they came from a long distance, some from Ireland, and they had to settle that they should have 5*l.* apiece.

2731. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much money in those elections did Mr. Lovibond pay you each time, in 1866; how much for the treating at your house?—I believe it was between 20*l.* and 30*l.*

2732. About what sum would it be before in 1865?—I think between 30*l.* and 40*l.*; I will not be certain whether it was under 30*l.* or not; in 1865 it was about some time.

2733. In 1859, which was when Westropp first came, I believe, who paid you?—Frederick Charles Foster.

2734. How much?—About the same amount, 20*l.* to 30*l.*, I believe.

2735. (Mr. Anstey.) That is the lawyer's clerk?—Yes, he had passed then, he was a lawyer.

2736. You say therefore that the treating this last time was about half or less than half of what it had been on former occasions?—I will tell you my impression about it, that it was not the fifth of what it had been formerly.

2737. But as far as you yourself are concerned it was 20*l.* or 30*l.*, and on former occasions 30*l.* or 40*l.*?—But it was done differently at other houses.

2738. How do you mean?—Why they carried it on to a greater extent, and always did.

2739. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know any house where they were paid for treating at the last election?—At the last election I do not know of a penny being had.

2740. Well, incurred?—I think I heard that there was a lawyer's letter went to John Smith for 33*l.*, I think.

2741. From whom?—From the "Queen's Head." I believe Mr. Smith and Mr. Boyle were the lawyers who sent the letter.

2742. (Mr. Anstey.) In particular do you know of Duddridge, whom you mentioned with reference to another question, whether at the last election he distributed the money to an assembly of voters of 1*l.* a head, besides drink?—No, I do not. I believe it was an untruth. I do not believe he distributed one farthing, that is my own impression of the matter.

2743. Now with regard to undue influence—you know what I mean by undue influence as distinguished from bribery,—can you give me any instance of undue influence having been practised on your side of the question in order to obtain a vote?—I never knew one.

2744. You never heard of Richard Axford, the surgeon?—I never did.

2745. Nor of Elsbury, the gardener of the Poor Law Union of Bridgwater?—I never did.

2746. The next question also is with reference to these two last elections. I wish I had the attorneys here, and the candidates, to put it to them, but you have given us very frankly a great many very valuable details about the slackness of the voters at and before the election, and your own individual grounds of complaint against the Conservatives on the one hand for going against you, and the Liberals on the other for ignoring you, and not defending you properly, and so forth. Keeping in mind your answer on those points, answer me this question: When you were so zealous on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake before the election of 1868, that is after the election of 1866 and before the polling day of 1868, were you aware, or was it known to the people of Bridgwater that for some months before the nomination day Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp had been negotiating together in London and elsewhere for the purpose of getting themselves returned, and Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Gray kept out?—I never heard any such report until, I think, some three or four days before he came down here, and then there was a report that such was the case, and I took my stand, and I said "Now before I ever promise " Mr. Vanderbyl my vote I shall know whether they " are going to run together, and if they do not I will not vote for them."

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

2747. Who was that to?—I said it to several.

2748. To the lawyers?—No, never. I never had any conversation with the lawyers about it, only it was in common conversation with different tradesmen about the town. There was this little report, that Vanderbyl and Westropp were going to run together, and throw Kinglake overboard; but I for one had taken my stand, and would have done all I possibly could to have ousted Mr. Vanderbyl if I had thought there was any truth in it.

2749. Now on the Saturday and Sunday which preceded the election, are you aware that at one and the same time there were negotiations going on, first between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp, and secondly, between Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp, for the purpose of getting rid of Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake, and of getting an election without a contest of Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake, or Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl, as the case may be?—If I had known the statement you now tell me, I never would have voted for anybody, neither Mr. Kinglake nor Mr. Vanderbyl.

2750. You did not?—No, I did not.

2751. As a fact, did you discover it afterwards?—No, I never heard of it until now.

2752. Then the last question on that point is, are you aware that after the election had terminated in the nominal return of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, and both had been followed by Mr. Trevor, who had gone on the subject of the proposed petition up to town, that for some time afterwards there was, first of all, a negotiation for the return of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp, Mr. Vanderbyl having to resign, and afterwards, a proposal made by Mr. Cook that both Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl should resign, in order that there might be no inquiry and no exposure before an election Judge, and the Conservatives to be allowed to return their two members?—I have heard that they went up to London, but I do not think that Mr. Reed went first. I think there were some other of the lawyers went before.

2753. Are you aware that Mr. Kinglake was himself a party to the proposal that he and Mr. Vanderbyl should ask for the Chiltern Hundreds, that is resign, and allow Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray to come in without any opposition, rather than face an inquiry before an election judge?—It is the first time I have ever heard of it now. I did hear that they wanted to compromise the matter, and the lawyers went up on both sides.

2754. Now assuming those facts to be true,—I do not say they are, although they depend upon a paper prepared by the lawyers on the one side, and on another paper prepared by the lawyers on the other side, which I have before me,—assuming those facts to be true, and that knowledge had gone forth amongst the electors, would not that have accounted for the slackness of the electors at the election, and also the treatment you yourself complained of as having received from your own party as well as the opposite party since the election?—I think not.

2755. (Mr. Coleridge.) As both the candidates and attorneys will be called here and examined before us, I will not ask you anything that will come more properly from them, but having been employed to distribute money at different elections, were you ever employed to pay the treating bills at other houses than your own?—Never a penny. I have in Mr. Foster's time gone round to the different public-houses with him prior to the election, and he has left me to pay the orders that have been given by the people.

2756. Do you mean day by day, or to settle up the whole score?—In the evening, when they have gone round from house to house.

2757. But never the whole score?—No.

2758. (Mr. Anstey.) Now a general question with reference to the two last elections; you may answer with reference to all if you like, but the two last particularly; you have given your opinion about new and old voters, petty tradesmen, and so forth, now about another class altogether: have you any reason to believe that the gentry, or upper class, or whatever they may be called, of this borough, have abstained from taking any part in the bribing of voters, or in conniving at bribing them?—I believe they have, so far as my knowledge goes. I never knew any of them taking any part in it—not in the bribery.

2759. All excepting the lawyers you mean to say?—Oh, the lawyers we have spoken upon. I understood you yesterday, when I thought there were about 1,200, that there were over 1,600 voters; that was my impression at the time. That made me say about 1,200, but I think if you took the register and took three-fourths of the constituency that would be right.

2760. Three-fourths, whatever the number is, would represent the bribable portion?—Yes, that is if money was going they would have it.

2761. Do you include people bribed as well as taking bribes?—I do not know what our opponents do, but I believe every man on our side goes and works honestly, and does not get a penny for it.

2762. When you say that three-fourths would take bribes do you include in that three-fourths all those who do bribe or deal with money towards those people?—No.

2763. Then all the bribers are to be added to those three-fourths?—Yes, for certain.

2764. (Mr. Price.) Did either of the candidates have their committee-rooms at public-houses?—Unfortunately there is no other place. I would rather see them out of it.

2765. Then is the money for the charges you made for committee-rooms or for drink?—We never had a committee-room in our house in our lives.

2766. Then it was paid for drink?—We never had meetings.

2767. Was it houses hired by different candidates as their houses?—Some person or other connected had given the orders in Mr. Foster's time; he had an an uncle who used to go round and give the orders by the name of Fawn, now dead.

2768. Was any limit put at the last election on the drinking?—None; the fact is as far as the lawyers were concerned, they said they would have no treating, and you only draw the drink and run the risk whether you get paid afterwards—no orders were given for it; every landlord who will come up here I think will prove that no orders were given for the drink, but drew it simply on the strength of being paid afterwards if their candidates won.

2769. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then as the lawyers went through the form of saying there was to be no treating, did they go through the form of saying also there was to be no bribery?—Oh no.

2770. How many days before the election as a general rule did you supply drink free to the voters?—As soon as there was a probability of an election there were certain people who you were forced to keep sweet.

2771. Take the last election when there was a long canvass. How long before did you begin supplying liquor free?—It was some time about. Perhaps I might give away a glass of grog a night, or half a dozen.

2772. How long before the election?—A fortnight. I think we are at sea in regard to being a long time about. They came down here first of all, and I do not think, if my memory carries me right, that they did canvass when they came first, but they then went away and it was a settled matter between them that they should not be down for some seven or eight days before the election.

2773. Then seven or eight days before those seven or eight days you began to give away liquor free?—Yes; it could not be very free because of the payment.

2774. Was there as much done as at the last election?—I do not believe so much by a fifth of what was done before.

2776. Supposing money is set in motion at three o'clock, and men who are bribable men who voted, say at 11, and they hear that money is given on that side, do you know any practice here by which those persons are considered entitled to go to the bribe agent and say, "as money has been stirring, and as "some voters have got it, we must have ours who "have voted early"?—There is no doubt at all that under the old constituency a great many did get their money in that way.

2777. (Mr. Coleridge.) As a reward for having voted instead of as an inducement to vote?—Yes. Now there is a lot, the principal part of those I named yesterday, would vote Liberal; if the Conservatives offered them money they would not take it if none was going on the Liberal side, but if there was they would have it, and they would not go Conservatives—the majority of them I named yesterday. I do not think out of the lot I could pick out five.

2778. I think you said Haste and Turner and Buttle were those who would have gone Couservatives?—I have got another gentleman directly I consider the worst of the lot.

2779. (Mr. Price.) At the last election?—No, the one when I paid those three men.

2780. (Mr. Anstey.) In 1866?—Yes.

2781. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that man's name Hook?—Yes; and Charles Hook always professes to be Conservative, and he is the man who went to London.

2782. (Mr. Price.) Is he the provision dealer?—Yes. He is the man who went to London with a petition got up. He wanted to sign a petition to go to Westropp that he should carry on the inquiry, and they went away five or six of them on the Sunday night by the express. I cannot recollect their names, but I think they will cut a pretty figure before you before you have finished the inquiry. They went up to insist on the petition being carried out.

2783. This last one?—Yes. Now that man at the election before—he voted for Mr. Patton the first time it appears, and he did not get his money; that is the way I take it to be, and from what I understood, his own party when Mr. Patton found that he had come back here to be re-elected, two of that party handed him over 10*l.* a piece—whether it is true I do not know, he will be able to answer for himself—but I believe this is true, that his own party did not place confidence in him returning to the poll, and they gave him 2*l.* 12*s.* to go to Gloucester for a person who was not there.

2784. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that Charles Hook?—Yes.

2785. (Mr. Price.) To keep him away?—Yes, they knew that if he went to Gloucester it would be impossible for him to vote because he would not be back in time. The result was that he came back. Between 1 and 2 o'clock I went from my house and was walking up the street, and I believe it was an uncle of his I met; his name is Roberts. I do not know whether John, but he is the senior partner of the firm who carry on the carriage works at Eastover.

2786. (Mr. Anstey.) Whose carriage works?—His own, carried on under the style of Roberts and Son. He said to me "Mr. Hook is in the house. I think I can get him if you can give him 30*l.*" I said, "Go into his house, make the arrangements, and I will pay him." Roberts went into the house; I stopped outside, because I did not like to appear in the matter. I began to put my considering cap on who I was going to deal with, and I thought to myself "The faster I am out of this the better," and ran as fast as I could up the street for fear that Roberts would come out and ask me to pay him the money, because I did not think he was safe.

2787. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Roberts liberal?—Yes; I was always under the impression that the man had 30*l.* I told him so at the last election when he had got a placard in the window with Pot and Dodger on two cards. Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake climbing up the pole, Mr. Westropp head downwards. I having taken an active part, and knowing what a man he was to take money at one election and not poll square, could not help telling him what man he was at his door. "A pretty scamp you to take "money two years ago at the last election, and to put "such a placard as that in the window."

2788. What did he say?—I believe he threatened to bring an action against me and some one else, but I knew he could not do that.

2789. (Mr. Price.) What did he say to you?—He said I was a scamp and had better be off about my business, but that did not daunt me at all.

2790. He did not deny having the money when you accused him?—He could not; but since I have been given to understand from some source or other which I suppose will come out by-and-by that he had 40*l.* he was not satisfied with 30*l.*

2791. (Mr. Anstey.) What election?—1866.

2792. The first or second election?—The second. The first he voted for Mr. Patton.

2793. And how at the second?—For Mr. Vanderbyl.

2794. Where did he get it from?—Roberts senior will be able to tell you who he got it from, because I ran away from him.

2795. What do you call the picture or emblem?—Pot and Dodger. It was some print that he took out of some cheap periodical, and there was two poles and a lot of people underneath.

2796. (Mr. Price.) Now we will go to the first election in 1866, Mr. Bagehot had been then for some time living in the neighbourhood of this town, and probably was known to the Liberal party, to some of them at all events?—Yes.

2797. Did he come first into the field with Mr. Patton?—I will not be certain.

2798. The way it was was this, was it not, Westropp was unseated for bribery?—He was.

2799. And Mr. Kinglake retained his seat?—And Mr. Kinglake retained his seat.

2800. There was a cross petition not proceeded with?—They proceeded with the cross petition and failed.

2801. And failed?—Yes.

2802. At all events Mr. Kinglake retained his seat, then there was a fresh election, and then Mr. Westropp came down to introduce Mr. Patton, did he not?—I believe he did.

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

2803. How soon after that did Bagehot appear in the field?—I am not certain about that. I should imagine Mr. Patton and Mr. Westropp were here first. Mr. Westropp is the cause of this bribery in this borough.

2804. Will you please to answer the question. Then Mr. Bagehot was introduced. Who introduced him?—I believe it was the lawyers. That is my impression.

2805. The same gentleman?—That is my impression. I believe in Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's time he took the lead.

2806. Is Mr. Bagehot a gentleman of large fortune?—I believe he is.

2807. When Mr. Patton was first in the field, how soon after did he take part in the election before Mr. Bagehot was announced?—We had a very exciteable year that year. First of all there was a petition. Then there was Mr. Bagehot's petition, and then Mr. Vanderbyl. They came in such quick succession that they kept a person in a state of ferment that I cannot exactly recollect, and I believe that some of those names I called over to you, as I told you before, I put those names down from memory, when Mr. Purcell called upon me for information, which I would not give until I came before you. But from time to time, I have put down the names, and I believe some of those names that I named then are men that I paid at Mr. Bagehot's election, and not Mr. Vanderbyl's. That I think you will find very probable; but I am certain of this that every man I named yesterday I paid that year and in that month.

2808. I want to know how soon you began to operate in that first election of 1866. How soon did you begin to have any communication with any of the lawyers, or what were the first steps that you took in the matter when there was a contest?—Mr. Bagehot, I think, came in in the same way as I described Mr. Vanderbyl, I believe, came up to the Cornhill. I believe he did, and he had a pretty good reception; I believe he came up in a carriage.

2809. I do not want to know that. I want to know what you first did. Did you see the lawyers at all, as soon as Mr. Bagehot was announced as a candidate?—Oh no.

2810. What did you do?—I went with the whole body. There was no time. The time was so short. I believe the writ was issued before they came down, and the time was so short that there was not much to do, and then the number of voters was very small, about 600, I think.

2811. Then when did you first begin to deal with any of the voters at all, on the nomination day or when?—Well, the nomination day came. Knowing that there was a petition we considered that the Conservatives had spent money again, because we thought, or I thought, and I suppose others did the same, that it cost us so much to fight that petition that they would think that we were too tired to have another, because it was the Liberal party of the town who paid the money to fight that petition of Mr. Westropp's.

2812. Who do you mean by the Liberal party?—I mean the voters.

2813. The men you have spoken of as men open to receive bribes?—No. It is not likely they would pay anything.

2814. Who then?—Why, the respectable ones. Some of them put down heavy stakes, I know.

2815. Then you say you thought the Conservative party would be tired of spending money?—No. I thought that they would begin, thinking we would not petition, because it would be no good for the Conservatives to bring a Conservative candidate here without bringing money.

2816. You have told us that. You do not answer the question. You need not make speeches against the Conservative party. You thought the Conservatives would spend money then. What steps did you take to counteract them?—We did not know what to be up to. We anticipated there would be money, but there was no certainty of it; and I do not think there was any money in the town until 8 or 9 o'clock the day of the nomination.

2817. Now then we have got it. How did you get to know that money came at 8 or 9 o'clock on the nomination day?—I believe on that election I was home in the evening, and I believe there was a person in the house with me of the name of Thomas Hill.

2818. That is the nomination day?—Yes. I do not think there were any others, and I fancy Andrew Allan came in. I know he did come in, and I believe he gave me 70*l.*, and I believe he gave Thomas Hill 50*l.*

2819. Have we had Thomas Hill's name before?—Yes.

2820. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he alive?—Yes.

2821. Did he give it to you in Hill's presence?—I believe he gave it to us both upstairs in each other's presence.

2822. (Mr. Price.) In gold or notes?—I believe in gold; and, in the result, I knew what it was for; and in the morning I went out to work; and after I got what I did, everything went on swimmingly. I went on bribing.

2823. Did you get rid of that money in bribing?—Yes.

2824. How soon did you get rid of that money?—I cannot charge my memory. As, I say, there was so much of it a time. I fancy I got rid of that 70*l.* in the morning.

2825. How many did you give that 70*l.* to?—Can you give us their names?—I can give their names.

2826. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you give them? 5*l.* at a time?—I believe I gave them 5*l.*, and promised them another 5*l.* when the election was over; and, I believe, they had every farthing I promised them. I spent that 70*l.*

2827. Let us have the names?—Charles Day, James Strong, William Morrish, John Hawks, James Harrington, Henry Vearncombe.

2828. (Mr. Price.) Is that the same man who was examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn, was he not examined there?—I think not.

2829. He was examined before the Committee of the House then?—I do not know. If I had the report here I could tell you in a minute.

2830. I think he was examined. John Vearncombe, is that the man?—No. Henry Vearncombe.

2831. (Mr. Anstey.) He was named by your brother in the trial of the election petition?—I cannot tell you. If I had that report before me I could tell you in a minute.

2832. (Mr. Price.) Very well, go on then?—James Bell, William Hill, John Thomas, John Brawley. I think I had better close for a minute or two there to state a circumstance that occurred with regard to this election before I go on to the remainder, without you like to take all the names first.

2833. (Mr. Price.) We had better take all the names first, and then you can tell any particular instance?—As I come to them?

2834. Yes.—John Thomas was the last.

2835. (Mr. Anstey.) John Brawley was the last?—Now Thomas Brawley. This is the man who took the money.

2836. (Mr. Coleridge.) Perhaps you had better give the names first?—William Francis, James Shattock, Richard Hooper, John Holdoway, John Staples, James Culverwell. There are others that I cannot name, because, as I told you before, very probably that when you come to examine those witnesses you will find some I named yesterday belonged to this election, and there are others that I cannot charge my memory with, but if I do remember them I will tell you.

2837. (Mr. Price.) How many do you make that in number that you have given us to-day?

2838. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have given us 17?—Then there is James Far Squire, I believe I paid him at Bagehot's election. I should not like to put a man to the wrong time.

2839. You wanted to say something special about this man Brawley?—Richard Hooper was the first man. He had the money from me, and I believe he took it to the Conservative party and was afterwards I suppose paid by them and voted for them, and this John Brawley did the same. There were two at this election. There are others that I cannot name that I gave money to, and it is impossible as I told you before, crowding upon a person's brain so much at once, and not keeping any record of it. I always furnished an account at each of these elections to Andrew Allan.

2840. (Mr. Price.) Then Andrew Allan would have, or must have had at one time or other, an account from you showing whom you paid this money to?—Yes.

2841. Then you say 17 of them had 70*l.*?—They had.

2842. You say you gave them 5*l.* a-piece, and 5*l.* more afterwards?—Some of them had 10*l.*

2843. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you got more money that morning?—Yes.

2844. (Mr. Price.) When you had spent that 70*l.*?—I believe I got a good many to go upon promise; a good many I believe; I know I did.

2845. How many?—A dozen perhaps.

2846. Did you get any more money after the 70*l.* was expended?—About half-past 9 or 10 o'clock a messenger came down to me.

2847. Where did he come from?—He told me he came from Henry Lovibond's.

2848. What is his name?—William Dyment.

2849. (Mr. Price.) What did he say to you?—He said "Bussell, I have come down from Mr. Lovibond "to tell you that you are neither to give money nor "promises." At that time I had no money, I was getting voters to go upon promise.

2850. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had spent your 70*l.*?—I had spent my 70*l.* That I was neither to promise nor to pay money. The result of it was, that there were several voters stood about there waiting to see if they would be called in.

2851. (Mr. Price.) Stood about where?—In the neighbourhood of the house.

2852. Your house?—Yes; and the result of it was that they came up and asked me if there was anything, and I said, "No, we have won our election."

2853. That was about half-past 9 in the morning?—10 o'clock.

2854. Mr. Bagehot had a very large majority?—Yes, I believe so.

2855. How much?—I should think perhaps 40 or 50. I should like the poll produced.

2856. It shall be produced. Do you think the constituency was polled out?—No, I do not think half of them were, but I believe there were half our good men behind.

2857. That being so, and you telling them there was no more to be had, you considered the election safe?—Yes, and the result of it was, that I saw some of them strolling up town, and it appears, as they strolled up town, some parties got hold of them and "bottled" them as it is called.

2858. Who was it "bottled" them?—I believe a certain number of them were taken in to the "Clarence" hotel, and a certain number of them taken into the "Bull and Butcher."

2859. In this street, kept by a man named Rose?—Yes, it was then kept by a man called Temblett.

2860. (Mr. Coleridge.) By "bottling" do you mean put into a room?—Yes.

2861. That is what you call "bottling"?—Yes.

2862. (Mr. Price.) What happened then?—I believe we went up to 12 o'clock, and then I believe about 12 it was "Whole roast and burn the bellows," that you had to run and get the voters, so that if we did not look sharp we should lose the election.

2863. Who said that, did any of the lawyers say that?—Well I believe I did. Then, I do not know who it was, but somebody brought me some more money. I cannot tell you who it was. It was not much I believe.

2864. How much?—I cannot tell.

2865. About 30*l.* or 40*l.*?—Very possibly it was. Then I got everybody to vote that I possibly could.

2866. How many of those men do you think were "bottled"?—They got in enough to get a majority.

2867. Tell me how many you think?—I should think 30 or 40.

2868. (Mr. Coleridge) Thirty or 40 at the "Clarence?"—At both houses.

2869. (Mr. Price.) You think there were 30 or 40?—I believe so.

2870. Were the two Lears amongst them, old Lear and the son?—I do not know. I cannot name the men, because I do not know.

2871. You knew they were voters?—I knew they were voters.

2872. I understood you to say some of them were men who had been asking you for money?—Yes.

2873. And then you said there was no more for them?—Yes; and they walked up to the town.

2874. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were voters you could have got if you had had money?—Yes.

2875. (Mr. Price.) You spent you think 30*l.* or 40*l.* more, is that all you spent that day?—My own impression is we spent 200*l.* that day; that is my own impression.

2876. You have said you first of all got 70*l.*, and then you think you got 30*l.* or 40*l.* more, now tell us about the remainder?—I think it was brought from the same man. The money came from Andrew Allan my impression is. He will be able to answer if I am correct or not, but, as far as my memory will carry me, it came from there.

2877. How did the amounts come?—They came as at the second election; the amounts came as I wanted it. As I wanted it I got somebody to run up for it.

2878. And you got as much as ever you wanted?—Yes. I went down to the station at half-past 1 o'clock, and I heard a man of the name of Bowden was coming; it has just been brought back to my memory, I forgot all about his name. That was the man. I believe I paid him afterwards, and I think I paid him at both elections. Now this man Bowden lived at Cardiff, and he had a vote here. I expected him to come by train, but he did not come. Mr. Hodge, down at the hotel, said, "I am going "to drive to Burnham."

2879. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would he not come by boat?—Yes, he did. Mr. Hodge said, "I am going "to drive down to Burnham; if you have a voter to "get go with me, and I said, 'I have one, and I will "'go with you.'"

2880. Who was ahead then, Bagehot or Patten?—I think it was a close run; I think it was about 1. I went with Mr. Hodge, and when I got down about Huntspill parish, there I saw my man coming in a donkey cart, and I drove back in the donkey cart with my man and Bowden.

2881. Did you pay him anything?—Yes.

2883. That was Bowden?—Yes.

2884. (Mr. Price.) You have not given us the names of those you paid on the second occasion or the third, except Bowden?—I cannot recollect them; I would give them if I could. I will tell you, there were a certain number of those men I paid 5*l.* to, and when I afterwards got the money I gave them the remainder. I know this, I believe I had the money to pay them the balance the day after the election; I believe so, I am not certain.

2885. (Mr. Coleridge.) From whom did you have that?—I believe from Andrew Allan; I am not certain about that. I had the money to pay them the balance.

2886. (Mr. Price.) That included the 200*l.*?—Yes; that I spent at that election.

2887. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you pay Bowden, did you say?—10*l.*, I believe.

2888. Did you see any of those men, who you say were bottled, go up to the poll?—No, I went to get all the voters I could; I did not stop about them.

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

2889. Do you remember seeing any of them afterwards that day?—No, they went away from my house, and I lost them. I sent others up town to look for them.

2890. (Mr. Price.) Do you know who they were?—I should know who they were if I saw them.

2891. Cannot you give us their names?—I fancy there was a man of the name of Billing.

2892. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he "bottled" at the "Clarence"?—I believe he went to one of the houses. I am almost sure Billing was one of the men. I believe he went to the "Bull and Butcher."

2893. Were they sober in the morning?—Yes.

2894. You did not see whether they were sober the rest of the day?—I did not see them afterwards, during the rest of the day.

2895. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you give me the name of anyone else who was "bottled" at that election of Bagehot's who afterwards voted for you at the following election?—No, I cannot; I know we paid some 17 or 18.

2896. Of those who had been "bottled"?—No; I believe that man Squires, mentioned yesterday, was a man who had been "bottled." I do remember a man now.

2897. Tell us his name?—He is a dairyman. It was reported he had got a cow. I do not know whether he did or not; it was a common report that he did. (The witness referred to the list of voters.)

(Mr. Price.) The dairyman's description will not be there to help you.

2898. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he one of the bottled witnesses at Bagehot's election?—It was reported he was.

2899. And he voted for you at Vanderbyl's election?—I do not know. I do not know that either one of them that was bottled at Bagehot's election voted for us at Vanderbyl's election.

2900. (Mr. Price.) About how many do you believe were bottled, 30 or 40?—Yes, I should think it was.

2901. Was that number enough to turn the balance of the election at that time?—I believe it was.

2902. At that time of the day?—Yes; they got a good number up.

2903. It was a little after 12?—Ten o'clock in the morning, some time after 10; it was about 10, I believe. I tell you the time as far as my recollection will bear me out, I believe this was about 10. Then I suppose they polled their men on as well as they could, and they kept their men on; I suppose that is what they did, that they kept their men in the house, holding them on as long as they could see that they had enough.

2904. Was it immediately after Lovibond stopped the money?—They went up directly.

2905. Directly after he stopped the money they went up directly and were "bottled"?—Yes; these were the men who went up and remained at the "Clarence," and voted for Patton, Haste, Squires, and Turner. That was at the election of Vanderbyl.

2906. You were looking for this man who was a dairyman?

2907. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you going to tell us about him?—It was reported that he had the price of a cow.

2908. From the other side?—From the Conservative side; and it was always reported that he would not go to the poll without a heavy sum.

2909. (Mr. Coleridge.) 20*l.* is about the price of a cow?—It was reported it was a higher sum than that; it was reported it was 60*l.* I do not know.

2910. (Mr. Anstey.) You mentioned this Henry Vearncombe?—Yes.

2911. Are you sure you did not bribe him at Benjamin Lovibond's own office?—I will swear I did not.

2912. I will not read you the whole of the evidence, as it is rather long, but I will tell you shortly the effect of it. Your brother, Robert Bussell, deposed, before the Election Committee of the House of Commons in 1866, to having met this Vearncombe between 9 and 10 at night, when he had got some money. He deposed to a conversation which Vearncombe had with him, in which he asked your brother to go and see Mr. Joseph Richard Smith for him; that he had been to Mr. Smith and asked him if he would support him in his contract for scavenging the town if he voted for Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Smith said in reply that he was to go and vote, and do what he considered right, and that when the contract was made, right would be done, and thereupon your brother refused to go; and Vearncombe said, "Well, "I have asked two or three times, and I have an "I O U from the other side, and unless some one "will intercede for me I shall accept it," and your brother said he afterwards met him coming from the direction of Lovibond's; so that it would appear that this Vearncombe had actually gone to this Lovibond to get the money?—You have made a mistake, that was not in 1866.

2913. No, 1865. I am telling you what took place in 1866 at this election trial?—All I know of that transaction is this, we had a pure election. It was the election of Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake, when we did not spend a penny, and I wish I never had.

2914. That was another election?—That was the election petition.

2915. Yes.—I wish we had always been the same as at that election.

2916. That was at another election?—Yes. A gentleman in the hall has said that I have stuck to 2,000*l.*

2917. (Mr. Price.) You have told us you spent 200*l.* on Mr. Bagehot's behalf?—Yes.

2918. Do you know what money was spent by others on your side at this election?—I believe there was some one who spent some money on his behalf.

2919. Mr. Bagehot's behalf?—Yes.

2920. How much do you understand, from what you have heard and known, that Mr. Bagehot paid in the way of bribes?—I have no doubt that he paid 1,400*l.* or 1,500*l.*

2921. You were going to say what some gentleman in the hall said?—There was some gentleman here, I do not know whether he is here now, he is a medical gentleman, who made an assertion that I and another gentleman walked off with 2,000*l.* I wish we had had it, no Tory would have got in.

2922. 1,400*l.*, you believe, was spent by Bagehot, is that the limit you think that he spent?—As I said yesterday, I am not certain about any amount spent than what I spent. It is not good for me to say. I made it a rule not to inquire.

2923. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the name of that doctor?—Bent.

2924. (Mr. Price.) He accused you of taking money?—He went about spreading a report, "No "wonder we feathered our nests, because we "pocketed 2,000*l.*, me and John Smith." That is the report that got about; and I think it is only right that he should come here before this inquiry and say whether that is true.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Do not go on lecturing us, that is our business and not yours. We know perfectly well what our duty is.

2925. (Mr. Price.) You say Mr. Bagehot was in a minority of seven at the end of the day?—There was treating at that election.

2926. A good deal of treating?—Just about the same as the others. A little more than the last election.

2927. Do you remember what was going on on the other side, as far as you saw or heard? I understand the same men you gave us yesterday were your fellow-workers in the bribery business?—Yes; about the same.

2928. If you remember any other name you will tell us?—I will give it to you.

2929. Having seen what was going on in the town, can you tell what else was going on besides this bottling on the other side?—I only know it was impossible for them to get their candidate in.

2930. What sum do you suppose they spent upon the voters?—No voters were named, but I have heard that they gave them 30*l.* or 40*l.* a piece.

2931. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you tell me the name of any voters who voted for you at the election of 1865, the general election, and who voted for Patton at the election of which we are now talking?—I could, if I had the poll sheets; I could not tell else.

2932. The register of 1865 will do for you, will it not?—I anticipate there is a new register.

(Mr. Price.) The poll sheets are all gone to the Crown Office.

2933. (Mr. Coleridge.) I mean, cannot you recollect any of those who voted for you in 1865, at the general election, and went and voted for Patton at this, and rather astonished you by their change of mind?—I could not tell you where I saw the list.

2934. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you the poll sheets there? (Mr. John Smith then produced the poll sheets.)

2935. (Mr. Price, handing some printed paper to the witness.) Those are returns of the poll, which appear to have been printed, showing how everybody voted?—That is the last election.

2936. Were there books published after each election like this?—Not by our party, I believe. I never saw one.

2937. What have you got in your hands?—They tell me they are the poll sheets.

2938. Who produces them?—John Smith.

2939. (Mr. Price, addressing Mr. John Smith.) Mr. Smith, how do you get them?—(Mr. Smith.) I kept them. I always have them by me.

2940. (Mr. Price.) They are your checks, made out by your poll clerks?—(Mr. Smith.) No; they are the ordinary poll sheets after the election.

2941. (Mr. Price.) I mean the real poll sheets have gone to the Crown Office?—(The Witness.) These are the poll sheets, got up afterwards, showing the list, and showing how each voter voted.

2942. (Mr. Price.) It would take you some time probably to do that?—Yes. If you give me all those sheets I will come up the first thing to-morrow morning and answer it.

2943. You will answer the question with respect to those who attended for you in the general election in 1865, and then voted for Mr. Patton?—Yes.

2944. (Mr. Anstey.) I should like also to have those who voted for Patton in election No. 1, and for Vanderbyl in election No. 2, in 1866?—I can give you all those names by referring to the sheet. I think it would be about 17.

2945. (Mr. Price.) You will look through the sheets of both those elections, and give us the names. We will write it down for you, and you will see exactly what we want?—At that election of 1865 there were a very large number bribed.

2946. We have not got to that. We are coming to that.

2947. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not answer the chairman's question, whether the majority was a very small one?—Seven, I think; seven or eight, I will not be certain.

2948. (Mr. Price). Was the constituency polled out. That sheet will show you, if it is added up?

(Mr. Coleridge.) I have written down for you "The names of voters who voted Liberal in 1865, "and for Patton in 1866; also those who voted for "Patton in the first election of 1866, and for the "Liberals at the second election in 1866."

2949. (Mr. Anstey.) And also at the election in 1868?—There were 294 voted for Mr. Bagehot; Mr. Patton, 301. Majority, 7. The electors polled 595. Electors unpolled, 36. Electors dead, 11.

2950. (Mr. Price.) The electors were polled out?—Yes. I believe that is the average number of those unpolled throughout the elections.

2951. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are there some voters who never vote?—There are some electors who do not vote.

2952. Never do? There generally is?—I will tell you in a moment. There is a certain class, sea-faring men; you cannot get all of them here. That is one class.

2953. (Mr. Price.) There are some shopkeepers who will not vote on account of their custom?—I think so.

2954. (Mr. Anstey.) About this instance of "bottling," is it the practice, or is it the only instance you remember of the kind at the elections?—It has been a common talk at the elections.

2955. Before 1866?—Yes, before that election; but I never did it in my life.

2956. Just answer my question. I will take care that you shall have a full opportunity of clearing yourself. Have you heard of it since that election of 1866?—No, I have not.

2957. Have you heard of any instance since then? I do not want to go into previous elections, but have you heard of any instance of this kind, in which the name of Lears, father and son, or father or son, is connected?—Yes.

2958. Now what election was it? Just give me the date of that, not the particulars?—I believe there was a report of that sort at the last election of Mr. Patton.

2959. That is the election you spoke to yesterday?—Yes.

2960. You do not mean the election of Mr. Patton, but the second contest of Mr. Patton?—The contest of Mr. Patton, when he was defeated. And now you bring it back to my memory, there was a report that there were a good many "bottled" up at the "Clarence," and they bundled them out when they found they were a good deal behind.

2961. It was to that circumstance my question was directed. One of the Lears is dead?—Yes.

2962. Which is that?—The father.

2963. He was a barber?—Yes.

2964. The son is living in Bridgwater?—Yes.

2965. Also a barber?—Yes.

2966. How many days had they been shut up at the "Clarence"?—Oh, they had not shut them up days. It is only during the time.

2967. (Mr. Price.) During the polling day?—The polling day.

2968. (Mr. Anstey.) In what state were they,—sober, or what?—I never saw them the following day.

2969. You said something about bundling them out?—I only said that was a report. I did not see it.

2970. Can you give me the names of the persons who told you at that time?—It was common conversation. I could not name any person's name.

2971. Can you give me the name of any person who is likely to know besides Mr. Leaker, is not that his name?—I may be able to find out when I leave here.

2972. Who is the waiter, or tapster, or maid at the inn who attends to that sort of thing?—I do not know.

2973. (Mr. Price.) You do not attend the "Clarence"?—I went in one election, and there was a fight there in consequence of my being there.

2974. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not want to hear any mere reports any further than for my information,—to know whom I am to send for. I want you to name the name of any person who you think is likely to say aye or no from his knowledge as to the alleged "bottling" of Lear, father and son, and a number of voters at the election of 1866?—If I can give any information after I leave the Court I will produce it in the morning.

2975. (Mr. Price.) Now let us go to the two elections of 1866, with the exception of your giving us the information on the sheets, as to the number of voters?—Quite so.

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

2976. Is there anything else before we leave 1866, that you recollect now, that I have not asked you about?—Not at present.

2977. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were the same people employed on the Conservative side that you told us of?—They were about the same men always engaged on both sides; you will find the same men always engaged on both sides from election to election.

2978. (Mr. Price.) The next election we go to is the general election of 1865, in which Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp were returned, and in which Sir John Shelley was defeated. Was that the election which you say was pure on your side?—It was.

2979. And not on the other?—No, I am sorry to say it was not.

2980. Sir John Shelley came down here at that election?—Yes.

2981. We all know that he had been a member for Westminster for a long time?—Yes.

2982. Tell us about the conduct of that election as far as you can. Before we come to that, do you remember on that occasion whether Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake were in the field before Sir John Shelley came down?—Mr. Westropp had been sticking to the borough since he was defeated at the election of 1859.

2983. I know, and he had announced his determination to come down again?—Well, he spoke to the borough like this in the interval; he had been made a Bridgwater brick, and we could not get rid of him.

2984. At all events, he was constantly down here during those five or six years?—He was, and it was always understood he would stand again.

2985. Were your party expecting to have a contest?—Yes.

2986. Mr. Westropp had been a defeated candidate?—He had with Mr. Henry Padwick.

2987. He had been a defeated candidate and had announced his determination to come down again?—Yes.

2988. Had Mr. Westropp announced his intention to come down?—Yes, and it was always understood he would come down.

2989. When Colonel Tynte retired, your party looked out for a second man, and they brought down Sir John Shelley?—They did.

2990. You say that was a pure election on your part?—Yes.

2991. Tell us what means you have of informing us as to what makes you come to that conclusion?—I must begin with the first to give you the beginning of it. From what I recollect of the circumstance, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond went up to Sir John Shelley, and he consented to stand. Sir John Shelley sent his address down, and I believe my impression is that Sir John Shelley's address was issued, and then came a hitch; and the question was, what was the hitch? Nobody knew. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond went back to London again, and when Mr. Benjamin Lovibond came back, it was an understood thing that Sir John Shelley had said, having learnt from the report that he had had of the corrupt state of the borough, that he would refuse to stand unless the election was conducted pure, and he came upon that principle, and upon that principle we fought it.

2992. Therefore it was determined you say then by the leaders of the party?—Everybody.

2993. That no money should be spent?—No.

2994. And that was generally known?—Generally known, no; that would not do.

2996. "I insisted upon seeing Mr. Lovibond, before "I would go down, and I extracted from Mr. Lovi-"bond, who was my agent, that upon his word of "honour as a man and a gentleman nothing had "occurred and nothing should occur that could in "any way implicate me with improper practices"?—No; you asked me whether it was generally known we were not going to spend money. Now, it would not have done for us to have done that, because if we had, the balance-men would have gone over to the other side for a very small amount.

2997. You left the people, who were generally comeatable, in ignorance as to whether there would be money or not?—Yes; I left them in ignorance whether there would be. We told them it would be all right.

2998. You did not promise them money?—We told them it would be all right.

2999. When you said to these persons it would be all right, did you intend to convey to them, and did you wish them to believe, that they would have money?—Yes, I did.

3000. (Mr. Anstey.) Was this after you were aware that Sir John Shelley had refused to come down except upon the express and solemn undertaking of the lawyers here, upon honour that there would be no corrupt practices at the election?—It was.

3001. And, nevertheless, you left these people to understand this?—Yes.

3002. (Mr. Coleridge.) And as far as you know, the lawyers did honourably keep to their promise?—Yes, they did.

3003. (Mr. Price.) And you being a wise man, engaged in these election proceedings, held out this promise to these men, and told them "it would be all right"?—I told them to wait a bit, and I told them it would be all right by and by. I did not promise them any money. I told them to wait and it would come all right. I did not promise them money; it was the reverse of that.

3004. Then the election went on. Who informed you that there had been this compact between Mr. Lovibond, as a matter of honour, and Sir John Shelley, that no money should be spent?—Mr. Foister, I believe it was.

3005. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you no conversation with Andrew Allan then?—Andrew Allan had nothing to do with it at that time. Mr. Foster was the man. Andrew Allan had nothing to do with it; he began in 1866.

3006. Mr. Foster was your colleague in the matter?—Yes.

3007. These other men who generally acted in the election, and who officiated in bribery business, did they hold out the same thing?—No, they were not told to do anything of the sort.

3008. Did they do so?—No doubt they did.

3009. Then came the polling-day, and then Sir John Shelley was defeated?—Yes.

3010. Then you say that you believed money was given on the other side; what foundation have you for saying that?—The money went wholesale to the "Golden Lion."

3011. When you say "wholesale," what do you mean by "wholesale"?—They polled them by fifties at a time.

3012. 50*l.* to a man?—No, 50 at a time they brought up, and it was always reported—I do not know it myself—that the principal man who paid the money was William Heal. That was the person who was reported to have paid the money.

3013. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he alive?—Yes.

3014. (Mr. Price.) So far as you know how many men received money from the Conservatives on that occasion to vote?—A very great number.

3015. How many do you think?—100.

3016. Was Mr. Westropp at the head of the poll, or was he not?—At the head of the poll 100. He was the highest candidate.

3017. What over Mr. Kinglake?—Yes, Mr. Kinglake 257, Sir John V. Shelley 237, Mr. Westropp, 328.

3018. Then he was at the head of the poll?—Yes.

3019. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then Mr. Edwards did not go to the poll?—Mr. Edwards came here of a Sunday. He went away the next morning.

3020. What did he do when he came here?—I believe he went to the "Clarence."

3021. Who did he see?—Well, I went to a place of worship that morning, and when I came out from there, the first thing that I heard was, that the second Conservative candidate had arrived and was gone off again.

3022. Do you know that he went by train up to Barnstaple?—No, he came from Barnstaple here.

3023. (Mr. Price.) He had been announced as a candidate for Barnstaple before he came here?—Before he came here.

3024. Then when did he come, an hour or two after?—I cannot answer for the train, but he came here, and I believe the colours were all about the street, "Westropp and Edwards."

3025. How long was he in the town?—A few hours.

3026. Did he come attended by any gentleman? If you have heard the name will you tell us?—Nobody.

3027. Cannot you tell us?—No name that I heard. I cannot recollect the parties who went down to the station with him when he went away. I never heard anything said about it. There were placards out that he would be down the next day by the express, which is the middle of the day. Now, whether the hustings were erected or not I would not be certain.

3028. (Mr. Coleridge.) But he never did come?—He never came back here.

3029. (Mr. Price.) Just tell us from that sheet how many voters were unpolled out of the whole constituency?—51.

3030. That is a larger proportion than usual, then?—Yes.

3031. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know a person being employed as an agent on your side at that election called William Onion or Onions?—I never knew him employed at all on our side. He has taken an active part, but I never knew that he paid any money.

3032. We will not quarrel about the term "employed," employed himself then?—There is no doubt about that, he took a very active part.

3033. What is he?—He is an outrider for a brewer.

3034. What is the name of the brewer?—George Knight & Sons.

3035. And he was then, I believe, in the same occupation?—Yes.

3036. In the same employ?—Yes, he was.

3037. Do you know William Poole, of the "Bristol and Exeter Inn"?—Yes.

3038. Did you never hear, I do not say that it is true you know, but did you never hear during that election that William Onion had endeavoured to bribe this William Poole to vote for Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley, by means of a bit of chalk and a piece of board, using the one to write on the other, the name of the sum which he was to have if he voted for those two candidates?—Well, I do not recollect for certain his name, but there were several of us charged with bribery at that election. I believe I was.

3039. Therefore, when you say it was a pure election on your side you do not mean to say that there were not a great number of you who were charged with having given or taken bribes?—You can see by the petition, I believe. I forget the numbers, but I know they brought up a petition, and they had not a leg to stand upon, and they had to abandon it.

3040. You do not answer my question, do not you remember that a number of you were charged with giving and taking bribes by the other side?—That was by the Conservatives.

3041. You were aware that proof of agency as it is called was not brought home to Mr. Kinglake?—The first time I have understood that is since I have been here, because I wanted to go into the box.

3042. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any treating at that election of 1865?—Yes, there was.

3043. (Mr. Anstey.) I am not asking you whether Onion was an agent or not, or whether he might have employed himself, no matter about that. Have you any reason to believe that this statement is true as regards Onion?—I believe the statement that Poole made is false, that was my impression.

3044. And still is your impression?—Yes, and always was.

3045. Have you heard of another case; a statement made by George Heal. Do you know George Heal?—Yes.

3046. I will read to you his statement; he is on your side, George Heal?—I believe he is of late years, but I believe he has been on both sides.

3047. That he might have said in speaking to a voter who he believed to be Poole. He is not certain whether it is Poole or not. He might have said, "those who promise and do not give are a damned "sight worse worse than those who do give." Now, supposing George Heal admits that he might have said that, or supposing he did say it, would you still be of opinion that the election had been conducted with perfect purity by those who take part on the Liberal side?—Well, as far as my own knowledge went.

3048. Only as far as your own knowledge went?—As far as my own knowledge went.

3049. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any treating on the Liberal side at that election?—Yes.

3050. Then it was not pure on that occasion?—Yes.

3051. What was your bill for that?—I think about 30*l.*

3052. Who paid that?—Mr. Lovibond.

3053. And did Sir John Shelley complain of that?—No, he did not.

3054. And I believe there was treating at the other public houses in the same ratio?—There was.

3055. How much do you imagine was spent in treating on your side in 1865?—In what way?

3056. It was a general election, and, therefore, it was a good while about, but how long before did they begin treating, and how long at your house?—About the same time I told you.

3057. About a fortnight?—About a fortnight or three weeks.

3058. And you had a bill of somewhere about 30*l.*, or more?—I do not know; my impression is it was not so much.

3059. You sent that bill in to Mr. Lovibond?—I took it there.

3060. How did you make it out?—"To refreshments supplied."

3061. To whom?—To refreshments supplied at a certain election.

3062. (Mr. Price.) To voters?—Very likely. Whether they were voters or no I would not be positive.

3063. (Mr. Coleridge.) And after that you talk about the purity of the election. That was paid by Mr. Lovibond?—Yes, and that was paid just prior to the election of 1866.

3064. From your knowledge of Bridgwater, how many houses should you say were open to treating on that occasion. Tell us roughly?—I should think we have about half the number of publicans that the Conservatives have.

3065. That is not what you were asked; just tell us how many houses you would say were open to treating on that occasion?—About what I told you this morning.

3066. About a dozen?—Yes.

3067. Do you say that one with the other their bills were as large as yours?—I should think not.

3068. Which bill would be the largest; where would be the largest treating?—I do not know.

3069. At your own house?—Very likely.

3070. Do you suppose 500*l.* was spent in treating?

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

—Mr. Lovibond gave me 35*l.* to pay the expenses of five men who came home from Ireland.

3071. Did you give it to those men ?—Yes.

3072. (Mr Price.) What was that for ?—For their travelling expenses.

3073. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you call that a pure election ?—This was the men's expenses in coming here.

3074. Do you know that it is contrary to the law to pay their expenses ?—It was not then ; I am not certain.

3075. How came their expenses to come to 35*l.* ; do you recollect their names ?—I do not recollect their names.

3076. (Mr Price.) Where did they come from ?—I think some of them came from London, and I think some of them came from Dublin.

3077. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you write to them to come up to the election of 1865 ?—Yes.

3078. And when you wrote to them, did you state that you would pay them ?—No, I did not, but they expected I would. I told them they would have paid all the expenses.

3079. It was not paid till sometime afterwards ?—No.

3080. Did you advance the money, and get it back again ?—To some of them.

3081. Did you not pay the expenses before or on the day for voting ?—No.

3082. Just be careful; or the day after ?—No.

3083. When they had voted, I suppose, they went off to London ?—Yes.

3084. Who were they ?—The masters of vessels.

3085. You told them that they would get 5*l.* a piece ?—Yes.

3086. And whether their expenses had been 5*l.* or not, you gave it them all the same ?—Yes.

3087. (Mr. Anstey.) There are those two other cases. The cases I have referred to you—both of them before that—had reference to particular elections. I ask you now with reference to this particular election. The first is the case of another Heal, William Heal. It was stated in evidence by several witnesses before the House of Commons, when the petition against Kinglake's return (the second petition) was tried, that this William Heal had an old bribery debt standing over from 1857, as long ago as that, which had not been paid to him, which the Liberals said had been paid for him to Foster, but which they also said had been embezzled by Foster on its way to Heal, that this old debt (of 40*l.* I think it was) was mentioned by William Heal in Benjamin Lovibond's office as the only condition on which he would vote for Shelley and Kinglake, and that Lovibond and the other lawyers gave him a general sort of promise that it should be paid ?—The first time I ever heard of that was when the statement was made in the House of Commons.

3088. In the House of Commons ?—Yes, that was the first time I ever heard that in my life, and I was surprised at it.

3089. But you heard it then ?—I heard it then ; I was there.

3090. And it has been repeated since ?—I do not know.

3091. At the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—I do not know.

3092. Supposing that took place, you would not say that either the election of 1857 or the election of 1865 was a pure election ?—I should not.

3093. Have you any reason to doubt the truth of Mr. William Heal's statement, and the statement of those who were present that heard the lawyers give this gentleman a promise that it should be looked into ?—I should rather believe the lawyers.

3094. The promise that it should be looked to ?—I should rather believe the lawyers that what they said was true.

3095. And not what Heal said ?—Not what Heal said.

3096. Vearncombe's case I mentioned just now by mistake in reference to a subsequent election, and it turns out that it took place at this. Now your brother appeared as witness before this election committee ?—He did.

3097. He was examined with reference to this very case of Henry Vearncombe ?—I believe he was.

3098. And in stating the rumour, or stating what took place between him and Vearncombe, who, for some reason or other, was not called by Mr. Kinglake or Sir John Shelley to contradict him, he stated the day, the hour, and the place where the money which he heard chinking in Vearncombe's hands was paid to Vearncombe, as he said, on his promise to vote for Kinglake and Shelley, he having previously promised not to vote for them, but for their Conservative opponents. Now I have made that statement of the case in a general way to you, I have merely to ask you this question : do you believe that statement of your brother ?—I do not.

3099. If it were true, that also would show that your practices would not be pure in the election of 1865 ?—It would.

3100. Therefore it is a question of your brother's credit ?—Yes ; and I think you will find in the same report from the same witnesses a charge against me,—in the same report.

3101. Well, if there had been no report by the same witnesses against you, would you have believed your brother's statement about Vearncombe ?—No.

3102. Are you on good terms with your brother ?—No, not for months before this election occurred. I never gave him an angry word in my life. I never intend to do.

3103. Are you on good terms with him ?—No ; I have never had a fall out with him.

3104. Have you been on speaking terms with him for some years ?—No.

3105. Nor at the election of 1865 ?—We were not.

3106. I ask you one more question, which has been suggested to me by the learned chairman. In the face of all this enormous treating, this corrupt practice, the organized treating of 1865, how happened it that no evidence on the subject was given against Mr. Kinglake in regard to it ?—I do not understand the question.

3107. You know Mr. Kinglake was declared the sitting member ?—I do.

3108. Can you explain the fact that no evidence of this enormous organized treating was given against Mr. Kinglake ?—I do not know.

3109. Were you examined ?—I wanted to be examined.

3110. Against Mr. Kinglake ?—No, for Mr. Kinglake.

3111. If you had gone up to the House of Commons to be examined were you then prepared to state what you have stated now, that there was this organized and enormous system of treating going on for the benefit of Kinglake and his colleague ?—I should.

3112. You know what the result of that would have been ?—I considered then that treating was not so strict as it is now.

3113. But you cannot throw any light upon the fact the cross-petition against Mr. Kinglake was not much pressed ?—No.

3114. Was there no compromise ?—I am certain of that.

3115. Not amongst the lawyers ?—No, I think not, because they were at daggers drawn.

3116. Did no money pass ?—Not to my knowledge.

3117. You know that that blunts the points of daggers though they are drawn ?—Yes.

3118. (Mr. Coleridge.) After having told us of your own bill of 30*l.* for treating, which was paid by Mr. Lovibond, the lawyer, do you still adhere to an answer you gave me that they always honourably kept to the compact they gave Sir John Shelley that it should be a pure election ?—No.

3119. (Mr. Price.) You will not call it a pure election now ?—I do not know.

3120. (Mr. Anstey.) You will not now say that they always honourably kept their compact?—No.

3121. (Mr. Price.) I want you to turn the matter over in your own mind. You have said that having heard these things which have been brought to your recollection you do not think it was a pure election. Have you made a full disclosure with reference to this election of 1865?—I have, to the best of my belief.

3122. (Mr. Anstey.) The shorthand writer and the secretary wish to know the christian names of Turner and Haste.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Charles Haste and John Turner.

(Mr. Price.) And their addresses.

(Witness.) One I think is Polden Street. I am at a loss to know whether it is Joseph Turner or John Turner.

3123. (Mr. Coleridge.) John Turner.

(Witness.) John Turner lives in Polden Street. He is a draper; and Charles Haste lives at Silver Street.

Short adjournment.

3124. (Mr. Coleridge.) The last election before this was in 1859, was it not?—It was.

3125. (Mr. Price.) There is nothing you wish to add to what you have told us about the election?—I do not recollect anything.

3126. I think I may just ask you this before you leave that. You said, I understand—it came out in the course of an examination by one of my learned brother Commissioners—that with regard to that petition (I understood you to say) there was an idea that got abroad in the town that the petition was going to be dropped?—Which one?

3127. The one of 1865, against Mr. Westropp?—Oh, no.

3128. I thought you said that some parties went up to London to insist upon its going on?—That was in the present year.

3129. Well then, there was no idea, was there, at that time that the petition was going to be dropped against Mr. Westropp?—Oh, no; they were determined to carry it.

3130. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said that several of the townspeople put down heavy sums to carry on that petition of 1865. Who were they? Who were the principal ones?—I think the present mayor gave some, G. B. Sully.

3131. What did he give?—Well, I forget what it was he gave.

3132. Do you know how much was collected altogether?—I have heard the amount, but I entirely forget.

3133. But about a thousand pounds?—I think it cost over two.

3134. (Mr. Price.) Was that all collected in the town?—Yes.

3135. Two thousand pounds?—Yes.

3136. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not Sir John Shelley or Mr. Kinglake give any?—Sir John Shelley did, but I believe Mr. Kinglake paid his own costs to defend his own seat. I believe that was it, but the lawyers can inform you that. My own impression was that that was how the matter stood; but I think that certain parties took up like shares, that was, according to their number of shares they contributed. They put a certain price down. I gave 3*l.* towards it myself.

3137. And were there many subscribers of smaller amounts than that, of a pound and that sort of thing?—Very likely. I know what I gave.

3138. Did you see any list?—I never saw any list only when I put my name down.

3139. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it not done on the principle of shares?—Yes; and they that would not take a share up had to put the money down.

3140. How many shares were there?—You would have to take the amount of money that was subscribed at a fixed sum, and then the rest would be the number of shares that were divided, and the money came to so much a share.

3141. (Mr. Coleridge.) The amount of the shares would in reality be decided by the amount of the costs?—It was so.

3142. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any persons besides you, who had been engaged in giving bribes, take shares or subscribe to this fund?—Yes, I believe there was.

3143. Many?—Some.

3144. Tell us their names?—I think Bunter did; and I fancy Mr. Heal did.

3145. Garrett?—No, Garrett is a young man.

3146. Allan?—Very likely. I wont answer for the names.

3147. Therefore you qualify your first statement which was that it was the respectable men who subscribed to this fund and not those guilty of bribery?—Well, I am included in those guilty of bribery. I was one of them.

3148. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, Andrew Allan another?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) But you know that when the learned Commissioner asked you the question, "Were they persons concerned in bribery?" you said, "No, the respectable men." Now it appears that there were a great many who had been guilty of bribery who subscribed to this fund.

3149. (Mr. Price.) Was there any arrangement made with the lawyers that they were to undertake it for costs out of pocket only?—I believe so.

3150. Who were the solicitors to the petitioners?—Benjamin Lovibond was the principal one, and the rest assisted him. I believe that that is how the matter stood.

3151. Costs out of pocket only?—I believe so.

3152. (Mr. Anstey.) Every one of the lawyers, or many of the lawyers, or some of the lawyers themselves had charges of bribery against them with reference to that very election?—I do not recollect.

3153. Don't you remember Benjamin Lovibond had?—Yes, he had; the hairdresser.

3154. Then of course in supporting this petition they were supporting themselves?—Well, you see it was a counter-petition put in after the petition was filed on the part of the Liberal party.

3155. However that was, they were personally concerned in its success?—They were.

3156. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean that the petition against Kinglake was prior to the one against Westropp?—No, the one against Westropp was filed first.

3157. You said this was a counter-petition by the Liberal party?—No, no, the Conservative party.

3158. (Mr. Anstey.) Against Kinglake. I suppose it was done for the purpose of intimidating the Liberal party to withdraw theirs?

(Mr. Coleridge.) For a compromise?—Yes.

3159. (Mr. Price.) As you have used the word compromise, I will ask you, did you ever hear anything suggested or talked of as a compromise of the election petition of 1865?—No, I never did.

3160. Never?—I believe that the gentlemen who had the management (I cannot charge my memory who was the committee) were fully determined to carry out that petition.

3161. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said just now that it was presented, according to the best of your belief, in order to compel a compromise?—No, no.

3162. What did you say just now?—I am talking about the Liberal party.

3163. You told my learned colleague just now, the learned chairman, that you never heard anything about a compromise connected with the petition of 1865?—I say so now.

3164. You said just now, to the best of your belief, one of the petitions of 1865, to wit, the counter-petition, was presented with that view and no other?—No, I say my impression is that the petition was presented for that reason.

3165. (Mr. Coleridge.) By the Conservatives?—Yes, to induce the Liberal party to withdraw.

3166. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you have heard about a compromise?—No, it was my own impression.

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

3167. (Mr. Price.) You never heard there had been ?—No.

3168. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told me before we adjourned that you were very anxious in the 1865 petition to go into the witness box ?—I was.

3169. But I suppose the lawyers were far too wise to allow you to do so ?—I believe it was the London agent.

3170. Because probably you had told the lawyers what you have told us to-day, that you had spent all this money in treating, and spent this money, 35*l.*, upon men who came from a distance ?—I had not had it then.

3171. (Mr. Price.) Did you say to them you wished to be examined ?—I did.

3172. When you said that, what did anybody say to you ?—They said their agent, whoever he was, said that I had better 'bide out of the box.

3173. Keep out of the box ?—Yes.

3174. Did he say why ?—No ; he did not give any reason why.

3175. Did he say you knew too much ?—No, they said the petition was closed.

3176. (Mr. Coleridge.) He thought Mr. Serjeant Ballantine would cross-examine you, perhaps ?—I do not know.

3177. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell the lawyers on that occasion what you have told us, namely, that after the solemn pledge that had been given by the lawyers here to Sir John Shelley, which was not kept afterwards, you complied with the request of the balance men, and told the balance men it was all right ? Did you tell the lawyers in London that ?—No.

3178. Did they know you were going to tell that ?—No.

3179. Were you going to tell the committee that ?—If they had asked me to explain.

3180. (Mr. Coleridge.) You wanted to be examined. What did you imagine you could prove on behalf of Mr. Kinglake or against Mr. Westropp ?—I considered the evidence was against me with regard to a man of the name of Coates and my brother, was false. I wanted to disprove it.

3181. It was a personal matter ?—Yes.

3182. I suppose the lawyers told you that was a collateral issue, and they would not let you be examined ?—That was my reason, to clear up my own character.

3183. (Mr. Anstey.) You wanted to contradict your brother ?—Certainly.

3184. With whom you were on bad terms ?—I am not on bad terms.

3185. You said you were then. You were not on bad terms ?—No; I am not on speaking terms. There is no ill-feeling as far as I am concerned.

3186. (Mr. Coleridge.) But yet you do not speak ?—We do not speak.

3187. (Mr. Price.) Has he always been a Conservative ?—Always voted Conservative.

3188. You have always been a Liberal ?—I have always been a Liberal.

3189. Is it about politics you disagree ?—No, it was on another transaction—a business transaction.

3190. (Mr. Coleridge.) We won't go into that. When did you first have a vote ?—In 1852.

3191. (Mr. Price.) I want to ask you this. Consider it carefully before you answer the question. It is going back again to the time of your going away when the election inquiry was about to come on before the learned judge I want you just to consider. Have you any idea whatever that the money that was given to you to go away with was actually given to the person who handed it to you, Mr. Smith I think you said, by Mr. Vanderbyl himself ?—No, I do not think he was here. My own impression is that Mr. Smith must have had it from some of the lawyers ; that is my impression.

3192. Have you never heard that it came direct from Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I have asked Mr. Smith and he refused to tell me.

3193. You have asked him where it came from ?—Yes ; I should have been very glad to have known.

3194. He never would let you know ?—No, he would never tell me where the money came from.

3195. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose he told you it was much better you should not ?—To be sure he did ; the first 15*l.*

3196. He told you in those very words probably ? There is no doubt about it.

3197. (Mr. Anstey.) That there be no misunderstanding about your last answer, you know he had a partner here who is said to have done a good deal of dirty work at the election, a certain Fennelly. Now, have you any reason to believe that any money came from Fennelly or through Fennelly ?—I do not know who the man was that I had the money from.

3198. Was it not Fennelly ?—I do not know. I do not know Fennelly.

3199. Do you know Fennelly's clerk ?—I do not.

3200. Lomas. You said no before you heard his name you know ; therefore I will put it to you again. Do you know a man of the name of Lomas who was seen about with Fennelley and Vanderbyl ?—I do not.

3201. Who used to go to Hennett's and Spinks', and conduct the negotiations with the Tories through Hennett and Spink, for the unseating of Kinglake ? I have seen a stranger down here with Mr. Vanderbyl at some times, but I have never known his name. That was not the man to the best of my belief. I will swear that that was not the man that gave me the money as far as I could recognize him.

3202–3. Where was Vanderbyl's money deposited in the town ; what bank ?—I do not know. I do not know that he had any deposited.

3204. Do you know whether either of the candidates, Vanderbyl or Kinglake, used to do business at the bank ?—I do not.

3205. Do you know whether either of the candidates, Vanderbyl or Kinglake, used to do business with the bank or anywhere in this way, not compromising themselves by drawing cheques, but sending persons with verbal instructions to receive money ?—I do not.

3206. You have never heard of such a case ?—I never have.

3207. Have you any doubt that sums of money were provided either in that way or some other way direct or indirect, both by Kinglake and Vanderbyl, for the purpose of paying illegal expenses at this election ?—My impression always was that the money was divided.

3208. Will you answer my question, yes or no ? Have you the slightest doubt that both these gentlemen—both these candidates rather—contributed money avowedly for the purpose of paying illegal expenses at these elections ?—No, I have not.

3209. You have no doubt ?—No.

3210. One question more about treating in reference to these elections that have taken place in Kinglake's time. Is not it a fact, after all that has been paid by Kinglake or for Kinglake towards the satisfaction of expenses incurred in treating, there is at this moment an unpaid claim by Phelps of the "Commercial Inn," an inn not mentioned by me to you to-day, for the corrupt practice of treating the voters, of the large amount of 75*l.* ?—I believe there is. I have heard of it. That was in Sir John Shelley's time, I believe.

3211. (Mr. Price.) Now then, we will go to 1859. In 1859—— ?—There was Henry Padwick.

3212. Mr. Westropp ?—Yes.

3213. Mr. Kinglake ?—Yes.

3214. And Mr.—— ?—Colonel Tynte.

3215. Was Colonel Tynte at that time and had he been sitting member ?—For some years.

3216. He was a gentleman who, we know, has large property in the country ?—Yes.

3217. And Mr. Kinglake had been then sitting from 1857 ?—He had.

3218. Then Mr. Bagehot and Mr. Westropp were two strangers ?—They were. It was the first of their appearance in the borough.

3219. Mr. Kinglake you say had been elected in 1857 ?—He was elected in 1857.

3220. He had sat two years when the 1859 election was ?—He had.

3221. In 1859, therefore, there was a contest at once announced. It was known that there was going to be two and two ?—Oh, for some time. I think there was some rupture that the Government went out again at that time.

3222. (Mr. Anstey.) The first Reform Bill ?—(Mr. Coleridge.) Lord Derby came in then.

3223. (Mr. Price.) Both Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp came down here and commenced their canvass ?—They did.

3224. Early before the election ?—I believe they were down here five or six weeks before the election.

3225. Do you know who introduced those two gentlemen ?—Oh, they are always introduced by the lawyers, nobody else.

3226. Then how soon did you begin to take an active part in that election ?—Oh, I began as soon as our candidates came down.

3227. How long before the election did they come down ?—I rather fancy that as soon as they made their appearance—the Conservative candidates—ours came too.

3228. What was the date of the election ?

(Mr. Coleridge.) What time of year was it ?

(Mr. Price.) What time of year ?

(Mr. Anstey.) Summer, of course.

(Witness.) April 30th, 1859 (referring to a paper).

3229. (Mr. Price.) As you have got that sheet in your hand, you may as well tell us what are the numbers? —Colonel Tynte, 290 ; Kinglake, 279; Padwick, 230; Westropp, 208.

3230. Westropp was at the bottom of the poll ?—208.

3231. How many remained unpolled ?

(Witness.) Shall I give you the majorities ?

3232. Yes ?—Majority for Colonel Tynte over Padwick, 60 ; over Westropp, 82. Majority for Kinglake over Padwick, 49 ; over Westropp, 71. Electors polled, 512 ; electors unpolled, 31 ; dead, 10.

3233. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the Padwick that you have named the Padwick whose name has become so notorious in turf transactions ?—It is.

3234. Mr. Henry Padwick ?—They discovered him directly he came here that he was the man.

3235. Connected with the Duke of Newcastle's estate ?—Yes.

3236. (Mr. Price.) Was it known generally that Mr. Padwick was coming down as a man of money ? —I do not think he was in the town ten minutes before he was known, and everybody knew that he had plenty of money.

3237. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was an attorney, was not he ?—Yes, I suppose. He always went as such. You see he was discovered directly as he came here ; and they got placards out that he was connected with a man of the name of Cook who was hung.

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, no, Palmer.

(Witness.) Palmer, for poisoning Cook ; and they got placards out about it directly ; our party.

3238. Your party ?—Yes.

3239. Have you got a placard ? No.

3240. (Mr. Anstey.) How do you mean "connected" ?—I believe he was connected in the evidence, in giving some evidence. And an awful fight there was over it. They brought a gallows, and one of the most awfullest placards that ever you clapped your eyes upon.

3241. Have you got one ?—No. We had to burn it, or else there would have been a riot. You would say if I brought one here that it was one of the awfullest placards that was ever brought out about a man.

3242. Just describe this placard to us ?—(Witness, explaining by reference to the rostrum on which he was standing), This part here was about so long, and about the depth, or it might be a little longer to the floor ; and the figure was put on a pull and hung up, so that pull a string and down he would run. On this placard some person or another (I have never to this day heard who painted it) represented Padwick with this Palmer hung up to a gallows ; and one portion of Padwick right down from the nose was painted blue, and I think the other was white ; but it was a most ghastly thing. I never in my whole experience ever witnessed——

3243. (Mr. Price.) What was Mr. Padwick represented as doing ?—Being the means of hanging Palmer.

3244. He was acting as Jack Ketch ?—Yes. He had no nerve afterwards.

3245. It was known that he was a man of money. Tell us about Mr. Westropp ?—He was represented to the Conservative party as being a very rich gentleman.

3246. They said so, did they ?—I believe he has a lot of money, because he spent a precious lot here.

3247. (Mr. Coleridge.) That would be a reason for not having it ?—He must have had it.

3248. What was done on your side ? Did you take an active part ?—Very likely I went out canvassing. You see I was a young man at this time.

3249. (Mr. Price.) Was this your first election ?—

(Mr. Coleridge.) 1852 was the first.

(Mr. Anstey.) The election of 1857 you were in ?—Yes, the first of Mr. Kinglake's.

3250. (Mr. Coleridge.) You voted in 1852 ?—Yes, I voted.

3251. (Mr. Price.) Well ?—So everything went on. I was not placed in the same position. I did not take the same position then as I have lately, not such an active part, not as I have at these elections that I have already told you of ; and I did not inquire then anything about money matters. I did not ask anything about it. At both of those elections, when the money was going, Foster came and asked me to spend it.

3252. In 1859 did Foster come to you and ask you to pay any money ; spend any money ?—No, he told me he should be ready for me the next day. That was the poll day.

3253. (Mr. Coleridge.) On the poll day ?—On the nomination day.

3254. (Mr. Price.) He told you that he should be ready for you the next day ?—Yes.

3255. Did you ask him what he meant by that ?— —I knew what he meant—that he should have some money.

3256. (Mr. Anstey.) How did you know that ?— He said he would have it ; that he would be ready with the money the next day.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is the first time you have mentioned money.

3257. (Mr Price.) That was the first occasion on which you had been entrusted with money for bribing purposes ?—Yes, it was.

3258. You had nothing to do with it in 1857 ?— I had to do with the election, but not with the bribing.

3259. I should like you to tell us,—what did you say ? When he said he would be ready with the money, did you express any disinclination to deal with the matter in that way ?—Well, I did not.

3260. You accepted the situation ?—I did.

3261. (Mr. Coleridge.) This was your first bribery 'bout as far as I understand ?—It was the first time.

3262. Then you must have had some conversation with him about it, and whom you were to pay it to ? —You did not ask me that question. Mr. Foster asked me if I could go and get some men, and I said I would look round, and I believe I did. The fact of it is, I knew I did. I looked round and saw who I could put my hands upon the next day. The result of it was——

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

3263. Tell us who they were now ?—I cannot tell you their names.

3264. Not one of them ?—No, I could not.

3265. (Mr Price.) Could you, if you look at the poll sheets ?—Well, you see it is so many years ago, and I did not keep any memorandum of it.

3266. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you got them. You got them for money ?—Got them for money.

3267. (Mr. Coleridge.) We want the names, for we have to schedule them.

3268. (Mr. Price.) Do the best you can, by looking at the poll sheets and refreshing your recollection, to tell us the names of those you gave money to ?—I will do that.

3269. Did he say how much you were to have ?—No ; his uncle would take the leading part about it. His uncle was a tailor, in the habit of visiting my house.

3270. (Mr. Anstey.) What is his name ?—Henry Faun. You see, unfortunately, those people are dead.

3271. His uncle, Henry Faun, a tailor, was visiting at your house ?—He was in the habit of visiting here.

3272. He was an active man ?—He was very active. He and Foster took the lead.

3273. (Mr. Price.) In bribing ?—Yes.

3274. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you then keep the same house you do now ?—I did.

3275. (Mr. Price.) What did they tell you ?—You know the conversation in these matters is that you must get all the men you can.

3276. Did they say what sum ; how much you were to give ?—No, not a word.

3277. You were to have no limit ?—No.

3278. You were to use your discretion ?—Yes.

3279. They gave you to understand that ?—Yes.

3280. That you might call for any quantity you wanted ?—Yes.

3281. What did you do on the polling day, having got that information ?—I think I had better tell you how matters were standing in the borough first. The Conservative party was here,—Mr. Padwick's and Mr. Westropp's party, and they had been spending money a long time.

3282. Previously to the nomination day?—Previous to the nomination day.

3283. How had they been spending money, in treating or what ?—In giving it to the voters. A person of the name of John Murlis took the principal part.

3284. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he alive ?—I saw him in the Court here since the inquiry commenced.

3285. (Mr. Price.) Then he is probably alive ?—He kept the "Albion Hotel," and they spent the money very freely. Now Mr. Benjamin Lovibond did not believe it.

3286. That is the gentleman who is dead ?—Yes. He did not believe money was going until the first tally of the poll came up in the morning ; and when the first tally came up, he saw the class of voters that were in it, and he knew very well they were spending money ; and then the cry was, barricade the streets ; stop all the voters from coming up, and nail all you could. That was the balance men ; and the result of it was we did.

3287. There was only one polling place at that time ?—It was built at one place ; but it was three I think polling places.

3288. You used the word barricade the streets so that you could stop the way towards the polling-booth ?—Yes.

3289. Was that done ?—Yes.

3290. To stop people from going without permission ?—Yes.

3291. Who was stationed at these barricades ?—Every person was of the Liberal party.

3292. How were the streets barricaded ?—Just two or three of them would go at the end of the street, and if you saw a voter come up who would take money, seize him.

3293. And carry him off ?—No, not carry him off ; he would go off himself if he knew there was money.

3294. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time was this ?—About 8 in the morning ; very early.

3295. (Mr. Price.) Was the Conservative party barricading as well ?—No ; they were rather asleep. They had bought so many voters on the night before that they made sure of it. They did not trouble their heads at all about it, and that is how they lost. They turned to and got some little banners up. I have had put into my hands one of these cards which is supposed to be a copy of the placard I was speaking of, but this is not equal to the original. (The witness handed a small card to the Commissioners). That was some cards that were got out afterwards.

3296. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the meaning of the double face there,—the pink and blue ?—Pink on one side and blue on the other.

(Mr. Coleridge.) What is the meaning of the different colour on one side of Padwick's face and the other ?—That was what made it such an awful looking thing.

3297. What is the meaning of it ? Does it mean double-faced or what ?—I suppose it was meant for that. And he had changed his colours as well. He had been a Liberal.

3298. What are the colours in this borough ? What are the Liberal colours ?—Purple and orange, the Liberal colour ; and blue and pink, generally speaking, for the Conservatives, if they had any colours. They were the principal colours.

3299. It is blue and pink instead of the old blue and orange ?—It appears that some few years before Padwick came down here I believe he was steward to some person, and then the estates were sold into some other hands ; sold off to a Conservative, and then he became Conservative.

3300. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you do next ?—I was speaking of the banners that the Conservatives got out. It was a nice little hand-banner to put in the voters' waistcoat pockets on a little pin, "All right at last." That was what the Conservatives had on the day of the poll, when to their surprise, about 10 o'clock, they had lost the election and we won, and Mr. Padwick went away,—I think it was a train at half-past eleven that day. He went away, and I fancy and I believe that Mr. Westropp remained behind.

3301. Yes, but Mr. Bussell, there was an interruption owing to some unfortunate disturbance just then, and you did not finish your statement. You said that the plan was that barricades were formed to seize every Conservative voter that came up ?—Every voter that you knew was going to the Conservative side.

3302. Did you say that you took the money from them and that the voters then went away themselves? —No, we got hold of them and then gave them money our side, and then they polled with us.

3303. (Mr. Price.) What time do you say that was ?—This was about 9 o'clock in the morning. It might be a little before ; it was very early in the morning.

3304. At that time which had the majority ?—We was about on an even then. It was this tally that sold the Conservative party. When they brought up the first lot it was all the balance men.

3305. How did it sell them ?—From that tally we knew the men would have money before they went to poll.

3306. (Mr. Anstey.) You say that very hour the election was won by you ?—I say that within an hour afterwards the election was won.

3307. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean that within an hour the whole constituency was polled out ?—No ; we had got a majority of the men that they had bought. We picked up a majority of the men that the Conservative party had bought, and then they would have lost the election.

3308. I suppose if the Conservatives had got hold of these men and overbid you——?—They had paid them before.

3309. But if they had got hold of them after you had paid them again ?—We stuck to the men.

3310. You polled them ?—We polled them.

3311. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did the Conservatives pay a head ?—10*l.*

3312. What did you pay ?—10*l.* I had a hundred pounds. It was paid to me by Foster in his grandfather's house.

3313. (Mr. Price.) These men had had 10*l.* from the Conservative side ?—Yes.

3314. Apiece ?—Yes.

3315. Then they had another 10*l.* from your party and then they voted for your party ?—They did.

3316. How many men were there paid like that ?—It was generally said 40 or 50.

3317. Five hundred pounds were spent by you, and they had had 500*l.* from the other side, the same 50 men ?—Well, it was all a squabble.

3318. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you answer the question ? (Mr. Price.) Was that so ?—Yes.

3319. That was all you spent ?—Yes, a hundred pounds.

3320. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you promise any ?—I never promised any at that election, I was not up to it then.

3321. You had not credit ?—I had credit as far as people trusting me with money goes.

3322. (Mr. Price.) But you were not known to the voters as the accredited financial agent ?—No.

3323. You had not been installed into office ?—No.

3324. You had 10 men at 10*l.* a-piece ?—Yes.

3325. Give us the names of these 10 men ?—I will look over the list.

3326. But besides that 100*l.* that you spent yourself how much do you know had been spent on your side ?—There was a report that there was a very heavy sum.

3327. (Mr. Coleridge.) I just suggest this to you, that it is most probable that of the 10 men whom you bribed then, as far as they were alive, some of them would have come out again in the next election of 1865 ?—Very likely.

3328. So that by looking at those in 1865 and 1866 you will very likely be able to find the names of some of them ?—I know one man that is dead. It was the narrowest chance in the world that he had not had my 10*l.* when he had had money from two men besides before.

3329. What was his name ?—Squibbs.

3330. Was he clerk to Bate ?—I don't know. I don't know any of his family.

3331. Had he had two 10*l.* notes from your side ?—Yes.

3332. And he had had 10*l.* from the other side too ?—It was reported so.

3333. Then you found him out ?—I was not going to give it him myself, I was going to give it by another man. I went to the party I gave it to, Mr. Charles Bulpin, and I said, "That man that you "said you had polled has been paid, please to give "me the money back" and he gave it to me directly.

3334. Is Bulpin alive ?—He is in America. He was a gentleman farmer here in this neighbourhood, a great many people about here then were farmers who came in from the country.

3335. (Mr. Price.) Did Squibbs get 10*l.* from you ?—It was reported he had some from the Conservatives, I don't know how much.

3336. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave him the 10*l.* on your side ?—Faun gave him one, I forget who the other was.

3337. Is Faun alive ?—It is the man I am speaking of, he is dead.

3338. (Mr. Price.) Faun is dead ?—I do not know whether his daughter has any recollection of it.

3339. Faun is dead, and Bulpin is gone to America ?—Yes.

3340. You were going to say that a heavy sum was paid by your side, what heavy sum ?—I should say at that election three or four thousand.

3341. Spent ?—Yes.

3342. How much on the other side ?—It was generally reported that they had spent four or five thousand.

3343. That would be about ten thousand pounds in the borough ?—That was what the general ——

3344. And the constituency was how much, five hundred and something ?—About six hundred.

3345. Do you believe, Mr. Bussell, that that ten thousand pounds, nearly ten thousand pounds, was distributed, into how many hands ?—Oh, I cannot say. There was a report, you know, that Murlis ran away with a lot of it, whether that is true I don't know.

3346. Which side, Conservative money or Liberal ?—Conservative.

3347. (Mr. Coleridge.) What has become of Murlis ?—He was here the day before yesterday, he has got a subpœna.

3348. (Mr. Anstey.) Then there has been a report against Murlis the same as against you of his having allowed some money to slip through his fingers on the way ?—There was never a report of that against me.

3349. Why, you have told us of Dr. Bent ?—Oh, yes.

3350. Then another man on your side, was not he charged with embezzling some money, this man Foster ?—There was a report of it.

3351. At this very election ?—Whether it was true or not I do not know.

3352. (Mr. Price.) What was the sum that he got hold of ?—He had the handling of the whole amount.

3353. How much was it said that Mr. Foister had stuck to ?—I think it was something like thirty or forty.

3354. (Mr. Anstey.) No more ?—No, we never heard of any more.

3355. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much did Murlis stick to ?—I forget the amount.

3356. But about ?—

(Mr. Price.) A hundred ?—I fancy it was some hundreds the report was.

3357. Tell us, as far as you know, of that sum spent at that election on both sides, into how many hands or voters' pockets do you believe that money went; out of that constituency of 500, or whatever it was, how many should you think were not bribed ?—Well, I should think the number was always about the same as what I told you yesterday.

3358. Two hundred and eighty ?—No, about one hundred and forty on one side, and eighty or eighty-five on the other.

3359. Who had not had money ?—Yes.

3360. Then out of the constituency of that time there would not be more than 260 who had not had money ?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Two hundred and twenty, 140 on one side and 80 on the other.

3361. (Mr. Price.) How many polled ?—512.

3362. And you think at that election out of 512 who polled there were not more than 220 who did not receive bribes ?—Yes.

3363. And that is the only way you can account for 10,000*l.* being distributed ?—I think 10,000*l.* would not be exceeding the mark.

3364. You talked about 10*l.* a man on each side, that would be 20*l.*, many of them ?—Yes.

3365. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not this money that you alluded to just now in connexion with which Foster's name is mentioned, was not that a sum of thirty or forty pounds said to be money promised to one voter only ?—Yes.

3366. (Mr. Price.) There must have been more than 10*l.* a man ?—As far as I know I never paid one penny more than that.

3367. If you add them together, take 350 of them, then you know that giving 10*l.* a man would only bring it up to —— ?—Something like 3,500*l.*

3368. Then you say there was as much spent on the other side, or more ?—Yes.

3369. Then they must have had —— ?—A large number of the men had it both sides. That accounts for it.

3370. It was quite notorious that they had ?—Yes. Then there was lawyers to be paid, and all these men.

3371. (Mr. Anstey.) You have mentioned Murlis, was this Murlis the same man whose house was proved at the trial in 1838 to have been taken up for bribery purposes by the Tories ?—I believe he could not have been.

3372. It was mentioned in the report of the trial that the house in which the unknown stranger was placed along with Smith to identify the voters who had been bribed was a house hired of one Murlis or an empty house given up by one Murlis ?—Oh, it must have been his father, he is not old enough for that I think.

3373. (Mr. Price.) Was it the late Mr. Bate who acted in that election ?—Mr. Bate acted as the agent for Mr. Kinglake.

3374. Then Kinglake and Colonel Tynte were the two candidates on the Liberal side ?—They were.

3375. Who do you think found the money at that election ?—My impression was that they both found it.

3376. We do not want to disclose a man's private affairs unnecessarily, but it was well known for many years that Colonel Tynte was a man in embarrassed circumstances ?—Yes.

3377. Well now, that being well known as far back as 1859, do you believe that Colonel Tynte found the money himself ?—It was generally reported that his sister found the money, Lady Cooper. And there was a report that there was a thousand pounds sent to him from Brighton to come down, and he lost it in gambling that night. It was reported so certainly.

3378. At all events it is quite certain he had not got the money ?—He had not got the money.

3379. Well now, what do you say as to Mr. Kinglake ? What proportion of the three or four thousand pounds that you say was spent, or probably more, what proportion of it do you suppose Mr. Kinglake found at that election ?—I always fancy, or my own impression was, that when two candidates go together they divide the costs. That was my impression.

3380. Then the money according to your rough estimate would be about 2,000*l.* for each of them ?—Yes. You see I might be exceeding it.

3381. But according to your estimate, assuming that to be correct, it would come to about 2,000*l.* apiece ?—It would.

3382. (Mr. Anstey.) What other corrupt practices to your knowledge were committed at this election of 1859 ?—Nothing without it was treating.

3383. Besides bribery, I mean ?—Treating.

3384. I do not want to go into details of course ; was the treating more considerable than the treating of 1865 ?—It was.

3385. And of course than any subsequent one ?—Yes.

3386. How much more, double ?—I should think it was.

3387. (Mr. Price.) What should you say was spent in treating ?—Eatables and drinkables.

3388. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much was spent altogether ?

(Mr. Price.) Apart from money spent for bribes. We are now talking of money spent in treating ?—Perhaps a thousand pounds.

3389. (Mr. Coleridge.) On each side ?—Both sides.

3390. (Mr. Price.) 500*l.* on each side ?—Yes.

3391. (Mr. Anstey.) Were all the public-houses open on one side or another for treating ?—Pretty near.

3392. Your house amongst them ?—Yes.

3093. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was your bill at that time ?—I forget.

3394. About 50*l.* ?—No doubt it was about that amount.

3395. (Mr. Anstey.) You have told us that the bill for 1868 has not been paid you. All the others were paid for always ?—Yes.

3396. Benjamin Lovibond paid them ?—Foster ; he is the agent.

3397. That is Lovibond's clerk ?—Yes.

3398. (Mr. Price.) Foster gave you everything you got in the shape of money ?—Yes.

3399. (Mr. Anstey.) Which was Bate for ?—Bate was for Kinglake.

3400. Benjamin Lovibond was for Tynte ?—Yes, I believe that this was the way that they arranged. I expect that Mr. Bate if he paid any money for Mr. Kinglake handed it over to Mr. Foster. That is what my own impression about the matter was.

3401. (Mr. Price.) There are a certain set of men that you say are the men that you seized hold of and carried off and got them to vote upon payment of money ; but in addition there were these men who would be sufficient to turn the scale. I suppose what you said before would apply to them really, that there were a great number of men who would vote for your side when they knew that money was going. Those who had not voted would then call upon you and be paid for their votes ?—The men who had not polled then had the money either before or afterwards.

3402. Were they men, who like many when they knew money was going but had not voted, would then call on you to pay them for their votes ?—On our side they had not polled ; those had the money before or afterwards, in addition to those we took away from our opponents.

3403. Then nearly every man after a certain hour polled for money ?—Not every man.

3404. But the great majority after that time polled for money ?—To be sure.

3405. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there any bottling at this election on your side ?—No, we took them at once. If we could get hold of a single man we took him right away.

3406. (Mr. Price.) Who were the other men engaged as you were ?—I cannot tell.

3407. Allan did not act ?—No, he had not anything to do with it. I believe John Smith was one along with Thomas Hill, and there may be five or six others. Faun took the most leading part, and Foster would pay them himself. There was no mistake about Foister.

3408. Who else ? Was there any disguise about this matter at all ?—No, everybody knew it.

3409. Did you give them the money openly in the street ?—We did.

3410. You did not take them into the cellars ?—No.

3411. Gave it to them openly in the streets ?—Yes, everybody there could have seen it.

3412. (Mr. Coleridge.) Afterwards you became more secret in your operations ?—We were forced to ; the fact was then, the Conservatives bribed to such an extent that we were compelled ; that is the reason we paid them in the street. We did not think that Mr. Padwick had courage to go on with the election petition.

3413. (Mr. Price.) There was no petition after 1859 ?—They filed one.

3414. It was not proceeded with ?—No.

3415. Was not that petition presented for the mere purpose of inducing parties to some prosecution for libel to abandon that ?—It was reported so, and when the prosecution was withdrawn the petition was.

3416. Both were withdrawn together ?—Yes.

3417. Mr. Heard was party to the prosecution and to the petition ?—Yes, Mr. Reed brought an action against Mr. Heard for a libel.

3418. Mr. Reed the attorney ?—No, this was a gentleman who died lately at Burnham, connected with the Somerset and Dorset Railway, and Mr. Heard was the proprietor. I do not know whether the paper was called the "Standard" then—the "Times," he wrote an article about Mr. Reed bringing the money into the town ; that they accused him of.

3419. Was Mr. Reed a Conservative or Liberal ?—A Liberal ; the result was that Mr. Reed commenced an action against Mr. Heard at once, and this petition was filed to upset this.

3420. That was the petition against Mr. Kinglake?—No, I did not take it for that, but for the express purpose of making them withdraw the action.

3421. But the petition was against the return of Mr. Kinglake and Colonel Tynte?—Yes.

3422. And they paired off one against the other, the petition was dropped, and the prosecution was dropped?—Yes, and the report was, and from that day to this certain people in the town believed, that a relative of Colonel Tynte paid 2,000*l.* for the withdrawal of that petition, but I believe it to be a falsehood.

3423. Was that Lady Cooper?—Yes.

3424. (Mr. Anstey.) That did not go to committee?—No.

3425. The committee was not struck?—No.

3426. And I see by an answer that was given by Colonel Tynte in the House of Commons, that everybody in Bridgwater knew that there was no intention of going on with it, he told that to the House?—Very likely; he did not often say much in the House, he was a silent member.

3427. That is the only petition; the one which we have examined you upon?—That is all.

3428. (Mr. Price.) With the exception of your looking through the names and furnishing us with any you know who gave bribes, that is all as to the 1859 election?—Yes.

3429. (Mr. Coleridge.) Prior to 1859 had the borough in the same sort of guilds of solicitors managed the whole thing as now?—I cannot charge my recollection.

3430. Although Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was the leading man on your side?—Yes.

3431. Who on the other?—The same as now. Mr. Bate and Mr. Lovibond at that time, I believe, took the whole control, and the other lawyers had nothing to do with it hardly.

3432. Who took the lead on the Conservative side?—I believe Mr. Trevor and Mr. Smith, and one or two others.

3433. Mr. Vesey?—I can tell by looking at this whether that is the occasion the gentlemen of the profession voted for the Liberals, and the next for the Conservatives.

3434. What profession—the legal profession?—Yes; that is the election (referring), he went over to the Conservatives.

3435. Who?—Mr. William Brice.

3436. Which election did he first go for the Conservatives?—This must be the election I believe, 1859. I believe in 1859 he voted for Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake.

3437. In 1859 he joined the Conservatives by voting for Westropp and Padwick?—Yes. I was going to say that I believe at one election, I cannot charge my memory which, he said on the hustings he should like to crush a Liberal under the heel, like he would a toad under the heel.

3438. (Mr. Price.) You say that Mr. Padwick left on the morning; did Mr. Westropp stay on?—He remained, and was on the hustings, I believe, at the close of the poll.

3439. Did he declare his intention of coming down again?—Yes, he said he would be made a Bridgwater brick, and he stuck to it.

3440. Bricks being the subject of a great trade here?—Yes.

3441. Did he continue, as far as you knew, from 1859 down to the next time he stood, spending money at intervals?—Yes, I believe he did. He was free with his money always.

3442. Did Mr. Westropp spend much money in the intervals?—I believe if anybody was in distress he would subscribe to it, if it was a case needful.

3443. Do you know whether he subsidized the borough in any way?—I believe not.

3444. Was there any fund of any sort or kind?—No.

3445. To which he subscribed to keep up his election?—No, I do not know of any.

3446. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Westropp's own account of the matter is given in his evidence before the House of Commons in 1866. To use his own words, he nursed the borough from the time of his first coming down in 1859 to the election in 1865?—He did.

3447. What do you understand by his saying he nursed and nourished the borough?—Why, he stuck to it, and opened his pocket freely.

3448. (Mr. Price.) In what way?—By distributing money about. He gave it to everybody pretty nearly, and his party made free use of it.

3449. Did the shopkeepers?—No, I do not know.

3450. To whom do you say, then?—If there was anything at all going on in the town he would give 5*l.* or 10*l.*

3451. That is subscriptions to charities, or what?—Anything at all going on that wanted a subscription he would down with it.

3452. Only in that way. You do not mean he sent money down to be taken into a man's house?—No.

3453. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he give to the races?—I am not a racing man, and never attend to it.

3454. Did not you ever hear what Mr. Westropp subscribed to them?—I believe the members always gave a plate, and I think he gave a little more; I fancy so, I could not be certain. It is a matter I do not go into.

3455. (Mr. Anstey.) He further stated, that beyond nursing, and in another place nourishing, the borough, he "never interfered with any of the concerns of the "election, and studiously avoided going into any "place in any way connected with the election"?—I believe that was true, for he spoke the truth then.

3456. Another witness, examined before the same Committee, says, that an inducement held out to persons to vote by him, the witness, was, because Mr. Westropp had given so much money to children. What is the meaning of that?—I suppose that means the schools.

3457. Not the children individually?—I should think not.

3458. Not a 10*l.* note to a child?—I should think not.

3459. You do not know what it means?—I do not.

3460. (Mr. Price.) How much do you suppose that it cost Mr. Westropp per year for what you have heard, to keep up his position in this borough?—From 200*l.* to 300*l.* a year, I should fancy.

3461. When not a member?—Yes.

3462. How much did it cost Mr. Kinglake when he was a member?—I cannot say.

3463. As much?—No, I should think not; perhaps 100*l.* a year. I do not know that it cost him that.

3464. Have you had the distribution of any money at any time between the elections?—Yes; Mr. Westropp took the trouble once to send me 3*l.* for a pilot. Some pilots got their boats ashore down at Coombe, and it was put into the papers, and it appears that Mr. Westropp saw it in the paper that these pilots had got their boat ashore and it was likely to become a total wreck, and he at once sent me 3*l.*, saying, he did not know the residence of the pilots, would I be kind enough to hand it over to them. I handed it over to them, took their receipts and enclosed it, and I told him I had handed the money over and enclosed was the receipt returned to him. I did not say more.

3465. (Mr. Anstey.) During the years which elapsed between the years 1859 and 1865, the period of Mr. Westropp nursing or nourishing the borough, did he come down himself and make these payments, or was it done through the lawyers?—He was down here repeatedly; I cannot say how often.

3466. Were the payments made through the lawyers or by himself?—I cannot say; all I know is, if he gave any money we saw it in the Bridgwater paper, which was their organ.

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

3467. He has stated, in his same evidence, that he had two agents as the election, one called an agent for election purposes, and the other a professional adviser, both lawyers. Is that the custom of candidates here, to select one lawyer to be agent for professional purposes, and the other for election purposes ?—I believe it is.

3468. What is the meaning of the difference when each is lawer for the same person, namely, the candidate ?—I cannot make it out.

3469. Is it done to blind the public not to make inquiry ?—That has always been a mystery to me.

3470. The one lawyer is James Trevor, called election agent; and the other lawyer is Mr. Smith, junior, called professional agent, both being lawyers for the same candidate at the same election, and doing the same business. What is the meaning of the distinction ?—I never saw them here in my life; but I saw all of them connected with the case about the town with them, and I took them always to be one, and all the agents I hear considered that.

3471. I shall ask you now with reference to the question of expenditure. You have heard the statements contained in the papers presented yesterday, or the day before, of Mr. Westropp, Mr. Kinglake, Mr. Gray, and Mr. Vanderbyl's election expenses, do you believe those papers contain a true account of the election expenses of those persons ?—No, I do not.

3472. Do you believe that a fraud has been committed in the preparation of those papers by all four of them ?—I cannot say whether it was done as a fraud or no. I do not know what construction to put upon them.

3473. (Mr. Price.) Must not the candidates have known, those practices having gone on for years, that the returns made would not represent anything like the expenditure on their behalf ?—If they were to tell me no I would not believe them.

3474. (Mr. Anstey.) And their lawyers, too, must have known ?—Yes.

3475. Did Mr. Foster abscond before he died ?—Never.

3476. Where did he die ?—Here in practice.

3477. Was it before the election of 1865 ?—He was dead some years before then, I believe.

3478. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whose clerk was Foster originally ?—Mr. Lovibond's.

3479. Was he ever clerk before that to Mr. Bate ?—Never, to my knowledge.

3480. In the election of 1859 what had Mr. Bate to do with Mr. Kinglake ?—Mr. Robert Bate was always Mr. Kinglake's agent, as far I understood.

3481. Did you know of his expending any money at that election ?—No, I did not.

3482. Have you ever heard of his having brought in a bill to Mr. Kinglake for some 1,000*l.* odd for money expended, in addition to the legal expenses of that election ?—Not until I heard it here; but I believe so.

3483. Have you reason to believe that money was the money which passed afterwards through Foster's hands to you, and others like you ?—I believe so.

3484. Do you believe that it came from Mr. Kinglake, or that it was advanced by Mr. Bate without Mr. Kinglake's knowledge, and afterwards paid by Mr. Kinglake ?—I cannot answer.

3485. Was Mr. Bate a man in a position to advance 1,000*l.* on his own account ?—Oh, four or five times that amount.

3486. (Mr. Anstey.) On no security ?—I suppose he would take security; he would not like to let me have it, perhaps.

3487. Was he a man who could afford, without a certain chance to get it back again, to advance it ?—No; I believe the reverse.

3488. (Mr. Price.) He would not have done it ?—No.

3489. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you of the same opinion as the mayor, that if there were no lawyers here there would be no bribery ?—I can hardly say that.

3490. You have good experience ?—Yes.

3491. What should you say ?—As far as the present practices are persisted in, if they do not adopt some means of voting in secret it will be always so, whether there are lawyers or not.

3492. Have you known what you call corrupt practices set on foot here, except through the lawyers ?—No.

3493. And your experience is upwards of 20 years ?—No.

3494. It is about 20 years since you voted first ?—Yes.

3495. (Mr. Price.) You became a financial agent in 1859 ?—Yes.

3496. (Mr. Coleridge.) What had you done to entitle you to become a financial agent in 1859, because you tell us you had done nothing in 1857 ?—I had done nothing in the shape of money in 1857.

3497. What made them come to you, what had you been doing between 1857 and 1859 to get yourself into this financial position as one of the Liberal bribers of Bridgwater ?—In the first place in 1852 I voted for one candidate.

3498. In 1857 you did not have anything to do with money, and you voted again, I suppose ?—I wanted to explain the matter why they placed some confidence in me; in 1852 I voted a plumper for Mr. Kinglake.

3499. Did Mr. Kinglake stand first in 1852 ?—Yes.

3500. In 1852 Mr. Kinglake was not elected, was he ?—No; I was going to tell you we had no chance of winning. I took my ground and stuck by it, that was, I considered Kinglake was an ill-used man, and I stuck to him through thick and thin.

3501. What was your special interest in Kinglake ?—I liked his principles.

3502. Had you ever known him before ?—Never. I say I was brought up to the sea, I never stopped ashore but five or six weeks at a time. I plumped for him, and I had great temptations thrown in my way, but all of them would not induce me to vote.

3503. We will come to that by and by. Did you vote for him in 1857 ?—No; for him and Tynte. We healed up the differences.

3504. In 1852 you had nothing to do with money ?—No.

3505. What occurred between 1857 and 1859 to exalt you to the position of being one of the Liberal bribers ?—I suppose they considered that I stood to my faith.

3506. Had nothing taken place ? You know it was a dangerous thing, putting yourself in the hands of persons in that position. Did not the lawyers or any of the Liberal party have a communication with you between that and the next election ?—No; I never spoke to anybody but Mr. Foster.

3507. How long before 1859 was it you spoke to Foster ?—We were always in conversation.

3508. Between 1857 and 1859 ?—Yes.

3509. How long before 1859 did he know you were ready to assist him in corrupt practices ?—Not a day before I took the money.

3510. The day of the nomination ?—The day of the nomination.

3511. The day of the nomination 1859 was the first time that any conversation occurred between you and Foster as to your willingness to act for him ?—It was. He asked me if I had any objection to spend a little money.

3512. For him ?—To get the candidates.

3513. Do you say something to him about the danger ?—No.

3514. Did he say to you ?—No.

3515. Did he, as you were a young man, give you any precautions ?—Yes; he told me not to pay a man twice if I could help it.

3516. What else ?—Nothing; they do not tell you anything.

3517. Do you mean that it is all intuition ?—Yes ; you have to learn that yourself.

3518. Natural intuition ?—Yes.

3519. Then you had no conversation with Foster or anybody else until the nomination day ?—Not about money.

3520. About treating ?—Yes ; he paid the account.

3521. Then I suppose it was your being one of those who bribed through treating in 1857 that made him trust you to bribe with money instead of through treating in 1859 ?—Very likely.

3522. Also in the meantime had not you been very active in municipal elections ?—No.

3523. When did you first commence your activity in municipal elections ?—I cannot get hold of the year ; I was going to tell you the party that caused me.

3524. Was it before 1859 ?—I do not think it was. I will tell you whether it was before 1859. If a man is down here (referring to a list of voters). No, I do not think it was before 1859, because I see the man is here, voted.

3525. You had begun corrupt practices in parliamentary elections before you had anything to do with municipal elections ?—I had.

3526. What have you done in the way of corrupt practices at municipal elections ?—I have given a little drink.

3527. On every municipal election that has taken place, since what year will you put it since you first began to give away a little drink ?—I never had but two accounts.

3528. Have you had two for treating at municipal elections ?—Yes.

3529. When ?—The time I voted for this man.

3530. When was that ?—I cannot charge my memory when this man was.

3531. Was it 10 years ago ?—Within 10 years.

3532. Who was the man ?—A Conservative, W. D. Bath, was the cause of my voting Conservative.

3533. And you voted for him although he was a Conservative ?—Yes, he had been an alderman here for many years, and I considered his party served him very bad. I said, " Mr. Bath, we will get you in " next time, and show your party they cannot throw " you overboard."

3534. And he paid you a bill for treating in consideration ?—He paid me 50*s*., I think.

3535. How long before the election did you begin treating ?—The same day.

3536. Did you take the voters up to the poll for him ?—It is very likely.

3537. Then the reward you got for that was a bill of 50*s*. for beer ?—Yes, about 50*s*.

3538. Chiefly for beer, I suppose ?—Yes, it was for beer.

2539. When was the next time you did anything in treating at municipal elections ?—The last, 1868.

3540. Who were you supporting then ?—The Liberals.

3541. What amount of treating did you do then ?—I think it was the same amount.

3542. Who paid you that ?—Nobody.

3543. Not anybody yet ?—No.

3544. Did you ever give any money, half-a-crown or a shilling, to a man to go and vote at a municipal election ?—Yes, I believe I gave sixpence to two men the last election to go in and have a quart of beer.

3545. Instead of going to your house ?—Yes.

3546. Is that all ?—If close to a public house in the town I may have put my hand in my pocket, and given them the price of a pint of beer. I never gave them money except for drink.

3547. Has the municipal corruption gone on in like ratio with the parliamentary ?—No, there has been no corruption in the municipal election.

3548. You say, with the exception of treating, there has been no corruption ?—Not in my time.

3549. Have you heard of 50*s*. being given to anybody else ?—No.

3550. Do you believe it, I ask ?—No.

3351. To what extent have public-houses been kept open for the purpose of corruption ?—Very little.

3552. You got 50*s*. ; were there many houses who got 50*s*. ?—I should not think there were.

3553. You think a municipal election gets over with a certain amount of treating ?—You cannot get over that giving a pound or two away.

3554. The last previous municipal election almost preceded the parliamentary ?—Yes.

3555. Was there anything done at the municipal which was to be carried on to the parliamentary ?—No.

3556. Or were any promises made for the municipal which should be carried out by payment for the parliamentary ?—No.

3557. Then, as far as your knowledge goes, you do not see any connexion between parliamentary and municipal elections ?—Not a bit.

3558. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything more to say about 1859 ?—Not without you can bring anything to my memory.

3559. (Mr. Price.) You are not prepared to go further into the 1859 election to-day ?—This is exactly the position I am in. I have had a very long examination, and that is my memory so far.

3560. (Mr. Anstey.) I wish you to bear in mind that when we come to the election of 1857, I shall ask you again about the sum alleged to have been received by Foster for payment to Mr. Heal of 30*l*. or 40*l*. respecting the election of 1857. I shall also ask about 1852, and I particularly wish you to tell me, if you can, about the election preceding of 1852, which was the first election at which you voted ; you may have a distinct recollection of transactions that took place at that election you took part in, if so, I should like you to tell me ?—I was never here at an election before, I stated.

3561. Before you went to sea ?—I went to sea, and was never here at an election before that I can recollect anything about.

3562. (Mr. Price.) When did you go on your voyages ?—I was in the coasting trade, and was away sometimes 12 months at a stretch, and then would come home for about a week. I never went less than two months.

3563. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you born here ?—Yes, I am a native.

3564. (Mr. Price.) You have told us all you recollect with regard to the election of 1859 ?—Yes.

3565. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Westropp in his evidence distinctly admitted that he was accompanied in his canvass two or three times by Mr. Veysey, the lawyer, in convassing the borough for the election of 1865 ; he stated himself that Mr. Veysey went with him to that extent and some other extent as his agent, can you tell me what part Mr. Veysey had in corrupt practices, whether bribery or treating as connected with the election of 1865 ?—I cannot.

3566. Do you know what the other, the cattle dealer, was engaged in in your time ?—I do not recollect his having a vote here until the last election.

3567. I ask you if in your time you recollect Mr. Veysey the lawyer's father, a cattle dealer, being engaged as an agent, or in any way engaged or taking part in corrupt practices in elections on the Tory side ?—No, I do not.

3568. He is alive, I believe ?—I think he is present.

3569. (Mr. Price.) Now we go to the election of 1857, have you the poll sheet of that year ?—No.

3570. Who were the candidates ?—Mr. Follett, Mr. Tynte, and Mr. Kinglake.

3571. That was Mr. Kinglake's second appearance ?—Yes.

3572. He was not sitting member then. Who were the sitting members ; Mr. Follett and Mr. Tynte ?—They had been up to 1857 sitting members from 1852.

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

3573. Then Mr. Kinglake appeared as a candidate to contest the borough?—He did.

3574. And you voted for him you told us?—Mr. Tynte and Mr. Kinglake.

3575. The difference had been healed I think you said?—Perhaps I had better tell you a little of the history of that election. It appears that at a former election we had three candidates, and that the money supplied with the Liberal party, the result of it was that we lost one member.

3576. What was the cause of the split, want of money, or what?—No; I fancy there was an association started here by a few gentlemen, and they wanted to have their own candidate.

3577. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were those gentlemen?—I believe Mr. Joel Spiller was the principal one; I do not know.

3578. I will put my question more plainly. Mr. Spiller and the gentlemen in association were not lawyers?—They were not.

3579. And they wished to take it out of the hands of lawyers?—I do not know whether there were any lawyers mixed up in that matter. This was the principle, from what I recollect from hearing it, that they did not want a candidate to vote in any way but what they told him. Now no independent man would do that.

3580. (Mr. Coleridge.) Without money?—No; the candidate when he got into the House of Commons.

3581. (Mr. Price.) He must go up to Parliament bound hand and foot to them?—

3582. (Mr. Coleridge.) As their delegate?—Yes; and then the matter went on until probably there would be a dissolution, and I believe the lawyers went up to Mr. Otway.

3583. The Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs?—Yes, I believe that was the man, and I believe he refused to come.

3584. Do you know why he refused?—No, I do not. There was some misunderstanding somehow or another.

3585. Not on the ground that it would be too expensive a place for him?—No. Then there was a meeting I attended amongst others, and I believe it was decided amongst us that whichever the majority said they would have he should be the man, as far as the candidate went. I do not know whether Lord Henley and Mr. Kinglake were the two who were proposed, but the choice fell on Mr. Kinglake.

3586. (Mr. Price.) But Lord Henley did come down?—In 1852 not in 1857.

3587. Then the choice fell on Mr. Kinglake?—Yes; and then there was a telegram, and I fancy he came down the same year, and the canvass began and went on, and the result was the return of Mr. Kinglake and Colonel Tynte.

3588. You have not the poll sheet, and cannot tell us the numbers?—No.

3589. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were the candidates?—Mr. Follett and Mr. Tynte.

3590. But who opposed Tynte and Kinglake?—Mr. Follett.

3591. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Follett was the sitting member, and was turned out?—Yes.

3592. Kinglake was returned?—Yes.

3593. (Mr. Anstey.) Nobody stood with Mr. Follett?—No.

3594. (Mr. Price.) Was there any money going at that election?—No, to my knowledge I never saw a penny.

3595. Nor heard of a penny spent on either side?—Nor heard of a penny spent on either side. I remember a circumstance that occurred at that election. There was a man named John Squires at the Market House, walking up and down in front. Mr. Follett had gone at 11 o'clock, because he was entirely gone, and he left at that time. The result of it was that this man was walking up and down, and we had done all we possibly could to persuade him to go to the poll, and he said he would not. There was plenty of time, and by-and-by there would be some money, was his answer. And some man at the Market House who saw that we had a good deal of trouble with this man, pretended to be drunk, and rolled down the steps, and he said to him "Have not "you polled yet?"—"No." And he said "If you "do not make haste the books will be closed," and he went up and polled, and that is the only time I have known that man to have polled without money.

3596. How much was spent in treating?—400*l.* or 500*l.* on our side.

3597. How much on the other?—I do not expect so much then. I fancy Mr. Follett was a little bit disgusted with the place.

3598. He had spent a good deal of money in it, I suppose?—Yes, it was reported so.

3599. He held his hand and did not spend anything?—Yes. I suppose so.

3600. But there was a great deal of treating on your side?—Yes.

3601. At your house as well as at others?—Yes.

3602. How much was your bill?—About the same as I told you the others, about 40*l.*

3603. Who paid you?—Mr. Foster.

3604. Who found the money at that time, Mr. Kinglake?—The same as I told you before; I believe both of them. That is the way I always put it. Nobody could induce me to believe other than this,—if two candidates stood, they divided the cost between them.

3605. (Mr. Price.) Provided they were equally rich?—Then there was his sister.

3606. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any report about his sister finding money at that time?—I believe his father was alive at that time, and I believe the old gentleman came into the town. There was plenty of money then.

3607. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you know about the election of 1857?—Yes.

3608. There was treating on your side?—Yes.

3609. But you know of no money passing?—No.

3610. (Mr. Anstey.) I have now again to ask you about Mr. Heal. You say you were a friend of Mr. Foster?—No, I was not a friend.

3611. He used to visit your house with his uncle, Faun, a tailor, and it was he who induced you to enter on the career of bribe master. Now in the election of 1857, when he had not your valuable assistance in that employment, and was doing it himself, he is said to have had an assistant of the name of William Heal to whom he or some other agent had promised some stated sum of 30*l.* or 40*l.* in consideration of his voting for two liberals; that that man was unpaid in 1865, that his claim to be paid was recognized by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond in 1865 and by other lawyers then and now living, Mr. Lovibond being dead now, but their statement was that in point of fact the money had been paid though it never reached his hand, having been intercepted by your acquaintance and colleague Foster. Now, considering that all these facts had been before the public since 1857, that they were made the subject of judicial inquiry in 1865, and made the subject of allusion by me the other day while you have been here, it is not too much to ask you whether you cannot, between this and your next appearance, throw some light on that circumstance?—I do not know anything about it.

3612. In other words you do not mean to inquire?—I will inquire about it.

3613. Did you never hear of it before?—I have heard of the inquiry.

3614. (Mr. Price.) Apart from this inquiry have you never heard as a thing well known in the town?—There is no doubt of it.

3615. You have heard of that story being talked of?—There is no doubt of its being talked of, I do not say it has not.

3616. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have heard it yourself?—I say there is no doubt about it.

3617. (Mr. Price.) And the truth of the story is not believed?—No.

3618. Which part of it?—That Foster stuck to the money.

3619. But that he was promised?—I do not know.

3620. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any doubt that he was promised some for his vote in 1867?—I have no doubt either way.

3621. You have no impression?—No.

3622. No belief either way?—No; but I do not see, if there was no money going to anybody else, and there was a large majority at that election, why they wanted to promise one man 40*l.*

3623. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before you began your active trade as a briber, you had probably heard about bribery going on before?—Yes I heard of it in the 1852 election.

3624. You knew it was a regular system at Bridgwater that somebody should bribe somebody?—To be sure it was.

3625. And even before 1852 you heard of it?—Yes.

3626. When you were a boy?—Yes.

3627. When you commenced having a public-house of your own and had a family, did you then think there was any danger in entering on this career?—I always thought there was danger attached to it.

3628. From the very beginning?—Yes.

3629. Then taking that into account, did you enter into it from pure love of politics, and no reward of any kind?—It was so.

3630. And did not Foster offer you anything for doing the work and the danger?—Nothing of any kind.

3631. And no one in the meantime remunerated you for putting yourself in this exceedingly dangerous position?—I say I defy any man——

3632. I do not say you took it, but was it offered to you?—No person offered me the value of that book.

3633. All the bribery, as far as you know, on the Liberal side has been done in this borough gratis?—Yes, as far as I know.

3634. And no established system of the person who handles the money keeping back a percentage for his own use?—No.

3635. The Conservatives the same way?—I cannot answer for it.

3636. But as far as the Liberals are concerned all the bribery was done by unpaid agents?—That is my impression. I will not answer for anybody but myself.

3637. As far as you are personally concerned, you not only never received but you were never offered anything?—Never.

3638. Were you before you began to bribe offered anything for your vote?—Yes, I was.

3639. When?—In 1852.

3640. Now we come to 1852. Had you taken your inn in 1852?—Yes.

3641. When did you take the "Anchor"?—In 1852. I think some seven or eight weeks before the election.

3642. (Mr. Coleridge.) I have omitted one question about 1857. Was there any sort of report during the election of 1857, that any money had been going on the Conservative side?—No.

3643. No suggestion of any such thing?—No.

3644. And as far as you know, and from what you have heard since—you have gone so much among people who were bribed in 1859, and subsequently—have you ever heard it from them of money paid to people in 1857?—Neither side.

3645. Then as far as you know, with the exception of treating, there were no corrupt practices at that election?—No.

3646. (Mr. Price.) Was any intimation held out to the people at all if Mr. Follett had chosen to open his purse strings there would be money on your side?—I never heard of it.

3647. No understanding such as you said afterwards that it would be all right?—No.

3648. Who had done the bribery in 1852?—I do not know; I fancy it was William Heal took an active part on the Liberal side.

3649. Whom do you suppose took an active part on the Conservative side in 1852? You were offered money on the Conservative side, were you not, in 1852?—I cannot say. I cannot charge my memory. I was not offered money, I was offered money's worth.

3650. Did those people who had been bribing in 1852 try to stir up something in 1857?—It was not a bit of good.

3651. There was no money to be got?—No.

3652. (Mr. Price.) They were all too poor, the candidates?—I do not know. I never saw money going about.

3653. At that time Mr. Kinglake was a barrister?—I think not. I think he had retired.

3654. Then your account of the matter is that Mr. Follett got disgusted with the borough, and I suppose that he had distinctly told his friends that he would spend no money, and this had got about the borough again; therefore there was nothing of the sort on your side?—No.

3655. But to keep them sweet the treating went on?—Yes.

3656. You became a householder in 1852?—Yes.

3657. And gave up the sea for life?—Yes.

3658. The candidates were Lord Henley, Mr. Kinglake, and Mr. Tynte on the Liberal side?—Yes.

5659. And Mr. Follett and Mr. Mansell on the Conservative side?—Yes.

3660. Was that the hard fought contest?—It was rather a left-handed one, having three Liberals.

3661. Lord Henley came down to stand on pure principles?—No, Lord Henley and Mr. Tynte ran together. Mr. Kinglake was single-handed.

3662. Did not Lord Henley come down intending to get elected on pure principles?—So far as I recollect of the circumstance he came down to run with Charles Tynte.

3663. Was not it understood generally that Lord Henley intended to fight the borough on pure principles?—I never heard of it, he may have done it, but I never heard of it.

3664. Then he and Colonel Tynte ran together, and Mr. Kinglake stood on an independent line of his own?—He did.

3665. Was that the first time he appeared in the borough?—Yes, Mr. Kinglake.

3666. Who was his managing man?—Mr. Bate.

3667. Had Mr. Bate taken an active part in the election before that time?—It is out of my recollection.

3668. You say you attached yourself to Mr. Kinglake and voted for him?—Yes.

3669. (Mr. Price.) Who acted for Mr. Tynte and Lord Henley?—I think Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. I do not know the others.

3670. Who acted for Mr. Mansell and Mr. Follett?—I think the present lawyers. I rather fancy Mr. Gabriel Poole took an active part at that election.

3671. Has Mr. Barham been an active man in all these elections?—Not over active until the last two or three years. He has not been here very many years.

3672. He has taken a very active part the last two or three years?—He has.

3673. Then going back to 1852 the contest resulted in the return of Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett?—Yes.

3674. One and one?—Yes.

3675. (Mr. Price.) You mean the Trevors and others represented Mr. Mansell?—Yes, the Trevors I think were connected, and Mr. Smith.

3676. And Mr. Gabriel Poole?—I am not certain about him, but I believe he took the part of Mr. Mansell. That is my impression, but I may not be right. I am not certain about that matter.

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

3677. Was Mr. Mansell a gentleman connected with this part of the world?—Yes; and I believe a client of Mr. Poole's, and there was some connexion between them.

3678. Mr. Follett was a stranger?—Yes.

3679. Never been here before?—No; he had a brother-in-law connected with this large iron foundry. I do not know that he had anything to do with it.

3680. That would be the mode of his introduction to the borough?—Yes.

3681. The return, you say, resulted in one and one?—It did.

3682. Was there a good deal of money spent?—There was a report so.

3683. How much, did you hear?—All I know about that election was I did not take any part in it. I polled early in the morning.

3684. But you could tell us what was the genoral idea of the expense?—There was a general report that both had spent 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.*

3685. Each side?—No; between them. That was the report, whether it was true or not I do not know. I did not take much of a part in it.

3686. You were not one of the initiated then?—The fact is this, before we went to the poll we knew we were nowhere. I went and plumped for Mr. Kinglake.

3687. Mr. Kinglake, then, did not spend any money?—Not a penny, to my knowledge.

3688. Therefore he was beaten?—He was.

3689. Was there treating at that election?—None. There was no chance of his getting in on account of three standing, and we polled a large number of plumpers for Mr. Kinglake.

3690. (Mr. Anstey.) Why was there no treating?—I say as far as I know, on the part of Mr. Kinglake, there was no treating. There was none in my house.

3691. (Mr. Price.) But was there treating, though not on the part of Mr. Kinglake, and bribing going on in the borough?—Yes.

3692. As much as ever?—Yes.

3693. (Mr. Anstey.) How much at your house?—Not a penny.

3694. (Mr. Price.) You were a Kinglake man?—I was a Kinglake man.

3695. You stood aloof from the Liberal party?—I did.

3696. And those who were with Mr. Kinglake?—Well, I do not know that. There was a large number of plumpers, the same as I was, but both parties wanted to get my second vote, and I would not part with it. I was told by Foster and some one on the part of the Conservative party, that if I would only give my second vote I might draw what drink I liked, but I refused to do it.

3697. In your house to treat other people?—Yes.

3698. To any extent you liked?—Yes.

3699. That you refused to do?—Yes; I had made my mind up, and they thought they would get the second vote out of me, but I would not be bought.

3700. Besides that did they offer you any money?—Not a penny. It would have been no good.

3701. Did they intimate to you that if that would not satisfy you, letting you give any amount of drink away, did they offer you anything like money as well?—No; because if they had, and if it had been in the house, I should have kicked them out.

3702. (Mr. Coleridge.) You seem to draw a strong distinction between giving and taking money?—I do.

3703. Which is the worst?—As I said yesterday, the briber gets the worst blow, he has got to bear the brunt of it, and if it were not for the gentlemen bringing the money we should not be placed in the position I am now here in.

3704. And if you did not give it to the poor men they would not be in the position to have to come here also. They received the money from you?—If I did not do it some one else would, and it would be no good to give money to a bribee, because if they did, he would run away with the lot, or there would be the chance of his doing it.

3705. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us about 1852?—Yes.

3706. The offer made to yourself?—Yes.

3707. The fact that there was treating going on as much as ever?—As much as I have seen since.

3708. And a report that 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.* had been expended by the Conservatives?—Yes.

3709. What was the offer on their side?—The same as the other.

3710. But not any money?—No.

3711. Who made the offer?—I do not know.

3712. Did you see the treating going on?—I saw a number of people in the town.

3713. Did you see people drink without paying?—Yes, all over the town.

3714. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the "Clarence" one place?—The "Clarence" has been always a noted house in the Conservative interest, and the houses have been generally the majority of them on the Conservative side.

3715. Was there any bottling of them at the "Clarence"?—I believe they polled their voters from the "Clarence," and made a committee room of it.

3716. Were there organised treating places?—Yes.

3717. And the "Clarence" was one?—Yes.

3718. And what was the other treating house, the "Globe"?—No; I think the "Globe" was a Conservative house.

3719. Which was the principal house at that time?—"The Bristol Arms," I think at that time; I would not be certain, and I do not know whether the "Golden Ball" was at that time.

3720. When you speak of open treating and beer brought out into the street ——?—They do not bring it into the streets.

3721. What did you say just now about everything was open in the street, was that bribery?—Yes, bribing.

3722. Was there much drunkenness public and open when the treating was organized?—A good bit.

3723. At these treating houses?—There is always at electioneering houses.

3724. Have you ever been in peril about your house, or has a single publican, from the "Clarence" downwards, been put in peril, from the time you know that these disgraceful scenes took place down to the present time. Have you known anybody put in peril of his licence in respect of his share in these transactions?—No.

3725. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you knew about bribery going on here at the time you were a boy?—No, I do not say so, I have heard of it.

3726. Had your father a vote?—Yes, he had a vote when I was a boy; he has voted now for 40 years.

3727. When did he last vote?—I think he voted lately, at the last election.

3728. What was the next election before 1852?—I cannot tell what election he voted at before 1852; he was a jailer in 1847.

3729. Do you recollect 1847, when Mr. Broadwood, Mr. Tynte, and Mr. Gazelee were the candidates?—No, I do not; I have heard of it.

3730. (Mr. Price.) Give us some idea of some one who can give some information about the election of 1852?—I cannot, more than those parties.

3731. Who was it that filled, in 1852, the sort of position that you took up in 1857?—I was almost a stranger here at that time, although born here.

3732. But who was the financial man there?—I say Mr. Foster, on our side.

3733. Principally Mr. Foster?—Yes, I believe so.

3734. Nobody else now alive?—No; Faun and he did the principal part.

3735. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had your father anything to do with this sort of thing at elections you know of?—Yes.

3736. Which side?—Liberals.

3737. Is he alive?—Yes.

3738. He may be able to tell us something?—Very likely.

3739. (Mr. Anstey.) In 1852 had your father any part in it?—No.

3740. On what occasion, then?—He was jailer, I think, in 1837.

3741. Was it before he was jailer he had anything to do with it or afterwards?—Yes, he had to do with elections before that.

3742. In 1837 and 1835 had he anything to do with those when Mr. Broadwood was candidate?—I will not answer.

3743. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Sheridan was candidate?—Very likely.

3744. Do you recollect an election that was made memorable by this circumstance, that Sir Thomas Letheby was induced to come down here to contest the borough with Mr. Broadwood, the piano manufacturer, by a requisition signed by a majority of electors of the borough, who, as the result bore out, only wanted a contest. He came down and was defeated by a majority, who were represented by those who signed the request to him to stand?—I do not recollect the election, but I fancy that is not the statement of the case from what I have heard of it.

3745. You cannot give me the year, and I am trying to give you the fact; what year was the election in which your father was engaged?—No election since 1836.

3746. Was he one of the requisitionists to Sir Thomas Lethbridge on that occasion?—I do not know.

3747. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know the election in 1835, when Charles Tynte and John Temple Leader were candidates?—I recollect the circumstance.

3748. Do you recollect, subsequent to that, two years afterwards, a contest between Leader and Broadwood, when a very large sum of money was spent?—I do not.

3749. (Mr. Anstey.) Is your father a jailer now?—No.

3750. What is he?—He is bailiff to the County Court.

3751. Why, I thought your brother was bailiff to the County Court?—So is he, my brother is under him.

3752. Which of them was it advised a voter that he could not recover a sum of money that had been claimed for bribing, your brother or your father that went to London?—My brother.

3753. Then one is bailiff and the other is under-bailiff, I suppose?—Yes.

3754. Before that, your father was jailer?—Yes.

3755. And before that was publican?—Some years ago.

3756. The same house as yours?—No.

3757. What was the name of his house?—"The "Duke of Wellington" I think it was called then.

3758. It is still a Liberal house?—Yes.

3759. Can you find out the elections at which you have seen your father?—He is here at present.

Mr. James Bussell sworn.

Mr. J. Bussell.

3760. (Mr. Price.) You are County Court bailiff?—I am.

3761. And were jailer here?—I was.

3762. When were you a jailer?—I went into the jail in 1836?—

3763. How long did you remain there?—26 years.

3764. What did you know about elections prior to 1836, did you take an active part?—I know nothing of elections since that period.

3765. But previous to your becoming jailer, had you taken an active part in the elections of the town?—Well, I had taken a very active part.

3766. That would be the election of 1835, would not it?—I had nothing to do with it.

3767. (Mr. Anstey.) On which side were you?—Since I left the jail?

3768. No, before going to the jail?—I believe I took part in elections from a very early day in my life.

3769. On which side?—On the Liberal side.

3770. (Mr. Price.) Did you begin as far back as 1812?—No.

3771. 1818?—No, I do not know on what occasion; I was quite a youngster.

3772. In 1820, Mr. Astell and Mr. Tynte?—I think Dodridge and Perkins.

3773. Astell and Tynte in 1820?—No; but in 1820 we formed ourselves into a committee to return Colonel Tynte. Bribery had been going on to some extent, and we endeavoured that it should be put down, and subscriptions were entered into in Bridgwater to get hold of Colonel Tynte to be returned free, and Colonel Tynte was returned and all expenses paid.

3774. He continued to be member for Bridgwater for many years?—Yes.

3775. Down to 1835?—No, there was an opposition before that.

3776. (Mr. Anstey.) He afterwards became member for the county, did not he?—I cannot say exactly.

3777. He was the father of the present Colonel Tynte?—Yes, the Honourable Colonel Tynte.

3778. Have you ever known an election conducted on purity principles on both sides?—I have just told you. I have no doubt of it except what was legitimate, and that was after the election, or during the election the voters joined, and had a treat together.

3779. What year was that?—From the time that Colonel Tynte came until the first opposition came against him.

3780. (Mr. Price.) What year?—I will not exactly say.

3781. (Mr. Anstey.) Is this 1820 or 1826?—When he was returned.

3782. But at the first contest against Colonel Tynte the elder, was the election conducted on purity principles?—Yes, there is no question about it. I think Sir Colin Campbell's expenses were when he came here, and the late Bishop of Bath and Wells with him; the whole of his expenses in Bridgwater were not 200*l.*

3783. What year was that?—That I cannot tell you.

3784. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you not speaking of the county?—No, I am just informed 1826, which I believe to be correct.

3785. (Mr. Anstey.) William Astell and Colonel Tynte were returned in 1826?—I know that, but Sir Colin Campbell was a candidate, and his expenses did not exceed 200*l.*

3786. Do you recollect the first time there was a contest between Mr. Broadwood and John Temple Leader?—Yes, I do.

3787. That was in 1835, was not it?—I do not know.

3788. Was not there an immense quantity of money spent on that occasion?—A great deal.

3789. Then in 1837 was not there a contest between Broadwood and Leader?—No.

3790. Do you recollect the contest between Leader and Broadwood, in which they talked about the pianofortes and Leader sent the pianoforte fifties?—Certainly.

3791. When was that?—I cannot tell.

3792. 1835?—If I had some of the papers which you have to supply the dates I could tell.

3793. Do you recollect that fact, that between Friday and Monday, the election taking place on the Monday,

FOURTH DAY.

Mr. J. Bussell.

26 Aug. 1869.

Mr. Leader came here and spent 12,000*l.* in the course of three days?—I will not say how much was brought, but I know he was sickened of it, and went to Westminster where it cost him three times as much.

3794. Do you know that he spent large sums in bribery?—Yes, I do.

3795. Can you tell me the people who acted for him?—I did.

3796. What did you give a vote?—Different sums.

3797. What was the largest?—Well, I think 40*l.* or 50*l.*

3798. How many people did you bribe?—I cannot say.

3799. 50?—No.

3800. 30?—I influenced more than that.

3801. But gave money to?—I should say 30.

3802. How much money did you give, 3,000*l.*?—You ask me after all these years.

3803. Did you give a couple of thousand?—Yes, I should think I did give that.

3804. Is that the first time you did in bribery business?—No.

3805. When was it first?—Mr. Tayleur's.

3806. That was 1832?—Yes.

3807. Who for?—Mr. Tayleur.

3808. About what sums did you distribute?—Nearly as much.

3809. And in the same large quantities of 50*l.* and 40*l.*?—I had nothing to do with that. I will not venture to state what took place on the opposite side.

3810. But did you spend the sum of money from Mr. Tayleur in sums of 40*l.* or 50*l.*, or smaller sums?—I think it was less.

3811. Was 1832 the first time you gave money in bribery?—It was.

3812. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have the contest in which Leader spent such a lot of money, but in spite of that Mr. Broadwood beat him, did not he?—No, he did not, Leader was returned, and Colonel Tynte.

3813. Was there a large sum of money according to what you heard and believed at the time spent on behalf of the Conservative Mr. Broadwood?—I really think it is not a fair question for me to answer what occurred on the other side, for I was actively engaged for my own to win.

3814. When was the last time you were actively engaged in giving money?—I had very little to do with giving money after Leader's elections.

3815. The next two were Mr. Broadwood and Mr. Courtenay?—Yes.

3816. Anything then?—There is no question that I did.

3817. That was 1837?—I know nothing about that. I told you I went into the jail in 1836, and then I refused to take an active part in politics.

3818. Did you have nothing to do with distributing money after you went to the jail in 1836?—Nothing.

3819. (Mr. Anstey.) Not down to the present time? No, I have only voted twice since I left. I am now superannuated. I voted for Westropp the first time and for Westropp the last time.

3820. I thought you said you were on the Liberal side?—On the Liberal side, Westropp.

3821. I thought you said you were on the Liberal side?—Well, so I was, but my opinions are much changed since that. John Bright, and two or three others like him——

3822. (Mr. Coleridge.) As far as you can recollect you only distributed money at three elections?—I do not think any more than two.

3823. You have told us of three?—I have not, sir.

3824. Tayleur's election, Leader's election, and then you say you have no doubt you have done it again in Broadwood and Courtenay's election?—That I would not be certain.

3825. You said so?—But I have since contradicted that, because I was in the jail.

3826. Those elections by your showing were very impure?—Yes.

3827. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you first change your politics and vote for Westropp?—After I had left the jail and went to live by the river.

3828. Why did you leave the jail?—I was superannuated.

3829. When you were appointed bailiff?—No, I have been bailiff 23 years.

3830. While you were gaoler?—Yes, and high constable of the borough.

3831. What induced you to join Mr. Westropp, having been down to that time engaged as bribery agent, or political agent, or election agent, on the part of his opponents?—It is almost an insulting question, because I was not bribed to do so.

3832. I want to know distinctly, yes or no, did you receive any gratification directly or indirectly for your change of vote?—None whatever, except an act of friendship to me by Mr. Smith, who have been intimate friends for years.

3833. What was that act of friendship?—I got into a little difficulty, not of my own seeking, and he, as a friend, advanced me some money on my property.

3834. How much money?—I think 500*l.* now.

3835. When?—Two or three years before Mr. Westropp came here and stood.

3836. Then the next election to that advance of money was Mr. Westropp's election, was it; the next election after the money was advanced?—Yes, I think so; it was two or three years prior to that.

3837. What was Mr. Westropp's first year of coming forward?—1859.

3838. On that occasion did you vote for him?—I did.

3839. Why?—From friendship.

3840. Did you from that cause vote for him?—I did.

3841. Was the advance of money made to you by Mr. Smith before or after 1859?—Two or three years before.

3842. After the election of 1857?—I do not know.

3843. Was it before or after the election of 1857 that the money was advanced to you?—I cannot say.

3844. Was not it in 1865 that you first voted for Mr. Westropp, and not 1859?—I did not vote for Mr. Westropp in 1865, did I.

3845. (Mr. Price.) How many times have you?—Twice.

3846. (Mr. Anstey.) At all events you voted for him the first time two years after you received this advance from Mr. Smith; what Smith was it?—Mr. Smith the solicitor, my neighbour.

3847. Is that the Mr. Smith against whom two penalties of 500*l.* each were recovered for bribery in 1838 at Taunton assizes?—It is the same person.

3848. That, therefore, was your reason for changing your votes and not what you first stated, your dislike to John Bright?—It is so and it is not so. It is partially on both sides, for I am as complete a Liberal now as ever.

3849. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is your name Robert?—No, James.

3850. (Mr. Price.) Who acted as briber on the part of the Liberal party after you went to the jail?—I do not know. I never mixed myself up with the elections. It was my duty to attend the returning officer at the hustings.

3851. You cannot tell us anybody who took that part?—I do not know how the elections were carried on, agents or messengers on either side.

3852. (Mr. Anstey.) You remember the death of William the Fourth?—Certainly.

3853. I am giving it to you as the date. Do you recollect some months before the death of William the Fourth Mr. Broadwood declining to defend his return for this borough in the face of a petition presented against his return by Mr. Sheridan charging Mr. Broadwood with personal bribing, and Mr. Broadwood thereupon writing a letter to the speaker saying it was not his intention to defend his return?—I do not.

3854. Do you recollect then the general election that took place immediately after the death of William the Fourth in the autumn of 1837?—Of course I remember it, but then I had nothing to do with it.

3855. You took no part in it?—I took no part in it.

3856. You saw what was passing in town. Were the public-houses open in that year during that election on either side or both sides for treating?—I must have seen it.

3857. Have you any doubt of the fact?—I think it is very likely, for it is always the case.

3858. I will give you the candidates: Mr. Sheridan Sir Thomas Lethbridge, Mr. Broadwood, and Mr. Courtenay—those are the names that occur to me?—There is no question but that there were open houses.

3859. Do you recollect whether there was bribery or treating at that election?—No, as I told you before, I was then in the jail, and paid no attention to the proceedings outside the walls.

3860. The next election to that, when Lord John Russell, being defeated in the House of Commons upon a vote of want of confidence, an appeal was made to the country on the Corn Law question in 1841, when Sir Robert Peel came into power. Do you recollect that?—I do not. There is no question but I know nothing of it.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL re-called.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

3861. (Mr. Anstey.) You know nothing of the elections I have been asking your father about?—No.

3862. (Mr. Price.) You can ascertain it, and give us some information as to the persons who took an active part on the Liberal side after your father took possession of the jail, and down to the time you and Mr. Foster and some other gentlemen took an active part?—I will try and get it if I can, but it would be information that would be rather scarce. My father's memory is not over good now.

3863. (Mr. Anstey.) What I have said will give you a general idea of the line the elections run in?—You are entirely mistaken as to dates as far as I am concerned. My father had not a vote when Mr. Westropp came here first, and could not vote for anyone; in 1865 he had a vote, and voted for Mr. Westropp.

3864. How many years before that had he been advanced the 500*l.* by Mr. Smith?—Eight or ten years before.

Bussell senior: He got three times the value in the property for it.

3865. (Mr. Price.) It is mortgaged?—Yes, that is what it is, a common mortgage of 25 or 26 houses.

3866. Does he hold that mortgage?—At the present moment.

3867. Do you pay interest?—I pay him 25*l.* a year for it.

(Mr. Price.) We adjourn now. Look through the list, and if anything occurs to you let us know to-morrow.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

FIFTH DAY.

27th August 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, ESQ., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, ESQ., and
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, ESQ.
DE TRACY GOULD, ESQ., Acting Secretary.

MR. GEORGE BRYANT SULLY recalled.

3868. (Mr. Anstey.) I have gone though the chief documents which you offered to us, and the result I need not state, but the Commissioners will be obliged if you will complete the search which you have made in this way,—I understand that this bundle of documents you found among Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's papers?—I did.

3869. It is an alphabetical list?—Yes.

3870. I cannot find any general reference to the matters connected with the election, or any reference showing that all the papers connected with the election are in those particular boxes, which makes me think I may be mistaken, that there is a separate schedule or list of papers of that kind. The second matter is that you will find under the head of "Tynte Money Account," particular years. Of course we shall not make use of any money accounts that do not bear on the elections, but shall be obliged by your looking over those money accounts, if there are any, which are not included in those large bundles of papers which you have already furnished to us. The third is, we should like to have Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's letter books as far back as you can supply them down to the time of his decease. Of course we shall go through them, and shall not use any letters that do not refer to the matters in question before us. Perhaps it will be convenient that you should take the schedule book, and we shall be much obliged, if you can find the papers, by your laying them before us as early as possible?—I shall do all that is in my power in the direction which you have indicated, but personally it would be more agreeable to me to place the schedule and boxes in the hands of some one in the court whom you may depute. I am not a lawyer, and have very little knowledge of professional papers, and it is possible that I may overlook or misunderstand things which a person who understands this kind of work would not do. I am willing to place the whole of the papers which are in my possession at the disposal of the Commissioners, but I hope they will adopt that suggestion, and allow me to hand them over to some competent person who will understand them far better than I can do. The bulk of these boxes have not been opened. I have only opened two in which election matters were apparently referred to on the face of the schedule, and I should like a competent person to search and examine the rest.

3871. You will not suppose that I mean for a moment to question your readiness to give us all the information you can?—There would be nearly a cart-load of boxes I think; that is the difficulty.

3872. (Mr. Price.) Are they at your office?—They are at my office on the eastern quay.

3873. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you imagine that each box contains a schedule of what is in it?—I do not know.

3874. How did you find that one?—I found this in a box, and among some papers more immediately connected with the matters which I have to deal with as executor. Before Mr. Lovibond's death he was ill some few years, and his managing clerk in anticipation of his death had arranged his papers to some extent, but unfortunately he died before the master, and when the papers came into my possession there was a box of papers, among which was this bundle.

3875. Was there anybody else assisting?—Yes, Frederick Charles Foster, the son of the Foster you heard of yesterday.

3876. Was he the managing clerk who died?—No; that was Robert Fletcher, the son of the one you heard of yesterday when junior clerk at Mr. Lovibond's, assisted in the arrangement of these papers. This schedule is in his writing.

3877. Probably he could give you some information, and save a deal of trouble about these papers?—I may say that on Wednesday morning I sent for Frederick Foster, and it was with his assistance that I found those papers which I tendered here.

(Mr. Price.) If Frederick Foster can give us some information, probably the best thing would be that our secretary should name a time, and take Frederick Foster with him to your office, and go through the thing with him. We shall rise early to-morrow, and we will give our secretary an opportunity of doing that.

3878. (Mr. Anstey.) You mentioned a name just now that struck me, what is the name of Fletcher the clerk?—Robert Fletcher.

3879. Has he left any representative?—A wife and child.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

3880. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you been able to make out those things which we wanted?—No; the fact of your having given me too hard a day's work yesterday, and I felt very unwell. There are 1,800 names to go through, and it would take some time if I was all right in the head, but you gave me two days severe work. Any evidence I can give you during the enquiry I will, because matters are sure to turn up.

3881. (Mr. Anstey.) Was 1865 one of the years?—It was the lists you gave me to go through. You gave me three lists to show any person who voted for one candidate at one election, and for the other at another.

3882. I have a printed list showing how the voters voted in 1865 at Mr. Walter Bagehot's election; would that be of any use to you?—That would be in 1866.

3883. I mean 1865, showing how the electors stood?—That is the one I have, only it requires considerable time to go through it.

3884. (Mr. Price.) Then if you take till Monday, will that do?—Yes; there are sure to be during this inquiry many questions turn up, and you may want to ask me for some explanations about them.

3885. I think it is due to you that I should express my opinion that so far as we understand the thing at present, you have given us a very frank declaration of all you know?—There is no doubt there are many questions now that will turn up, but from the large number of questions I have answered it is impossible for me to recollect.

(Mr. Coleridge.) As far as you have been examined you seem to have told us very truthfully what you know.

3886. (Mr. Anstey.) Of course it is quite possible that we may receive other evidence before the Commission closes, but as far as I see now, though I say nothing upon the morality of your opinions, I must say that you have shown great frankness and readiness in giving what the Commission required?—I have endeavoured to speak the truth as far as I was required.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And I believe the general impression is that you have done so.

Mr. A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN sworn.

3887. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A glass and china dealer. I have been in the Scotch trade myself.

3888. Are you a native of Bridgwater?—No; I have been in Bridgwater these 21 years.

3889. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you come from?—Ayrshire, in Scotland.

3890. (Mr. Price.) Have you been in business all that time on your own account?—No; 17 years on my own account.

3891. What were you before you were in business on your own account?—In the same trade.

3892. In whose employment?—William Glencross, of this place.

3893. Is he alive?—No.

3894. Did you succeed to his business?—A part of it.

3895. For 17 years you have been in business on your own account?—About that time.

3896. You are a voter, of course, for Bridgwater?—I have been a burgess voter for 13 years.

3897. That is a voter for the borough members?—Yes.

3898. When did you first begin to take part in the election for members here?—In the election for Mr. Bagehot in 1866. I voted for Kinglake and Tynte in the previous election.

3899. (Mr. Coleridge.) Kinglake and Shelley, was it not, at the previous election?—I voted for Kinglake and Tynte, and Kinglake and Shelley as well. I first voted for Kinglake and Tynte.

3900. (Mr. Price.) At the last election in 1868, what were you employed upon in that election?—Finance agent, I suppose. I dealt with money matters. I supplied the men who paid the voters with the money which they paid.

3901. You supplied the men who were to bribe the voters?—I did not at the last election. At the last election I paid the voters myself.

3902. Confine yourself to the last election. In 1868 what part did you take in election matters?—I paid or bribed the voters on my own account. I had no agent under me at all.

3903. (Mr. Price.) At the last election of 1868 you yourself bribed the voters?—I did.

3904. You paid no money to others?—Not any agent connected with the election had any money from me. I paid them myself.

3905. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nobody like Mr. Bussell was under you?—Not at the last election.

3906. (Mr. Price.) Was that the first time you acted directly in paying the money?—With the exception of two or three voters at the time of each election.

3907. Had you been canvassing and taking an active part?—I never canvassed in my life. I did not believe in canvassing.

3908. Did you attend the "Globe," Mr. Vanderbyl's head quarters?—I have been there perhaps twice during the canvassing.

3909. Had you been to Mr. Kinglake's head quarters?—Mr. Kinglake rented rooms at my place.

3910. For Committee purposes?—All the candidates. Mr. Bagehot in his time, and so on. My place has been the residence of the Liberal candidates for years.

3911. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean that Mr. Kinglake slept there?—Yes, and boarded there; and Mr. Bagehot.

3912. What is this about his going to the "Railway Hotel?"—There were some votes there, and his servant stayed there, and that was the interest on which he went.

3913. (Mr. Price.) Some votes there, do you say?—Yes; and he slept not more than two nights there. The train passing the hotel disturbed his repose, and he came back to our place again, but he never gave up the suite of rooms at my place all the time. He simply slept at the hotel twice.

3914. I thought you dropped something about there being some votes there. What do you mean?—Well, it is a widow lady who keeps the hotel, and her son manages it; and for many years there was no vote; and I think some five or six years ago her son got on the register, and perhaps it was with a view to his interest. I only surmise it. I have no proof of it.

3915. He slept there?—Yes.

3916. And used the hotel?—Used the hotel.

3917. With a view to secure the vote of the house?—Yes; that is my opinion. I have no proof of it.

3918. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there a vote for the house?—The son had a vote, living in the house, and managing for his mother. I do not know whether he held it for the hotel.

3919. (Mr. Price.) The son who managed the hotel had a vote, and Mr. Kinglake slept there some time himself, and his servants were there during the time he was here?—Yes; he slept there twice, I think.

3920. His head quarters were at your house. He lived in your house. Was it also used as a place where his partizans could come?—At any time, he had a private room.

3921. And in point of fact did anybody come to him who wanted to see him on practical matters?—Yes, anyone who wanted to see him.

3922. Was any regular committee formed there who used to meet periodically?—Not at my house.

3923. Was there anywhere?—I know of no committee rooms in the town at all.

3924. Whatever was done, was done in the way that you have mentioned; people coming to see him at your house, and you yourself being in constant communication with him?—No; I scarcely spoke to him all the time he was there.

3925. Did not you see him at all?—I saw him going up and down stairs.

3926. Not to talk to him about the prospects of the election?—I did not speak to him more than twice at the last election.

3927. Did you purposely abstain from speaking to him?—No, I did not.

3928. You never talked over with him the chance of success?—No, never in my life, or any other member we had.

3929. When did you commence active operations in the way of money?—About 11 o'clock at the "Globe Hotel" on the morning of the poll. Up to that time I saw nothing but inactivity as far as election matters were concerned.

3930. Voters were hanging back?—Well, it was different from any other election we had, inasmuch as we had five polling booths instead of two. The two were in front of my window, and you could see them from the windows of the room which Mr. Kinglake occupied. These five were scattered about the town, which took people to different booths, and therefore the two opposite my house were taken away, and it did not look a bit like an election morning.

3931. Did you learn at 11 o'clock the state of the poll?—I knew we were behind at 10 o'clock. There was the state of the poll at 10 oclock.

3932. What did you do when you first discovered you were behind?—I went down to the "Globe" where there was a return from the five booths.

3933. Whom did you see at the "Globe"?—I saw there the men whom I was accustomed to know in election matters, and the solicitors.

3934. Who were the men you were accustomed to know in electioneering matters?—Henry Bussell, John Smith, Charles Bulpin. I think I saw Bunter there. I think I saw James Alway.

3935. Those are all?—No.

3936. You saw the lawyers there?—Yes.

3937. What lawyers?—Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook, Mr. Henry Lovibond. I have a doubt in my mind about Mr. Barham. I think I saw him, but I will not be sure.

3938. Where were they, in a committee room?—Yes, that is where I saw them first.

3939. Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

3940. He was staying at the "Globe"?—Yes, he and Mrs. Vanderbyl.

3941. What passed when you saw those gentlemen?—We adjourned into a small room adjoining the room.

3942. We understand from Mr. Bussell there were from 40 to 50 in this room?—I should think there were.

3943. And he and the others you have named adjourned into a smaller room?—Yes, we did.

3944. For a consultation?—For a consultation. The reasons were required by the solicitors why we were so far behind the poll. They asked our opinions why, because the Conservative party had polled double as many as we, and with a new and extended constituency we had not polled so many in this as in the old, and there were five booths instead of two.

3945. When they asked you the reason, what did you say?—Well, I knew the reason very well.

3946. Did you tell them the reason?—Yes, we did.

3947. What was the reason?—There was no money going.

3948. Did you tell him so?—Yes, we thought there was money going on the part of the Conservatives inasmuch as they were polling so many more than we were, and we knew none was going on our part.

3949. And that was the reason you were not polling?—We found the men in the Conservative interest polled before 11 o'clock, whom we knew would never go without being paid.

3950. (Mr. Coleridge.) Men who had been paid on your side before?—Men who had been paid on our side before, and who would never vote without.

3951. (Mr. Price.) What did they say when you said there was no money going, and that was the reason why you were behind on the poll?—They adjourned from the little room.

3952. The lawyers?—The lawyers, and where they went I do not know.

3953. You remained with Bussell and the others in the small room?—Yes.

3954. What was the next thing that happened?—They came back, and the first thing was to adjourn again.

3955. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long after?—I should say they stayed 10 minutes.

3956. The first time?—Yes.

3957. (Mr. Price.) And then they came back and retired again?—Yes, without saying anything you could understand. They may have asked a question which I do not remember.

3958. They came again?—Yes.

3959. Came in and looked at you and went out again?—Just about like that; it was so amusing that Bussell said he tired of it, he would go home.

3960. Tired of waiting?—Yes.

3961. Did they come back again?—They came back again, and sat down.

3962. You will perhaps recollect three or four times coming backwards and forwards, whether Mr. Barham was there or not?—I would say if I knew.

FIFTH DAY.

Mr. A. Allan.

27 Aug. 1869.

3963. You cannot recollect ?—I cannot.

3964. When they came back the third time, what occurred ?—Mr. Reed was the lawyer that spoke, and he said how much money would it take to win ; how much do you think we could do it for ? That was the substance of his question.

3965. What do you say, that was the question addressed to you ?—Yes, to all of us.

3966. Then who spoke ?—I do not know that anybody particularly replied to it ; it was discussed among us, and again Mr. Reed said, "Well, if you see your way clearly to a win, here is 3,000*l.* for you." Those were the words. "It is no use making any bones about it."

3967. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Bussell present ?—Yes, Bussell was present.

3968. (Mr. Anstey.) "It was no use making any "bones about it ?"—"It is no use making any bones "about it, if you see your way clear, here are "3,000*l.*"

3969. (Mr. Price.) I suppose he did not hand it to you or show it ?—No, he did not.

3970. What was said ?—Mr. John Smith replied to him on our part; he said 3,000*l.* in the morning would have done, but it would take 5,000*l.* now to make a win.

3971. What did he say to that ?—"It was no use "to say any more about it. I may as well go "home."

3972. That is what he said ?—Yes.

3973. What happened then ?—Then he rose up and went home.

3974. Went away without anything more ?—Yes, nothing more ; that is the substance in full.

3975. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you polled yourself at this time ?—I had polled at eight o'clock, or as close on it as I could.

3976. And did you go home then ?—Straight home, and as far as the others went I saw nothing of them.

3977. That would be getting on to half past eleven ?—I stayed at my house, and did not leave until Mr. Kinglake left by the two o'clock train.

3978. Did you see him go ?—Yes.

3979. Did you not say anything to him ?—I did not.

3980. What was done after that ?—I think I shook hands with him, I did not speak to him, and could not speak.

3981. You shook hands with him, and he went intending to go to London, and did go ?—Yes.

3982. State what you did after that ?—I stayed at home till about quarter to three. I went out after half past two, it must have been then ; the state of the poll was every quarter of an hour paraded up and down the street, and was brought into my shop as well as others, and I saw and knew what it was.

3983. What was the state of the poll then ?—We were getting up when I began to take notice of it, and felt any hope in the matter. We were 48 behind ; in a minority.

3984. That would be about quarter to three ?—I think so, it would be about that.

3985. How many men were left unpolled at that time ?—I could not say the number.

3986. About ?—I could not say about, but from the number of men left unpolled at that time there was a possibility of winning.

3987. (Mr. Price.) That is the conclusion you came to ?—That is the conclusion we came to.

3988. What did you do upon that ?—I went down the street towards the "Globe Tavern," and on the way going down found every one who had a vote and who had not polled was going to the "New Inn," and tell-all the others who had not voted.

3989. What was the "New Inn" ?—A beer house or public house, I think it is a spirit house.

3990. What interest is it in ?—Liberal.

3991. They were telling everybody to go to the "New Inn" ?—Yes. You would get a voter to go to the "New Inn" when he would not go to the poll.

3992. Did you go down ?—I did.

3993. Without going into the "Globe" ?—No, I think I went into the "Globe."

3994. Who did you see ?—I went in to see the people, I do not remember seeing any one there.

3995. You went on to the "New Inn" ?—I went on to the "New Inn."

3996. What happened then ?—I saw a lot of voters ; I did not know that they had not polled, but I found out afterwards that they had not.

3997. Why do you say that you could always get people to go to the "New Inn" when they would not go to the poll ?—Because if a man goes to the poll he records his vote, if he goes to the "New Inn" he retains it.

3998. I suppose they went down there with the expectation of getting something ?—Exactly.

3999. Was the "New Inn" a place where at former elections they had been dealt with in the way of bribing ?—No, the "New Inn" had changed hands at this election from what it was in at prior elections.

4000. Then you mean, when you say you could get them to go to the "New Inn," it was only on this particular day ?—That was a place used rather than any other place, merely accidentally.

4001. What happened at the "New Inn," then, when you found they had not voted ?—I saw Mr. John Smith there ; he was the first man I saw, and he said to me, "I am glad to see you ; do keep these men "until I come back, I will be back in a minute." I thought he was going to get some money to poll them, and he did not come back, he left me there with the men until I could not keep them any longer.

4002. How many of them were voters ?—I should think at that time there was perhaps 40 voters there.

4003. Enough to have turned the scale nearly ?—No doubt.

4004. What did you do when you found he did not come back ?—I went to see why he did not come, to the "Globe."

4005. Who did you see there ?—I saw the solicitor. I saw Mr. Cook.

4006. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time would this be ?—This would be a quarter past three.

4007. (Mr Price.) What did you say to him ?—I said, "You can win the election in ten minutes for a handful of money." Knowing what he had offered me in the morning I said "Why the election is your own, "you are throwing it away for nothing." Well, he said "All that has been done we have done already. "Where the devil is Lovibond ?" Well, Mr. Lovibond was called for, and he very soon appeared. He told me to go home.

4008. Mr. Lovibond did ?—Yes, I did not ask him a question but went home.

4009. That is all that passed ?—All.

4010. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now when you got home what happened ?—When I got home I had not been there above four minutes, before I had 500*l.* given me.

4011. Who brought it to you ?—Young Master Prior, the banker's son, a cashier at the bank.

4012. (Mr. Price.) I suppose he did not say anything to you ?—He did not.

4013. (Mr Coleridge.) Was it in gold ?—Yes, in gold.

4014. Done up in a bag ?—Yes.

4015. (Mr. Price.) Did he tell you the amount ?—He never told me, and I did not ask any question, I had no time.

4016. What did you do then ?—I went straight down to the "New Inn" and saw George Stacey there, a gas fitter at Eastover, I told him to see the voters come upstairs into the bedroom, and I paid them.

4017. You went into a bedroom with the money ?—Yes.

4018. How many did you pay ?—31.

4019. How much apiece ?—10*l.* apiece I paid, with one exception, when I paid 15*l.*

4020. Then about 300*l.* you paid away?—315*l.* I paid away.

4021. (Mr. Anstey.) Amongst 31?—Yes.

4022. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did all those you paid, the 31, poll for you?—Two of them did not, for two had not got votes.

4023. (Mr. Price.) They had their money when they had no votes?—Yes.

4024. (Mr. Anstey.) Only two did not vote, all the rest voted?—Yes, all the rest voted, I believe; yes, all the rest voted.

4025. Now give us the names of the 31?—John Heal of Polden Street the son of Mr. Heal who was called this morning, William Francis Rose, North Street, Frederick Boys, Moat Lane, Robert Walters, Pigs Cross, Richard Hooker, Eastover, Edward James Buttle, Back Lane, John Buttle, Back Lane.

4026. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he the man who got 40*l.* at the election before?—His is the next name I shall mention; John Alfred Buttle, Dampiet Ward.

4027. He was the one who got the 40*l.*?—At the prior election. Alfred Buttle, no vote, a younger brother.

4028. (Mr. Anstey.) He was one of the two who had no vote?—The man who kept the check on the stairs let him up, and I did not know who I was paying.

4029. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that George Stacey?—Yes; and Edward Culliford in the High Street, William Lucraft, John Davis, St. John Street, James Podger, Benjamin Burton.

4030. (Mr. Price.) Did you make them give you their names?—I had the lists from the men who kept the check on the stairs, Culliford and Stacey. Wm. Alfred Dyer, Alfred Bidgood, John Boucher, John Webber, Charles Stone, George Stacey.

4031. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was the checktaker?—Yes.

4032. Did he get anything extra for check taking?—I paid him 5*l.* extra.

4033. Is he the one you spoke about having 15*l.*?—Yes.

4034. William Hamson, John Hillard, Valetta Place, Barnet Porter, Richard Burridge, James Witteridge, Going Murray, Henry Singerton, John Baker, James Parker, Fredk. Cooper, Wm. Dyke, Henry Ware, no vote; I cannot find him on the register. Those are all. You have not mentioned Edward Culliford; did you not pay him?—I did not.

4035. Nothing at all for checking?—Nothing. I have had him at two elections I have been concerned in, and he never in his life would take a farthing.

4036. (Mr. Price.) Having done that they went off and polled?—As far as I know.

4037. You had a balance in hand then?—Yes; I have a balance in hand now. We have never come to any settlement; I have seen no one to settle with.

4038. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean you have 185*l.* now?—Yes.

4039. (Mr. Price.) The balance of that 500*l.*?—Yes. I have had it ever since.

4040. Did you do anything more that day?—Went straight home.

4041. That is all you did then?—It was four o'clock. Then the poll was declared. I went on to the hustings. It was within 15 minutes of the time. They just had time to run to the poll. If there had been more men in the place I should have polled every man there.

4042. And that was all you had in your place to give the money to?—Yes.

4043. Why had you said when you went to the "Globe" that 3,000*l.* would have done in the morning?—It was not me who said that.

4044. Who?—Mr. John Smith.

4045. Did you agree with him?—I did not support or dissent from it.

4046. What do you say yourself; would that be about what the sum in the morning would have been?—I do not think it would have been enough.

4047. Not the first thing in the morning?—No.

4048. Do you think the first thing in the morning it would have required 5,000*l.*?—I do not think 3,000*l.* would have been enough.

4049. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much was spent in effect?—I do not believe a shilling beyond what Bussell has given you an account of and I have had to pay.

4050. (Mr. Price.) What was the idea conveyed to your mind when they said, "What can be done we have done already, where the devil is Lovibond"?—The idea conveyed to my mind was that Mr. Cook had paid money to some one.

4051. You understood him to mean that?—I quite understood him to mean that.

4052. You understood him to mean that he had been paying money?—Yes.

4053. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you see anything of this mysterious stranger Bussell has spoken of?—No.

4054. You had money brought by Mr. Prior?—Yes.

4055. You say you do not know any more money having actually to your knowledge been spent?—I do not.

4056. Have you reason to doubt that there was a great deal more spent from your previous knowledge of Bridgwater than the 315*l.* you spent and what Bussell spent?—From my knowledge of the last election, knowing well the last three elections, there was never so little money spent.

4057. How do you account for that?—From 11 to 3 not a shilling was paid by us, or promised to anybody.

4058. That is to say you did not?—I did not, and I know Bussell did not.

4059. But now your idea is that Mr. Cook meant to represent that he had been paying money in that way. That was the idea conveyed to your mind. That must have been between 11 and 3?—I have only knowledge of me and Bussell.

4060. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had not you any intimation before on the nomination day?—No.

4061. You did not ask anybody?—No. I have at the election, before but this one not.

4062. (Mr. Price.) You say there was never so little spent from your experience of Bridgwater, and having heard what Mr. Cook said, do you still think that was all that was spent in bribery, the sums you mentioned and Bussell's?—I have heard that Garrett spent money, but I have no knowledge of it, nor do I know what sum it was or where it came from, nothing about it.

4063. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that since the last election?—I did not know it until two days ago.

4064. When did you first know that Bussell had been bribing?—On the election day, when Mr. Prior went up with this money, it was talked all over the town.

4065. When did you first learn that Bussell was spending money?—I did not know that he had spent a farthing of money until the close of the poll.

4066. You have perhaps heard Bussell's evidence?—I have heard his evidence.

4067. You saw Bussell down to the moment of the close of his examination express his disbelief that you had been employed?—He did not know anything about me.

4068. Bearing those three facts in your mind, can you still undertake to say, speaking of matters which you must necessarily be ignorant of, that there was less bribery committed on your side at the last election than at previous elections?—I am not prepared to prove it, but from my knowledge of the circumstances I do not believe it. I was in my own house, and I do not know.

4069. (Mr. Price.) But have you the slightest doubt from your former experience of Bridgwater, and the expression made use of at this meeting, that 5,000*l.* would be required,—3,000*l.* might have done early in the morning,—that a great deal more than you have told us was spent in bribery on your side?—I do not know it. I should have known it, because there is no secret. I have not been kept in the dark as to anything as a rule.

FIFTH DAY.
Mr. A. Allan.
27 Aug. 1869.

4070. But you were as to Garratt?—In this instance.

4071. (Mr. Coleridge.) Generally you supplied Bussell with money at elections?—I did.

4072. On this occasion did you supply any one?—No one; I did it myself.

4073. Who should you feel justified in paying over that 185*l.* to?—Whoever claims it from me.

4074. I might claim it from you, but you would not pay me; who would you fell justified in paying it to?—Well, I should think that the money came to me with Mr. Henry Lovibond's knowledge. That is my opinion.

4075. If Mr. Lovibond claims it, and gives you a receipt for it, will you let him have it back?—I will.

4076. Would you let anybody else have it?—No.

4077. In fact you look to Mr. Henry Lovibond as having provided it?—I do. If I said anyone else I should say what is untrue.

4078. Were you examined on the election inquiry here?—I was in America then.

4079. When did you go?—On the 12th December I sailed from Liverpool.

4080. What did you go to America for?—Because I had been guilty of bribery at the last election. I could not afford to commit perjury, and I would not, and I would not be a traitor to my own party. That is the reason.

4081. Who paid your expense of going to America?—I never asked anybody about it; I had plenty of money.

4082. (Mr. Price.) Did you consult with anybody as to your going?—Nobody knew but my wife and Mr. John Smith. I did not consult with them; I told them I was going.

4083. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Smith advance you money?—Not a farthing.

4084. (Mr. Price.) It must have cost you a considerable sum?—Yes.

4085. How long did you remain there?—Five months. I have a father and mother, and four or five brothers there.

4086. You have only come back a short time, then?—I came back in the middle of May.

4087. Since the Taunton assizes?—No.

4088. Since the Spring assizes at Taunton?—Yes.

4089. (Mr. Price.) Who minded your business in your absence,—your wife?—I was, as I have already told you, always engaged in the Scotch trade. My business has been for 15 or 16 years in the country, and my wife has always had a business which she has conducted herself in the town. I have no business. I have given it up 12 months ago, my Scotch connexions, retired from that altogether, and so my trade was only my wife's trade.

4090. So that you had no trade of your own?—No.

4091. Your wife was doing all?—I had sold my wife's trade, and was retiring from business 12 months ago.

4092. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say that Mr. Smith did not advance you any money to go to America, did you take any of the money with you which you had received from Mr. Prior?—I kept 185*l.*

4093. What has become of that 185*l.*, have you it in gold as you received it?—Not the same money.

4094. Did you use that money for your purposes in going to America?—I have not the slightest doubt I did.

4095. When you come to square up with Mr. Henry Lovibond, if ever you do, should not you feel justified in deducting your expenses for going to America?—I will give it as an item in the electioneering business, which, if objected to, I would stratch out in one moment.

4096. But if they do not object you would deduct it as you felt you had earned it?—Exactly.

4097. And what would that amount be?

(Mr. Price.) Would it exhaust the 185*l.* for five months?—Well, I should think it would. My expenses must have been about that.

4098. (Mr. Coleridge.) The actual 185*l.* in the money in which you received it from Mr. Prior has all gone?—Yes; if Mr. Henry Lovibond claimed it I would pay it.

4099. But the money has gone?—Yes.

4100. And pretty well exhausted in keeping out of the way for the sake of the party?—Yes.

4101. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any reason to believe that it will be allowed in account? Have you any reason to believe when you come to square accounts, that that item will be allowed?—I have not the least doubt.

4102. On what is your impression founded?—Well, I have precedents which are very small minor matters as compared with this one. That is the only thing.

4103. You have precedents?—Yes.

4104. What are they?—Near to 32*l.*

4105. But I say, what precedents are they; what cases?—In the election of Mr. Vanderbyl.

4106. What, persons absconding, or going away?—No. An item of about 32*l.* in balancing up our cash account. I do not know where the money went.

4107. You were allowed an item of 32*l.* on the balancing up of the cash account?—Yes.

4108. Under similar circumstances?—Yes.

4109. Going away?—No; money spent on the former elections.

4110. Do I understand you to say you were allowed to keep the balance of the money you spent in bribery?—Yes.

4111. And on that you found your belief, whatever the amount of this balance is, that you will be allowed to keep it?—Those are the only precedents I have to go by.

4112. And you think, on that ground, you will be allowed to keep it?—Yes.

4113. You have had no communication about it?—Never.

4114. Not even with Smith?—No; Smith did not know of my having money.

4115. Have you seen Mr. Henry Lovibond about this matter of Mr. Prior, jun., about that advance of money, since your return about the middle of May?—I have seen him, but not spoken to him about it.

4116. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you think your wife knew anything about it?—Yes.

4117. She knew all the circumstances about it?—Yes.

4118. Do you mean to say that you did not go off to America without telling her anything about it?—No.

4119. You do not know whether she has had any communication with Mr. Henry Lovibond?—No, not that I am aware of.

4120. I mean, she has not made any communication to you?—No.

4121. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Lovibond, I believe, represented Mr. Kinglake at the last election, did not he?—Mr. Lovibond has always been known as Mr. Kinglake's agent, more than Mr. Vanderbyl's.

4122. Answer my question, yes or no, did he not, on this election, represent Mr. Kinglake?—I have no reason to say no.

4123. Did not Messrs. Reed and Cook represent Mr. Vanderbyl more particularly?—I believe they did.

4124. Who did Mr. Eustace Barham represent, we have heard they were all agents?—Yes, there was a rumour, of which I have no proof, that Reed and Cook managed Eastover, the other side of the river, that Mr. Barham represented the north ward, this side of the river, and Mr. Lovibond the south ward, on this side of the river. I say it was a rumour, I do not say it was true; they represented every ward.

4125. (Mr. Anstey.) You had no money from Reed and Cook, or any person you believe to have come from Reed and Cook ?—No.

4126. And the money you had, you believe to have come from Mr. Lovibond ?—I do.

4127. Do you know handwriting ?—No.

4128. You do not know any handwriting in the world ?—Well——

4129. You say "no" before you have thoroughly considered my question ; allow me to put the question to you again, do you know this handwriting that I am going to show you ?—What I mean to say is, that I could not depend upon myself to swear to handwriting as a rule, I will if I know. (Mr. Anstey handed a written letter to the witness.)

4130. Look at that ?—I cannot swear to that.

4131. (Mr. Price.) But whose do you believe it to be ?—I cannot swear to it.

4132. (Mr. Anstey.) Neither of these Hooks ?—No.

4133. (Mr. Price.) Have you any belief at all of handwriting ?—No, I have none.

4134. It is not a question of your being obliged to swear, but have you any belief at all that you recognize that writing ?—No, I have none.

4135. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not mentioned Mr. Carslake or Mr. Auber, were either of those present at either of the meetings on that day ?—No, they were not.

4136. Did you take any part in treating that day ?—None at all ; my expenses for the day did not exceed 6*s.*

4137. You were in the "Globe" that day ?—I was.

4138. We have not got that down. Was the "Globe" one of the houses open that day for treating ?—Not to my knowledge.

4139. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have spoken about a conversation, in which you say that Cook said, "All "that has been done has been done by us ; where "the devil is Lovibond"? Excepting that Mr. Lovibond is Mr. Kinglake's agent, do you mean that the money came from Mr. Kinglake, rather than from Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I should rather think from Mr. Kinglake.

4140. Taking this language, would you rather believe it came from Mr. Kinglake himself ?—I should think it did.

4141. You had no conversation with Mr. Bussell on this occasion ?—No, nor any one else.

4142. Had you any conversation with Bussell after the election about this ?—No.

4143. No conversation ?—No.

4144. And it was the first time you had had to do with it personally, it was only owing to the hurry that you had had to do it ?—No, I had no reason to tell it to anybody, I was too well trained.

4145. Not until to-day ?—No.

4146. You do not believe in canvasses ?—I do not believe in them.

4147. You mean they promise to vote and do not keep their promises, and they are not to be relied on ?—Yes.

4148. Do you know whether on this occasion any of them got bribed by anybody else twice over ?—Not that I could say.

4149. Do you know whether any of them got it from the Conservatives ?—Yes.

4150. You have not been asked that. Was there much bribing going on upon the Conservative side at this time ?—I did not know it.

4151. But from your general knowledge of Bridgwater and your training did you judge that it must have been so ?—I did not say I had any training.

4152. But from your general knowledge of the state of things in Bridgwater, do you say there must have been bribing ?—I think so. I believe that to many of the men who voted before 11 o'clock for the Conservatives at the last election they were paying money, or the equivalent.

4153. (Mr. Price.) What is your belief,—that the Conservatives had actually paid or promised money ?—In effect it would be the same.

4154. I know the effect would be the same, but do you really know whether, up to that time, any money had been paid ?—I do not know that any money had been paid.

4155. It has been said that no money was actually paid by the Conservative side, but there was a thorough understanding that they would have money, but it was not paid away ?—I know the reason why the Conservatives polled so many and so early in the morning.

4156. That is what we want to know. Just tell us that ?—Well, they had a meeting of the Conservative Association at the "Clarence Hotel," or some other Inn there, on the morning of the poll at 8 o'clock. They were invited to come there as a whole. The Working Men's Association, as a whole, were invited, and they were invited to bring all their friends. They did not ask me to go. There were a good many converts made that morning at the meeting to the Association.

4157. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean people who formerly voted Liberal, afterwards voted Conservative ?—New members who came over on the election morning, and were enrolled.

4158. (Mr. Price.) What else ?—Mr. Hodges told me himself.

4159. Who is he ?—He is a woollen draper in the town ; that in addressing the whole Conservative Association as a body he so couched his language as not to commit himself, but made them believe that every man would be paid three weeks after they voted for Westropp and Gray. That is the reason they polled.

4160. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did Mr. Hodges make that speech ?—At the meeting in the morning.

4161. (Mr. Price.) At the "Clarence" ?—At the "Clarence" or some other Inn.

4162. Then you think the voters had taken that upon trust, and had gone and voted ?—Yes, exactly. If we, I do not say myself, as our voters accustomed to take money up to the last election never knew me, but if our agents, accustomed to pay money, Smith——

4163. Or Bussell ?—Yes, if they had gone to them they would have won them. We would have polled faster than they on the same principle.

4164. You have no doubt in your mind, from what Mr. Cook said, that he had been paying money at all events, at least that is the idea he conveyed to your mind from what he said ?—Exactly.

4165. And he said, "Where the devil is Lovibond?" What is your idea as to whether Lovibond had abstained from impure practices or not ?—At the last election ?

4166. Yes ?—I have already told you my idea of Mr. Lovibond with respect to the 500*l.*

4167. It came from him ?—Yes, that is my idea.

4168. I am going to read this to you. This is what Mr. Kinglake said on the trial of the election petition of 1869. "The determination to conduct the election "within the strict bounds of legality originated, I "must say, with Mr. Henry Lovibond, my head "agent." Do you concur in that idea, that Mr. Lovibond conducted that election upon pure principles ? That is what Mr. Kinglake said ?—In the present opinion I have given, how can I ?

4169. Quite right. That is straightforward. I do not want to trip you up in anything. It rather takes us by surprise. I will now read what Mr. Vanderbyl said on that. "Did you, as well as Mr. Kinglake, "give to your agents direct instructions to avoid all "such irregularities as might place the election in "jeopardy, if you succeeded ?—I did." Do you believe anything was done by the respective agents in direct contravention of the orders given to them by their respective candidates ?—No, I do not say that.

4170. That is what I ask you. Do you believe if Cook and Lovibond both found money, that they did that directly in contravention to the express orders given to them by their respective candidates ?—That is my opinion of the candidates, and I cannot say ; I have no means of judging.

FIFTH DAY.
A. Allan.
27 Aug. 1869.

4171. You had no communication with anybody to lead you to suppose that there had been those instructions given?—No.

4172. Nothing of the kind?—No.

4173. Or announced to any active men of the party like yourself that there would be no money at all? Nothing of that kind had been said to you beforehand?—I had not heard that there would be or would not be.

4174. Exactly. You, being the active agent for them, and their confidential agent on the former occasions, had no intimation that there would be no money?—None whatever.

4175. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you the slightest reason to suppose that either Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl expressed the least disapprobation on account of the bribery made on their account by their lawyers?—I am not aware that they have.

4176. If anybody told you so, would you believe it?—If you will please to ask me the question again, I will try to answer it.

4177. If anybody told you that Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl are very much shocked to hear that Reed and Cook, or Mr. Lovibond, gave you, and Bussell, and Garratt money to bribe with at all, would you believe it?—No; I would not.

4178. You said Mr. Hodges, a woollen draper. What is his Christian name?—I do not know. I forget his Christian name. It is Richard.

4179. What street is he in?—Cornhill, a next door neighbour to me.

4180. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is just one question I want to ask you about your lodgings. Were you in the habit of letting your lodgings, or was it an exceptional thing that Mr. Kinglake had them?—Mr. Kinglake always had them when he was down.

4181. Did you let them to anybody else?—Mr. Bagehot.

4182. Is it an exceptional thing for you to let them, or do you always let them?—Occasionally.

4183. Is there a private door?—Oh, yes.

4184. Was Mr. Lovibond in the habit of going there to see Mr. Kinglake?—I have not the slightest doubt of it.

4185. And were also Mr. Cook, and Mr. Reed, as well as Mr. Lovibond?—I think Mr. Lovibond more than any others.

4186. When Mr. Bate was alive, he was, as we were told, Mr. Kinglake's agent. Used he to go, before Mr. Lovibond?—That was before I had anything to do with him.

4187. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Kinglake says in answer to this question: "This evidence has brought facts to "your knowledge, of which you were perfectly "ignorant?" This is the evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn, and he says, "Entirely." Now do you believe that Mr. Kinglake had never heard of what had been done on that following day, before he heard it disclosed before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—It is quite possible that he never had.

4188. (Mr. Anstey.) Remember, this is months after the election, after Mr. Kinglake has been said to have been engaged in negociations about staving off the election petition, and, after all this he states at the very end of the election trial, for it is the last question put to him,—this: "Did you strive, by direc-"tion, and by personal interference, in every way "you could, to secure a pure election in this borough? This evidence has brought facts to your knowledge "of which you were perfectly ignorant?—Entirely." Have you any remark to make to that?—The words may be literally true in the abstract.

4189. But not in the concrete?—Well that is my opinion.

4190. (Mr. Price.) It must be wilful blindness you mean. Now we go to the election immediately before the last, that would be the second election of 1866. That was the election in which Mr. Patton came down to be re-elected upon taking the office of Lord Advocate?—Yes.

4191. And when Mr. Vanderbyl was brought from London?—Yes.

4192. When did you first learn Mr. Vanderbyl was coming down, how long before? Had you anything to do with getting Mr. Vanderbyl?—No; nothing at all.

4193. Had you any previous conversation with any of the heads of the party as to having a contest at all?—I know Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham had gone to London, and it was with a view to get a candidate in the Liberal interest.

4194. Do you know that Mr. Bagehot had declined to go and contest against Mr. Patton so recently after his election?—I had heard it.

4195. Do you know whether Mr. Kinglake had expressed a desire not to have a contest? Did you know he had expressed his disapprobation of it?—No; I did not.

4196. You first heard from some of the agents of the party, I suppose, with respect to Vanderbyl's coming down?—I was out of Bridgwater town on the day he came down, on the Monday, and I was then in my own trade; I was out on my own commercial business. I came in on the Monday night.

4197. That was the Monday before the election?—That was the Monday before the election.

4198. It was all done very quickly. The writ was moved for, and how soon after the writ was moved did Mr. Vanderbyl come?—Monday night he came.

4199. Then the writ had been moved for probably on the Friday?—I came home by train about 4 o'clock of that Monday afternoon, and I saw the name "Vanderbyl" posted up, and I did not know what it meant.

4200. On the Monday?—On the Monday.

4201. Had Vanderbyl then arrived in the town, do you know?—No. He arrived the same evening. This was about the 4 o'clock train I arrived by, and Mr. Vanderbyl came down by the 7 train.

4202. You did not known the meaning of this?—No.

4203. Did you make any inquiry about it?—Yes.

4204. Where did you go? Did you go to the "Globe," or the head quarters?—No.

4205. Or did you put yourself in communication with the lawyers?—No, I did not.

4206. Not that night?—No, I did not.

4207. Now, about the Tuesday?—Was Tuesday the nomination day?—No.

4208. When was the nomination day?—Wednesday was the nomination.

4209. On the Tuesday, do you remember seeing anybody in connexion with the parties?—No, not the Tuesday.

4210. When you made inquiries of people whom you met, as to who Mr. Vanderbyl was, did you know he was the candidate who stood for Yarmouth?—No; but I knew it afterwards.

4211. And you knew he had spent a good deal of money there?—I knew it before the election.

4212. That he had spent a good deal of money there?—Yes.

4213. On Tuesday, did you put yourself in communication with the legal agents or not?—Yes.

4214. Now we come to the nomination day?—Yes.

4215. On the nomination day, was there anything you did on that day?—It was either Tuesday night or Wednesday morning, I will not swear which, that Mr. Barham told me if I would go down to the "Globe" hotel on the nomination morning, which would be the Wednesday morning, that I should meet there a Mr. Brogden, and I was to tell him all I knew, and to explain the matter.

4216. (Mr. Price.) Bagehot's in 1866 was the first election you acted in?—Yes, it was.

4217. At that time the position you had fulfilled was that of paymaster to the bribers?—Yes.

4218. That was the experience they had of you, as paymaster to the bribers?—Exactly.

4219. Then Mr. Barham told you to see Mr. Brogden, and tell him all you knew?—Yes.

4220. Was that all that passed?—Yes.

4221. You knew what that meant, I suppose?—Yes.

4222. That you were to go and tell him all you knew, and tell him what money would be required?—Yes.

4223. (Mr. Coleridge.) It had that impression on your mind?—Yes.

4224. That you were to go to Mr. Brogden and tell him what the election could be done for, and give him the benefit of your experience?—Yes.

4225. (Mr. Price.) And did you know that Mr. Brogden was the gentleman who stood at Yarmouth with Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, I did.

4226. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is a Glamorganshire coal merchant?—At Porth Caul.

4227. (Mr. Price.) You knew he was a moneyed man?—No, I did not.

4228. You knew he was Vanderbyl's colleague?—Yes.

4229. Did you go and inquire for him at the "Globe"?—On the nomination morning?

4230. Yes. You went there and saw him?—Yes.

4231. After the poll was opened?—It was on the nomination morning.

4232. Did you see him at the "Globe"?—I saw him at the "Globe."

4233. Now tell us what passed?—We went upstairs into a room.

4234. You and he alone?—Yes.

4235. We want a full disclosure of what took place between you and him?—I told him what I knew of the organization of the liberal party with respect to Mr. Bagehot.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us what you told him.

4236. (Mr. Price.) What did you tell him was the state of things in the town with respect to the mode of conducting elections here?—I told him the number of men we polled in Bagehot's election by paying.

4237. How many did you tell him you had paid by bribing?—Well, I cannot say how many now.

4238. (Mr. Coleridge.) About how many?—We lost the election.

(Mr. Price.) Never mind that.

4239. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many did you tell him you polled by bribing?

(Mr. Price.) You told him the number you say? How many did you tell him?—About 170.

4240. About 170 you polled by payment?—Yes. It may be 10*l.* each.

4241. That is as near as you can say. Did you tell him how much you paid them?—Yes.

4242. What sum did you say you required?—They were paid 10*l.* each.

4243. (Mr. Coleridge.) 1,700*l.*?—How many hundred pounds?

4244. (Mr. Price.) There are 170 at 10*l.* a piece?—That would be how much money.

4245. (Mr. Coleridge.) 1,700*l.*?—Oh, I made a mistake. There could not have been so many, because the amount spent at that time was 1,100*l.* We did not pay so much in Bagehot's election.

4246. (Mr. Price.) Whatever the number was you told him you paid them 10*l.* each?—Yes. You will please correct the sum I gave. It is a positive mistake. It is too many men.

4247. (Mr. Price.) What did Mr. Brogden say to that?—He introduced me to another gentleman.

4248. Did he say anything to you about the sum when you named that?—No, he did not.

4249. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you tell him where that money came from?—No, I did not. He never asked me.

4250. (Mr. Price.) He introduced you to some one?—To a gentleman, a man of whom I had the money.

4251. A gentleman who was in the room with him?—No.

4252. He introduced you to him?—Yes; he was a stranger.

4253. (Mr. Anstey.) Where?—In the hotel.

4254. In another room in the same hotel?—No.

4255. (Mr. Price.) Can you give us any notion of what sort of man he was; did you hear Bussell's account of him, the description he gave?—That is a different election.

4256. (Mr. Anstey.) What is his name?—I do not know his name.

4257. (Mr. Price.) He was a stranger to you?—He was a stranger to me.

4258. (Mr. Coleridge.) What sort of looking man was he; was he a tall dark man?—He was dressed in dark clothes. He looked like a Wesleyan preacher.

4259. Was he dark or fair?—Dark.

4260. Very dark?—

(Mr. Price.) Like a coloured man at all?—Well, he was a white man.

4261. Was he like a sort of mulatto man?—No; he looked to me more like a waiter to an hotel, or a muslin weaver in Scotland, in his Sunday clothes.

4262. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he a stranger here?—Yes.

4263. You say he looked as if he was in his Sunday clothes. Did he look as if he was not in the habit of wearing good clothes every day, and did not seem at home in them?—No; I said as a muslin weaver. That is the description; I cannot say more than that.

4264. (Mr. Price.) What aged man was he do you think?—I should think a man of 50.

4265. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Brodgen introduced him to you?—There was very little introduction.

4266. (Mr. Price.) What did he say?—I do not recollect that he said anything; it was through Mr. Brogden I took notice of and knew the other man.

4267. What passed between you and this stranger?—Some money.

4269. (Mr. Anstey.) He gave it to you?—Well, he opened a bag, and gave me some; it was more than I could carry, and I took it home at three times.

4270. (Mr. Price.) Eventually you got 1,400*l.* in sovereigns from him?—All in sovereigns.

4271. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get any money from anybody else at that election?—I did.

4272. Who from?—Mr. Barham.

4273. When was that?—On the polling day, after the money was done.

4274. After you had disbursed your 1,400*l.* on the polling day, you wanted more?—Yes.

4275. How much more did you calculate that you wanted?—I do not know that I calculated anything, but I will tell you how much more I got.

4276. Well do?—2,600*l.*

4277. From Mr. Barham?—Yes.

4278. (Mr. Coleridge.) In sovereigns?—No.

4279. In paper?—In paper.

4280. In Bank of England notes?—Well, they were in bank notes.

4281. (Mr. Price.) Were they provincial notes, or what?—They were local notes.

4282. Of what bank; a bank here? Does this bank issue its own notes?—There were some Bank of England notes amongst them; but the most of them were the West of England and South Wales District Bank.

4283. (Mr. Coleridge.) And were they 5*l.* or 10*l.*, or what?—Mostly.

4284. In twenties?—No; mostly in fives or tens.

4285. What time of the day was this?—That was about the meridian blaze.

4286. About 1 o'clock?—Yes.

4287. And where did you receive it from him?—At my own house.

4288. Did he come to you, or did you send to him?—He came down to me.

FIFTH DAY.

A. Allan.

27 Aug. 1869.

4289. (Mr. Anstey.) Is this the name of the bank whose notes you received, the "West of England and South Wales District Bank"?—Exactly so.

4290. (Mr. Price.) And that bank has a branch office here in Bridgwater?—Yes.

4291. (Mr. Anstey.) Who is the manager?—Mr. John Ford,—Captain Ford.

4292. And who is the cashier?—I do not know.

4293. Do you know anybody connected with it, whose surname begins with C.?—No; I do not know anybody connected with it; I do not bank with it. They are my next door neighbours.

4294. (Mr. Coleridge.) When Mr. Barham came down to you, did you tell him that you had had 1,400*l.* from a stranger, and had spent it?—No; I do not think I did.

4295. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what passed between you and him. You had sent up to him to say you wanted more money?—Yes.

4296. Did you send up word to him that you wanted more money, or how, before he came with more money that was wanted by you?—I stayed in my own house, and all the election agents, whenever they wanted any money, came to me, or sent to me, and had it; and the fund got exhausted, and Mr. Barham supplied me with more.

4297. But how did Mr. Barham know you wanted more?—He was in and out of my house every quarter of an hour throughout the day.

4298. So that he knew from time to time that the money was exhausted, and you wanted more?—I had the money from 200*l.* to 300*l.* at a time till it was exhausted, and he knew where it was going.

4299. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was not in one lump?—No.

4300. (Mr. Price.) As he came down to your house from time to time, you told him more money was wanted, and he came down with more sovereigns?—Yes.

4301. And altogether you got 2,600*l.* from him?—Yes.

4302. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time of the day was it that he gave you the last lot, how long before the close of the poll?—I should think about one o'clock.

4303. You had the whole of it by one o'clock?—I think so.

4304. Did you pay the most of them before the poll, or the most of them afterwards?—They were almost all paid before the poll.

4305. (Mr. Price.) That money went mostly through the hands of your sub-agents?—As I have already said, with two or three small exceptions.

4306. Who were those whom you paid yourself?—Oh, I paid a Mr. Winterbottom, who used to keep a school here, and he came back here just in time to record his vote.

4307. A schoolmaster?—Yes.

4308. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he any relation of Dr. Winterbotham?—His name is Bottomley, not Winterbottom.

4309. (Mr. Price.) And you say he was a schoolmaster here?—He was a schoolmaster and a draper.

4310. Had he given up the school at that time?—Yes; and gone and taken a business at Tiverton.

4311. And he came down here to vote?—Yes.

4312. How much did he take from you?—10*l.*

4313. Did he come on purpose here to vote?—Yes.

4314. And he came down first thing?—Mr. William Hurman introduced him to me. Mr. Hurman said he said, "he would not go to poll at all."

4315. Who told you so?—Bottomley told me so.

4316. He said he would not go over to vote unless he had 10*l.* Had he been in a good position here?—Yes.

4317. And he was in a good position at Tiverton?—Yes.

4318. And he came over on purpose to get the money?—Yes.

4319. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he in what is called the Tiverton Grammar School?—I think he has left Tiverton now.

4320. But at that time?—At that time he was in the Tiverton Grammar School, and I believe he has left now.

4321. (Mr. Price.) Who else?—Another man who lived in this town, who has gone, James Kerle; and he came here to vote.

4322. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much did Kerle get?—10*l.*

4323. (Mr. Price.) Where is he living now?—He is living up at Chard.

4324. At Chard?—I believe so.

4325. He is to be found there?—He is connected with the Chard Railway.

4326. (Mr. Anstey.) Were there any other persons you paid?—I also paid James Mears in Eastover.

4327. What is he?—A boot and shoe manufacturer, and a general shopkeeper.

4328. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he get, 10*l.*?—15*l.* He would not take 10*l.*

4329. (Mr. Price.) He would not take 10*l.* and you gave him 15*l.*?—Yes.

4330. (Mr. Coleridge.) How had Mears voted at the election before?—Always voted for us. The first year, I paid him.

4331. Did Kerle always vote for you?—Yes.

4332. And this Bottomley, had he always voted for you?—Yes. He had not been out of town long.

4333. In 1862 whom did he vote for?—He voted for us.

4334. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know where Bottomley has gone?—I do not know.

4335. Where can he be heard of?—I cannot tell.

4336. (Mr. Price.) Is there anybody here who would be likely to know where he has gone?—Perhaps the gentleman who succeeded him in the school might know where he is; the gentleman who holds the school that Bottomley had when he was here, he may know.

4337. Was it a public school?—No; it was quite a private school for young gentlemen.

4338. Not attached to any chapel or church?—No, a private school.

(Mr. Price.) That will be mentioned by the shorthand writers, that any person, who we find has had an opportunity of seeing the evidence that has been given, and does not choose to come forward and give his evidence, will have no protection, and of course we shall be obliged to schedule him as a person who has received bribes, to be dealt with by the proper authorities. If there is any friend of this gentleman in the town, or present here, he will be doing him a good service by letting him know that as soon as possible, whoever he may be.

(Mr. Anstey.) Or any other person who has given or taken bribes.

4339. (Mr. Price.) Was there any name to the school, or was it merely called "Bottomley's school?—Bottomley's school.

4340. Is there anybody carrying it on now? Did he pass the school over to anybody else who has taken it up?—Yes. I told you that perhaps that gentleman could tell you.

4341. What is the name of the gentleman?—Mr. Russell.

4342. Those are the only three persons that you bribed yourself?—The only three that I can remember.

4343. (Mr. Anstey.) There were others?—I do not remember.

4344. There may have been?—There may have been. If I remember any other I will tell you.

4345. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is 3,965*l.* for you to account for through your agents, when you do it?—Yes.

4346. (Mr. Price.) What portions were distributed out to the different men?—I cannot speak accurately to each man, looking individually. These are only fresh memoranda I have put down to refresh my memory.

4347. From your recollection?—From my recollection. If I make a wrong statement——

(Mr. Coleridge.) The parties can be called, and they can put it right.

4348. (Mr. Price.) We take it that you are giving it to the best of your recollection. You are not primed to it?—Ambrose Dyer, nurseryman and seedsman in this town. I think he polled about three people.

4349. (Mr. Price.) How much money did you give him?—I would give him about 10*l.* apiece I believe for three people, and that he paid.

4350. (Mr. Coleridge.) You would give him 30*l.* for three voters; besides that, would you give him anything for himself?—No. That is the reason why Mr. Bussell said yesterday that the party was all sixes and sevens. By me they were paid money for the first election, which they were not under the last election.

4351. May we put it down that you gave Dyer about 30*l.*?—Yes.

4352. Who else?—James Allway.

4353. (Mr. Price.) How much did he have?—I think the same. He polled about three.

4354. Who else?—Thomas Searle. He is a builder. I think he polled about 13.

4355. (Mr. Coleridge.) 130*l.*?—That would be about it.

4356. We take it all as about. Now go on. There was the firm of Cooke and Heal.

4357. What are Cooke and Heal?—Brewers. That is the Heal who was called this morning. Cooke came to me with a list on the election night, and it looked a very powerful instrument, and on that, on the morning of the election, I paid 150*l.* to his partner. He was there, and introduced me to his partner.

4358. (Mr. Price.) You paid that to Cooke?—No, to Heal, on the faith of that list handed by Cooke to his partner. I went up and saw Mr. Cooke, and he said, "Yes, yes, Heal attends to that,—my partner."

4359. And how many did he poll?—He polled one voter, as far as I know.

4360. What became of the rest of the money?—I do not know.

4361. All that you know is that he polled one vote?—Yes.

4362. Do you suppose that one voter got 150*l.*?—No.

4363. What is the largest sum you ever heard that any one voter got here?—40*l.*

4364. You do not know anybody who ever got 150*l.*?—Not to my knowledge. The only person that got 40*l.* that I know of was given by Mr. Bussell yesterday. I went five or six times to get a statement from him before I could make up my own account, and I went to Cooke and Heal to get this statement until I was tired of going.

4365. (Mr. Coleridge.) What excuse did he make? He would to-morrow.

4366. Did you ever accuse him point blank of embezzling the money, or not paying it to the voters?—I never did.

4367. Did you ever tell him that he had only brought up one voter?—He referred me to Mr. Cook, the lawyer, and I went to Mr. Cook to know about it, and Mr. Cook knew nothing about it. I determined at last that he had the money, and I gave it up.

4368. But in your mind he stuck to the money?—He did, as far as I know.

4369. Well, go on, who is the next?—White, in the High Street.

4370. What is his Christian name?—I do not know. I forget.

4371. How much did you give him?—I think he polled about five votes for us.

4372. Did all these people come down to your house for it?—Unless I went and gave them the money, they came for it.

4373. (Mr. Anstey.) Joseph White was that, or what is his Christian name?

(Mr. Coleridge.) He forgets.

4374. (Mr. Anstey.) What is he?—A fellmonger.

4375. (Mr. Price.) Do you see Mr. Heal here in court?—No.

4376. Have you seen him this morning?—No, I have not.

4377. Have you seen him during these proceedings?—No; I have not.

4378. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now, go on?—William Dyment, of the Taunton Road.

4379. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he in Brown's employment?—No; he is in the employment of Collins of this town.

4380. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much to him?—10*l.*

4381. Was that for himself?—No, for some one.

4382. Go on?—Bunter, plumber and glazier.

4383. What is his Christian name?—John.

4384. How much?—Seven votes.

4386. Go on?—Henry Cornelius White.

4387. How much?—20 votes.

4388. 200*l.*?—I think more than that.

4389. How much do you think it was. I have taken it all "about?"—That is what I have put it down,—20 votes.

4390. You made up your account. Who would have your account, if there is any in existence?—Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham.

4391. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Henry Cornelius White was in court yesterday?—He was.

4392. Sitting on that side (pointing)?—Yes; he is sitting there now.

4393. Sitting on that side (pointing)?—Yes.

4394. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you will go on about the accounts?—In making up the account there was 20*l.* deficient. Mr. White lost in making up his accounts that item of 20*l.*, which he could not account for.

4395. Do you mean he had that for himself, and had given it away, and could not tell to whom he had given it?—No; William Bradford Gold, a tailor and linen draper. I say "William Bradford," because there is another "Gold" in the same trade, and in the same street.

4396. How much?—Three votes.

4397. £30. Go on?—Charles Lott.

4398. How much?—Four votes.

4399. £40?—Henry Bussell.

4400. How much?—Forty votes.

4401. £400?—Charles Bulpin.

4402. How much?—Twenty-five votes.

4403. £250?—John Smith.

4404. How much?—Fifty.

4405. £500?——

4406. (Mr. Anstey.) John Smith, the grocer?—John Smith, the grocer; William Symons the brickmaker in this town.

4407. How much?—He had 130*l.* of me, for which he never accounted.

4408. You do not know that he polled anybody?—No.

4409. Did he poll himself?—Yes; I believe he did.

4410. As far as you know, he got 130*l.* himself for his vote?—As far as I know.

4411. He never gave you any account himself?—No.

4412. (Mr. Price.) And you do not know whether he polled one single vote?—I do not know whether he polled one single vote.

4413. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ask him for an account?—I did.

4414. And what did he say?—He simply put me off.

4415. Simply put you off?—Yes, he is a gentleman in a good position, you could not easily approach, and he puts you off. He did not speak to me at that time because I had some unpleasantness with him about money.

4416. Is he a master brickmaker?—Yes, he employs a couple of hundred workmen, and he belongs to the firm of Symonds & Co.

4417. And he has stuck to this 130*l.*?—Yes.

4418. Is he in court?—I have not seen him.

FIFTH DAY.
A. Allan.
27 Aug. 1869.

4419. (Mr. Price.) Is he in Bridgwater ?—Yes.

4420. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who next ?—Roberts the coach maker.

4421. What is his Christian name ?—John.

4422. How many votes ?—One.

4423. How much money ?—40*l.*

4424. Who was the voter ?—Hook.

4425. (Mr. Price.) Was it asked for specially as a sum of money to be given to Hook ?—Yes.

4426. That Hook required ?—Yes, exactly, Thomas Hill, St. John Street.

4427. How much ?—Six votes.

4428. £60. Who is the next ?—William Onion.

4429. How much ?—Two votes.

4430. £20 ?—There was a Mr. Fisher a foreman at Brown's mills.

4431. What is his Christian name ?—I do not know his Christian name; "Henry" I hear some one say.

4432. How much ?—About three votes, Culliford.

4433. Edward ?—Yes, Edward Culliford.

4434. How much ?—About 10 votes.

4435. £100 ; he was a man who would not take money for himself, I think you said ?—Yes.

4436. Did he account for it ?—Yes.

4437. Go on, we have not come to the end yet.—That is the amount.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Just let me cast it up.

4438. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you tell me why, as you heard from Bussell's evidence yesterday, he should have thought it so very improbable that William Onion was employed by you to distribute amongst bribable voters ?—No, I do not know.

4439. He said he did not believe that William Onion ever was employed, or ever would be employed, do you know any reason for that belief ?—No, I know of no reason for that belief, only Bussell's ignorance of the fact.

4440. I make that 2,185*l.* as against 4,000*l.* that you received, which, added to the 35*l.* you paid away, would make 2,220*l.* as against 4,000*l.* you received ?—Well then there is another item of disbursement that I can mention.

4441. I mean there is something like 1,800*l.* unaccounted for at present ?—Yes.

4442. That is all you say you gave away to these persons ?—Some of them ; it is impossible to account for more money.

4443. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you give me any others? That is a large amount of money, 1,800*l.*?—Those are all the electioneering agents working for me. Some of these men had 25*l.* for their votes, they did not go for tens.

4444. Then let us get it right on the note; you mean that many of these men had got a larger sum than I have put them down for ?—Oh yes.

4445. (Mr. Coleridge.) I have taken them down as tens.

(Mr Anstey.) That is why I took down the votes without the money.

4446. (Mr. Coleridge.) That would be a matter for the men you gave the money to ?—That would be a matter for the men I gave the money to.

4447. When you came to make up your accounts you must have seen by those expenses exactly what you gave away. Had you consumed the whole 4,000*l.*?—Every farthing of the money.

4448. Then you must have given some of these men more than you have told me of ?—I have another item of disbursements.

4449. That is what we want to know.

(Mr. Price.) Go on to the other items ?—In Sir John Shelley's election the liberal interest paid no money. At that election there was as usual as at other elections public house bills incurred. There were bills for electioneering favours at drapers' shops, for colours and ribands ; and there was a bill of Mr. Glanville for flags and decorations, tradesmen's bills.

4450. That was after the Procession Act ?—They did not take any money for their vote, but they had an indirect claim for goods sold.

4451. It is very important that we should know it, because it is very much the same as receiving a bribe ?—These bills were not paid in Sir John Shelley's election. When it came to Vanderbyl's election, the bills having stood over for two years.

4452. Why did it skip over to Mr. Vanderbyl instead of being charged to Mr. Bagehot ?—Because Bagehot's party had not the money to pay it, and that was the reason we lost the election.

4453. How much is the gross then—we will go to the details afterwards,—how much did you pay out of Mr. Vanderbyl's money for what was done in Mr. Kinglake's and Sir J. Shelley's election ?—There was a bill to William Hurman of 34*l.*, a draper in Fore Street. There was a bill to Merson at the "Punch Bowl" public house.

4454. How much ?—I could not say.

4455. 10*l.* ?—I could not say.

4456. 20*l.* ?—I have not the most remote idea ; but Merson could tell you.

4457 (Mr. Price.) Did you render an account of this matter ?—I did, and it is in the list.

4458. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then go on ?—Stephen Crocker. He was then hotel keeper at the "King's Arms" on the quay. He had a bill as against Sir John Shelley.

4459. (Mr. Price.) A public house bill ?—A public house bill.

4460. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much ?—I could not swear to the amount of his bill.

4461. But about how much ; was it 100*l.* ?—No ; well it was about 20*l.* perhaps. I should say 20*l.*

4462. We take them all as about ?—It was about. I speak all from memory in this case. And Stephen Crocker had also 20*l.* from me that day to poll a Mr. Richards who voted. I forgot to enter him in the list, and he never polled him.

4463. (Mr. Anstey.) For Captain Richards ?—No, not Captain Richards, John Richards I think was his name.

4464. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he poll him ?—No.

4465. Did he give him money ?—No.

4466. He kept the money ?—He kept the money.

4467. Did he vote himself ?—He did vote himself, but he appeared in Mr. John Smith's list for 10*l.*

4468. He got 20*l.* from you, and 10*l.* from Mr. Smith ?—Yes.

4469. (Mr. Price.) And his bill paid ?—Yes.

4470. He got 20*l.* from you, and 10*l.* from Mr. John Smith ?—Yes.

4471. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then go on ?—Mr. Charles Lott, a draper.

4472. How much ?—He had a bill of 60*l.*

4473. (Mr. Price.) What was that for ?—The bill was before I had anything to do with electioneering.

4474. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was that for ?—I do not know.

4475. No items given ?—No.

4476. To whom was it charged ?—I handed the money to Mr. John Smith, and he paid the bill. I never saw it.

4477. It was paid to Mr. John Smith, and Mr. John Smith delivered it ?—Yes, it was on Mr. John Smith's list.

4478. (Mr. Price.) Did he tell you it was for expenses incurred in the last election ?—Yes, Mr. Smith told me so. Mr. Smith told me that Mr. Lott owed him some rent down in High Street, and Mr. Lott would not pay it unless he paid the bill, and he actually paid him the money for this bill. This bill was for 60*l.*

4479. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Smith got his rent through this means ?—Exactly ; he would not pay it.

4480. (Mr. Anstey.) Then, in point of fact, in settling Mr. Lott's bill for 60*l.*, you were accommodating out of Mr. Brogden's and Mr. Vanderbyl's money, not Mr. Lott at all, but Mr. John Smith the grocer, who received the amount in payment of his own rent ?—Mr. Lott said the order was given by Mr. Smith, and Mr. Vanderbyl was the debtor for the money. Mr. Smith can account for the money. I do not know whether it was Mr. Smith who paid the money.

4481. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, that was 60*l.*?—Then there was Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell had a bill at Sir John Shelley's election. That was outstanding.

4482. How much?—I could not say. He gave me a statement yesterday.

4483. He told us?—He told you yesterday.

4484. (Mr. Price.) But we did not understand from Mr. Bussell that he did not get paid until this time?—I think Bussell's bill in Sir John Shelley's election was not paid till Mr. Vanderbyl's election.

4485. Bussell did not tell us that?—And then there would be Mr. Vanderbyl's own bill at that election as well.

4486. (Mr. Coleridge.) What bill?—The treating bill.

4487. Mr. Vanderbyl's treating bill?—Bussell's treating bill.

4488. Although I dare say we can get a good many of these accounts rendered by the people themselves, yet there is a very large margin left; and as two or three people have stuck to the money, we are not sure of getting a correct account?—Mr. Vanderbyl had the debts of Sir John Shelley to attend to, as well as his own.

4489. You have only given us about 160*l.* of Sir John Shelley's debts. Is that all?—There is William Bradford Gold.

4490. How much?—10*l.* or 16*l.*

4491. Have you no sort of memoranda by which you can tell me roughly how much money you were paid by Mr. Vanderbyl, for debts which were left by Sir John Shelley?—No, I cannot.

4492. (Mr. Price.) Not a rough sum?—No, I passed all the accounts.

4493. Do you think there was as much as 400*l.* or 500*l.* debts arising out of Sir John Shelley's election paid by Mr. Vanderbyl? Just consider for a moment?—I will give you the items as far as I can, and you can add them up as well as me.

4494. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you give them so slowly. You have given us about 160*l.*—There was Joseph Glanville sent me a bill.

4495. (Mr. Anstey.) What was Gold's bill for?—Silk ribbons and favours.

4496. He is a silk mercer?—Yes, he is a woollen draper.

4497. (Mr. Price.) Give us the amount in round numbers if you can. Was it as much as 300*l.* or 400*l.*, or 400*l.* or 500*l.* debts, arising out of Sir John Shelley's election?

(Mr. Anstey.) Or more?

(Mr. Price.) Or more?—I could not undertake to give it to you.

4498. Not within 100*l.*?—No; I could give you the items.

4499. You do not give us the items, because you cannot give us the sums?—I gave you the names of the gentlemen. You can do it yourself.

4500. But you cannot do it?—No, they must do it themselves.

4501. But it seems, that in some cases they have kept back some money. We are not sure that we can get it?—There is Glanville,—there is a small bill in his case.

4502. (Mr. Price.) What could he have a small bill for?—For painting and decoration, or something of that sort; there was a bill I know. Then there was Edward Babbage in Eastover,—there was a bill from him.

4503. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not know how much?—I think it was 28*l.*

4504. Then, in fact, Mr. Vanderbyl was expected to liquidate the debts of the borough?—It was the only way to get in; it was compulsory.

4505. Of course Mr. Bagehot would not pay Sir John Shelley's debts as he did not get in?—I do not know; however, he did not get in.

4506. You say, because he skipped over those debts, that was the reason he lost his election?—Yes.

4507. If he had had plenty of money to have bribed right and left, he could have got in without paying these outstanding debts?—The liberal party voted for Mr. Bagehot, but he did not lose those votes through not paying them.

4508. (Mr. Price.) When they got a rich man down they thought it was worth their while to press for their money?—They thought they ought to have been paid their money, and they said "We will not "vote until we are paid."

4509. (Mr. Price.) Do you know whether or not these men had refused to vote at this election of Mr. Vanderbyl, until they had these bills paid?—William Hurman told me he would not vote until his bill was paid.

4510. Any other?—And Babbage.

4511. Any other?—No.

4512. Do you know whether or not they made that a stipulation with the men who were employed to go and pay the bills?—No, they did not.

4513. Did you pay all the bills yourself?—I did not.

4514. Then you entrusted some person to go and pay them. I do not understand when you gave up this money, that all of them had refused to vote until they were paid these bills?—Not all of them. I had a conversation with Mr. Hurman a day or two before.

4515. But do you know that that was the case?—They voted for Bagehot.

4516. But that might be the more reason for saying the next time that they would not be passed over. What are you looking at? (Referring to a paper handed to the witness by some person in court.)

4517. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that a memorandum of your own?—No.

4518. (Mr. Price.) What is that? No person has a right to interfere with the witnesses, and hand them up a document without being put in the box.

(The Witness.) This is a gentleman who said, "You "gave 15*l.* to William Thomas." (The witness handed the paper to Mr. Coleridge.)

(Mr. Coleridge.) He has no right to hand you this. This should be given to us privately.

4519. Taking it roughly, there is 1,500*l.* left unaccounted for. Supposing we take 500*l.* from that, and say there is only 1,000*l.*, after what you have given us, would that still leave a fair margin? I understand you got 1,400*l.* and 2,600*l.*, did not you?—Yes.

4520. And you gave away both of those sums?—You will find that from one to half past one they would not look at 10*l.*

4521. You mean that generally?—Yes.

4522. (Mr. Price.) What do you say in the early part of the day that they got?—10*l.*

4523. And what afterwards?—Then it came to 15*l.*

4524. And then about 12 o'clock to 25*l.* 100*l.* for four votes?—That is just about the money.

4525. At all events, whatever the voters got for their votes, you got rid of the money in the course of the day?—Yes.

4526. You mean you paid these bills on the very day of the election?—They would not vote until they got the money.

4527. (Mr. Price.) The men would really not go and vote until they had these bills paid?—I did not see them go.

4528. No doubt it was so. It came to this; it was bribing in another form?—It looked like it; it was very strong.

4529. (Mr. Anstey.) How was it mentioned at all that these unpaid bills of Sir John Shelley's election were to be paid by Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Brogden?—and, secondly, how did it come to be mentioned at all that you were to pay these unpaid bills out of your bribery fund, unless it was distinctly understood by you that the payments of these unpaid bills were to be considered as payments for the purchasing of votes?—That is just how I looked upon the money when it was paid away.

FIFTH DAY.

A. Allan.

27 Aug. 1869.

(Mr. Price.) I do not know whether Mr. Barham is in court, but without swearing Mr. Barham I shall call upon him when we meet again to produce the accounts mentioned by this witness.

(Mr. Anstey.) And I shall also call upon Mr. Barham for the accounts for what he calls accounts of expenses not legal, because those he has produced are accounts of what he calls legal expenses of his clients.

Mr.E.Barham.

Mr. Eustace Barham called.

4530. (Mr. Price.) W[illegible] will not swear you at present, but will you produce the accounts which were rendered to you by Andrew Allan?

(Mr. Barham.) I have no such accounts. I have given you over every document in my possession. The accounts which were furnished by Andrew Allan, of which he has spoken, if there are any still extant, are in the possession of Mr. Henry Lovibond. I have not any further accounts and documents in my possession than what I have already handed over to you. Since you stated that you were going to call upon me I have spoken to Mr. Henry Lovibond, and he says——

4531. (Mr. Price.) Well, I only ask you to produce them. You are not a witness at present. Is Mr. Lovibond here?

(Mr. Barham.) He will be here.

4532. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you got the paper I asked for.

(Mr. Barham.) No, I assure you, sir, I have no other paper than what I have handed over; I have had a most careful search made through the office. Every paper I could find bearing upon election matters I have had made up into parcels and handed over to you.

4533. (Mr. Anstey.) You have no loose papers.

(Mr. Barham.) I have not.

(Mr. Price.) Very well. That will do for the present.

[Adjournment.

A. Allan.

Andrew Allan recalled.

4534. (Mr. Price.) Well now, Mr. Allan, since we adjourned have you discovered anything else you can give us about the distribution of this money; about the mode in which it was paid away?—There is a small correction I want to make. I was told since I went out that Mr. Babbage's bill was 40*l.* I think I said it was 28*l.*

4535. 28*l.*, you said, and it is 40*l.*?—40*l.* I have been told. I do not vouch for the correctness of it. I paid a bill of 25*l.* to Mr. Phelps.

4536. (Mr. Anstey.) Repeat what you said, I do not hear a word you say?—Mr. Babbage's bill I gave the statement of as 28*l.* I have been told since I went out, by some one, it was 40*l.* Phelps of the "Commercial," I paid him 25*l.* for the public house bill.

4537. (Mr. Coleridge.) That would be for treating, I suppose?—For carriage hire.

4537 a. (Mr. Anstey.) There was a disputed item for carriage hire?—There is a bill disputed now. I paid him a disputed item of twenty-two or four pounds.

4538. That disputed item, however —— ? — Is unpaid.

4539. That disputed item, however, has no reference whatever, I believe, to the second election of 1866, but was one of those old unpaid debt or claims standing against Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake. Do not you remember that?—The money I paid him——

4540. Do you remember that or not,—that that claim of Phelps's was in respect to Shelley's election, although it was settled at the second election of 1866. Was not there an advertisement in the papers both by Sir John Shelley's agent and by Kinglake's agent saying that Phelps's claim was disputed as to amount?—Yes, there was.

4541. Well then, is the money you speak of now, as having been paid at the second election of 1866, that claim?—I do not believe it is.

4542. Another claim?—I believe so.

4543. Also against Shelley?—I may be wrong. I paid him 22*l.*, for what claim Phelps must explain.

4544. (Mr. Price.) In what form did you render this account to Mr. Barham? Was it in the shape of a book, or a bill which you made out? What kind of paper was it you rendered the account on?—No, I gave him the lists from the principal ones—the large matters.

4545. Yes; of these large matters the account which you say you rendered to him —— ?—Was lists; and the others were all verbal.

4546. Then you said you rendered an account. I understood you to have rendered a written account. What did that written account contain?—Oh! I took my own particulars together with the lists I had from the men that had received money from me. I tendered the lists, and I gave them the particulars, and they audited the account themselves.

4547. Did you see Mr. Barham put it down or enter it in a book?—Not in a book, on a paper.

4548. Who was present?—Henry Lovibond and Mr. Barham. No one else.

4549. How long was that after the election?—Two or three days.

4550. You took down your list and the documents you had, and the returns from the men you entrusted the money to?—As far as I had returns. In many cases I had no returns. I had no return from Symmons, no return from Heal, and a great many other matters I had no return of.

4551. You made out as much of it as you could verbally without documents?—I gave them all the documents I had, and fill up the others by statements.

4552. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you had returns at that time from all the previously unpaid claimants, tradesmen,—claims for supplies and so on, from such men as Hurman, and so on?—These were paid on the polling-day.

4553. And you made a return two or three days after the election of all those?—Of everything.

4554. Therefore Mr. Barham, when he prepared an abstract of election accounts for publication in the usual way, was perfectly aware that you had spent some hundreds of pounds for settling claims in that way?—He must have been.

4555. (Mr. Price.) Well, is there anything else you wish to tell us?—He must have been aware if the abstracts were prepared more than three days after the election.

4556. Are you aware that there was a month given?—I think it is within a month you are obliged to return—now at all events—the expenditure by the election agent. Was Mr. Barham the person who would have to make that return?—I do not know.

4557. You do not know whether he was the election agent for the election expenses under the statute?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) He was one of them.

4558. (Mr. Price.) Then at all events before the month had expired, long before the month had expired, you had given him a return of this expenditure?—I had.

4559. Of every shilling of it as far as you know?—Of every shilling of it, of all the 4,000*l.*, that I swear.

4560. Now you know it has been stated, and it is only fair to put the question to you, it has been said against you that the party was at sixes and seven, as Mr. Bussell said, in 1868, and that arose to a certain extent from an idea that had got abroad that some persons who had been entrusted with money had stuck to it, some persons in your position. I think you said yourself that that had been reported against you?—No, I will make an explanation. After the election of Vanderbyl, whose accounts were closed about two or three days after the election, after that time, Mr. Smith, Henry Cornelius White, Henry Bussell, Charles Bulpin, and I do not know any others, but these having passed their accounts to me, and I having passed them, they came to me and thought that they ought to be paid something for services rendered. I said, "Why did not you say "something about services rendered before the "accounts were closed? I have no money. Not a "shilling." I told Mr. Lovibond of the matter, and they were never paid a farthing, and never had a halfpenny, and for that reason they were all sixes and sevens with me, and thought that it was me that prevented them having it.

4561. They thought you prevented them having it. It was not an imputation upon you that you had put anything in your own pocket?—Not the slightest. I will defy either lawyers or agents or any one to show that I have ever had money in that way, or to bring anything against me. That is irresistible, I admit bribery; I admit illegal money dealings in the sense I have named, I do not admit anything else.

4562. (Mr. Anstey.) These are the dates, Mr. Allan. On the 10th of October 1866, there was published in the Bridgwater Mercury advertizing column of that day, page two, Eustace Barham's abstract of Vanderbyl's election expenses, amounting to only 217*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* containing a note that there is only one disputed demand for 12*l.*, that of Hodge for supplying carriages and horses for procession, and so on, dated 4th October 1866; and in the same paper, the 12th of September previously, page two, there is a similar statement by him, "Election expenses, Bagehot, 206*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*," bearing date the 28th August 1866. Now, on the 28th of August 1866, or at all events on the 4th of October 1866, are you quite certain that you had furnished Mr. Eustace Barham with a statement of all the payments which you had then made on the various accounts of which you have spoken?—Quite certain, and I will give you the reason.

4563. (Mr. Price.) Yes?—I believe that electioneering accounts always grow bigger if they are not paid, and my principle is to pay them the next day. I started two elections ago with honest intentions. I thought there was some business about politics till I found out different. When I say "politics" I mean electioneering politics.

4564. What you say now is this, that in 1868 the party, that is to say, certain members of the party, were at sixes and sevens, who were in point of fact these men whom you had employed to bribe voters on former occasions, and who were angry and disappointed that they had not received money themselves as remuneration for the services rendered?—Well, seeing such a large sum of money go as they had seen, and taking so much trouble as they had taken, they thought and said that they were entitled to some remuneration for services rendered, and they thought I ought to pay them, and I said I had no fund to pay them.

4565. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Henry Chapman-Bussell ever say that?—Not to me personally.

4566. Did he to anybody that you know of?—Did you hear that he had complained of not being remunerated?—I think that Henry Cornelius White more than any other wanted to be paid.

4567. I ask you whether Henry Chapman Bussell made any complaint of not being remunerated?—I do not remember an individual complaint on the part of Mr. Henry Bussell. I thought it was said to me by Mr. Smith (Mr. John Smith) that Henry White and they that had taken an active part expected it. He did not say that he expected it on his part but "they" expected it.

4568. Who said this?—Mr. John Smith.

4569. If he said White expected something he took care to get something, because he did not account for 20*l.*?—Smith, I presume, did not know anything about that.

4570. Well then William Symmons again had 130*l.* unaccounted for?—He did not ask anything for services rendered.

4571. He was pretty well paid. Did you on that day at the election you have been speaking of, get any money from anybody but the stranger with the black coat and Mr. Barham?—I did not.

4572. Did all money that was expended in corrupt practices at that election go in some shape or other through your hands?—As far as I know.

4573. You do not know whether any money went into anybody else's hands without passing through yours?—I do not know that anybody in the town received any money except what passed through me.

4574. When you received the money from the stranger (you had it in three instalments if I recollect your explanation) did not the stranger say, "I shall see you here again"?—No.

4575. Did not he say a syllable?—No.

4576. What occurred?—I went into the bedroom, and he had a big black bag there.

4577. Was there anybody in the room besides?—No. He opened the bag and he showed me the lot, and I said, I cannot take it all."

4578. Was it in the bag?—In small gingham or jean bags inside the black bag.

4579. How many bags?—Three.

4580. It was rather a bulky affair?—Yes, it was.

4581. So you took it at separate times for the purposes of concealment, of course?—And it was easier carried.

4582. And for purposes of concealment, I presume, on such an occasion?—Yes.

4583. Did you receive any money from anybody else?—No.

4584. And you do not know that anybody else received any except from you?—No.

4585. At the time Mr. Barham was in and out of your house every quarter of an hour and bringing these sums of money, did he upon any occasion write a cheque in your house, and go out to get it cashed?—Not in my own presence.

4586. Do you know how he got that money?—I do not know. He never told me, and I never asked.

4587. What was the biggest amount at any one time you received?—I should think not more than 300*l.* at one time?

4588. Always in notes. Did you always pay it away in notes?—In the way I had it.

4589. In notes?—Yes.

4590. Paid away the identical notes?—The identical notes. In fact Mr. Barham was close to me when I refused to pay Mr. Symmons 100*l.*

4591. You never told us of that. Why did you refuse to pay Mr. Symmons?—Because he would not tell me what he was going to do with the money.

(Mr. Price.) Now, tell us what happened.

4592. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time of day was it, first of all?—Well, it may have been between 10 and 11 o'clock. He came into where I was in my own house, understood to be there by them I was working with. Symmons came in, and came into the room where I was, and said ———?

4593. What is Symmons?—A brickmaker.

4594. (Mr. Price.) He employs about 200 workmen?—So I understand.

4595. Does he make those bath bricks that are one of the staple trades of the place?—I believe he does. I gave him 15*l.*

4596. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was that 15*l.* for, if he would not tell you what he was going to do with the hundred? Was that for himself?—It was not an unreasonable lot for one man to have, and I did not question him.

4597. Do you imagine that was for him, or was he going to give it to some one else?—I imagine he was going to give it to some one else. He asked for some more money, and I paid him 10*l.* next. He had not been gone long when he wanted some more money, and I gave him the 10*l.*

4598. When was Mr. Barham present?—He was not present at that time; not in the house.

FIFTH DAY.

A. Allan.

27 Aug. 1869.

4599. You were going to explain your saying that you refused to give him 100*l.* ?—I will come to that. Mr. Symmons came back again and wanted more money. I said to him, "I am short of money. It is nearly gone. There is 5*l.*" And he had 5*l.* It was 15*l.*, and 10*l.*, and 5*l.*

4600. 30*l.* ?—He came back again when he had not been gone very long, and he wanted some more. I said, "Where is it all going? because I may possibly "be sending money to the same source as you are "taking it to. As a matter of business let us see "where it is going;" for there is some business even in electioneering. He would not tell me. He was indignant.

4601. Was Mr. Barham present then ?—He was in hearing.

4602. In the room?—Not in the room, in the passage.

4603. Was the door open ?—Yes; Symmons and me were talking loudly.

4604. (Mr. Price.) You were in a room, and there was a passage with the door open. How do you know Mr. Barham was in hearing?—From the fact that he appeared in the door and said, "Let him have a hundred." Therefore he must have been in hearing. I was under his orders, and I paid the man.

4605. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever had any account whatever from Mr. Symmons of this money? —No.

4606. Have you ever given money at any former election ?—No.

4607. This was not the only election of 1866. There was one shortly before. Did not you give him anything then ?—Not that I remember.

4608. (Mr. Price.) From the fact of his not having rendered any account of this money, and from his coming back from time to time and asking for these sums, and asking for the 100*l.*, are you now under the impression that Mr. Symmons came for that money for himself to put in his own packet, or that he required it really, bonâ fide, if I may use the expression, to go and bribe with? What is your impression?—It is a question I did not ask.

4609. At first you doubted about giving it to him, and then you gave him this 100*l.*, and he rendered no account. Is he a person who would take that money for his vote?—I do not know him sufficiently. He is a gentleman, and I believe he had the money for electioneering purposes.

4610. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you mean by a gentleman?—A man of position.

4611. (Mr. Price.) The result of it is this, that so far as you know from any account rendered by Mr. Simmons, that money has gone into his own pocket for his vote?—As far as I know.

(Mr. Price.) Well then, of course, Mr. Symmons (I do not know whether he is here present) must thoroughly well understand this, that unless he can give an account of how he disposed of that money he will be considered by us to have received 130*l.* for his own vote.

(Mr. Anstey.) Under particularly aggravated circumstances.

(Mr. Price.) And he will go into the schedule as a person who has been bribed.

4612. (Mr. Anstey.) You have said that when you went into the bedroom the only person in it was this stranger?—Yes.

4613. And that no words passed between you and him. He only produced the bags, and gave you the money?—I do not remember anything more.

4614. Just carry your recollection back. You know this is very important. He was a stranger to you and you were a stranger to him. If you did not speak to him what check or authority had he for securing against an impostor coming in to receive the 1,400*l.*?—Nothing more than an introduction I had from Mr. Brogden.

4615. You were asked repeatedly to specify what you meant by "no particular introduction," and you said "not much of an introduction." I should like to have the dialogue word for word, as it passed between the stranger and Mr. Brogden?—I do not know that a word was spoken. I was ushered out of one room into another, and nothing more than a bend.

4616. (Mr. Price.) That is, as far as you know, the appearance of you brought in by Mr. Brogden was a satisfaction to this man?—Beyond a doubt.

4617. (Mr. Anstey.) Therefore, whatever conversation took place about the 1,400*l.* must have taken place between Brogden and him?—An understanding must have existed before.

4618. Nothing was said at that time to have justified him in paying over the money to you?—Nothing.

4619. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well now, I do not wish to mix up another election with this, but I want, à propos of this, to understand how you first got into the somewhat peculiar position of being a go-between? —That is just what I should like to explain.

4620. The being a go-between between the lawyers so to speak, and the men like Bussell and others who distributed the money; because you have told us that 1868 was an exceptional case in which you did it yourself, but you would much rather have employed others.

4621. (Mr. Price.) Deliberately, just tell us how it was?—It was my fortune or misfortune to buy the premises in which the Liberal candidates had been for some years accustomed to stay. I went to live there myself.

4622. (Mr. Coleridge.) What year?—About seven or eight years ago when I went there. At the first election as usual they came and rented the apartments, as they had before.

4623. (Mr. Price.) When you went there did anybody acting on their behalf come to you and ask you whether you would undertake to have your house at the disposal of the candidates, any one of the lawyers? —When I went there.

4624. I mean the first election after you went there. How was it brought about that you should consent to take in the candidates, as had been done before with former candidates, as the house had done before. Some person must have come to you on behalf of one of the candidates and asked you whether you would accommodate them with your house?—The facts of the case prove it. I do not remember the instance. The candidates came there to lodge.

4625. Who was the first candidate that came there? —Kinglake.

4626. (Mr. Coleridge.) Kinglake and Sir John Shelley?—Kinglake. We had but room for one. Sir John Shelley had intended to come, but he gave the apartments up to Kinglake.

4627. Where did Sir John Shelley go?—I do not remember. I think to the Railway Hotel.

4628. (Mr. Price.) Now then go on?—Having the candidates in the house, the agents naturally were running up and down stairs and out and in, and having close connexion with the candidates, and I afterwards met in electioneering matters the same gentlemen as well who had been in communication with the candidates.

4629. Barham and Lovibond?—I call them the agents in the matter.

4630. But they were the persons who were calling? —Yes.

4631. Tell us how you came to be the financial agent?—All the persons who were interested in money matters respecting elections came, in consequence of the member being there, most naturally to head quarters.

4632. Bussell and those men?—Bussell and John Smith.

4633. And White?—Yes, through having the candidate in the house we were brought into close contact with them.

4634. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Kinglake ever see these men?—Not to my knowledge.

4635. How many rooms had you in your house?— Mr. Kinglake had a sitting room and bedroom.

4636. What other room did you let to him?—I did not let any other to him.

4637. Where were the agents, in Mr. Kinglake's sitting room ?—Yes.

4638. (Mr. Price.) Was there any other room in your house occupied by Mr. Kinglake, excepting what we will call his private apartments, in which anybody coming there to see his agents could have any discussion upon electioneering matters ?

4639. (Mr. Coleridge.) When men like Bussell and others came there. (You say they came because the member was there), where did they go to ?—They came to my rooms, my own part of the house.

4640. (Mr. Price.) They saw you then ?—They saw me.

4641. Did they ask for you, or go at once to Mr. Kinglake's room ; or did they come and at first ask for you ?—No, I only mentioned them as an element that connected me with the electioneering. Another element was the widows of people at the time of Bagehot whose husbands had previously supported the Liberal candidates. They would come and want something from the candidates because of what their husbands had done.

4642. What, is it an element of corruption in this borough that supporting a candidate is to be looked forward to a pension to the widow ?—There is no fund.

4643. Has it been in your knowledge a practice for a candidate to reward the widow of a defunct voter ? —You could not keep the widows from coming to ask you.

4644. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, but although widows are notoriously importunate would you have allowed these widows to be shown up to Mr. Kinglake ?—But they came to me, and that is how I was connected with the electioneering matters.

4645. (Mr. Price.) You were connected with electioneering matters by the importunate widows ?— They were one element. The solicitors were another element, and a more important one.

4646. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did they first take you into their confidence ?

(Mr. Price.) Did they say, "Will you take this "matter in hand ?"—I do not know.

4647. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was your seducer, in fact ? Who tempted you ?—Mr. Henry Lovibond, at his own office. We had a meeting in the Liberal interest. I knew nothing before about electioneering matters, never had anything to do with them.

4648. Not in Scotland ?—No, not in Scotland. I was only eighteen when I came to this town.

4649. Well, go on. Tell us about the meeting ?— I went to the committee room and Cornelius White was there, John Smith was there, Bussell was there, and I should think fourteen or fifteen men, perhaps twenty, active men in the Liberal interest. I did not know the nature of the meeting at first, but I was there. I went with them, and the business of the meeting passed over and we rose to leave.

4650. When was that ?—It was the nomination night of Bagehot's election.

4651. (Mr. Price.) The election of 1866 ?—Yes.

4652. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had nothing to do with them before 1866 ?—Nothing in my life. Mr. Henry Lovibond asked me to stay back behind the meeting, and I asked him what he wanted. He told me he wanted me to convey a parcel to John Smith and Henry Bussell.

4653. (Mr. Price.) To convey a parcel ?—I accepted the office, thinking there was some difficulty about it, and a matter of confidence and trust; and I did it. It was 500*l.*

4654. (Mr. Coleridge.) And that was your first dealing with money in any form ?—The first time on which I even felt the weight of it, or touched or saw it.

4655. (Mr. Price.) That was the way in which you were introduced into the matter ?—That was the way.

4656. (Mr. Anstey.) And after that you became the regular treasurer and financial agent ?—At the last three elections.

4657. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote at the election of 1865, the general election ?—I did, and the election before that.

4658. Had you anything to do with it besides voting ?—I never had anything to do with it before voting, and I was out travelling at the time, and I drove 18 miles to vote on the election day, and never had the value of the scale of a herring, and never expected it.

4659. (Mr. Price.) Do you agree or not with Mr. Bussell as to the proportion of electors before the last Reform Act ; the proportion on each side who are bribable, that is to say, he put it at 140, if I remember right, on the Liberal side, and 80 on the Conservative side ? — There is no man who is more experienced or told a more truthful tale in respect to that than Mr. Bussell.

4660. Will your experience lead you to agree with him in that fact ?—I support him. It is a fact.

4661. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever had anything to do with municipal elections ?—Never ; I do not now, and I never have touched them.

4662. You vote ?—I never spent 4*s.* in municipal matters in my life.

4663. From you knowledge of Mr. Barham and other people who deal with parliamentary elections, do you think there is anything done on a small scale in municipal elections ?—I should not think there was.

4664. (Mr. Price.) Tell us whether the addition to the constituency by the last Reform Act has increased very considerably the bribable element or not. Before the last Reform Act you agree pretty much with the way in which Mr. Bussell describes the unbribable numbers ; that is to say, 80 on the Conservative side, and 150, speaking in round numbers, on the Liberal side, who are unbribable. Have you formed any opinion from the experience of the last election, or from what you have heard, have you formed any opinion as to whether there is any considerable addition to the bribable element ?—I consider the constituency is much better now than it was before.

4665. You think it is ?—Yes.

4666. (Mr. Coleridge.) More difficult to deal with ?—More honest.

4667. And more difficult to deal with in consequence ?—I believe the new constituency are less corrupt than the old. I do not say what the new might be after three or four elections.

4668. When corruption has eaten its way into it ? —I say that the new constituency is as good and honest as I was before I had anything to do with Bagehot's election.

4669. Before you fell ?—Before I was connected with them.

4670. (Mr. Price.) Do you think that elections in Bridgwater will continue to be managed on the same principle ?—I cannot support that, I will contend that the new electors of Bridgwater are as good as the new electors in any town in England.

4671. (Mr. Coleridge.) Supposing there was an election in which not one single farthing was spent in treating or bribing or anything else, how many do you think would take the trouble to record their votes ?—I have not the slightest doubt they would record their votes.

4672. If there was no money ?—Yes ; if there was no money the new voters will record their votes. Never having had money they would know nothing about it.

4673. You can hardly take into your mind the hypothesis I put, of an election that should be absolutely pure ?—It would be impossible to get it so, because there would be the suspicion on the part of the men of the old constituency that there would be money.

4674. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said that you supported Mr. Bussell's statement ?—I stated I supported it as to the old constituency.

FIFTH DAY.
A. Allan.
27 Aug, 1869.

4675. But in a general way, putting it generally?—I support him as to the old.

4676. (Mr. Coleridge.) I do not think Mr. Bussell made much distinction?—There is a proportion of new voters who have been bribed.

4677. (Mr. Price.) If that is so, does not that lead to the conclusion that the new element is as easy to deal with in the shape of bribery as the old?—I do not think the per-centage is equal to the per-centage of the increase in the constituency.

4678. Then according to your view the higher up the constituency were in the scale the more likely you were to continue bribery?—No; when you get an old electioneer you will find you will have him to pay.

4679. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean the man who has tasted blood will always have it?—And he will not go without it.

4680. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell us what person in Bridgwater in your time has occupied the same position in the Tory party as you have occupied in the Liberal party?—I do not know from my own knowledge.

4681. Can you tell us anybody else who will know? Give us his name.

4682. (Mr. Price.) We want the "Andrew Allan" of the other side?—John Murlis.

4683. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he alive?—He is here.

4684. Will you allow me to point this out to you for your own sake, because it may be as well you should try and clear it up. You have acknowledged receiving 4,000*l.* You have given us the names of all you have distributed it amongst; but there is still a large deficiency, as far as we can make out in the amount. It may be that when these people come up the may give us such an amount that it may exhaust the 4,000*l.*; but at present I believe there is 1,500*l.* unaccounted for. The difficulty will be this, that in addition to putting you down as a briber we shall be obliged to put you down as a bribee, because there is this large sum of money unaccounted for, and you afterwards voted for the Liberal party. You are in that position through having that sum unaccounted for?—If you accredit them 10*l.* apiece, and that only, I can quite understand the deficiency.

4685. If I add 500*l.* on, on that account, that leaves a 1,000*l.* unaccounted for?—I will do the strongest and best thing I can towards giving you a full statement.

4686. (Mr. Coleridge.) We must endeavour to get these sums of the individuals?—If I can further assist you I will.

4687. (Mr. Price.) Have you any reason to suppose that besides the case you have mentioned of Mr. Symmons having 150*l.* unaccounted for, there were men who got very large sums, besides the 10*l.*, for their votes?—Have you any foundation for supposing there were men who got very much larger sums?—Why, I was paying 25*l.* a vote for an hour.

4688. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was paying that?—I was.

4689. No, no, but you told us on this occasion that you only paid three voters at all yourself?—I was paying the money.

4690. On the footing of 25*l.*?—To these agents. They were drawing 25*l.* a vote for some of the voters.

4691. But you did not pay directly more than 10*l.* or 15*l.* yourself to any voter, and that was James Mears?—I did not.

4692. (Mr. Price.) As far as you were informed, there were voters being paid for an hour at the rate of 25*l.* a head. How many do you suppose were being paid at that rate?—That was about the current price for the hour. I do not know how many polled in that hour.

4693. If you can also give us any information we shall be glad to have it from you as to what sum you understand or suppose was paid on the other side at that election?—I do not know. I have no means of knowing.

4694. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose the sub-agents who actually deal with the voters are more likely to be able to tell that?—I should think they were.

4695. (Mr. Price.) Now is there any other information—I put this to you not merely as a matter of form, but in justice to yourself, any other information with regard to the election of 1866 which you can give us as to the way it was managed?—Not that I think of. If I think of anything I will be very happy to give it.

4696. (Mr. Price.) Now we will come to the election of 1866, in which Mr. Bagehot was introduced to the constituency after Mr. Westropp had been unseated on petition in 1865. That was an election which was going to be fought as a single-handed election. Mr. Westropp had been unseated; one seat was vacant, and there were two candidates, Bagehot and Patton. Did Bagehot take up his abode at your house?—He did.

4697. Then it was that you were called back by Mr. Lovibond?—Yes, it was at that one.

4698. At your own house?—No, at his office.

4699. Was that before Mr. Bagehot had come into the field?—Nomination night.

4700. And these two packets you took down?—It was only one.

4701. What packet you took down to Mr. Bussell. Now, besides that tell us what other part you took in that election?—I will give you the names of the men who held eleven hundred pounds of Patton's money in that election and paid it.

4702. The first transaction was your taking the money down to Bussell. What was the next communication made to you by Lovibond?—I had that 500*l.* from Barham.

4703. That you took down to Bussell?—Yes.

4704. How did you get it?—I went to Mr. Barham's house for it.

4705. Who told you to go there?—Mr. Lovibond.

4706. You went?—Yes.

4707. Did you see him?—Yes.

4708. Did you see anything put for you?—He showed me where it was.

4709. What?—Yes; he paid me the money.

4710. Tell us what passed?—I think the money was on the side board, and he told me to take it.

4711. Did you know Mr. Barham before?—Yes, very well. I went in and stayed two or three minutes, not very long, because it was very late, past eleven o'clock at night.

4712. At his own house?—Yes.

4713. Did he point to the money?—Yes.

4714. Did he say there is the money for you to take?—I would not swear to the exact language, but in effect and in substance it was that.

4715. You took it away with you?—Yes.

4716. What was the next communication you had, either with him or anybody else, on money matters?—I saw him the next day in my own house, perhaps about half past ten o'clock, or it may be eleven.

4717. On the polling day?—Yes. And I told him that the money was exhausted; we had nothing.

4718. Had you received any information from Bussell to that effect?—Yes, I had.

4719. You had received information from Bussell that the money was gone?—There was John Smith, and Henry Bussell, Charles Bulphin, Henry Cornelius White, Ambrose Dyer, James Alway, and Thomas Serle; and on that occasion I paid 10*l.* to George Knight, the spirit merchant of this town.

4720. Out of what money?—Out of Bagehot's.

4721. Where had you got that sum?—Out of the money I got from Mr. Barham.

4722. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you have not told us about the 500*l.* from Mr. Lovibond?—That was the 500*l.* I had from Mr. Barham. Mr. Lovibond asked me if I would go to Mr. Barham and get the money.

4723. (Mr. Price.) Was it out of that 500*l.* that you paid the money?—Yes.

4724. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who told you how to distribute it?—It was left to my own discretion.

4725. This being your first election experience, how were you to know who these agents were? Was a list given to you by Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Barham? —No, I knew the men so well, from my own knowledge of them.

4726. How did you know they were the corrupt agents that were to be trusted? You had not fallen then. How did you know it if they did not tell you? —I have already stated that I was told to take it and distribute it.

4727. You were told to take it to Bussell?—Yes.

4728. Who told you how to distribute it.

(Mr. Price.) Was it from Bussell that you got orders, so to speak, to give it in certain proportions to the other people you speak of?—No, it must have been from the solicitors. I do not remember their words.

4729. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were a novice in the matter, and you were not mixed up in electioneering matters before. You do not mean to represent to us that without any instructions of what you were to do with the money you walked with 500*l.* out of the place?—Bussell and Smith had always had the confidence, financially, of the lawyers on our side.

4730. You did not know about it at that time?—No.

4731. (Mr. Price.) Who told you they were to be trusted?—Mr. Henry Lovibond, and they would put me on the scent.

4732. He never said you were to take it to them? —I was to take it to Mr. Bussell and Mr. Smith.

4733. Mr. Lovibond told you you must take it to Mr. Bussell and Mr. Smith?—Yes, and it was for the election of to-morrow, and Smith and Bussell and Bulpim and these men that were on this list. I was to let them have the money, and they would keep an account of it.

4734. Did he give you a list?—No, not a written list, a verbal statement.

4735. He gave you the names?—Yes.

4736. Did you take all the money down to Bussell, or distribute it amongst them?—I distributed it.

4737. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who told you in what proportion to give it to these different men? Did the lawyer give you that information then, or was it left entirely to your then inexperienced discretion?—It was left to my own then inexperienced discretion; and let me say there is no man who is liked better, as far as financial matters are concerned, than an inexperienced man.

4738. You had to report next morning that this money was all exhausted?—Yes.

4739. You then communicated that part to Mr. Barham?—I did.

4740. At his office?—No; he came to my house.

4741. Why?—Because the candidate was lodging with me.

4742. And coming to see the candidate on the polling day you communicated that the money supplied to you was exhausted?—I did.

4743. What time in the day was that?—About 10 o'clock.

4744. When you told him what did he say?—I do not know what he said, but he gave me 200*l.* more.

4745. There and then?—There and then.

4746. Out of his pocket?—I believe out of his pocket.

4747. (Mr. Coleridge.) What in?—Gold.

4748. And was the 500*l.* in gold?—It was.

4749. (Mr. Price.) Was that all that passed at that time?—That was all that passed.

4750. You distributed that 200*l.* among the different men in the same way as you had done the 500*l.*?—Exactly.

4751. What time after that did you see either Mr. Barham or Mr. Lovibond again during that day? —Well, about 12 o'clock we thought we had won the election; we were in a majority, and the funds were all exhausted; we had not a shilling. The Conservatives had money, and we had no more money at our command.

4752. Did you know at that time that money was going on the other side?—At 12 o'clock I did not know. The voters went on the other side, voted against us, and Bagehot lost that election because we had not the money.

4753. Was the 700*l.* all you got on that day?—I got 200*l.* more than that.

4754. Who from?—Mr. Barham.

4755. What time?—About one o'clock, after all the voters were bottled up; and the money was not spent on that day, we could not get a voter, it was no use to us.

4756. Is the 900*l.* all you got together?—That is all I got that day.

4757. I thought you said you got 1,100*l.*?—It may have been 300*l.* that I had got at one o'clock instead of 200*l.*

4758. I thought you said incidentally, sometime to-day, that you got 1,100*l.* at this election?—I did. I got 100*l.* two days after the election on the balance of the account.

4759. (Mr. Coleridge.) What became of those 300*l.* that you could not contribute?—It went into the balance of account.

4760. I do not quite understand you; the balance of account,—what balance?—The men who went and polled on a promise.

4761. You mean if there was 100*l.* more to be paid plus this 300*l.* after the election?—I do.

4762. Then this was paid away after the election? —After the election; inasmuch as we could not use it on the election day.

4763. So you paid those who were promised?—We had the money when it was too late.

4764. You had got a lot of people to vote, who promised to vote?—Exactly; and we paid them two days afterwards.

4765. (Mr. Price.) And there was no person yet unpolled to whom you could distribute this 300*l.*?—They were left unpaid, but were locked up in the "Bull and Butcher," and surrounding places, by the opponents, so that we could not get at them.

4766. And so you lost the election?—So we lost the election.

4767. Was the sum of 1,100*l.* accounted for in any way?—It was accounted for.

4768. Do you know of any other sum not spent? —No.

4769. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did Mr. Barham give you the 200*l.*? The balance by cheque?—No; gold.

4770. And you distributed that like the other, to the sub-agents, and they distributed it?—We balanced accounts two days after the election.

4771. You were 200*l.* to the bad, and had 100*l.* more to balance?—Just so.

4772. And it was distributed to the sub-agents, who distributed it to the voters who had been promised?—Every shilling.

4773. Had you accounts by the sub-agents of what they paid, and whom to?—Yes.

4774. Can you give the accounts?—No; not one.

4775. The names?—I have given them already.

4776. Only you do not know who the agents bribed?—No; I leave them to do that.

4777. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say when asked why Mr. Bagehot's election was unsuccessful, that it was because there was no money for payment of these old bills, and Mr. Vanderbyl was called upon to pay them at the second election that year; was there at Mr. Bagehot's election no money spent at all? —We had not sufficient money.

4778. You said no money?—If I said no money it was a mistake, we had not sufficient money, that is what I meant.

4779. Is not it a matter of fact that some of the parties,—I have the account here,—whom you have named as having claims against Sir John Shelley were paid sums of money at Mr. Bagehot's election? I do not say the whole amount?—I paid one bill to Mr. Phelps, and only one. That is the only amount I knew paid.

4780. Was that bill incurred at Sir John Shelley's election?—I have already told you I could not say,

FIFTH DAY.

A. Allan.

27 Aug. 1869.

because I had nothing to do with the money at Sir John Shelley's election.

4781. Was the printing bill at Mr. Bagehot's election for business done at Sir John Shelley's election?—Not to my knowledge. I know nothing of it. If he was it was paid outside of me, not through me.

4782. Mr. Bagehot himself was a man of property, was not he?—I have no doubt he was.

4783. Did you know whether he was called upon to make any payments himself to his agent during the election?—Not to my knowledge.

4784. Because the reason for asking this is that it appears he was called upon in August, which is some months after the election; you do not know anything about that?—I do not.

4785. Nor why he was called upon?—I do not.

4786. Why was not he requested to stand again the same year, to oppose Mr. Patton, on his vacating his seat to become Lord Advocate? Why was Mr. Vanderbyl sent for?—I always understood that Mr. Bagehot was refused.

4787. What was his answer?—I did not request him, and his answer was not to me; but I always understood that the Liberal interest had refused him.

4788. Had that anything to do with the payment of bills?—Not the slightest.

4789. How do you know?—Because his bills were all paid.

4790. I am not speaking of those. Was his refusal to stand again connected with the expectations of the Bridgwater electors that Sir John Shelley's expenses were to be paid?—I do not believe that Mr. Bagehot knew anything about that, it was a matter of 400*l.* or 500*l.*, but I have no means of knowing.

4791. (Mr. Price.) Do you say that the amount of Sir John Shelley's bills unpaid was 400*l.* or 500*l.*?—It could not exceed that.

4792. Was it as much?—I should think it would amount to that.

4793. (Mr. Anstey.) And Sir John Shelley's bills at this time were left unpaid; his canvass, I believe you have stated, being a canvass proceeding on pure principles?—I have no acquaintance with his canvass.

4794. I thought you said his canvass had nothing to do with money?—I understood, and having to do with the next elections I thought that the bills of Sir Shelley were not paid, and that is all I knew about them.

4795. Was Mr. Bagehot's election attended with the same consequences; the election expenses being left unpaid, subsequent candidates had to pay them?—No.

4796. All the expenses were paid then?—All the expenses were paid then that I know of.

4797. Then as you were applied to at subsequent elections you did pay on application the hitherto unpaid expenses of Sir John Shelley's election, and as that appears to be the only one the expenses of which were left unpaid, can you explain to the Commissioners how that exception happened, how it was that Sir John Shelley's expenses to the large amount you have stated were left unpaid, and no other expenses were in the same predicament?—Because there were no funds.

4798. Not because it proceeded on pure principles then, but because there were no funds to meet the large demands?—I am no authority connected with that election.

4799. But you looked into the claims and determined to pay, not because of that, but because those people would not vote unless they were paid?—The only reason that I heard was that there was no money.

4800. In Sir John Shelley's time?—In Sir John Shelley's time.

4801. No money provided?—That is the only reason I had for the accounts being unpaid.

4802. And in Mr. Bagehot's time, because they were never mentioned to Mr. Bagehot?—They were not paid.

4803. (Mr. Price.) Were they mentioned to him?—I do not know whether the parties holding the claim did not mention them to the electioneering agents.

4804. (Mr. Anstey.) But they were mentioned to Mr. Vanderbyl, and then were settled at once?—They absolutely came to this "at the last election you "did not pay them, and they have now been standing "two elections, and will not stand any longer."

4805. (Mr. Price.) It came to this, that they would not vote unless they were paid at Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—It is not surprising that public houses have these election bills paid.

4806. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether Mr. Bagehot and Mr. Kinglake used the same bankers?—I do not know; I never saw a cheque belonging to either of them to my knowledge.

4807. You do not know that they used to have the same banker, and the same cheque book, for two years?—I do not know that either of them had a banker.

4808. (Mr. Price.) I think that is all the evidence that we shall get from you now. As I said before, if you make a full and fair disclosure, and we have no reason to suppose from the manner in which you have conducted yourself to-day that you have not done so, you will be entitled to an indemnity, but if anything occurs to you in the course of the inquiry that refreshes your recollection, and you will come and inform us, all the better.—I am quite prepared to do that, and I will answer any question so far as I know.

R. Garratt.

ROBERT GARRATT sworn.

4809. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A railway company's servant.

4810. What company are you a servant of?—The Bristol and Exeter.

4811. How long have you been in their employment?—13 years.

4812. Are you a resident person in Bridgwater?—No; I have only been four years.

4813. Where did you come from?—Langport, about 12 miles from here.

4814. Are you a householder here?—Yes.

4815. A voter?—Yes.

4816. Have you voted at the last two elections?—No, only at the last.

4817. You were a voter at the other two, were you, in 1866?—No.

4818. You were a voter in 1868; where did you reside?—I resided in John Street then, now in Wellington Road.

4819. How did you first become acquainted with electioneering matters in this town; had you taken an active part in electioneering matters before you voted in 1868?—No, not a particularly active part. I attended some of the meetings of the committee.

4820. Up to 1868 had you taken an active part in the way of canvassing or attending meetings?—No, only asking some of our men which way they were going to vote.

4821. You had done that on previous elections?—Yes, but then they did not vote the way I asked them.

4822. But you canvassed them?—Merely walking along the line, that is all; just passed the remark.

4823. Did you do that in 1868?—I asked some of them.

4824. Did you know that your directors had issued a placard, which is a printed one, and stuck up at all the stations, that they did not wish in any way whatever to have any interference made with those employed by them?—I merely asked.

4825. Did you know that?—Of course.

4826. What are you ?—Inspector of the permanent way.

4827. Then you are in receipt of a handsome salary I suppose ?—No.

4828. What is it ?—Thirty shillings a week.

4829. But you are inspector of permanent way, and have control over the men ?—Yes.

4830. Have you the emyloyment or dismissal of them ?—No; not without the sanction of the engineer.

4831. You are aware that the railway company have published these placards, and they were printed and published all over the line, and in the town ?—They were.

4832. You say you did canvass them ?—Yes; I merely asked them. They could go wherever they liked. It would not make a bit of difference.

4833. Did you tell them which way you went ?—No; because they knew my principles.

4834. You were a Liberal ?—Yes.

4835. Was that the first active part you took ?—Yes; just walking on the line, that is all.

4836. When did you first become acquainted with anybody connected with the election ? Mr. Lovibond for instance ?—I never spoke to Mr. Lovibond about it until that day.

4837. Is it true or not that you were employed to pay money away at that election ?—The last election I did.

4838. Who employed you ?—About half past three I came up to town.

4839. Who employed you to pay away money at that election ?—When I came to the committee room Mr. Cook told me where to go.

4840. What time ?—Between half past three and four.

4841. What do you call the committee room—to the "Globe" ?—To the "Globe."

4842. How came you to go to the "Globe" ?—Because I attended some of the committees of the Working Men's Association on the Liberal side.

4843. What time did you go ?—This must have been about half past three or twenty minutes to four.

4844. Are any of your men in railway employment members of this association ?—Yes, I believe there was one. I do not know for certain.

4845. What happened at the "Globe" ?—I went in, and I think at that time we were nearly about level, or whether we were a trifle behind the Conservatives I do not know, and there were three men standing outside, and I went up and said to Mr. Cook, "There are three votes out in the road, what are "you going to do ?" Just like that.

4846. What are you going to do, did you say ?—"What is to be done for them ?"

4847. Which was it ?—I cannot be positive. I think it was "what is to be done with them." That is the first I had anything to say about it.

4848. What induced you to do that ? Have you ever been in much communication with Mr. Cook ?—No, not particularly.

4849. What induced you on this occasion ?—Because I saw him in the committee room, and knew that he acted as agent for one of the Liberal candidates.

4850. What did you mean by asking him that ?—Because I had been told there was money going.

4851. Who told you ?—I heard it rumoured in the street.

4852. Who from ?—I cannot tell you who.

4853. What made you go to Mr. Cook ?—Because he is one of the agents.

4854. Did you know that the money was coming from one of the agents ?—No, I asked him.

4855. You knew that was a proper quarter to apply to ?—I did.

4856. Did you go there purposely to inquire whether any money was to be got ?—I did.

4857. That is the object you went to the committee room for ?—Yes, at that time.

4858. What did he say ?—He said, "You stay a "minute," and he left me and came back again, and beckoned me to a little room.

4859. Was there anybody there besides you ?—No.

4860. You and he were alone ?—No, Mr. Cook did not go in. He only beckoned me, told me to go into a little room—pointed with his finger.

4861. Had he known anything of you up to that time as a person to be trusted ?—He had known me by name and met me at different places—that is at the station seeing him go up and down.

4862. Had he known your politics ?—I believe so.

4863. Nothing more than by going up and down and seeing you at the station ?—Not that I know of.

4864. Whom did you see in this little room ?—Some man came—I do not know who—I never saw him before—he gave me three—— 4865. You are often at the station. You have seen him since ?—Not before or since.

4866. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you seen him leave or going away ?—No.

4867. What is he like ?—A dark-whiskered man.

4868. What age ?—Between 30 and 40.

4869. (Mr. Price.) Was he dressed as you heard described by Allan ?—He had a black coat on and a black suit.

4870. Is he the sort of man that was described by Allan as a muslin weaver ?—He looked a respectable man.

4871. Did you say anything ?—No.

4872. Or he to you ?—When he came out he went into another room again, and left me by myself in a little room. He said, "How many voters ?" I said, "Three."

4873. Did you know these three as voters ?—Yes.

4874. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were those railway men ?—Yes, they were railway men——No, two of them were not then; they had been discharged a week or two before for shortness of hands.

4875. (Mr. Price.) What did he then do ?—He gave me three packets of money wrapped up in newspaper.

4876. Did you see what it was ?—I did not count it.

4877. Did you see whether it was in gold or silver ?—It was in gold. I believe it was wrapped up in newspaper. He did not tell me the amount.

4878. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see him wrap it up ?—No, that was in another room.

4879. (Mr. Price.) Did he say whether it was in gold or not ?—No; he said something about twenties or something of that sort.

4880. What did he say about twenties ?—First of all he said, "three votes," and then gave me two packets which I supposed to be tens. Then he came again and gave me another packet. That was the only three I had.

4881. Then what did he say ?—Nothing.

4882. I thought you said something about twenty ?—That was the first twenty they brought out in two packets.

4883. Did he say it was 20*l.* ?—Yes.

4884. He told you it was 20*l.* ?—Yes.

4885. (Mr. Anstey.) That was the first ?—Yes.

4886. (Mr. Price.) Then you said "three votes," and he brought you another of a similar character ?—A similar sort of paper.

4887. And what did you do ?—Went out to the three men, went down the street to the "Queen's Head," and there went into the little room behind, and they were sitting in chairs. I said, "You had "better go and look out of the window, and see "what is going on," and I put those three packets on the chairs behind them.

4888. Did you say anything to them about voting ?—I said, "You must mind and go to poll for the Liberal party," and they did.

4889. Was anything said about taking them into employment again by the company ?—No.

4890. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who were those three men ?—Thomas Dyer.

FIFTH DAY.

R. Garratt.

27 Aug. 1869.

4891. How much had he?—10*l.* James Podger and William Heal.

4892. (Mr. Price.) Is that the same Heal we have been talking of?—No, he is a carpenter.

4893. Did you render any account of that afterwards?—No, because I have never seen anybody about it.

4894. Is that all the money you got that day?—No.

4895. What did you do after you had done that?—Well, there was 20*l.* more I had.

4896. How did it happen?—I went back again to the "Globe" and knocked at the little room again, and then I had 20*l.*

4897. Two packets of tens?—No, the last was in one packet.

4898. Of 20*l.*?—Yes.

4899. Who told you it was 20*l.*?—That I counted afterwards.

4900. Did you see anybody when you went to the "Globe," or did you walk straight up into the room where this man was?—I went into the coffee room, and saw Mr. Cook again, and I said "There is "another down there."

4901. When you said that, did the man and you go into this room again?—The little room.

4902. And then you got this 20*l.*?—Yes.

4903. What did you do with it?—When I came out the voter had gone to poll.

4904. (Mr. Anstey.) How did you get 20*l.* from the silent man in the other room? You were only going for one vote?—He brought me out 20*l.*

4905. (Mr. Price.) Did you say only one to him?—I did not speak to him. I only said to Mr. Cook one. I never spoke to this man.

4906. Try and recollect, because, as it has been pointed out to you by the learned Commissioner, on the first occasion you had three votes and you got tens for them. Now the question is, how you happened to get for one vote 20*l.*?—It was coming up very close to the time then.

4907. What was said?—I said there was another one down in the street has not polled yet, and I believe he went in again, but I did not go with him once, and I went in and had this 20*l.*

4908. Did you say how many votes it was for?—No; I merely went in, and this man came out of an inner room, and put this into my hand.

4909. (Mr. Anstey.) Cook, you say, may have gone in first?—He may have done.

4910. (Mr. Price.) Do you think he did?—He may very probably.

4911. Can you in any way account for how you came to get 20*l.* for this vote when it was only 10*l.* before?—No, I cannot tell that, unless it was owing to the election being close.

4912. Have you any doubt that Cook went in and spoke to this man?—I have no doubt he did.

4913. You have no doubt he went into the room before you got the 20*l.*?—Very likely, but he did not go in the same way as I.

4915. The man had gone you say?—He had gone to the poll.

4916. Who was he?—I did not give it to him, but his name is Burton.

4917. What did you do with the 20*l.*?—When the election was over, I took it to my house.

4918. Did you ever account for it?—No one ever asked me.

4919. You have it now?—Yes.

4920. Or have you spent it?—I do not say the whole is there.

4921. How much have you spent?—I spent a good deal of it when I went away.

4922. (Mr. Anstey.) You went away during the petition?—I was back two or three days during the petition, but my name was never mentioned during the petition.

4923. (Mr. Price.) Was that all the money you got during the election?—Yes.

4924. Or the next day?—I never had any the next day.

4925. Or the day before?—No.

4926. Or any other time?—Or any other time.

4927. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you now expect to be asked for that 20*l.*, or to account for it?—No one ever asked, and I suppose if I was I should have to get it up again.

4928. Did you expect to be?—I do not say now. I did not expect that I should be by any of the party.

4929. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that not having been able to pay this away in the shape of a bribe, having received this 20*l.* to pay away to this voter, you consider yourself entitled to spend that for your own purposes?—I did not think I ought to take it back to them again.

4930. Is it in point of fact that you were to have 10*l.* yourself for your trouble?—It was never promised me.

4931. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it a silent understanding, a nod or a wink, which satisfied you that you were at liberty to deal with it in the way the chairman has suggested?—I never had any nod at all. I took it on my own responsibility.

4932. Was there an understanding?—No.

4933. Do you mean to say that you embezzled this money? Is that what you mean to accuse yourself of, without an understanding?—No.

4934. What authority had you in your own conscience for taking this money? You must have had some authority in your conscience, you know; what was it?—I thought I had done whatever I could for them, and that I was entitled to it.

4935. (Mr. Price.) What reason was there why you should not have gone back that afternoon and seen Mr. Cook or this man and handed back to him the 20*l.*?—Because it was within a few minutes of four o'clock, and at four o'clock the poll was declared, and then the procession went round. There was no chance of seeing him that evening.

4936. Do you mean to say that you could not have gone, if you had liked, back to the "Globe," and put this 20*l.* into the man's hands if you had chosen?

(Mr. Anstey.) Or into Mr. Cook's hands. There was no delicacy with a man like Cook, who had been engaged in this affair with you.

(Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say you had no opportunity?—Not that night.

4937. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there not any next day?—There was next day.

4938. And then you did not do it?—No.

4939. Suppose Burton had been found, how much of the 20*l.* would you have given him?—The whole packet as it was.

4940. Will you undertake to swear that you would not have taken out 10*l.* for yourself, and given him the same as other voters?—No.

4941. (Mr. Price.) Why should he expect 20*l.*, had you told him at all?—No.

4942. Why pay him more than the others?—I said to him first of all, I asked him if he had polled; he said "No." I said "Wait a minute then, and I will go up "and see what I can do."

4943. Did he say anything about 10*l.*?—No; I heard it said that he would not go to the poll without 15*l.* or 20*l.*

4944. Having heard that from this man, do you mean to say that you did not tell Mr. Cook that you wanted 15*l.*?—I did not mention any sum.

4945. And you cannot account for its being 20*l.*?—No.

4946. You cannot account for its being 20*l.*, and not having said one word to Mr. Cook about it?—No.

4947. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has Burton been to you since?—No.

4948. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you hear him say that?—I did not at all; I heard by report.

4949. When did you hear he had said so?—It was common talk with everyone that he would not go without being paid.

4950. When had you heard that first of all?—Perhaps a fortnight or three weeks before the election.

4951. When you saw Mr. Cook the last time did you tell him it was Burton, the man about whom there had been this common talking, who had not yet polled?—I told him he had not polled.

4952. Then he must have known by that, that it was he who would not vote for less than 15*l.* or 20*l.*?—I cannot say that.

4953. Have you any belief?—No.

4954. A simple question, which anybody could answer in a second, you require 20 minutes to answer. Have you any doubt in your own mind that this man Cook, being one of the bribers in this borough, and you being another, and you having heard what you say of this common talk long before, that this man would not vote for 15*l.* or 20*l.*, had heard it too?—I have not any doubt.

4955. (Mr. Price.) What did you say; did you identify Burton in any way to Cook when you said Burton?—No; because he is pretty well known, this Burton.

4956. You have kept that back. Tell us all, because if you do not give a full disclosure you will not be entitled to a certificate, and keeping back a part will do no good?—Another reason I suppose was that Burton had promised the two Conservative candidates.

4957. I feel perfectly certain there was something more passed between you and Cook?—The second time I went in I said "There is Burton down here, "Mr. Cook; we can have him, I expect." Then Mr. Cook went from the room I think again.

4958. Are you sure that is all you said to him?—I believe it was all I said to him.

4959. Was nothing said about 20*l.*?—No.

4960. Now you think Mr. Cook knew he was the man well enough who would have 15*l.* or 20*l.*?—Yes.

4961. You say he was well known?—Yes.

4962. And had promised the Conservatives?—Both the Conservatives.

4963. All you said to Mr. Cook was, "I believe "we can get him"?—Yes, and then Mr. Cook left me, and went down the other way down the stairs.

4964. (Mr. Anstey.) You have no doubt that he went into the room where this man was who gave you the money?—None whatever.

4965. Then you went in and got the 20*l.*?—Yes.

4966. When did you go away?—On the 23d or 24th of February.

4967. The very day the learned Judge came here?—Either on the Sunday or Monday night.

4968. Tuesday was the 23d, therefore you went away the night before the inquiry took place?—I went away on the Friday.

4969. Before the Judge came?—Four or five days before.

4970. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it because he was coming here that you went away?—Well, because I had been telling this man, and I thought if I was away I might be out of it.

4971. (Mr. Price.) Did anybody else suggest to you to go?—Yes, I saw Mr. Reed one evening.

4972. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Cook's partner?—Yes, I saw Mr. Reed, and he said "I think you had better go."

4973. Did he say why?—He said "Your name may be brought up." "Well," I said, "I can go the first thing to-morrow morning," and he said "You had better go to-night." I did not go that night nor yet until the next evening.

4974. Did you see Mr. Reed again, or anybody belonging to the party?—When I am speaking about is about 3 o'clock, and I saw Mr. Reed again between 7 and 8, and he told me that the trains were watched in the morning, and I had better go over night.

4975. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he give you any money?—No.

4976. Did he promise you any?—No.

4977. Permit you to draw on the 20*l.*?—He said you have been trusted and you may trust others.

4978. Then you understood that you would have some money to go away with?—I understood that my expenses would be paid.

4979. And were they?—Partly.

4980. Who by?—I had 5*l.* sent me.

4981. By whom?—John Smith.

4982. (Mr. Anstey.) After your return?—No, while away.

4983. Where did you go to?—Teignmouth and Torquay.

4984. Did you get a pass?—As far as Exeter.

4985. From whom?—My engineer. I had my regular holiday.

4986. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who asked for your holiday?—Myself.

4987. Did Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook apply?—No.

4988. (Mr. Anstey.) You got a free pass as far as Exeter?—We do once a year.

4989. And then you got 5*l.* from Smith the grocer?—Yes.

4990. Any more from anybody?—No.

4991. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did Mr. Smith know where you were?—I sent him my address.

4992. How long were you away at this watering place?—I came back on the Thursday, that was two days before the petition had finished.

4993. It could only have been one, because it finished on the 26th?—I was back on the 24th.

4994. You mean that you were back before the learned Judge went?—Yes, I was back on the Thursday morning, and he did not finish till the Friday afternoon.

4995. Why did you come back?—My holiday was up.

4996. You were only away four days?—I was allowed six days, and my time was up, and I came back.

4997. (Mr. Anstey.) On your arrival at the railway station where did you go to?—I went on to Highbridge.

4998. And there you stopped?—Some time.

4999. Until when?—I walked back to Bridgwater.

5000. When?—The same day.

5001. Late in the day?—The afternoon part, towards the evening, 9 o'clock.

5002. That being February it was pitch dark. You got back here late at night on Thursday the 25th or Friday the 26th. I suppose you are aware that Mr. Justice Blackburn gave judgment on the Friday?—Yes.

5003. What did you do during the Friday when he was deliberating on his judgment, or rather when they were closing the examination of witnesses?—On Friday morning I went away on the line again.

5004. Where to?—I walked to Huntspill Parish, and then after that walked on to Highbridge again.

5005. You were not in Bridgwater therefore at all?—Only nights and morning.

5006. During daylight either on the Thursday or Friday?—Oh yes, on the Friday morning. It was between 7 and 8 o'clock when I went away.

5007. (Mr. Price.) That is daylight in February?—Yes.

5008. (Mr. Anstey.) With that exception you were away the two days?—Yes.

5009. When did you finally cease to walk about the line from Highbridge to Bridgwater, and Huntspill to Highbridge, and so forth?—That is my duty; three times a week regularly I have to walk these distances.

5010. But this was every day?—Sometimes I walk it two or three days in succession.

5011. When did you cease to walk it, on Saturday?—Saturday I probably walked some other length.

5012. When did you come back?—On Friday I slept at home, on Friday night the same as on Thursday.

5013. Did you go away on Saturday mornings the same as on Friday?—Yes.

FIFTH DAY.

R. Garratt.

27 Aug. 1869.

5014. And stay away the whole day?—No; because Saturday my time is up at 1 o'clock, on other days at 6 o'clock.

5015. You were no longer afraid of the Judge being in the town?—I heard that on Friday.

5016. Your mind was at ease?—Easier than it was before.

5017. What is the engineer's name?—Francis Hocks.

5018. (Mr. Price.) How much do you say your trip cost you altogether out of your pocket?—I cannot tell exactly what, because I took my wife with me.

5019. You must know what you paid?—There was myself and wife living several days at Teignmouth and Torquay, which would run away with a goodish bit of money.

5020. And you paid it out of your own pocket you say?—Barring that 5*l.*

5021. But you had 20*l.* in hand?—Yes.

5022. Did you spend the whole 20*l.*?—No.

5023. How much short of it?—I dare say, in one way and the other, we spent 11*l.* or 12*l.* besides that 5*l.*

5024. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much was left?—About 9*l.*

5025. (Mr. Price.) 9*l.* to the good you had after paying 11*l.* and 5*l.*?—Yes.

5026. Then you spent 16*l.*?—Yes.

5027. (Mr. Anstey.) Have your employers, the company, censured you, or punished you in any way for having canvassed voters in defiance of their order to the contrary?—No, they have not.

5028. Do they know what you have done?—Some one wrote and told them.

5029. Who are the directors; any of the names we have heard of? Was Mr. Vanderbyl one of them?—No.

5030. You have not been blamed by any one of them for what you have done?—No.

5031. Or for going away, and depriving Mr. Justice Blackburn of the value of your evidence?—No.

5032. Has any one found fault?—I had a letter from the engineer that he should speak to me more about it when the inquiry was over.

5033. This inquiry?—Yes.

5034. Now take care how you answer this question. Will you swear positively that before you went into that door the second time you saw Mr. Cook you had spoken a single word to a voter about any money at all, or about his vote?—Before I went in the second time I had spoken to a voter.

5035. Who was it?—Burton.

5036. You swear that you spoke to him?—Yes, I spoke to him in the passage of the "New Inn."

5037. Did you give him to understand that if he waited he could have any money?—I said, "You wait a minute, and I will see what can be done."

5038. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did pay Burton as you did not?—I think you will find it in Allan's account.

5039. (Mr. Anstey.) But he voted for Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

5040. Having promised the other side?—Having promised the other side.

5041. (Mr. Price.) Do you know what was paid?—Allan gave his name in the account as one of the 31.

5042. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know that only to-day for the first time?—I did not know who paid him, we only supposed that he was paid.

5043. I suppose you will hand over the 20*l.* to Allan he having paid him?—No, not without reckoning the expenses out of it I had in that way.

5044. Is it the same that you paid Mr. Allan?

(Mr. Allan.) Yes; Benjamin Burton the railway porter, he had the money from me; the check taker passed him up stairs into the room, and I paid him.

5045. (Mr. Anstey to the witness.) At the "New Inn"?—Yes, at the "New Inn."

5046. You are quite sure you had spoken to Burton about it?—Yes, because I can bring a witness who was there at the time.

5047. (Mr. Coleridge to Mr. Allan.) What time had you paid him, Allan?

(Mr. Allan.) About half past three.

5048. (Mr. Price to the witness.) Now what was the time you saw him?—As I said, about half past three or 20 minutes to 4.

5049. (Mr. Coleridge to Mr. Allan.) Where did you pay him?

(Mr. Allan.) At the "New Inn."

5050. (Mr. Anstey to the witness.) What time was this that you told him to wait a bit?—Between half past 3 and 20 minutes to 4; somewhere about that, within five minutes.

5051. He must have gone to the "New Inn" then just at that time?—He was there.

5052. (Mr. Price.) Have you told us everything that you did that day in election matters, because we shall inquire, and something more may come out that you have done, and if you do not tell us you had better?—I do not know anything else, those are the only thing I have ever had anything to do with.

5053. Are there any you have made promises to?—No.

5054. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Bussell know you were employed to bribe men?—No.

5055. Did Allan know?—No.

5056. How came you to be trusted with money? Had they ever employed you before?—No.

5057. How did they know that they could rely on you to pay the money?—Because these three outside were men I knew perfectly well.

5058. But how did the bribe master, the stranger, and Messrs. Cook and Reed, who were the go betweens between you and the stranger, know you were going to be an honest man, and pay the money?—I do not know how they knew it, but they did do so.

5059. Have they ever trusted you with money before?—No.

5060. To the extent of 20*l.* at least this trust was not a wise one?—(No answer.)

5061. (Mr. Price.) Had you ever done anything at any other election previous to this?—Yes.

5062. What?—I took a voter once up to Allan.

5063. What election was that?—That must have been the one before.

5064. 1866?—Yes.

5065. The second election when Mr. Vanderbyl first came?—Yes.

5066. Were you inspector of permanent way then?—Yes.

5067. Who was this voter; a railway man?—Yes.

5068. One of the men in the employment of the railway?—Yes.

5069. You took him to Allan to get him some money?—Yes.

5070. Knowing he had money you took him there?—Hearing so.

5071. Did you get any money from him?—Yes.

5072. How much?—£15.

5073. What is his name?—John Jobson.

5074. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a vote then?—No.

5075. (Mr. Price.) What made you take this man to Allan to get him bribed to go to the poll?—It was merely an interest to get Mr. Vanderbyl carried, being of the same party.

5076. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Jobson one of the workmen?—Yes.

5077. In this company?—Yes.

5078. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did Jobson give you out of the 15*l.*?—Nothing.

5079. Nothing to drink?—No; I treated him with a glass of beer.

5080. What did Allan give you?—Nothing.

5081. (Mr. Price.) Did you get nothing for doing that at all?—No.

5082. (Mr. Coleridge.) At no time?—No; I asked two or three whether there was any chance of getting anything for running out, and they said no; I had better see Reed and Cook, but I never did.

5083. (Mr. Price.) Did you take any other active steps at that election?—No; that is the only man I took up or spoke to about it.

5084. What do you mean by running about then? Did you try to get any other?—Yes.

5085. Did you go back, and see if you could get any other to receive bribes?—To tell them where the money was if I could find any.

5086. Did you tell any?—No; I do not think I did anybody else.

5087. But you were running about for that. You thought you ought to be paid?—Yes.

5088. Did you tell Mr. Cook that?—No.

5089. Did you ever speak to him or anybody about keeping this 20*l.* that you expected to be paid before?—No.

5090. Never a word?—I said to Mr. Smith one night,—that is this last time,—I did not consider the 5*l.* sufficient for expenses, but I never had any more than that.

5091. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he say about the 20*l.*?—I never mentioned that.

5092. Did he know of it?—I do not know whether he did or not.

5093. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell him that you expected from him something more for previous elections than what had been done in 1868?—No.

5094. You said 5*l.* was not enough for expenses in 1868?—For my expenses while being away.

5095. Then you could not, being as we understand inspector of this permanent way, with 30*s.* a week, possibly make 5*l.* cover your expenses for these three days at Teignmouth?—Not to pay travelling expenses on the South Devon.

5096. How much?—Every place we went to.

5097. How much is the second class fare from Exeter to Teignmouth?—

5098. (Mr. Coleridge.) 3*s.* or 3*s.* 2*d.*?—But we went about.

5099. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean you could not have gone down, having a free pass, with your own money, and back again, without spending a 5*l.* note?—I did not stop at Teignmouth; I went to Torquay.

5100. If it had been your own money, would not you have stopped at one place and lived economically?—I might have done so.

5101. (Mr. Coleridge.) According to your account you spent 16*l.*?—Thereabouts.

5102. You have said so; 11*l.* and 5*l.*?—Things we bought as well.

5103. (Mr. Price.) What did you buy?—Children's things.

5104. Dresses?—No, small things.

5105. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you ever received any money for your vote at any time?—No; never promised.

5106. Did you ever expect any?—I do not know. I may have expected; all the rest had it.

5107. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got 20*l.* this time?—That was after I voted. I voted early in the morning.

5108. (Mr. Price.) Then you did expect to be paid for your vote as other people were paid?—Yes, if the others did.

5109. You did?—Yes.

5110. (Mr. Anstey.) As other people had been paid?—As other people had been paid.

5111. You think if a man votes without a promise, and finds another vote for money, he has a right to be paid the same sum?—Expects to be.

5112. That is the general belief here, is it not, amongst people of your class?—I believe it is, generally.

5113. (Mr. Price.) The franchise here is thought a valuable thing, because it is worth money, is not that it?—It has been.

5114. Of course it will be in our breast, after considering your evidence, whether you have made a full and free disclosure to us, and it will depend also on whether anything turns up in the course of this inquiry to show that you have not, therefore I tell you before going, as I have told the other witnesses, if you do recollect anything, and choose to come and tell us before the end of the inquiry, you will have the benefit in our minds when we pass judgment on your evidence of having done so; and of course you will be at liberty to give any explanation if anything turns up in the course of the inquiry that reflects on you. There is nothing now you recollect?—No.

5115. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ask anybody to give you anything for your vote last time?—No.

5116. If you say you expected that you ought to have money the same as others, why, when you went to get the money for those three men, did not you ask for yourself?—Because I had already given my vote.

5117. But you have told us that if you had polled without money, and found others had polled with money, you should think that you ought to have money afterwards; why did you not say, "I have "polled for nothing, what are you going to give me?" —I never asked.

5118. (Mr. Price.) What sort of scheme had you in your own mind, if you heard afterwards, as you had done no doubt, that others had been paid to get money for yourself; should you have claimed it of Mr. Cook?—No, I do not think that I should have gone to Mr. Cook after I heard that Allan had been giving away money, most likely I should have gone to him, knowing that he had the money.

5119. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you had not had this 20*l.* to which you stuck should not you have gone to Mr. Allan's afterwards?—I should have expected it from some one.

5120. The only reason you did not go was that having got the 20*l.* you thought they would not give you another?—That is it.

HENRY CORNELIUS WHITE sworn.

H. C. White.

5121. (Mr Price.) What are you?—I am an accountant.

5122. And a voter for Bridgwater?—Not now.

5123. When did you cease to be?—Prior to the last election.

5124. Are you not a resident?—I am living in the parish of Wemdon.

5125. Without the parliamentary borough?—Without the parliamentary borough.

5126. But before the last election had you been a voter for the borough?—I had.

5127. And had you voted at several elections?—I had.

5128. At how many elections had you voted?—The first election at which I voted was when Mr. Mansell was a candidate.

5129. There were five then?—There were five then.

5130. Mansell, Follett, Tynte, and Kinglake?—Yes, that would be 1852.

5131. You voted at that election?—I did.

FIFTH DAY.

H. C. White.

27 Aug. 1869.

5132. Now come to the election of 1868, you were no longer a voter then ?—Not in 1868.

5133. You had voted I suppose always on the Liberal side ?—With one exception.

5134. When was that ?—Mr. Mansell.

5135. Did you give him a plumper ?—I think I voted for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Mansell. There was a split at the time in the party, and a section of us agreed to vote for Mr. Mansell, unless, I think it was Lord Henley would resign. He would not resign, and I should tell you I have always been a strong supporter of Mr. Kinglake.

5136. Of course you remember the contest in 1868, but not being a resident in the borough did you attend any of the meetings which were held previous to the election ?—I did not.

5137. Did you at all go to the "Globe" previous to the nomination day ?—No, I did not.

5138. Which was the hotel of the two candidates, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake ?—I did not go.

5139. Did you know of Mr. Vanderbyl coming to the town before he arrived ? When did you first hear that ?—I understand you now to speak of the election of 1868 ?

5140. Yes, the last election. When did you first learn there was going to be a contest ?—The last election I was poll clerk for the North Ward. I had nothing whatever to do beyond. I never solicited a vote, or interfered in any shape or form whatever with the last election.

5141. You were one of the returning officer's poll clerks ?—I was at the North Ward.

5142. Do we understand you to say that you took no active part at the last election at all ?—Not the slightest.

5143. Were never in communication in any way with any of the legal gentlemen whose names have been mentioned ?—Not the least.

5144. You never had ; and no money passed through your hands in any shape or way ?—Not one penny.

5145. Is that all the part you took in that election, acting as poll clerk ?—Yes, all.

5146. Now the election before that, the second election of 1866, you were then a voter ?—I was.

5147. What part did you take in that election ; Mr. Vanderbyl's first appearance against Mr. Patton ? —I took a very active part in that election.

5148. What money did you receive from anybody at that election ?—I received I believe the night before the election from Andrew Allan 90*l.*

5149. The night before the election ?—The night before the election.

5150. You say you are an accountant. Is that what you were at that time, in 1866 ?—I was.

5151.—On your own account ?—On my own account. I had given up business.

5152. What had you been before ?—I had been a confectioner. I came to Bridgwater I think in 1846. There was an election in 1847, but I came in September 1846, and was not qualified for the election that took place in 1847.

5153. What position were you filling in the town in 1866 when you took upon yourself the office of briber ?—I did not take upon myself the office of briber.

5154. Who put it upon you ?—My experience began in the previous election.

5155. Then you had been a briber before the last election of 1866 ?—I was connected with the money in 1866.

5156. (Mr. Anstey.) Why do you not call things by their proper names ? You were connected with the bribery ?—I was.

5157. (Mr. Price.) What sort of business were you in at that time as to station in life when you were acting as briber. Were you earning your livelihood as an accountant in this town ?—I had been in business as a confectioner, and I believe at that time, but I cannot tell you exactly now without referring, whether I had given up the business of confectioner or not. I had sold my business which I had been in for 15 or 16 years.

5158. Had you retired with sufficient to live upon, gained by your business ?—Yes.

5159. (Mr. Anstey.) You were a person of independent means, obtained from your business added to your means, and you were adding to it by acting as an accountant ?—A trifle.

5160. I thought you said you had given that up too ?—No, certainly not, not the business of accountant. I was the secretary of a building society.

5161. (Mr. Price.) You got the 90*l.* from Mr. Allan the night before the polling day ?—I did. I had better begin by telling you my first experience in connexion with money.

5162. We are going back by steps from the election of 1858 ; tell us what the facts were first in 1866 ; you received 90*l.*, had you known Mr. Allan before as a person who had the distribution of party money ? —Yes.

5163. You got 90*l.* from him the night before the poll ?—I believe it was 90*l.*

5164. What did you do with that 90*l.* ?—I took it down.

5165. Are you sure it was the night before the polling day ?—To the best of my belief it was.

5166. (Mr. Coleridge.) Because Allan has sworn that he had no money until the polling day ?—

(Mr. Price.) Have you sufficient recollection about it hearing that he has said that he did not get it until the polling day to say whether it was the polling day or not ?—Allan has an advantage over me. You see I am speaking entirely from memory.

5167. So was he ?—No, he has notes, and has a list of men he was thoroughly well acquainted with, and those names were supplied to him from a general list, and my object I take it would be to try to explain to you the charge.

5168. What I am asking you is—we do not want unnecessarily to get into a conflict between two witnesses—have you sufficient recollection about the matter to be sure it was the night before the polling day you got the 90*l.*, or may it have been on the polling day as Mr. Allan has said ?—The only thing is whether I may confuse that election with one before.

(Allan.) You will find there are two elections, and the first election I paid money on the nomination day.

5169. (Mr. Anstey to the witness.) You took it home, you say ?—Yes. Do I understand first that Allan admits it was the night before ?

5170. Yes.

5171. (Mr. Price.) It is quite clear he has never said to the contrary. What did you do with it eventually ?—I kept it until the next morning. I had a tenant by the name of Boucher who lived at a corner shop in St. John Street in this town, and he and I had agreed upon certain names he had submitted to me, and names I had also suggested to him, who we knew in fact would not poll without receiving this money.

5172. Did you go and see them then ?—I took the money and gave it to him as he required it. In one or two instances I think he came to me for it.

5173. Did that exhaust the whole of the 90*l.*, or did you pay any away yourself directly to a voter ?—I did not.

5174. None of that 90*l.* ?—Not of that amount.

5175. All that was through the hands of Boucher ? —Yes.

5176. Did he render you an account afterwards of how he had distributed it ?—Yes.

5177. He is alive ?—He is. Parts of the amount, I believe the whole, with the exception I told you ;

there was some mistake with regard to 20*l.* I had given him 20*l.*, and therefore I was 20*l.* short. I told him so, and he denied it.

5178. Then there was a dispute between you and Boucher as to the amount you say you paid him, and the amount he said he had received?—There was a dispute about this 20*l.*

5179. He said he had only 90*l.*?—I forget now what he said. The whole of the accounts were sent in, and the balance of the money was paid by Andrew Allan.

5181. In this case out of 90*l.* there was a question of 20*l.*

5182. (Mr. Price.) It stuck somewhere?—It stuck somewhere; where I do not know.

5183. It is a question between you. Boucher says, it stuck to you, and you say it stuck to him?—Nothing of the kind.

5184. Then what was it?—You will quite understand, during that election people were almost mad with excitement, at all events our party was; in the after part of the day I went up.

5185. Are you perfectly certain in your own mind that you handed 90*l.* there to Boucher?—I am perfectly certain in my own mind that I spent every single farthing I received.

5186. That is not the question; but what sum will you pledge your oath to that you paid to Boucher?—I cannot pledge the sum. The names were given as he gave them.

5187. (Mr. Coleridge.) If Boucher comes and swears he only got 70*l.* from you, that stands uncontradicted?—I have no idea what he will swear.

5188. (Mr. Price.) But if he says so, may it be true? Are you prepared to say that he is wrong, if he swears he only got 70*l.* out of that 90*l.*?—I should be sorry to accuse any man.

5189. But if he comes and tells us he only got 70*l.*, are you prepared to say that is not the truth?—At the time that was my belief.

5190. But what do you say now?—I can only say that my impression at the time was that the money was paid to him.

5191. What is your belief now?—My belief now is the same.

5192. That you gave him the 90*l.*?—That I gave him the various amounts as he came, which exhausted the money.

5193. Did you or not give him the 90*l.* according to your belief and oath?—I did not give him all the money at one time.

5194. But did you give him the 90*l.* which you had from Allan? Will you undertake to say that all that passed into Boucher's hands?—To the best of my belief it did.

5195. But you will not undertake to say if he comes here and says he only got 70*l.* positively that that is false?—To the best of my belief, I say.

5196. Will you undertake to say, if he comes and tells us that he only got 70*l.*, that that is false?—I believe it is.

5197. (Mr. Anstey.) Then did both you and he vote on that occasion for the party who gave this 90*l.* bribe money into your hands.—Mr. Vanderbyl?—Certainly.

5198. Speaking only for myself, I strongly recommend you and him to come to some account in the matter, because if 20*l.* of this money admitted to have been received by you, if not by him also, is not accounted for, I shall make no difference between broad cloth and cloth that is not broad, but consider that you have received 20*l.* for your and his votes, or yours alone, and I shall propose that you be reported accordingly?—I hope you will hear my evidence before you condemn me.

5199. Yes, please give your evidence, and not in the way you have been dallying with questions which might have been answered at once. You will have an opportunity of clearing your character offered you, if you will only answer the questions?—I will do it to the best of my ability.

5200. (Mr. Price.) What was the dispute about this 50*l.*? Did Boucher deny that he had the 90*l.*?—The dispute was really as to the names, who received it.

5201. Was there any dispute as to the amount?—Not the least.

5202. Does he account for the 90*l.*?—I am not aware what he accounted for.

5203. (Mr. Coleridge.) Let me call your attention to this, for it is only fair to you; Mr. Allan says that he gave you upwards of 200*l.* on this occasion. I do not say all at once, and he says there is still a dispute as to 20*l.* Is that the 20*l.* referred to?—Yes, it is.

5204. (Mr. Price.) Therefore there is a sum of 20*l.* which, as you said before, I think it must have stuck somewhere?—Yes.

5205. Now I will ask you, it is only fair, whether you will undertake to say positively that 20*l.* did not stick to you?—I will most assuredly.

5206. Is it your belief then that it stuck to Boucher?—It was, at the time, as I said before.

5207. What is your belief now?—The same, that he kept it.

5208. Can you have any hesitation in saying that if he comes and says he only had 70*l.* he is telling that which is untrue?—Not the slightest.

5209. That it is untrue if he says that?—Not the slightest.

5210. That he stuck to it?—That he did.

5211. What more money did you get that day from Allan? Is it true that you got 200*l.* altogether or more?—I cannot tell the amount.

5212. As near as you can?—I cannot tell, unless I saw his list of the names that voted, the exact amount of money that I received from him.

5213. Did you give the names to Allan of the of the persons?—I did.

5214. Have not you the means then of giving them to us?—No, they were destroyed immediately afterwards.

5215. You have no check of that kind?—Not the least.

5216. You made a return to Allan?—I did at the time.

5217. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were all these voters priced at the same price?—Those were 10*l.* each.

5218. (Mr. Anstey.) Allan says Henry Cornelius White got 20 votes, you must have heard it?—Yes, that he could not account for 20*l.* deficiency in his accounts when he made them up.

5219. That is for 20 votes you see?—I told him at the time I had paid the money through Boucher, and I believe the mistake occurred there.

5220. (Mr. Price.) Are we to understand this money you received from Allan had passed through the hands of Boucher before it got to the voters hands?—Certainly not.

5221. How much did you distribute out of your own hand?—I cannot tell.

5222. Was it 20*l.*?—No. I got a voter by the name of Phillip Powell, that was living by the Steam Packet. I went and saw the wife. She required 40*l.* She said she had been offered 35*l.* on the other side.

5223. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did she say by whom?—By the Tories. She did not say by whom. I had with me a man of the name of Phillip Gilbert. Powell had not arrived when I first came to the house. He was coming by train. I went over to the train and saw some parties there, and presently I saw Powell. I walked with Powell over towards the public house. I saw the wife, and the wife said he should not vote unless he received 40*l.* I said I had not heard of such a sum. I was astonished, and said "Will you promise me that this man shall remain in "this house until I come back again?" She said

FIFTH DAY.

H. C. White.

27 Aug. 1869.

"Yes." I left there, and I believe Honeyball drove me up as far as Andrew Allan's.

5224–5. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the coachman of Mr. John Brown, the magistrate?—Mr. John Brown, the magistrate. I believe it was Honeyball. I passed up by George Lane, and there I met Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham. I told them that Powell wanted 40*l.*, and they both replied he must have it. I then accompanied them upstairs to the inner room at Allan's house.

5226. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this on the polling day?—This was on the polling day, and Allan gave me 40*l.*

5227. (Mr. Anstey.) With his own hand?—He did.

5228. In gold?—I believe it was four packets of 10*l.* each, but I will not be certain whether it was gold or notes.

5229. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were Lovibond and Barham present?—They had just left.

5230. Did he pay you before they left?—I think they had just left the room.

5231. (Mr. Anstey.) The inner room?—The inner room.

5232. They went up to that room with you and Allan?—Not with Allan, with me.

5233. Then they went downstairs and the money was paid?—It was.

5234. Did they speak to Allan before they paid the money?—I knew at once.——

5235. Will you answer the question; did these two persons Lovibond and Barham speak to Allan on entering the room where you found him?—I believe they did.

5236. Did they whisper?—They did certainly speak to him.

5237. Did you hear what they said?—I do not remember.

5238. But they certainly spoke, and then left the room, and Allan without saying anything more paid you the money?—Yes.

5239. (Mr. Price.) Now go on with your account?—I then took the 40*l.* down for Powell, and gave it to Phillip Gilbert.

5240. Who is Phillip Gilbert?—He is a carpenter who lives in the Bath Road.

5241. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Mr. Brown's coachman, Honeyball, waiting at Allan's door all this time?—The flys were driving to and fro in the street.

5242. Was Honeyball waiting while you were receiving this bribe money?—I believe he was, or in the street.

5243. Did he drive you to where you saw Gilbert?—He did.

5244. Did you give money to him?—I did.

5245. Why did you not give it to Powell himself?—Why, I had an objection to deal with the money myself.

5246. Where did your conscience prick you about dealing with this money; at what period of the transaction? You got it and knew it was to bribe this man, and had agreed with the man beforehand, what had you an objection to?—I had an objection to personally giving the money himself.

5247. You had no objection to promise it to him, and no objection to go and get it for him?—I did not promise it to him, but went and tried to see if I could get it.

5248. But having bargained to see what he wanted you gave him to understand that if he would wait there you would go and see if you could not get the amount for him?—I did.

5249. Then you say your conscience stuck at the notion of handing the money over?—That is all.

5250. You gave it to Gilbert. Do you know whether it reached Powell's hands or not?—I believe it did.

5251. Did he vote?—Yes; I went up in the carriage with him and Gilbert.

5252. And he voted?—Yes.

5253. Did you see Gilbert give him the money?—No, I did not. I rather think he gave it to the woman, because they told him it was all right.

5254. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Honeyball present when this money passed from one to the other?—He was not.

5255. But was Honeyball there in honour of the occasion in his master's carriage?—I do not know whether it was his master's carriage, there was a few flys, and he was one of the drivers.

5256. Are you aware that Honeyball was one of those who, though not examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn, were subpœnaed as witnesses to prove a direct case of bribery against Vanderbyl and Kinglake's party at this last election?—Yes.

5257. And you are aware that the answer to it was that Honeyball's character stood too high for that?—I can only say he was driving about during the day, whether he used Mr. Brown's carriage or a private carriage I cannot tell.

5258. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us about the 40*l.*?—That is all.

5259. Now what other sum did you deal with yourself on that day, you do not give us the sum you received that day?—I can mention to you the names of those parties who were paid.

5260. (Mr. Coleridge.) The 20 names?—Not 20, I can mention a good many of them.

5261. But there were 20, were not there?—I believe not.

5262. Have you any recollection what the gross sum you received, including the 90*l.* you received the night before, was it over or under 200*l.*?—I should say it was under 200*l.*

5263. Because Allen has told us that you were put down for 20 voters, and one you say you gave 40*l.* to?—I did.

5264. Then there ought to be 230*l.* if the others had 10*l.* a piece. What did Boucher have himself?—10*l.*

5265. Did you give the 10*l.* to Boucher?—I did.

5266. You did not object to give it direct to him, but did to Powell?—I did.

5267. What did you give to Honyball?—Nothing.

5268. (Mr. Price.) Was it the largeness of the sum?—No, not at all.

5269. What other act did you do yourself in bribing that day directly?—I passed money to Gilbert for several men that he polled that day. I cannot tell you the amount.

5270. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have used the words "passed money for the people who polled." Do not you mean that you gave money to bribe people?—Yes.

5271. (Mr. Price.) Which Gilbert is this you are speaking of?—Philip Gilbert.

5272. There are two are not there?—I only know one, he lives in the Bath Road close by the Bath Bridge.

5273. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the same Phillip Gilbert who was driven with you in the carriage by Mr. Brown's coachman, when you were all engaged in bribing Mr. Powell?—Yes.

5274. How many other elections have you been concerned in?—One.

5275. Before this second election of 1866?—That is, I am speaking with regard to bribery.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 9 o'clock.

SIXTH DAY.

Saturday, 28th August 1689.

PRESENT :

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
DE TRACEY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

5276. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have an explanation to make?—Yes, I want to make an explanation as to something in which I was in error yesterday, as respects William Hurman's bill for 34*l.* I said that was paid by me, and I believed when I said so that it was on the election day, and it was subsequent to the payment of that bill that he voted. I found after I left this Court and went to Mr. Lovibond's office, where I saw the receipt for the amount, the same account which I said I had received, I had not paid it, and never paid it, it was paid two weeks after the election by Mr. Henry Lovibond, and not by me.

5277. That is what you said you paid at the "Punch Bowl?"—Along with the bills that came from the "Punch Bowl," there was the "Punch Bowl" bill, and other bills came up. Henry Jarman brought them to me, and said they must be paid before the poll, I gave my belief that his bill was among them, but it was not.

5278. Had Hurman said anything to you about not voting until his bill was paid?—He had not made it compulsory.

5279. But had he said anything about it?—Yes, I said in evidence that he had spoken to me about the payment of his bill, and I say so now.

5280. (Mr. Anstey.) In connection with his proposed vote?—No, I retract that.

5281. (Mr. Coleridge.) You retract that entirely?—I do entirely.

5282. Or only the question of paying?—I do entirely, and apologize to Mr. William Hurman for the pain I have given him.

5283. (Mr. Anstey.) But before you say "entirely" had you acted as money agent for your party for any purpose but corrupt practices?—For none other.

5284. Had Hurman any reason to believe that you were the general money agent of your party?—They had no reason to believe it.

5285. But was he fully aware that you were entrusted with money for certain specific purposes? I do not believe he did.

5286. Now why did he apply to you, this is very important, and you must take care what you answer? I do.

5287. If you were not known as general money agent, and were not; and if he applied to you for payment of that very large sum on the evening of giving his vote, how did it happen?—He lives directly opposite my door, and it was a circumstance that I knew.

5288. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew his bill had not been paid from common report?—I knew from common report that it had not been paid.

5289. (Mr. Anstey.) What did he say to you when he made this application to you, what were the words?—I was in the shop and he named it to me one day.

5290. What did he say?—He had a bill as against Sir John Shelley, which ought to have been paid before now, at the other election, and he wanted his bill paid.

5291. Wanted what?—That his bill ought to be paid.

5292. Wanted his bill?—Yes.

5293. He said that to you?—Yes, he said that to me.

5294. What did you say when he said, "I want that bill paid"? He said to you, "here has been a "bill standing over unpaid, due to me ever since "Shelley's election, I want that bill paid." What was your reply to that, in your own words, as nearly as you can give them?—If you will ask the question again, it will give me a little time to think.

5295. What did you say when he said, "I want "my bill paid"?—I cannot remember.

5296. (Mr. Price.) Did you say, "I will see to it"?—No.

5297. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you say, "I will not see to it?"—No.

5298. Did you say, "I have nothing to do with it"?—Nothing to do with it.

5299. Did you tell him you had nothing to do with it?—I did tell him I had nothing to do with it, in substance. That was the only answer I could make him.

5300. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Mr. Hurman in Court at this moment?—He is in court.

5301. (Mr. Price.) Is that what you said to him, did you say, "I have nothing to do with it"?—That is all.

5302. Did you say that?—I did say, "I have "nothing to do with it."

5303. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to satisfy myself that you are keeping back nothing—I am warning you not to do so—out of favour to any particular person, or for any other reason. Now I put it to you as a man of common sense (and you have shewn a good deal of common sense in this matter)—whether you mean us to believe that this is the real state of the case, that you, a person not known to Hurman, and having neither authority to say yes or no, when an application for payment of an election bill for 34*l.*, or whatever the amount may be, from Shelley's time was made, were spoken to by Hurman about it in these terms, "That bill has been standing ever since; I want it "paid,"—that thereupon you said to him, "I have "nothing to do with it," that nevertheless you paid him the money?—I never paid him the money.

5304. Or got him paid?—Or got him paid

5305. You retract the statement that you paid it?—I retract the statement that I paid it.

5306. What would you state that you had paid him?—There was a handfull of bills came to me in the heat of the election day, and I believed that William Hurman's bill was amongst them, and it was not.

5307. I have here the shorthand notes: "Something "was paid to William Glanville for flags and decora-"tions; there was a bill of 34*l.* paid to William "Hurman, draper, Fore Street"?—I was in error as far as William Hurman's bill was concerned.

5308. How were you in error, you do not say that you paid it, you say something was paid to Mr. Glanville for decorations, and to William Hurman?—I said I paid it, it was in the same sentence.

SIXTH DAY.

Mr. A. Allan.

28 Aug. 1869.

5309. Then will you retract that you paid it?—I did not pay it.

5310. That is all you retract?—I retract everything connected with it. I retract the fact.

5311. I thought you said it was paid after all?—It was paid two weeks after the election by Mr. Lovibond.

5312. Then it is true it is paid?—It is true it is paid.

5313. Then in truth it is not entirely retracted, but only as far as you are concerned?—It was paid.

5314. (Mr. Coleridge.) The object of your retraction is that, whereas yesterday you said the people would not vote until they had their bills paid, and you included Hurman's among them, now you say that Hurman could not have been in that class, because he was not paid until a fortnight after?—Exactly, that is what I said in substance.

5315. There appears in the Bristol paper of to-day an intimation which must have been sent last night by telegram, that they understand that Andrew Allan is going to retract what he said as to Hurman, can you account for that?—As soon as I left this hall in the afternoon of yesterday I was at once told my error and was taken and shown the receipt. I went straight to Hurman, and apologized to Hurman and told him that the first thing I did would be to retract that statement.

5316. Did you telegraph to the Bristol paper?—I did not.

5317. (Mr. Anstey.) I am looking at my own note, which I dare say is not an ample one, but which entirely agrees with the "Mercury" which does not say anything about yonr having said that you paid him. What I have is, there was money claimed indirectly for supplies in Sir John Shelley's time by gentlemen who did not claim directly for their votes. William Hurman's bill was 34*l.*, for the "Punch Bowl," the sum I forget. That agrees in substancc with the report in the "Mercury," and does not state that yours was the hand who paid it.

5318. (Mr. Coleridge.) My note is, "I paid William "Hurman 34*l.* At Sir John Shelley's election the "Liberals paid no money away. I paid Herman 34*l.* "at Mr. Vanderbyl's election." What made you send the telegram?—I did not.

5319. Who did?—I apologised to Hurman, and I have no doubt he can explain why, as soon as I saw the receipt.

5320. In the course of your retraction you say undoubtedly before he voted he did talk to you about his unpaid bill?—I knew there was a bill standing.

5321. But did he talk to you about it?—I knew there was a bill standing from his own lips.

5322. On the day of the election?—No.

5323. How soon before?—It may have been a week.

5324. Did he say anything about he should not vote if his bill was not paid?—No.

5325. (Mr. Price.) I do not understand what he came to you for?—I was in his shop, he did not come to me at all.

5326. What were you in his shop for?—He is a draper, and I am in the glass and china trade directly opposite, we are neighbours.

5327.—You must have been talking about electioneering matters?—It was electioneering times.

5328. Tell us what passed?—I have told you everything that passed.

5329. You say that he said he wanted his bill paid?—He said he had a bill.

5330. You say you cannot recollect what you said in answer?—

(Mr. Price.) Now repeat your conversation?—Hurman told me in as few words as he could possibly tell it that he had an account standing against Sir John Shelley's election that ought to be paid.

5331. (Mr. Anstey.) How did it begin, what made him allnde to it?—I cannot tell.

5332. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you talking of electioneering matters when he stated it?—We were.

5333. About a week before the election?—About a week before the election.

5334. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any reason to believe if that money had not been paid he would have voted after having stood over intermediate contested elections where it was not paid?—If he had voted on the Tory side I do not believe the money would have been paid.

5335. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to tell us that he did not know you to be a person entrusted with money for election matters?—I swear he did not; it was only as a matter of gossip as neighbours.

5336. (Mr. Anstey.) There is a large sum of 34*l.* paid by Mr. Vanderbyl, who it is not in evidence was in any way connected in any matter with Sir John Shelley, or by blood, or in any other way, he pays this 34*l.* at the suspicious period you mention, a fortnight after the election, and you after communication made to you previous to the election by the claimant that he would not vote until that account was disposed of, do you wish us to believe that the payment under those circumstances, the application to you and the other matters you have told us of, had nothing whatever to do with the question of how Hurman was to have voted, or how he had voted?—I would have you believe that it was.

5337. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you report this conversation with Herman to Mr. Lovibond? How came Mr. Lovibond to pay it?—I did not know until last night that he had paid it.

5338. (Mr. Price) What authority had you for saying yesterday either that you paid it or that it was paid?—It is a matter of two years and six months ago. I was speaking without notes, from memory, and that his bill was included among other bills that I had passed in to Mr. Lovibond and paid.

5339. Then you passed the others to Mr. Lovibond?—I did.

5340. But you cannot account for his being paid in any way or by whom he was paid?—I did not know until I saw the receipt last night.

5341. Now you know?—Now I know.

5342. Who?—Mr. Henry Lovibond.

5343. How soon after?—About two weeks, the date was the 8th of December, as far as my memory serves me.

5344. And you were in constant communication with Mr. Henry Lovibond at that time?—I never knew.

5345. Were you in constant communication with Mr. Henry Lovibond?—Oh yes.

4346. Do you mean that having had this conversation with Hurman, and knowing that there were others in the same predicament, and knowing that they all intended to get paid when they could when there was another contest, that you never mentioned a word of that?—Not to my knowledge.

5347. You must know whether you said it or not. Will you undertake to say deliberately, did you talk over the whole question of these unpaid bills to Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Barham before the contest was over for that election. Did you talk over with any of the legal agents the question of these unpaid bills in Shelley's time?—We had talked over all the unpaid bills for Shelley's election at Vanderbyl's election, because they were notorious.

5348. Then you had discussed with Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Cook?—Shelley's bills as a whole.

5349. Then do you mean to say that when Herman came to you and mentioned this to you, you did not tell Mr. Lovibond about it?—I did not tell Mr. Lovibond about Hurman's bill more than any other bills.

5350. But if you told him about the others, have you any doubt that you mentioned Hurman's?—Not the slightest.

5351. (Mr. Anstey.) I have the shorthand notes here, and I find that my note is correct, and the Bridgwater Mercury's note is correct, that is your entire answer. "There was a bill of William Hur-man's of 34*l.*, a draper in Fore street. There was a bill to Merson at the Punch Bowl public-house.—How much ?—I could not say." The Chairman then asks you, "Did you render an account of this matter ?—I did, and it is in the list." And Mr. Coleridge says then, "Go on." Now you see what you said then is exactly what you said to day, that there was a bill of William Hurman's, and you knew of it ?—And I swore, I believed when giving evidence yesterday that I paid it.

5352. (Mr. Coleridge.) When examining you yesterday, with a view to your own credit to try and account for all these sums of money, a great many of them you could not particularize ; but 34*l.* is an unusual sum, not like 35*l.* even, but a particular sum. How came you, unless you had specific information to fix his bill at 34*l*?—Because I thought it was enormously large.

5353. You mean a week before the election he told you, and mentioned that it was 34*l.*?—Yes.

5354. You carried that in your memory ?—Yes.

5355. And that is the reason you gave the statement yesterday, that it was 34*l.* ?—Yes, that is the reason, because it was a large sum, and it has been in my mind ever since, and I believed I had paid it.

5356. What was it for ?—I do not know.

5357. Ribbons or what ?—Ribbons and favors.

5358. The Act of Parliament is totally disregarded here about colours ?—There used to be no end of colours in the election before last year.

5359. (Mr. Price.) Now you answer further on yesterday to this question ; when they got a rich man down they thought it was worth their while to press for money ? this is your answer ; they thought they ought to have been paid their money, and they said, "We will not vote unless we are paid." Do you mean to retract that ?—That is what I say of the bills given to me and paid by me on the next day.

5360. Do you mean to retract that ?—No, not on part of the bills I paid.

5361. Have you the slightest doubt that Hurman stood out in the same way as the others did ?—I do not believe he did, I will swear on my oath that he did not as far as I remember.

5362. Why not ?—Because he went and voted and his bill was paid on consideration.

5363. How do you know ?—As far as I know, it was not paid by me.

5364. (Mr. Anstey.) You said, "I have no doubt "he did not," and yet you say it had remained with you as bribery agent before the election, and he got payment after the election, from the greatest bribery agent of all according to you, Mr. Henry Lovibond ?—He had no knowledge of me in connexion with money matters at the time.

5365. (Mr. Price.) My question is, "Do you know "whether or not these men had refused to vote at this "election for Mr. Vanderbyl until they had their bills "paid. William Hurman told me he would not vote "until his bill was paid." Now what do you say to that ?—That is not true ; I retract that.

5366. Yesterday you perjured yourself, then ?—Well, I did.

5367. Then I put to you, "any other ?—Babbage. "Any other ?—No." So that you fixed on Hurman and Babbage, who told you they would not vote until they were paid, and now you say nothing of the kind passed ?—I said that on the belief that I did that.

5368. (Mr. Anstey.) Your positive statement that that did not take place, and that neither you nor anybody else bribed Hurman on that occasion is founded on something which passed since yesterday ?—Nothing more than the receipt. The moment I saw it, it paralysed me.

5369. Have you seen Hurman since your examination yesterday ?—Last night.

5370. And in consequence of something which passed between you and him, you are now here to retract what you said with regard to him ?—The first time I saw him was in his own shop.

5371. Is it in consequence of something which passed between you and him yesterday since your examination, that you have come here to retract the statement as to him ?—It is not.

5372. (Mr. Price.) Let me read a little further, and you will see how particular you were about Hurman, because it is not in one answer. Another question is : "You entrusted some person to go and "pay them. I do not understand, when you gave "up this money, that all of them had refused to vote "until they were paid these bills ?—Not all of them. "I had a conversation with Mr. Hurman a day or "two before" ?—I had a conversation ; he told me he had a bill standing.

5373. You said they would not vote unless their bills were paid. You say it was not the case of all, but then you again drag in Hurman as one who had refused.

5374. (Mr. Anstey.) This, as in the Bristol paper, looks as if some arrangement had been come to last night as to what you should say this morning ; therefore it is very necessary we should know all about it ?—When I came down on the floor, Mr. Lovibond came to me and said, "You are mistaken about "Hurman's bill ; it was me who paid it ; I will show "you the receipt." I went to his office and he opened a parcel of papers connected with this election, and amongst others was Hurman's receipt. I went to Hurman the first time I have seen him these four months, took my hat off, and said, "I beg to apologize "for the injury I have done you."

5375. That is all Mr. Lovibond told you ?—That is all Mr. Lovibond told me last night, and the first word I had with Hurman for months was to beg his pardon for the injury I had done him.

5376. (Mr. Price.) You were very deliberate about it. You say further on, "You mean you paid these "bills on the very day of the election ?—They would "not vote until they got the money" ?—Yes, exactly, Henry Jarman brought the bills to me to get the money, and I believed he brought Hurman's bill.

5377. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to call your attention to each of these points which the Chairman has put to you.—First, my learned colleague, Mr. Coleridge, put a question which, according to your unfortunate custom, you did not answer categorically as to the payment : instead of saying that you had paid, your answer was in the words of the three reports I have read.—"There was a bill of Hurman." Then the Chairman, at a subsequent stage of the examination, in the passage which had escaped my memory, refers you again to those points ; and you say specifically, not only that you paid it yourself, but you paid it in consequence of his stating or giving you to understand before the election that unless it was paid he would not vote. Then the Chairman returns to the subject further on, and asks you with reference to the voters, the creditors in general whom you paid, a certain question, and you again repeat your statement in such a way as to point directly to Hurman, recapitulating all you said, therefore that is not, as one of your predecessors in the box said, in the heat of the moment, but deliberately and thrice over stated to us. You will not say now that you believe that your master in this business, according to you, Mr. Henry Lovibond, paid the money and not you, which would be quite consistent with the rest of your statement, but you come not only to retract the immaterial part that yours was the hand that paid it, but also the material part, that you had a previous conversation with Mr. Hurman, that unless so paid he would not vote ?—I do not retract the previous conversation ; he told me he had a bill.

5378. (Mr. Price.) I will put it to you once again. Do you mean to swear now that in that conversation you had with Hurman he did not give you to understand he would not vote unless he was paid ?—I do not swear that he did not.

5379. Then what induced you to swear so over and over again ?—I said it on the faith and belief that I had paid that bill.

5380. (Mr Coleridge.) Did you gather from the conversation you had with him that he might be doubtful

SIXTH DAY.

Mr. A. Allan.

28 Aug. 1869.

about voting unless some one settled?—No, I did not.

5381. (Mr. Price.) You said so over and over again yesterday and a man named Babbage?—Babbage's bill I paid.

5382. Did he say he would not vote also?—Not personally to me. Then Jarman brought the bill to me and said, "Here are the bills, they will not go "until they get the money."

5383. (Mr Coleridge.) Was Hurman's bill amongst them?—It was not. I believed when I gave evidence yesterday that it was.

5384. Do you mean to say that, because you were wrong yesterday in the immaterial part that Mr. Lovibond's was the hand that paid them, not yours, that therefore you are wrong as to the entirely different facts stated by you three times yesterday that Hurman distinctly told you before the election that unless he were paid he would not vote?—I recollect that statement.

5385. Merely because you were wrong as to the hand that paid him—that is the only reason you have for altering it. You retract the whole statement, because you were wrong in part. Do answer the question?—I answer everything according as I know.

5386. Listen to me, Mr. Lovibond has corrected you in a very small and immaterial particular, namely, that he, the bribery agent, No. 1, paid the money and not you, who are bribery agent No. 2, therefore you retract that part. What is the reason now for retracting all the rest, the only material part, namely, that you had a conversation before the election, when he told you he did not mean to vote unless he was paid by some one?—The receipt, when I saw I had not paid the money showed me that I was disconnected with the whole transaction, that I spoke from memory when I said I spoke to Mr. Hurman about the matter. I knew he had a bill, and wanted his bill paid, but that he made that stipulation that he would not vote for the party unless paid I do not believe.

5387. How could the mere fact of the receipt showing you to be in error as to paying money show you to be in error as to the fact of having a conversation with Hurman?—I admit now I had a conversation.

5388. How could it show you you were in error as to what Mr. Hurman said in that conversation?—Well, the receipt could not show I was in error.

5389. Then there was something else that Mr. Lovibond told you, promised you, or threatened you last night, which is the reason you come to retract the whole story?—No, it is not.

5390. Then what was it he said that induced the telegram to be sent to Bristol, and you to come here to day to perform the promise of the telegram?—In the absence of my paying that bill, it entirely paralyzed me. I was dumb in a moment because that was the strength on which I put the evidence.

5391. (Mr. Price.) That is not the important part of it. The question is, not as to whose hand paid it, but the really important part of the transaction is, whether it was done in consequence of a contract about the vote that you said that, and I will read what you said more about it. You said, "they would not vote "until they got the money." Then I ask you, "the "men would not really go and vote until they had "these bills paid. I did not see them go.—No doubt "it was so. It came to this, it was bribing in another "form.—It looked like it, it was very strong?"—Yes.

5392. Do you mean to say you knowing perfectly well that you had this conservation with Mr. Hurman and although you may be wrong as to yours being the hand that paid it, that Hurman did not give you to understand when he had this conservation whether long or short, that he would not vote unless he had his bill paid?—I had the conversation with Hurman in his own shop about his bill, but he did not put it so strong to me that he should not vote.

5393. How then?—He said his bill ought to be paid.

5394. Did you gather from him that it was like the other men of whom Jarman told you that they would not vote unless they were paid?—I did not.

5395. Why did you not tell us so yesterday?—I made the same remark.

5396. (Mr. Anstey.) You will remember this—in reply to the Chairman, you answer, "I did not "then gather from his conversation that he was like "the other men." If so, and you did not gather it from his conversation, what made you come and state to us positively three times that he did?—Believing that his bill came through Jarman.

5397. Here is what you say he told you:—"William Hurman told me that he would not vote "unless his bill were paid," you say; then the next question is, "Was there any other person told you," and you say "Babbage"?—I made that statement from the fact that I believed I had paid his bill, knowing that he had a bill due and wanted it paid.

5398. (Mr. Coleridge.) How should that lead to a conversation upon that. You might say every single person whose bill you paid had told you he would not vote until you paid it. Do you go as far as that, that every single person told you in terms?—No, I do not.

5399. Then I cannot understand you when you say Hurman immediately told you that he would not vote until he had his bill paid, unless you go so far as to say that everybody's bill I paid I paid in consequence of their saying, I would not vote unless paid. How do you single out Hurman?—I made that statement from the fact of the conversation between us in his own shop supported by the fact that he sent me the bill.

5400. Did he send you the bill?—He did I believed at the time.

5401. But if he did it would not alter the conversation, I have no doubt you are perfectly truthful and correct in saying that Mr. Lovibond paid and not you, but does that alter the conversation?—It strengthens the fact.

5402. Did you in fact have this conversation with him, though it be perfectly truthful as you say that you did not pay but Henry Lovibond did?—I had a conversation with him.

5403. Was not the conversation the same as you repeated yesterday?—Mr. Hurman did not make that statement.

5404. All you come to withdraw is the fact of having paid him. Then either yesterday when you thought you paid him you invented the conversation with him, or to day you are denying what you gave truthfully yesterday?—Yesterday when I gave the conversation I believe from what passed between us the conversation connected with paying the bill, that his was one of them that came through Jarman, therefore I spoke of them collectively.

5405. Do you mean to say that the words you used "William Hurman told me he would not vote unless "his bill was paid," were only a résumé of the conversation you had with all the people whose bills were not paid?—Exactly.

5406. (Mr Price.) It is a very serious matter for you; but now, as you have altered the most material portions of your evidence, and confessed that you said that yesterday deliberately in repeated answers which is untrue, it becomes you to consider seriously the position in which you stand as to getting an indemnity at our hands for having made a full and truthful disclosure, or for having answered our questions satisfactorily to our minds, now I ask you what passed between you and Mr. Lovibond yesterday?—When I went down on the floor he came to me and said, "My dear fellow you have made a mistake about "Hurman."

5407. What then, did you go to his office?—I did.

5408. How long were you with him then?—I went straight to his office, I was there not ten minutes.

5409. He told you that you had made a mistake, that is to say you had not paid him, but that he, Lovibond, had?—He said he had paid him and nothing else.

5410. Did he tell you that you had made a mistake when you said he would not vote until his bill was paid?—He did not know anything about it.

5411. He heard it yesterday; did he tell you that you had made a mistake in saying that William Hurman would not vote until paid?—No, he did not; he said, "You are in error about William Hurman."

5412. As to who paid him?—As to who paid him.

5413. Is that all?—That is all the conversation.

5414. And then you went straight to William Hurman?—Then I went straight to William Hurman's shop and apologised to him.

5415. For what?—Having made a statement about him that was incorrect.

6416. What was the statement?—That he would not vote until he got his bill paid.

5417. What induced you to say that was a mistake at that time?—Because I had been to the office, and found the receipt.

5418. (Mr. Price.) It simply comes to this, that you found yourself wrong in saying that yours was the hand which paid the money, and you now say you deliberately swore to that which was untrue yesterday about the conversation?—If I swore to the conversation which would criminate Mr. Hurman apart from paying the bill, I did it unintentionally, and it is wrong if I did it.

5419. You say you were there ten minutes, this conservation would take place about a minute, what else did you talk about yesterday?—He went to his box, and showed me some electioneering papers, some I had seen three years ago in connexion with them, and untied the string, and among them took out this bill.

5420. Did he show you anything to enable you to tell us to day what you did not yesterday?—He showed me the agents.

6421. I want to know whether he showed you anything that brought anything to your mind that you have not told us?—The list of sub-agents under me.

5422. The list of what had been paid?—Yes, the lists of the men, and what paid, and amongts these lists was Hurman's receipt.

5423. Amongst them did he show you a list which would account for the 4,000*l.* you received?—I am in error about that, that is what I want to speak about.

5424. (Mr. Price.) Where is your error as to the 4,000*l.*?—The 4,000*l.* to my mind was more prominent than any other thing, I considered the election cost us 4,000*l.*, I consider now the election cost us 4,000*l.* gross.

5425. You told us actually and specifically that you received 1,400*l.* from the stranger, and 2,000*l.* in bank notes and those country notes, and you particularised the country notes from Mr. Barham?—I will leave Mr. Barham to explain that.

5426. What do you want to correct about that?—Mr. Barham said I had made a statement, a glaring mistake.

5427. Has he been talking to you about your evidence?—When I came down from the box last night, Mr. Barham was there (in the court) and he said, "You have made a grand mistake, you have charged yourself with more money than you have had."

5428. He had heard your statement and deficit?—He had heard my statement.

5429. (Mr. Price.) All that I can say is that it is an extremely improper thing to discuss a witness' evidence with him after he has given it before the examination is closed for the purpose of enabling him to try and screen or exculpate, or lessen the amount of crime which he has given his oath upon, and it is a great contempt of court to do it.

(Mr. Anstey.) And more so, when one of the persons named, Eustace Barham, is himself a member of the legal profession, and ought to know something of the law which he undertakes to practice, and is an officer of a court which has the power to strike him off the rolls for such conduct as this.

(Mr. Price.) Because it is perfectly open to the person whose character is impugned by one witness to come here and clear it, he can claim to be heard, and be sworn, and that is the proper mode of correcting any mistake, and then we must judge of the conflict of testimony, which of the two is to be believed. Where, after a person has come and deliberately told us a long story with great accuracy of detail and memory, and in the two most important parts he comes next morning to say that he has had conversations with two legal agents about his evidence and wishes to correct them, I say that that is conduct which is highly discreditable, and of course the first evidence which has been taken would in our minds be quite conclusive against any after-statement made under such circumstances, now you may state your correction?—Mr. Barham said to me you have made a great mistake in your financial statement; you have charged yourself with receiving 700*l.* which you did not have.

5430. What do you say now to that, which is right, you or he?—I said I did not know, the money came to me so unexpectedley and in such large sums, and I had no check of the money as it came in and gave no receipt for it, that I did not know.

5432. Then what do you say now is correct, that you had not so much or that you had?—I cannot say he is correct.

5433. Are you?—As far as I know I was correct at the time.

5434. What do you say now, having had the con versation with Mr. Barham. Do you mean to say you did not have the 4,000*l.*?—I have no account of it, and only spoke from memory at the time.

5435. (Mr. Coleridge.) I put it to you again as the 34*l.* bill was an odd sum so is the 2,600*l.* How do you get at that particular sum if it was entirely an illusion of your brain?—It was always prominent to my mind that 4,000*l.* was the cost of the election, and I got the money at the Globe and the rest from Mr. Barham, that is the honest truth.

5436. (Mr. Price.) The first is the man you got the money from, you gave a description of him?—I did, and told you my introduction.

5437. You say, "He opened a bag and gave me some, it was more than I could carry, and I took it home at three times. Then I put it to you." "Eventually you got 1,400*l.* in sovereigns from him?—All in sovereigns." "(Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get any money from anybody else at that election?—I did." "Who from?—Mr. Barham." "When was that?—On the polling day after the money was done." "(Mr Price.) After you had disbursed your 1.400*l.* on the following day you wanted more?—Yes." "How much more did you circulate that you wanted?—I do not know that I calculated anything, but I will tell you how much more I got." "Well do?—2,600*l.*" "From Mr. Barham?—Yes." "(Mr. Coleridge.) In sovereigns?—No." "In paper?—In paper." "In Bank of England notes?—Well, they were in bank notes. (Mr. Price.) Were they provincial notes or what?—They were local notes." "Of what bank?—A bank here." "Does this bank issue its own notes?—There were some Bank of England notes amongst them; but the most of them were the West of England and South Wales District Bank." "(Mr. Coleridge.) Were they 5*l.* or 10*l.*, or what?—Mostly." "In twenties?—No, mostly in fives or tens." "What time of the day was this?—That was about the meridian blaze." "About one o'clock?—Yes." "And where did you receive it from him?—At my own house." "Did he come to you, or did you send to him?—He came down to me." "(Mr. Anstey.) Is this the name of the bank whose notes you received, the West of England and South Wales District Bank?—Exactly so." "(Mr. Price.) And that bank has a branch office here in Bridgwater?—Yes." "(Mr. Anstey.) Who is the manager?—Mr. John Ford, Captain Ford." "And who is the cashier?—I do not know." "Do you know anybody connected with it, whose surname begins with C.?—No, I do not know anybody connected with it. I do not bank with it.

SIXTH DAY.

Mr. A. Allan.

28 Aug. 1869.

They are my next door neighbours." "(Mr. Coleridge.) When Mr. Barham came down to you, did you tell him that you had had 1,400*l.* from a stranger, and had spent it?—No, I do not think I did." "(Mr. Price.) Tell us what passed between you and him. You had sent up to him, to say you wanted more money?—Yes." "Did you send up word to him that you wanted more money, or how, before he came with more money that was wanted by you?—I stayed in my own house, and all the election agents whenever they wanted money, came to me, or sent to me, and had it, and the fund got exhausted, and Mr. Barham supplied me with more." "But how did Mr. Barham know you wanted more?—He was in and out of my house every quarter of an hour throughout the day." "So that he knew from time to time, that the money was exhausted, and you wanted more?—I had the money from 200*l.* to 300*l.* at a time till it was exhausted, and he knew where it was going." "(Mr Coleridge.) It was not in one lump?—No." "(Mr. Price.) As he came down to your house from time to time, you told him more money was wanted, and he came down with more sovereigns?—Yes." "And altogether you got 2,600*l.* from him?—Yes." Everything connected with that is as true as can be if the money is correct. I was young at electioneering—only six weeks.

5438. You were not too young to understand the meaning of language and the meaning of an oath; all I can say is, it is a very sad thing to see a person in your position coming here deliberately swearing to such facts as those, and then coming the next morning after the conversation with these gentlemen who are deeply implicated by you, and eat your words, and diminish the effect of your evidence?—I spoke purely from memory.

5439. Is there anything else you want to correct?—That is the only thing.

5440. Now I tell you again, because you seem now to place yourself in a very awkward position, that we are not satisfied that you have made a full and free disclosure, whatever we may have thought of you yesterday. There cannot be a doubt that our opinion of the value of evidence, and the truth and honesty of the witness must be materially altered by what has taken place this morning.

(Mr. Anstey.) Certainly?—It is pure mistake.

5441. (Mr. Price.) And we have been informed there is an attempt on the part of you and Mr. Bussell and others to screen certain individuals, to let out as much as they can, saving the mention of some particular individuals with whom they are connected, or of whom they are afraid?—If you will ask me any questions with reference to that, stating the individual, I will tell you.

5442. (Mr. Anstey.) So you said yesterday, and see your practice to day. You have allowed yourself to be tampered with by two persons, one of whom at least ought to know better. You appear before us as a tampered witness, and you know best what inducement or terror has actuated you?—There has been no inducement.

5443. (Mr. Coleridge.) Quite accepting the truth of every word you have said as you will no doubt be supported by Mr. Hurman and Mr. Lovibond as to when he was paid, I cannot get out of my mind the fact that you have spoken to a particular conversation, I care nothing for the payment, with Hurman that was either invented yesterday or suppressed to-day. Now which was it?—I made the statement yesterday because I believed it supported by the bill. The conversation supported by the bill would have satisfied my mind that what I have said was quite correct.

5444. Then do you mean you invented that conversation because you believed you had paid a bill, and if you had paid, a conversation must have taken place which did not if you had not?—No.

5445. Would that account for your distinctly saying, Mr. Hurman told me that he would not vote until the bill was paid?—I believed that he had told me so.

5446. You did believe that he had told you that, and if Hurman had not said last night that he never told you that, would not you then at this moment believe that he said he would not vote until his bill was paid. If you had not seen Hurman or Mr. Lovibond last night, and from circumstances that occurred then you were told that what you had said was untrue, would not you to this moment have believed that that conversation took place?—No answer.

5447. Surely it is a very simple question?—I do not believe, and I am confident to this moment, that William Hurman did not make that stipulation.

5448. My question is, if you had gone straight away to Bristol last night and seen nobody, and were called here this morning, would not you have told us the same story as last night?—I would have told the same story.

5449. And also, if you had simply gone to Mr. Lovibond's office and never seen Hurman to speak to yesterday, simply seeing that you did not pay but Mr. Lovibond, would not you in some way have deposed to the conversation you deposed to yesterday, the sole altered condition of things being that Lovibond paid and not you; would not you have still said you had had the conversation with him about his being paid?—I should have thought so.

5450. (Mr. Price.) And do you doubt it now?—I do.

5451. Merely because Hurman says you did not?—From the facts you have stated.

5452. How many more persons are there who may come to you in the course of this inquiry and tell you that something you have said is untrue, and you may be ready to retract? You had better consider that.

5453. (Mr. Anstey.) And do you say that your opinion of Hurman is such, that if he tells you a thing you believe he speaks the truth?—I have always held that opinion of Hurman.

5454. But nevertheless, if he does not tell you anything to the contrary, you quite believe him to be a person capable of being bribed by a payment made in an indirect fashion?—No, I do not believe that.

5455. You did that, and said he was a person capable of being bribed indirectly; you say now that your opinion of him is such that when he says he was not bribed you will surrender your own judgment?—I have a list of bills that came to me, and among them was Hurman's, and I said these people will not vote until they were paid. I had a conversation with William Hurman about his bill and from the fact that the bill was sent to me and paid; I believe that was why I said it.

5456. You have said that over and over again; however, you are warned.

(Mr. Price.) Depend upon it that there is no doubt we shall hear something about this and other things which you could have told us, and have not?—I say if there is any name that you want——

5457. You must know.

Henry Chapman Bussell recalled.

Mr. H C. Bussell.

5458. (Mr. Price.) We have come to a resolution, and we think it right to call you up, as you are a very important witness, to tell you the resolution we have come to, but before doing that I wish to ask you a question or two. We have now seen something of an attempt made by persons here, if not to keep back evidence, to alter the effect of it after it has been given; now I ask you whether there is any person in this borough, either the mayor, or ex-mayor, or alderman, or justice of the peace, or in any other position or rank in this town whom you know to be mixed up in Parliamentary corruption whose names you have not given to us?—Not to my knowledge.

5459. Or belief?—Nor to my belief.

5460. In your knowledge or belief?—No.

5461. Is there no person with whom you are connected in this borough in any way to whom you are under pecuniary obligation to?—No.

5462. None; is there no person?—(No answer).

5463. Is there no person in this borough who has taken an active part, I will not say an improper part, in electioneering matters in this town to whom you are under pecuniary obligations?—There is until the end of next month.

5464. Who is it?—It is not regarding the election. I had some property in the town, and have a mortgage on it.

5465. Who is it?—Messrs. Reed and Cook, but the property is sold, and I pay it off this next month.

5466. That is the only one?—That is the only one.

5467. You are receiving no salary?—Yes.

5468. No sum of money from anybody in the borough who is a political partisan?—I am not.

5469. Nor any money in any sense whatever?—I am under the mayor.

5470. The present mayor?—Yes.

5471. What do you do?—Superintend his vessels, and look after the repairs.

5472. How long have you done that?—Four or five years.

5473. You receive a salary for that?—I do.

5474. How much?—30*l.* a year.

5475. (Mr. Coleridge.) And anything on the amount of bricks shipped?—That is a matter of allowance; if a vessel comes here to unload bricks they have to give an allowance to the labourers.

5476. But was not there at one time a system of allowing three halfpence or whatever it might be a thousand for drink money to the captains for unloading bricks?—Never; I have been connected with it for 32 years, and never heard of it in my life.

5477. Do you know of three halfpence a thousand being allowed to anybody?—Yes, we have to pay it; I myself have paid it.

5478. To whom?—To the labourers, not to the captains.

5479. But you pay them in drink, do not you?—I do.

5480. And did not the present mayor at one time very strongly object to this drink money?—He did.

5481. And is not the 30*l.* you received in lieu of the benefit you used to get out of drink money to the labourers?—No, not a bit.

5482. Did you get the 30*l.* a year at the time you used to give three halfpence a thousand to the labourers?—He had not my services then.

5483. Do you now still, since you have a salary from the mayor who objects to this drinking system, get it?—No, there are only two yards in the town, and a very little there is.

5484. Do you still get paid?—Not at all times.

5485. Do you ever?—No.

5486. On behalf of the mayor?—No.

5487. Then your 30*l.* is in lieu of the advantage you got out of the three halfpence paid to the labourers?—No.

5488. Then what is it?—For services rendered in looking after the vessel.

5489. What are those services; are you a ship's husband?—You may call it that. Yes.

5490. How many ships have you to look after?—Eight or nine I think it is. I have some of my own.

5491. You do not get paid by the mayor for looking after your own?—I know that.

5492. How many have you to look after for which you get this 30*l.* a year?—I will give the names; the "Peregrine," "the "Roseville," the "Tow," the "Grace," the "Anna," the "William and Martha," the "Onward," the "Queen," and if there are any others I will furnish you with the names.

5493. Are those all the matters?—They are.

5494. Did you ever receive 50*l.* instead of 30*l.* from the mayor?—I had 40*l.* once. Then I took an active part in looking out for work for the steamer.

5495. What is the name of the steamer?—the "Petrel."

5496. How long have you given up looking after that?—There were two companies, and they are amalgamated, and my work was not so heavy.

5497. When were you reduced?—Three or four years ago.

5498. How long have you received any sums from the mayor?—About five years I think.

5499. (Mr. Price.) Have you any control at all over the vessels?—If any repairs are wanted I go and see to them, and consult the mayor upon them; that is exactly the position I am in.

5500. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood the mayor to say that you had nothing whatever to do with these ships?—I did not understand so.

5501. You were in court when he was examined?—Yes.

5502. Do you remember my asking the mayor, "Had you allowed Mr. Bussell to send telegrams to your Captains to bring them here to vote"?—I never did.

5503. Did you hear me ask him that question?—I did.

5504. Did you hear then his answer that you had nothing to do with his ships?—I did not understand him that way. I will give an explanation of what I understood he meant.

5505. Did you hear him say that you had nothing whatever to do with his ships?—With the vessels I telegraphed to.

5506. I asked him whether you had any control over his ships, and the answer was no?—No, I did not hear that.

5507. You heard me ask this question and follow it up by saying, "Did not Bussell send a telegram to Cardiff?" and the answer was, "It was one of his captains and not mine?"—No, the answer was, "It was J. W. Sully's captains, and not mine."

5508. Then it was not one of your captains?—Not a bit.

5509. But to one of J. W. Sully's?—Yes.

5510. A relation of the mayor?—Yes.

5511. Do you also remember his saying you had nothing to do with vessels of his?—I did not understand the question was put to him.

5512. Did you hear him say so?—No.

5513. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have handed us in a list of men who polled for Mr. Patton at the first election of 1866, and the second for Mr. Vanderbyl of the same year. They are John Baker, John Alfred Buttle, Edward Phillip Crump, John Dyer, Abraham Frost, William Gatter, Henry Harris, Charles Haste, William Hensley, Charles Hobbs, John Hole, Charles Hook, Richard Hooper, John Jobson, George Kerle, William Reece, John Spencer, John Squires, John Stone, John Turner, and John Webber; 21 in all?—Yes, that is correct.

5514. Those are the persons you found from your examination?—From the list I had.

5515. Who polled in the first instance on the Conservative side in 1866, and the second time on the Liberal side in 1866 also?—Yes.

5516. From that do you collect first of all that they were bribed to vote for the Conservatives in 1866 at the first election?—Well, I believe that they would be.

5517. Do not say "would be?"—Yes, I think so.

5518. And if they had not been bribed to vote for the Conservatives they would have voted in the first instance for the Liberals?—I cannot answer for that.

5519. They are, in fact, of the class you call balance men?—They are.

5520. From that and your knowledge, and what you have heard, do you believe that the reason that they went over to Mr. Vanderbyl in the succeeding election in 1866 was that they were bribed by your party?—I believe so, I cannot tell you further than that, that the present mayor has always discouraged men from voting who were in the command of vessels.

SIXTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. Bussell.

28 Aug. 1869.

5521. And always discouraged beer drinking, did he not?—Yes.

5522. (Mr. Anstey.) I see he says in answer to the question, "Did not you know at the last election "a certain Henry C. Bussell was taking an active "part in the election on the Liberal side?—Most certainly not." Is that true; did he know that you were taking an active part at the last election?—I do not know whether he knew it or no.

5323. Did not all the world know it?—I believe they did.

5524. Did you conceal it from him?—I did as far as I could.

5525. That you were taking an active part?—I did as far as I could.

5526. Did you conceal it from him?—I did.

5527. Then he did not know it?—He did not by my letting people know it.

5528. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you conceal it from him?—Because I knew he would object to the practices, that is why.

(Mr. Price.) Now, not merely to you, but we wish it to be known, that in pursuance of the powers given us by the Act of Parliament, which I think I stated on the opening day, we have power from time to time to report to Her Majesty the evidence taken by us, and having reference to the disclosures that have been made already in this inquiry by Mr. Bussell and Mr. Allan, we have come to the following resolution; that Henry Chapman Bussell having informed us that he has made us a full disclosure of all matters within his knowledge, remembrance, or belief, touching the elections for Bridgwater, as to which we have examined him, and the names of all persons implicated therein, we are now disposed to make our first report to Her Majesty, in order that Her Majesty's Attorney-General may have time and opportunity to consider the question whether or not he will prosecute any person or persons named by that witness or by any other person already examined before the Commissioners; but the question of granting to you, Bussell, or any other witness a certificate of indemnity must continue to be reserved until after the termination of the whole inquiry, when the question will have to be considered as to all the witnesses in general.

HENRY CORNELIUS WHITE recalled.

Mr. H. C. White.

5529. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you one of the signataries to the petition of 80 in 1866 praying a suspension of the writ?—I think not, I wish to correct one statement that I made yesterday.

5530. (Mr. Price.) Have you been in communication with any person since you gave evidence yesterday?—I have been to get the list which I spoke to you of.

5531. Have you been in communication with any person about your evidence since you came here yesterday?—I have.

5532. With whom?—Gilbert, at the Bath Bridge.

5533. The man to whom you gave the money to pay Powell?—Yes, to pay several people, I went to Boucher, but we have not been on good terms for a very long time.

5534. Did you go to him?—I did.

5535. Did you go to Honeyball?—I did not go to him, but I saw Honeyball last night.

5536. Have you seen Mr. Barham?—I have not seen Mr. Barham.

5537. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Honeyball at his master's?—No.

5538. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you seen Mr. Lovibond?—I saw him this morning.

5339. (Mr. Price.) On the subject of your evidence?—Yes, on the subject of the list which I sent in at the time.

5540. Have you seen Allan?—Last night.

5541. Bussell?—Last night.

5542. And who else?—John Smith.

5543. Did you have a meeting then all together?—No, I called individually on them.

5544. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you seen Mr. Eustace Barham?—No.

5545. (Mr. Coleridge). Have you seen Mr. Cook?—I met Mr. Cook last night in the street.

5546. Did you have any conversation about this?—There was some conversation.

5547. Have you seen Mr. Reed?—No, I did not speak to him.

5548. What did you say to Mr. Cook?—Mr. Cook merely said no doubt my intentions were good, but he thought I had answered rather flippantly, or something of that kind.

5549. What did you understand by that?—I thought he meant in my replies, I was much excited at the time, whether I had answered you too readily, or not, either of you. It was merely a little private conversation, nothing else that passed between us.

5550. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you any conversation about the substance of your evidence, and not about the shadow?—Not the slightest.

5551. (Mr. Price.) Are you living upon your own independent means now?—I am.

5552. Are you thoroughly independent?—I am independent, sufficient for me to live upon, and in addition to that I have an income from the secretaryship of a Building Society, and several other little sources.

5553. I call that your own income. From money saved and offices you fill you have an ample income of your own?—I have an ample income of my own.

5554. Were you engaged at any time as collector of excise or taxes?—Never; I was appointed here to collect the taxes.

5555. When?—I cannot tell you the year without referring.

5556. How long have you held the office?—I think for three years.

5557. Were you collector of Queen's taxes?—I was. In those days it was made a political appointment.

5558. Who got you the appointment?—Why unfortunately, I think, in the first place, Mr. John Morris clapped me into that office.

5559. Why do you say unfortunately?—Because it is a very disagreeable office, and I did not wish to perform it 5560. Then why did you continue to hold it?—I gave it up.

5561. But you held it for three years?—No, I gave it up.

5562. You had it for three years but you gave it up, is that so?—I was not regularly appointed myself for three years, but I did the work for three years.

5563. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many years were you paid for?—Three years.

5564. (Mr. Price.) You did the work, and were paid for it, but you were not regularly appointed?—I was not regularly appointed; other people were appointed, and requested me to do the work for them, which I did.

5565. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you never were regularly appointed?—I was once put in.

5566. Did you give surety?—Never a penny.

5567. Who did, the collector does here, does not he?—No, nothing of the kind; I never gave surety for a penny.

5568. Does not anybody in this borough?—I am not aware; I never gave sureties, and I have never heard that others have done so.

5569. Was there any special privilege granted to you in that respect?—Not the slightest; no special favour; I do not think it is the custom.

5570. (Mr. Price.) You say you had this appointment unfortunately thrust upon you, why?—Because it was a disagreeable office.

5571. I cannot understand why, as you had no regular appointment, you took what you considered a disagreeable office for some one else. Who was the person you were working for?—Unless I had the papers before me I could not say; there were two or three persons appointed, but I could not tell you who; I shall be glad to get the information for you; I think Mr. Henry Baker did it.

5572. That was the person you acted for?—Yes, one year.

5573. You gave it up of your own accord?—Undoubtedly so.

5574. Now, to go to your electioneering experience, the last thing was that you took the 40*l.* and gave it to Philip Gilbert, carpenter, living in the Bath Road, and then came that history of the compunction of conscience which you had as to giving it to him personally?—If you will be kind enough I want to connect that statement about tho 40*l.*, looking at the list this morning.

5575. What list was it?—A list in possession of Mr. Lovibond.

5576. Is it made by yourself?—This is merely notes which I have.

5577. You have a copy here of something which Mr. Cook showed you?—No.

5778. Who?—Mr. Henry Lovibond this morning, he told me he had the list of the money I was credited with, of course all my papers were destroyed, and I had none whatever, he said last night; and I said, "Very well, I will call this morning and see the "amount put down;" I cannot make out what Bussell has stated that I am charged with receiving, I think he said, for 20 men.

5779. Is Mr. Henry Lovibond here?—(Mr. Lovibond.) Yes.

5780. (Mr. Price.) Will you produce that document which the witness copied at your office?—(Mr. Lovibond.) I will [It was produced].

5781. (Mr. Price.) But this is the document you were shown?—That is the document. In that document I am charged with receiving at one time 100*l.* I think I mentioned Allan's name last night, did not I?

5582. You did; Are you "White of John Street"?—I was at that time.

5583. There are two 30*l.*, White 30*l.* and ditto underneath. Does that mean you?—Two 30*l.*; that is right.

5585. 10*l.* I find, if you are "White John Street"?—Yes, 10*l.* and 45*l.*

5586. High Street is not you?—No.

5587. I do not see your name down for any other sum, this is the list of the bribers, is it not?—Yes.

5588. (Mr. Coleridge.) For which election?—For Vanderbyl's, in 1866.

5589. You had nothing to do with the 1868, I think you said?—Nothing, whatever, I was poll clerk. There is another; White Eastover charged to me, 45*l.*

5590. That makes how much altogether?—That makes it come to 215*l.*

5591. What did you say yesterday from Allan; 90*l.* and 40*l.*,—130*l.* that is all you have told us of yet?—He has charged to me 45*l.* that was paid by Bussell to Turner, Haste, and Squires.

5592. What is wrong in your evidence, what you said yesterday was simply this that you got from Allan. Then came a question between you and Boucher of 20*l.* which you say you believed Boucher stuck to?—That was my impression at the time.

5593. Do you wish to correct that?—No, only I wish that Boucher would sit down with me.

5594. Now, did you get 90*l.* from Allan, is that correct?—I spoke yesterday without having any list or papers.

5595. Did you get it?—I gave to Allan after the election an account of every penny I received from him, and he added it.

5596. Did you get 90*l.* from him?—I did get 90*l.*

5597. (Mr. Coleridge.) I do not quite understand this document produced by Mr. Lovibond, is this entirely sums given to people to give to others, or does it include sums you have given to people for their votes, is it all given to intermediate people, or are they only the sums away the money went?—Yes, they are given to intermediate persons, all the others.

5598. Every one of them?—All, at least when you say every one, that is a question I really cannot answer.

5599. Whose handwriting is that in?—I do not know, I cannot give an opinion, if I knew this handwriting, I have only seen it this morning for half a minute while Mr. Lovibond was copying it.

5600. Is it Mr. Lovibond's?—I am not aware.

5601. Do you know his handwriting?—No.

5602.—Are those all sums given to intermediate persons?—I cannot answer, I want to state everything I possibly can truly, and if you will kindly help me out of the difficulty I am in for I have no list.

5603. We want you to help us because we do not know the facts, I believe you were correct in saying yesterday that you got 90*l.* from Allan; is that true?—It is true.

5604. What do you want to add to that in explanation, I see that the first charge in that list is 100*l.*?—I believe that is the sum I had from him, and I believe that the 90*l.* instead of being 90*l.* in one sum, Allan is right, and it was 100*l.* at one time.

5605. (Mr. Price.) It is not correct that you got 90*l.* only, because you got 90*l.* and 10*l.* making 100*l.*?—Yes.

5606. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it in gold or notes?—I believe he left with me, I thought the night before, 9 packets; but I believe now 10 packets since I have seen that paper, I had no evidence to go by.

5607. What did you do with that 100*l.* Yesterday you gave an account of how you went through it with Boucher, how much of that went to Boucher?—I can tell you the list of names amounting to the whole of the money that I received.

5608. Do you mean the list of the names of those that received the 100*l.*?—Those who received the whole of the money I am charged with, with the exception of 20*l.*

5609.—Where did you get that list from?—I have made it out from memory, I wish I had my own paper.

5610. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where are your papers?—They were burnt at the time, I did not keep them, it is three years ago, and the only thing I can do is to get at it.

5611. Now the names?—Boucher 10*l.*, I should tell you this is the sum he had for himself; also, Boucher, Mr. Tour, 10*l.*; also Mr. Scott, a dissenting minister, I think he was.

5612. (Mr. Coleridge.) What christian name?—I do not know.

5613. (Mr. Price.) Is he living here now?—I do not know.

5614. (Mr. Anstey.) You know where he is to be found?—I do not.

5615. (Mr. Price.) Was he then a minister of a dissenting place of worship here?—They told me he was a dissenting minister.

5616. Who told you?—Boucher told me.

5617. How much to him?—10*l.*; Dabinett and Virgin, 10*l.*; now I am of opinion I paid Culverwell myself.

5618. All those you have given us were paid through Boucher?—I cannot exactly tell without he would go through with me, I cannot remember three years ago. All I can get is the names of parties who had the money either from him or from me, Culverwell 10*l.*, Sutcliffe 10*l.*, George Heal, 10*l.*, Combs, 10*l.*, Headford, for a man of the name of Kerle, not for himself, 10*l.*

5619. Do you mean that he is a man who would not take anything for himself?—I never gave him any.

5620. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you sure that Kerle was not bought by Allan or by Bussell?—I do not know Headford will have that; I should also tell you that I saw Headford last night, I omitted to tell you that just now.

5621. What did Headford tell you?—He told me that I did not give it him directly, but that I put the money down just outside the place, and he took it up and paid the man with it.

5622. (Mr. Price.) You did not tell us anything about that yesterday, for all you represented was that you gave this large sum to Boucher to distribute, now it seems that Headford was employed. You said yesterday that the whole 90*l.* was given to Boucher?—I was very much excited and spoke to the best of my recollection.

5623. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have given us up to 100*l.* already?—I can bring it up considerably more than that, Gilbert three 10*l.* to give to others.

5624. To whom?—I do not know.

5625. (Mr. Price.) You do not know whether he gave it to them or not?—I believe he did.

5626. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which Gilbert?—Philip.

5627. Which Philip Gilbert was it?—The younger, I expect. I do not believe the father, Philip Gilbert, lives in the town. If you will allow me, I will ask.

5628. Bussell can tell us, I daresay?—Gilbert himself is here.

5629. (Mr. Price.) If you know him point him out?—There he is. [Pointing.]

5630. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you Philip Gilbert, the younger?—(Mr. Gilbert.) Yes.

5631. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is the man?—That is the man. Did I tell you about the steam packet? I believe that that sum, now I am refreshed by that list, was not 40*l.*, but 30*l.*

5632. To whom?—Philip Gilbert, as I stated yesterday.

5633 (Mr. Price.) I rather gathered from last night that Mr. Lovibond said to you, that you credited yourself with more money than you had last night. Is that what you said?—(Mr. Anstey.) It is the other man who said that.

5634. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Lovibond said merely that you had been flippant or something of that sort. I do not know that he said I had been flippant.

5635. I do not know whether he spoke with reference to your evidence generally, or only as to the money. How did you know about this money?—I asked Mr. Lovibond when I was going out of Court, and seeing that I gave the account of the money to Allan immediately after the election, and the account was passed in, I asked him if he had got my account. He said "I have the list," and on going this morning I find he has merely a list of sums, but he has not got my account that I sent in, or at all events I have not seen it.

5636. (Mr. Coleridge.) He has not got the names?—The names.

5637. (Mr. Anstey.) This is a list of the people for whom you are accounting in the election of 1866, is it not, the second election, Vanderbyl's?—That is the one.

5638. Now I find here, speaking of that second election, Mr. Allan says, "I myself bribed with 10*l.* "a schoolmaster named Bottomley who has left "Bridgwater and had gone to Tiverton, and James "Kerle, who is now at Chard, connected with the "Chard Railway." Is that the Kerle you were speaking of just now?—I do not know.

5639. Not your Kerle?—I do not know.

5640. Then will you undertake to say, not knowing what Kerle it is, that that name which you have given in is not a fictitious name?—Certainly.

5641. You have heard that Allan says, that he himself bribed Kerle?—Headford, I think, pointed out the name.

3642. You had better give us a more satisfactory answer than, "I do not know," or else I shall be obliged to suppose it is a fictitious name. Allan says, he positively bribed Kerle. If you say he was bribed twice I shall believe you?—What name is it. This is George Kerle.

5643. You said just now you did not know it?—I did not know till Headford told me.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then please answer the questions. It takes five minutes to get out the simplest fact from you.

5644. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then this is a different Kerle This is George Kerle of whom you are speaking?—I do not know. My desire is to give you every full and accurate information that I possibly can.

6645. (Mr. Price.) Then you must give it us?—I came here yesterday quite unprepared, I never had any list. I was here the whole of the day and was quite exhausted.

5646. You knew you were going to be examined on the part you took in the election, and I daresay you were served with a summons about a fortnight ago?—Ten days ago.

5647. (Mr. Anstey.) And you have been here every day?—Every day since my name has been stuck up.

5648. (Mr. Price.) During those ten days you must have had time to look up all the matters in which you have been concerned?—I never attempted it. I have never been in communication with any one, I never attempted it.

5649. Then you ought to have done so?—So it seems.

5650. Does this exhaust that 100*l.* which you yesterday described as 90*l.*, and of which you say you have rendered an account to Mr. Lovibond, all but a 20*l.*, which 20*l.* is the subject of dispute between you and Boucher, is that the state of things?—It makes more than the 90*l.*

5651. I want to know whether there is still a disputed item between you and Boucher out of the first sum you got from Andrew Allan; Allan has stated, that he gave you 100*l.* and you now acknowledge that it was 100*l.* and you account for 100*l.* and still Allan said, there was 20*l.* which was not accounted for.

(Mr. Anstey.) And which you said yesterday you believed stuck to Boucher's fingers.

5652. (Mr. Price.) You said there was some mistake about 20*l.* between Boucher and Allan which Boucher alleged he had not received, but which you say you believe he had, and you said, if Boucher had come here and said he only had 70*l.*, it was false. Now I ask you how much Boucher had.

[A pause.]

(Mr. Anstey.) Do go on. Time is passing away?—I cannot tell exactly.

5653. (Mr. Price.) Is there, or is there not, any sum of 20*l.* which is unaccounted for between you and Boucher, according to Allan's statement?—There was.

5654. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there now?—There is.

5655. (Mr. Price.) What do you say about that 20*l.*, where is the mistake, and who is the person who has made the mistake?—I have not found it out yet. I am quite willing to sit down with Boucher, and try to make it right.

5656. Was it ever mentioned to you at the time that there was 20*l.* unaccounted for?—I mentioned it to them. I was the first to find it out.

5657. Then why did you not follow it up at that time?—I did all I could in the matter, but it was such an exciting day. I had never meddled with money before that day.

5658. The excitement was over after the election. Could you not at any time when the accounts were gone into, have cleared up this matter of the 20*l.* It was easy enough to have done so, when your recollection was fresh. Why did you not clear it up for your own credit's sake. Here was a question as to whose fingers this 20*l.* had stuck to, and you say, according to your own account, that you never attempted to clear it up with Boucher at the time, which you might and ought to have done, and that after an interval of three years, you could sit down now with Boucher, and make it all right?—I said I will try to do it, not that I could do it.

5659. Why did you not try to do it then? Was it not an accusation of embezzlement against one or the other. Did you not understand that if you did not account for money that you had had to bribe with, it was equivalent to embezzlement?—Certainly not.

5660. Not if you stuck to it?—Certainly.

5661. That being the accusation, why did you think it worth your while to clear it up while the thing was fresh in your mind ?—It was an accusation.

5662. It was an accusation against you or Boucher one or the other, of embezzlement, and at the time this accusation was made, you did not think worth while to clear it up. Is that what you mean to say ?—I did, but Boucher was a tenant of mine at the time, and we were not on very good terms. I was thoroughly disgusted with what he had done.

5663. Not being on good terms with him, is that the reason you had entrusted him with money to bribe ?—I was on good terms with him when I entrusted him with the money.

5664. When did get on bad terms with him ?—Soon afterwards.

5665. How soon ?—I may say it was about this 20*l.*

5666. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you aware that Boucher could have convicted you, and sent you to prison by the evidence he could give against you at that time ? Were you not aware that you were putting yourself totally in his power ?—I was.

5667. (Mr. Price.) You were aware of it ?—I was.

5668. And yet you did not insist upon having the matter cleared up. You never insisted upon having your character cleared ?—Nobody ever knew anything about it but us.

5669 (Mr. Anstey.) Did not Allan know it ?—Allan did.

5670. (Mr. Price.) Were you not aware that Allan knew you had embezzled 20*l.*, and that although Lovibond did not know it, yet he suspected you, and also Mr. Cook, and Mr. Barham ?—I do not believe that either of them ever thought so.

5671. But did they suppose that either you had embezzled that sum, or your man Boucher ?—I cannot tell what they might think. It might have been lost, I cannot tell.

5672. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are in this dilemma, it must be either the one or the other. Are you prepared to say it was Boucher.? [A pause.] Assuming it was unaccounted for, are you prepared to say it was Boucher.

(Mr. Anstey.) Will you answer the question.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Assuming it was unaccounted for, are you prepared to say it was Boucher ?—It is so long ago.

5673. Do give an answer, yes or no ; if you cannot say it say no ; if you can say it, say yes. Now assuming the money is unaccounted for, are you certain that Boucher embezzled it ?—Yes.

5674. (Mr. Price.) Then do you mean to tell us, that if you and Boucher sat down together for a short time, you could satisfy Boucher that he had had that money ?—Certainly not. He might have explained two other names to whom he paid the whole money, and that would have explained the whole matter.

5675. Why has he not done it ?—Because we have not been friendly.

5676. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it not worth your while to clear your character, and Boucher's too ?—I do not know anything about it.

5677. (Mr. Anstey.) You knew it was talked about all these years ?—Certainly not.

5678. Do you mean to say you are not pointed out as the man who was 20*l.* behind in the money he received ?—I never heard it.

5679. You never heard that ?—No.

5680. You swear that ?—Yes.

5681. And you never heard it tili you heard it in court ?—I explained it to Andrew Allan at the time, that there was 20*l.* short.

5682. Do you know that Andrew Allan had to render an account to his master, Lovibond, or the man he received the money from ?—Yes.

5683. And he did render accounts of the money he received ?—Yes.

5684. And he spoke of you as a defaulter, and you must have known that ?—Yes.

5685. Was your character so high in this town, with respect to dealings of other kinds, that you could afford to rest upon it with respect to this particular money transaction ?—It was.

5686. You swear that ?—I do.

5687. (Mr. Price.) Do you not know that it has been stated over and over again by the humbler class of voters in this town, that the persons who had had the distribution of the candidates' money had stuck to it. Do not you know that that has been said ?—I do not know that I was ever accused.

(Mr. Price.) Never mind that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You are not asked that.

5688. (Mr. Price.) Do not you know that the humbler class of voters in this town, has made it a matter of accusation, that the money was stuck to by those who had to pass it from the candidates to them ?—I have heard so.

5689. Now knowing that that was the report, and, that you had omitted to account for a sum of 20*l.*, knowing that there was that kind of rumour, did not you think it worth while to have your character cleared from the stain at the time ?—I mentioned it to Boucher at the time.

5690. Did not you think it worth your while to have a searching investigation made into it, and have Boucher called into Mr. Lovibond's office, and get from him the name of the person to whom he gave the 20*l.* ?—No, because they passed it short in the account.

5691. 20*l.* short ?—Yes.

5692. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew it was an illegal transaction from begining to end, and that if you had embezzled 1,000*l.*, you would not be indicted ?—Yes.

5693. Were not you aware it was not a legal transaction from begining to end ?—Oh, yes.

5694. And therefore passing the account was a perfect farce. You were perfectly aware of that. You were perfectly aware, that if you had embezzled 100*l.*, or whatever it might be, that the party who had the account would not have said a word to you ?—Quite so.

5695. So that as far as your character is concerned, passing the account has nothing whatever to do with your character ?—No.

5696. Is that so ? it has no legal effect whatever ?—No.

5697. Was there not at the time, some squabble between you and the Income Tax Commissioners ?—Never.

5698. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to swear that about that time, you had not been in some kind of quarrel, I do not know who was right or wrong, but in some kind of dispute with the Commissioners of Income Tax ?—They used to make, if this is a dispute ——

5699. Answer the question. Was there a dispute between you and the Commissioners of Income Tax ?—Only as to payments, as to when the payments were to be made.

5700. (Mr. Anstey.) With the Inland Revenue ?—Only as to when the payments were to be made.

5701. (Mr. Price.) Nothing else ?—No.

5702. Did they complain about your keeping back the money ?—Certainly not.

5703. What was the complaint about, the payments ?—That the payments were not collected fast enough to pay it in.

5704. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you a collector ?—I was a collector.

5705. (Mr. Anstey.) Therefore the complaint was, that you did not pay them in fast enough ?—Certainly not.

5706. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was the accusation that the payments were not collected fast enough, or that you did not pay them in fast enough ?—Certainly not. I proved to the contrary.

5707. (Mr. Price.) What was the accusation, If you proved to the contrary, there must have been an accusation, was not the complaint made by the Commissioners of Income Tax that you had had the money from the tax payer, and had not paid it in as fast as

SIXTH DAY.
Mr. H. C. White.
28 Aug. 1869.

you ought; now consider the question before you answer it; was not that the complaint, that you had had the money from the payer of the tax, and did not pay it in as fast as you ought?—Will you kindly put that question again.

5708. Was not the complaint of the Commissioners against you, that you, having received the money from the tax payer, had not paid it in as soon as you ought to do; now then, was that the complaint?—I do remember a complaint.

5709. Now answer the question, yes or no; was the complaint made by them, that you had received the money of the tax payers, and had not paid it over as soon as you ought, now do you understand that question?—I think not.

5710. Will you swear it was not?—If you will allow me to refer back to the papers, I will tell you.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Oh, you know, a man is not accused of a fraud, without knowing something about it.

5711. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say here, before the people of Bridgwater, that you cannot tell us now without reference to papers, that the complaint was not whether you had paid over the money soon enough? Do you mean to state that?—I mean to state that I have never been accused of anything.

5712. Never mind being accused; was that the cause of complaint against you?—Will you allow me to explain.

5713. Will you answer the question?—I cannot answer the question in the way you put it.

5714. You wish it to go forward, that you cannot answer the question whether you kept too long in your hands, the money you received?—

[No Answer.]

5715. (Mr. Coleridge.) As you cannot answer that question, can you answer this one:—Who were the Income Tax Commissioners at the time of this squabble with you?—I do not know their names.

5716–17. There are only two, Bridgwater is not such a very large place, there were two Income Tax Commissioners, who were they; is Veysey one?—I do not know.

5718. Is Mr. Hammill one?—I do not know.

5719. (Mr. Price.) There was a Mr. Hammill who was the mayor and alderman of the borough, and a justice of the peace. Was he one of the Commissioners?—I do not remember.

5720. You do not remember?—I do not remember the Commissioners without I refer to the book.

5721. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you got your book here?—You are going into a question I have not thought of for years.

(Mr. Price.) Why it arises is this:—it arises in this way, that here is a sum of 20*l.* which you have deliberately accused Boucher of embezzling, that you have said on your oath. Then comes the question whether you are to be believed. It becomes material as to this question of 20*l.*, for the purpose of seeing if you have had a quarrel before about money. That is the reason.

5722. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you are an accountant and make money by that profession. Do you mean to say that in all your business transactions you labour under such a frightful loss of memory as that which you appear to exhibit with respect to the most important and most painful facts which we put to you?—I try to answer your questions as well as I possibly can.

(Mr. Anstey.) Very well, sir, you know under what peril you are answering.

5723. (Mr. Price.) You do not at present, as I understand, say more than this, that you cannot recollect that the cause of complaint against you was, that you stuck to some of the tax money in the same way that you stuck to some of the bribery money?—Nothing of the kind.

5724. What was the complaint then?—Complaints as to the payments not being collected fast enough.

5725. That was the complaint?—Yes, that the taxes were not collected fast enough.

5726. That is what you say it was?—Certainly.

5727. It was not that you stuck to the money?—Certainly not.

5728. Then why could you not answer the question at first. Why keep us a quarter of an hour talking about that, through your saying you could not answer the question. You make it a much more serious question?—My dear sir, you see it is three to one; it makes it very difficult.

5729. Do you mean still to say, after that exhibition, that you charge Boucher with embezzling that 20*l.*?—I mean to say that I never from first to last ever received a single shilling for myself in the shape of bribery at any election.

5730. (Mr. Anstey.) That is not the question. Do you mean now to say, having had that discussion about this complaint of the Commissioners about the missing money, which everybody has heard, do you mean still to say that Boucher embezzled the 20*l.*?—That was my impression at the time; I cannot get over that.

5731. And is it your impression now, Mr. White?—It is.

5732. I want to know, if it is your impression now that Boucher embezzled the money, how, if you and Boucher went into a room together, you could clear up the matter? I should have thought it would have resulted in something different, if you told him he embezzled the money?—It seems to me you are quibbling about the meaning of a word.

5733. Do not talk about quibbling; if there is quibbling, it is on your part. How is Boucher to clear it up in five minutes' conversation with you in a room, if you say he embezzled the money?—I do not mean to say that he might not have given me the names of two other parties.

5734. (Mr. Coleridge.) For your own sake, ought you not to have done that ages ago?—He might have done that. If he did so, I should not consider he embezzled it.

5735. (Mr. Price.) Then why was not that done at the time the accusation was first made? Did you think it was a matter of such unimportance that it was not worth your while to inquire into it? Did you think that because it was candidates' money paid for bribery that it mattered very little whether it was embezzled or not?—It was always my intention to make it up.

5736. Boucher was employed by you?—Yes, I employed him.

5737. He was trusted by you?—He was.

5738. You believe Boucher did not account for it properly somehow or other?—Somehow or other.

5739. Did it not occur to you as an honest man, that as you had trusted Boucher, that you should have repaid that money which was unaccounted for back to the candidates?—If they had asked me to have done so I would have done it.

5740. It never suggested itself to your mind that that was the right thing to do?—Certainly not.

5741. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were there ever any words between you and Allan about it?—Certainly not.

5742. Are you the person whom Allan said was not able to account for the 20*l.*?—I told him so. I told him so at the time when I sent in the account.

5743. You never made any attempt to clear it up?—I made the attempt at the time. You will hear more evidence about the same thing presently.

(Mr. Price.) Well, I daresay we shall.

5744. (Mr. Anstey.) You have mentioned a man called Sutcliffe. In making up your accounts of the 100*l.* or 200*l.* which you have charged yourself with, you have mentioned a man named Sutcliffe, whom you bribed with some of this money?—Sutcliffe.

5745. What is his christian name?—I do not know.

5746. You said just now when you were talking all about that man at Chard, that you did know it. Give me his christian name without any more ado.

5747. (Mr. Coleridge.) Look at the poll list you have got?—John Sutcliffe.

5748. (Mr. Anstey.) Then it is not the same man.

Before you pass on to the Chairman's question, I must call back your attention to the answer you gave to the very first question put to you to day by me. I asked you whether you were one of the signatories to the petition of 1866, praying for the suspension of the writ, and you said you were not. Were you not one of the purists that signed that petition for a further inquiry into the alleged corrupt practices in 1866? You told me, when I asked you that question, that you did not sign it?—I cannot tell.

5749. Is your name and description as follows: "Henry C. White, Accountant"?—It is.

5750. And if that name and that description appears to that petition, is your answer to-day incorrect?—It was.

5751. Can you tell me why it was that in the short space of time between May 1866 and this month of which you are speaking, July, you had been converted from a reformer of corrupt practices to an active promoter of corrupt practices, and an accountant for monies received for the promotion of those practices? How was it you became converted in that short space of time, in the course of two months? What was it? Who was your seducer? Vanderbyl, or Lovibond, or who was it? Tell us now?—Mr. Lovibond was the first.

5752. (Mr. Price.) Did he suggest to you that you should take this duty upon yourself of being a financial agent? Did he ask you?—He did, and I declined it.

5753. Why did you yield afterwards?—I will tell you if you will allow me.

5754. Yes, do?—It was in Bagehot's election, there was a meeting on the nomination night at Mr. Lovibond's office; I, John Smith, and Andrew Allan, after the meeting, remained behind in conversation with, I believe, Mr. Barham and Mr. Henry Lovibond.

5755. (Mr. Price.) This was at Bagehot's election?—This was at Bagehot's election. A discussion ensued upon a list which was produced, a list of names, and the question was asked, "How much "money will it take to win the election?"—John Smith replied "I believe 1,000*l.*" "Could you not "do with 500*l.*?"

5756. (Mr. Anstey.) Who said that?—Either Mr. Barham or Mr. Lovibond.

5757. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on?—"Could not you "do with 500*l*?"—We said, I and the other two, "We'll try."

5758. I understood you to say, that in 1866, that first election, you had nothing to do with the bribery at all. You began bribery in 1866, at the first election?—Allow me to explain. That was the first election. On the other, there was no money spent that I ever heard of, at Sir John Shelley's, I believe.

5759. Never mind that, go on with your account.

(Mr. Anstey.) You said, "We'll try?"—"We'll try." We then left Mr Lovibond's office, and went to John Smith's office. When we got to John Smith's house, we sat down, and names were suggested as likely to receive money. I sat there some considerable time.

5760. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who suggested it?—The names were suggested principally by John Smith.

5761. Supplemented by you?—And supplemented by me. Of course he had the knowledge of it. I had not.

5762. How could you have supplemented it, if you had had no knowledge?—Because I was acquainted with the name of almost every man in Bridgwater, and I was therefore able to do so.

5763. Do you mean to say yours were mere guesses, and his were ascertained facts?—Mine were guesses, and his were ascertained facts. Soon after that, some time about 10 o'clock it might be, or 11, Andrew Allan came into the room, and said, "It is all right." He called John Smith. They went into the next room, and they called me to help pack up the money. I declined, and said I would not do it.

5764. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did the money come from?—I did not know. I have heard since where it came from.

5765. (Mr. Anstey.) How much money was it?—500*l.*

5766. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you know it was there?—I never saw it.

5767. (Mr. Anstey.) Then the question which had been put in the earlier part of the conversation, as to whether 1,000*l.* would do, or whether 500*l.* was required to win the election, had reference, not to the general expenses of the election, but had reference to the particular purpose of corruption at the election?—Of corruption.

5768. (Mr. Price.) Go on. You say you declined to pack up the money?—I declined to pack up the money.

5769. To pack the accursed thing?—To touch it. I stayed there till rather late. I then went home, and the next morning I went round to a few parties that I knew, and told them if there was any money going they should have their share. During that morning I went to Phelp's houses. He is in Eastover.

5770. (Mr. Anstey.) The publican?—The publican. And there Andrew Allan paid away some of the money.

5771. (Mr. Price.) I do not see what all this has to do with the question that was put to you?—Some portion of it was paid away to different people.

5772. (Mr. Anstey.) In your presence?—I never saw the money.

5773. What has all this to do with my question?—Who seduced you to turn from a purist into an unpurist?—That is the question. Who persuaded you to take up this shameful trade?—I was telling you the commencement. From the commencement I never touched the money.

5774. (Mr. Price.) You consider the great crime to consist in touching the money?—I never did.

5775. You think that that is the great crime, and that it is not such a great crime to go to a man, and promise him the money?——

5776. (Mr. Anstey.) Or to talk about what it will cost in bribery to win the election; you think that is all innocence and godliness.—(A pause.)

(Mr. Price.) Is that the distinction you draw?—Certainly not.

5777. You were going to tell us that Mr. Henry Lovibond seduced you into this line of life?—Yes.

5778. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you under any pecuniary obligation to Mr. Lovibond, that he persuaded you to do this thing?—No.

5779. (Mr. Price.) How was it that Mr. Lovibond persuaded you to this thing? What obligation were you under to him? You say you were acquainted with Mr. Lovibond, and that he induced you to do it?—I think I must admit that I was as guilty as he was in the matter.

5780. But you have said that Mr. Lovibond persuaded you to take upon you this office?—This was the first time I took this money.

5781. It seems to me that there was nothing done by Mr. Lovibond at his office, to induce you to take a part in this bribery. You seem to have gone to his office and talked to him about it as if you were an old hand?—Yes.

5782. Did he induce you?—Yes, he did.

5783. When?—That night.

5784. What did he say?—He asked me how much money it would take to bribe.

5785. Do you mean to say that that was what induced you to take a part, his asking you how much money it would take to bribe?—(No answer.)

5786. (Mr. Coleridge.) How was it that Lovibond entrusted you with these mysteries, if he did not know something about you before this conversation?—I cannot tell.

5787. Had you been doing any bribery at municipal elections before?—Never.

5788. Then how did he know that you were a fitting agent to his hands?—I do not know.

SIXTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. White.

28 Aug. 1869.

5789. Who had recommended you?—I do not know.

5790. Had Smith?—I do not know.

5791. How came you to be at the meeting on that night at all,—I mean, how came you, after the general public had gone, to stay behind, and be present at that meeting?—I was requested to stay.

5792. (Mr. Price.) You will not deceive us. You are keeping something back that took place between you and Lovibond?—Indeed, I am not. I am telling you with all my heart and honesty.

(Mr. Price.) Do not talk to me about your heart.

5793. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you drift into it of your own accord, or did Mr. Lovibond speak of it to you?—It seems to me that I drifted into it of my own accord.

5794. (Mr. Price.) Who asked you to stay behind? Did Mr. Lovibond ask you to stay behind?—I believe he did. It is many years ago.

5795. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you stayed behind, you and the other two, did he lock the door?—I think the door was closed.

5796. Was it locked?—I think he closed it.

5797. Did he lock it?—There are two doors there.

5798. (Mr. Price.) Answer the question. Did he lock the door?—I cannot remember.

5799. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you understand when you were asked to stay behind, that it was to talk over matters that it was unsafe to talk over before the public?—I did. I thought—

5800. (Mr. Price.) You thought it was bribery?—I thought it was bribery.

5801. (Mr. Anstey.) You thought it had reference to bribery?—I did; I thought so.

5802. So that when you were asked to stay behind, you anticipated that it was with reference to matters connected with bribery, and you had made up your mind at that moment to bribe, and were prepared to bribe?—I say I never touched the money.

5803. But with that qualification you were prepared to bribe?—Not to pay the money.

5804. But with that qualification. When you were asked to stay behind you were quite prepared to bribe, with the qualification that you would not touch the money?—I was prepared to assist.

5805. Had you seen anybody a day or two before, and talked it over with him?—Certainly I had.

5806. I mean as to whether there should be bribery or not?—I had.

5807. With whom?—John Smith.

5808. When?—I do not know.

5809. Some days before?—I have no doubt.

5810. And you had determined that something must be done in the way of bribery to return Mr. Bagehot?—He told me so.

5811. And you dissented from it. You said, "It cannot be done?"—(A pause.)

5812. (Mr. Price.) Did you express any dissent to his propositions?—I did. I always said I would never touch it.

5813. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you finally agree to talk it over with him and Mr. Lovibond, at Mr. Lovibond's place?—It was not mentioned till that night.

5814. You say you mentioned it to Smith some days before. Did you concur with him when you spoke to him about that, and tell him that you would confer with him further on the subject?—I do not remember.

5815. You are not doing yourself any good by the manner in which you are answering the questions?—I will pay the penalty, whatever it may be.

5816. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before this meeting at Mr. Lovibond's, were you at all prepared for this sort of business you talk about?—Certainly not.

5817. You were one of three who stayed behind, the others being entirely old hands at this sort of business. When you stayed behind at Lovibond's, did you know that the other two, Smith and Allan, had been engaged in this bribery business before?—I did not know that Andrew Allan had.

5818. (Mr. Price.) You knew Smith had?—I did not.

5819. You had seen Smith at it?—I did not.

5820. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had not seen him at it, but you knew him by repute?—I did not.

5821. If you did not know that Smith had been so engaged, did you suspect Andrew Allan?—I did not.

5822. Did you suspect Mr. Allan and Mr. Lovibond were the two guilty ones, who were going to seduce you, the two innocent ones? You have told us you knew it was something about bribery?—I thought it was about bribery.

5823. Had you not had conversations with Smith, and had you not come to such an understanding with Smith, that Smith had felt justified in recommending you as a fitting agent to Mr. Lovibond?—I think it arose with reference to my connexion with the petition for purity before that.

5824. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say because you had signed the petition reprehending corrupt practices, and praying the House to put a stop to them, and suspend the writ, that therefore Lovibond and Smith thought you were a fitting agent to bribe?—I am not alluding to that at all.

5825. What petition then?—I had been engaged prior to that on the petition for Mr. Lovibond. A subscription had been got up here, to which parties subscribed.

5826. (Mr. Price.) What for; what petition?—(Mr. Coleridge.) When Westropp was unseated?—Yes.

5827. (Mr. Anstey.) To whom was the petition addressed; the House of Commons?—Yes; the House of Commons.

5828. What! asking for subscriptions?—Oh, no; subscriptions got up for the petition. I did not get up the subscriptions.

5829. (Mr. Coleridge.) What had you to do with getting up that petition?—All I had to do was, I was employed by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond before, merely to get up some evidence in connexion with it.

5830. You were merely doing some attorney's clerk work in connexion with the petition;—Quite so.

5831. (Mr. Price.) And, therefore, they thought you a fitting object to be employed in bribing?—Yes.

5832. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you employed as a lawyer, or did they merely think that you were a fitting object?—I had been in an attorney's office.

5833. Did they give you instructions, or leave you to take your own course in the matter?—No. They gave instructions to Mr. Lovibond's clerk, I think.

5834. What is his name?—(A pause.)

5835. (Mr. Anstey.) Boyse?—No, Fletcher.

5836. Did you get up any evidence?—I assisted him.

5837. Did you get up any evidence?—I did.

5838. What did you get up?—I do not know.

5839. Have you any rough drafts at home, or memoranda?—Not the slightest.

5840. The end of that was, that Mr. Westropp was unseated?—He was.

5841. Was it because you had shown yourself so diligent a man in the part you took in getting up the evidence for that petition, that you were thought to be a fitting agent for bribery?—I think so.

5842. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you were employed in getting up evidence against Mr. Westropp. Was it not that you were employed in getting up evidence for Mr. Kinglake in the counter petition against him or softening down the evidence against him?—I was employed on various things, I went to London.

5843. Were you not employed particularly with reference to Mr. Kinglake's defence?—I do not think I was employed with reference to any particular thing.

5844. I am asking you with reference to your previous answers. You say your demeanour had been such when employed in this clerk's duty, that your name suggested itself to their minds when they wanted bribery agents. Now, although there may be no sort of connexion between a person getting up evidence against bribery and bribery agency, yet, as there might be some connexion between bribery agency and getting up evidence in their favour, was it not that circumstance that recommended you to the agents as a fitting person to be employed in bribery?—It might have been.

5845. Therefore, I may take it, that you were cognizant of a good many cases of bribery or of corrupt practices which Mr. Kinglake had been guilty of in that election which you softened down and kept out of view?—Certainly not.

5846. You did not succeed then, did you? I thought Mr. Kinglake succeeded on that occasion and was declared the sitting member?—He was.

5847. Then you did succeed. Was it through your exertions that he succeeded?—I merely assisted Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

5848. You have been in diligent attendance here, and have heard the questions that have been put and the evidence that has been given with reference to the corrupt practices at that election. Now, I ask you, how was it, that in the face of this abominable corruption, that Mr. Kinglake found so little difficulty in keeping his seat? I ask you, was it not through the fact that you employed in keeping away the evidence or in softening down the evidence against him?—No.

5849. (Mr. Price.) Now go on with your history?—That is all.

5850. That is the way you were introduced into the business?—That is the way.

5851. Now we come back to the sums of money. We have got over this 100*l.* Have you given us all the names of those who received the 100*l.*? Was Powell paid out of that 40*l.*?—I have found out that the sum paid to Powell was 30*l.*, and not 40*l.*

5852. How have you found out that?—By going to Gilbert.

5853. That it is 30*l.* you gave to Powell?—Allow me to explain. When I got out from Andrew Allan's house, this 30*l.* I gave to Gilbert. Gilbert went back and gave it to this man's daughter. His daughter and his wife were living in the house.

5854. Is that what you want to say about it?—He then came out of the house, and Honeyball drove me to the polling-booth, and I polled.

5855. Is this true or not which you said last night, that you got a party of the name of Powell, at the "Steam Packet," whose wife wanted 40*l.*, she saying they had been offered 35*l.* by the Tories?—Do you mean to say, if he could get 35*l.* from the Tories, that he went and voted for you for 30*l.*?—No. I always thought that man was a Liberal.

5856. Do answer the question. Is it true that that man's wife told you that her husband had been offered 35*l.* by the Tories?—It might have been.

5857. You swore to it last night?

(Mr. Coleridge.) You were not asked whether he has been offered the money by the Tories, but whether it is true that his wife told you that he had?—(A pause.)

5858. (Mr. Price) Do give an answer at once. You are really wasting time by the way you are deliberating before every question we ask you?—I cannot help it. I scarcely slept five minutes last night.

5859. We cannot help that. Answer the question. Did Mrs. Powell tell you she had been offered 35*l.* by the Tories?—Some conversation of the kind took place.

5860. Did she tell you that she had been offered a bribe by the Tories, and did she name the sum of 35*l.*?—I believe she did.

5861. Now, having that recollection of it, do you now say, though you have been told that the Tories offered him 35*l.*, and that you afterwards met Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond, as you told us last night, and told them of it, and that they said, "We must have him," do you mean to say you got him by a payment of 30*l.*?—I believe I did, after seeing the list.

5862. What list?—Why, the accounts. I can account for it by the amount of money. The amount of money proves it.

5863. Now we have got the 30*l.* Who else did you pay besides?—I am charged in that account with 45*l.*, which was paid.

5864. I find you are charged here with two thirties?—These two thirties I have accounted for.

5866. Very well, that exhausts that sum. Now there is some sum that you had to account for, is there not? There is a 10*l.* I see besides?—I should tell you that I spoke to Andrew Allan about these three sums, and he says those are the three sums that he sent down.

5867. Now, as to another 10*l.*, you are down for that?—I think that 10*l.* refers to Bottomley. That is the only account I can give of it.

5868. Did you get it in a single sum?—You perfectly understand I did not give this sum to Bottomley.

5869. But did you get it in a single sum, 10*l.*?—Is it mentioned there.

5870. Yes, "John White, 10*l.*;" and you must have got it in that form, 10*l.*?—Yes, I believe so.

5871. How much do you make that altogether?—I make it altogether come to 215*l.*

5872. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you say you think it must relate to Bottomley?—I believe so.

5873. Well, but Andrew Allan says himself, that he himself, with his own hand bribed Bottomley, and he gave in the particulars of what he was, that he was a schoolmaster, and that he said he would not vote?—But I went up, and Bottomley polled with me.

5874. Did you give him 10*l.*?—I did not.

5875. But you said just now that you did?—I did not say that I gave it. I merely wish to state that it was a mistake. I am wrongly charged with that 10*l.*

5876. (Mr. Price.) You say you are wrongly charged with that 10*l.*?—I do.

5877. (Mr. Anstey.) You received 10*l.*?—Andrew Allan admitted with regard to those three payments. Will you be kind enough to call him now?

5878. (Mr. Anstey.) You are charged with that 10*l.* What do you say with respect to it? Will you say that you have paid it to Bottomley?

(Mr. Price.) You say now you did not receive it?—Yes.

5879. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that it refers to Bottomley?—I say that Andrew Allan has made a mistake, that it refers to Bottomley.

5880. If he has not made a mistake in what he has told us, that he paid the money to Bottomley, and if it refers to something else which he cannot explain, then it follows that you are in a deficiency as regards that 10*l.*?—No, it does not.

5881. (Mr. Price.) It does indeed. You say you have not received this 10*l.*, and he says you have. Is there no difficulty about it? Mr. Lovibond charges you with the receipt of this 10*l.*, and you say you have not paid it. Is there no difficulty about it? I should think there was a considerable difficulty?—It was all settled at the time. I cannot tell you about it.

5882. Which is right or wrong? Are you aware that Mr. Lovibond charges you with that money?—I do not know whether he charges it to me.

5883. It is charged here?—I have not seen that.

5884. (Mr. Price.) Let Mr. Allan come here.

SIXTH DAY.

Mr. ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

Mr. A. Allan.

28 Aug. 1869.

5885. (Mr. Price.) Whose handwriting is that in; do you know it (handing the list to the witness)?—I believe it is Mr. Lovibond's. These are my disbursements. The items I put down myself in my account, and he made it out from my account.

5886. Did you give this 10*l.* to Mr. White?—I did.

5887. And has he had it?—Yes, he has.

Mr. H. C. White.

Mr. H. C. WHITE recalled.

5888. (Mr. Price.) Now you know what that list is, that it was made out by Mr. Lovibond from Mr. Allan's account, and he says you had that 10*l.* Now, do you deny it?—I cannot tell. If you will allow me time to make up the various amounts I will endeavour to do it.

5889. (Mr. Anstey.) There are two deficiencies which have to be accounted for by you, and you have allowed three years to pass without doing so?—Oh! nothing of the kind. It is a mistake.

5890. Are there any more deficiences in your account, any more money that has stuck to anybody's fingers?—I say there is nothing of the kind; and I think you will find I paid the money, and if you will call the men, the men will come forward and admit it.

5891. (Mr. Price.) You say you believe that 10*l.* has been wrongly put down to you, and that it could only refer to Bottomley. That is your explanation. It is now perfectly clear from Mr. Allan's explanations that it is not the money given to Bottomley, but it is a distinct 10*l.* given to you. That does also make another 10*l.*, as to which there is a dispute?—There has never been a dispute about it.

5892. (Mr. Anstey.) It has stuck to somebody's fingers?—No, not a bit of it.

5893. (Mr. Price.) What has become of it?—I never saw this account till this morning.

5894. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said, in answer to me, that you accused yourself of being short of that 20*l.*?—Yes, I was short of 20*l.*

5895. You said there was 20*l.* short?—Yes.

5896. And you also made use of this expression, "It may have been lost." After having made use of those two expressions, do you mean still to say there was nothing wrong about those money matters? I do not say whether you or anybody else are wrong about it. You have already admitted that you accused yourself of being short of this 20*l.*, and you say it might have been lost?—If you will give me sufficient time, and Boucher will come and help me.

5897. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to represent that you having publicly in this Court accused Boucher of taking this money, or that he stuck to this money, and that you are on bad terms with him, that it will facilitate this inquiry, if we allow you and Boucher to retire into another room, to inquire into and discuss this matter; do you think that would facilitate this inquiry?—I could give a better explanation of it, perhaps.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Boucher would not know more about it than you do.

5898. (Mr. Anstey.) How much more time do you require to make up your accounts than the three years and two months which you have already had and not used?—I could not render a better account than I did at the time with regard to that election.

5899. (Mr. Price.) Well, then, what is the whole amount which you say you have had. I believe you say that there is 10*l.* too much charged to you?—I have not reckoned up the amount to see. I cannot tell.

5900. You said 215*l.* just now?—That makes it 215*l.* according to that list. I have not reckoned up how much I have got here.

5901. (Mr. Anstey.) I forget, Mr. White, whether you have stated in your list of persons who received bribes from you or from your subordinates that there was a single voter who got more for his vote than the sum total of these two sums for which you appear to be a defaulter, namely 30*l.* Can you name a single voter who got more out of that fund of yours than you yourself or Boucher must have got if this 30*l.* actually stuck to the fingers of one of them?—I never received a shilling in my life.

5902. Is there a single voter bribed on that occasion who you consider got more than 30*l.*?—No.

5902. Then these two sums, 10*l.* and 20*l.*, actually represent the maximum received by any single voter, represent as much or more than any one voter received?—I cannot explain the matter without referring to the date of the time when it was paid.

5904. Does not that list throw some light upon the matter, that a sum representing the largest amount payable to any single voter was kept back by somebody (not saying by you, certainly not saying by Boucher). Is not that so?—If these men come up and admit that they have received the money, which I believe they will to clear me, I do not believe there is one of them——

(Mr. Coleridge.) Don't you talk to them to-night about it. That is all.

5905. (Mr. Price.) If you are going to see these men—— ?—I am not going to see them.

5906. (Mr. Price.) If anybody is going to see these men to make up a square account with you, depend upon it we shall find it out.

(Witness.) I should be sorry to do anything of the kind. Everything that I possibly can do to help you, I will.

(Mr. Price.) Let Mr. Allan come forward and explain this.

Mr. A. Allan.

Mr. ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

5907. (Mr. Price.) I find, Mr. Allan, that this amount has been totalled up by Mr. Lovibond or somebody in pencil, and that the total of money paid away upon these sheets represented by these payments is 3,776*l.*; but this does not show any of the 1,400*l.* that was disposed of?—It was all together in one sum.

5908. These represent payments, do they not, of sums of money paid to persons like Mr. White to go and do bribery with?—Yes.

5909. Therefore they are exclusive; are they exclusive or not, of the 1,400*l.* pounds that you first got?—The 1,400*l.* is included in there.

5910. Then where is it; because you ought to know. Did you give the materials of this document to Mr. Lovibond?—Yes, I did.

5911. It was from your hands that Mr. White got these different payments?—Not from my hands. He had them from Mr. Lovibond this morning and copied them.

5912. But he got the money from you?—Yes.

5913. The 3,776*l.* down here includes the 1,400*l.*?—Yes, the money had by Smith and Bulpin is all entered in that.

5914. There must be some other account, because you made out a much larger sum, as I understand, than 3,776*l.*?—But when I spoke yesterday, I spoke without any notes, and I told you (if you look to my evidence at the beginning) that I only gave from memory the probable amount.

5915. Does that include all?—That includes all.

5916. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are there not a great many names here which are simply people bribed, and not the names of people to whom money was given to bribe with?—Oh, yes.

5917. I see little sums like 2*l.*—There are names there of people who had the money.

5918. (Mr. Price.) There is no distinction drawn there?—No distinction.

5919. Between persons who got money to pay away to others, and those who got it for themselves?—No.

5920. (Mr. Coleridge.) And are the bills which were paid for Shelley's election also included in this account?—No. If there is one I could name it.

5921. Then you see the account has got more confounded than ever?—(After referring) Yes, there is "Allan, paid to Nicholls for powder."

5922. Gunpowder?—Yes, for firing the guns.

5923. That may have been for Shelley?—I do not know.

5924. Is there any other bill included in that?—Thompson, Brothers, 1*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.* That would be a powder bill.

5925. See what else there is?—Glanville and Sons, 3*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*, one of the bills that were sent to me that I spoke of. That is all the bills.

5926. That is only a few pounds. Then, in fact, that what was spent in paying bills, which as you gave us to understand you thought would amount to something like 500*l.*, bills that were paid owing from one election to another for treating and what not?—Oh, public-house bills are not there.

5927. Then this expenditure of 3,776*l.* is plus the expenditure on those?—It is. That is hard dry money paid for bribery.

5928. And all the treating and the bills of Shelley's election have got to be added to this?—It would make up the other sum that I was in error of.

5929. It would make up a great deal more.

(Mr. Price.) Yes, it would make it much more.

Henry Cornelius White, recalled.

5930. (Mr. Price.) Now then, Mr. White, give us any other amounts?—This amounts to 205*l.*

5931. Have you given us all the names of persons?—I believe I have given you all that I remember.

5932. Then that leaves this 10*l.* exactly in dispute. It is represented here as 215*l.*?—It leaves the 20*l.*, of course, and the 10*l.* I think, that that would amount to 205*l.*

5933. That leaves out the 10*l.*?—That clears up the 20*l.* If these names are all right this will clear up the 20*l.* with regard to Boucher.

5934. Exactly. Are you prepared to assert that that is a correct list, and those are the correct sums?—I have made it from my memory. At the present time I cannot do more than that.

5935. Then we must test it by having the persons before us?—That is it.

5936. If it is not?—I will do my best to make it one.

5937. If it is not a correct account, you will have to consider the question, how you will make up the deficiency; how you will account for that deficiency. That is a serious matter for you to turn over in your mind. If it is not correct, you know, and you go and see these people and make them square with you, then we shall discover it, and it will be no voucher at all. But if it should not be correct you must be prepared to show where has the balance gone?—But if these people admit that they have had the money?

(Mr. Anstey.) Then we shall ask them under what influence they admit it.

5938. (Mr. Price.) If they admit it in consequence of your going to these unfortunate men (and they are unfortunate men in one respect), and if they have done so under your advice, or under the advice of anybody connected with the party, we shall certainly not believe it, and we shall consider you then as responsible for the deficiency, and as having received it in the shape of bribery?—I never had a single shilling in my life.

(Mr. Anstey.) You have said so so often; but, Mr. White, you are an accountant, I believe. You said so. You were before that a pastrycook; you were a lawyer's clerk again before that. Do you mean to tell the Commissioners that, being an accountant and having been a lawyer's clerk, you made these advances to your men, Boucher and others, without making any entry in any pocket-book, or taking any voucher from them, or keeping any paper which would enable you afterwards to make up your own account to render to Allan?—I did not keep any paper at all. I destroyed it. It was a guilty thing to be connected with.

5940. Then they did exist, did they?—Yes.

5941. Very well. The quarrel or dispute with Boucher was almost instantaneous upon his receipt of the money. I understand you had a dispute with him almost immediately afterwards about it?—Yes.

5942. (Mr. Price.) You said so, you know?—Yes.

5943. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to swear, in that short interval of time you destroyed the accounts, which, if they had existed, would have enabled you to convict Boucher most effectually?—I do not think so. We could not make up the amount.

5944. Then you had not got vouchers showing the application of the 20*l.* at that time? You had not kept any vouchers of this particular 20*l.*?—I did not. I could not account for it.

5945. I am not asking you about making up the account. You have been making up an account to-day about which I have my own opinion. But I am asking you about the original payment. Do you say you kept vouchers of your payments, but you kept no voucher of this particular 20*l.*, therefore, when you came to make up your account with Boucher, or with Allan, you were 20*l.* short? Why did you not keep a voucher of this particular 20*l.*?—I never kept any vouchers, but from my own memory, I merely had a little slip of paper, and put down the names upon that paper.

5946. Why did not you from your memory, and upon that little slip of paper, put down the 20*l.*?—I put down the names of the people that had the money.

5947. Answer my question. Having put down the names of the people who had the money upon a little slip of paper with regard to all the other items, why did you omit that prudent precaution with regard to that particular 20*l.*?—I found that the account was 20*l.* short.

5948. Will you answer my question. As far as you made the payments you put them down on a little slip of paper. Did you or did you not include upon that little slip of paper this 20*l.*?—I did not put them down as fast as I paid them. After I had paid these sums, when called upon the next day, or a day or two after,—when called upon to make the list of the names, I found I was 20*l.* short.

5949. Then it is not true what you stated just now, that you kept some vouchers of the payments which you made?—I did not keep any vouchers.

5950. Then you, an accountant, kept no vouchers, made no entries of amounts, or preserved no contemporaneous evidence of the payments which you were making, but you put your amounts from memory afterwards upon little slips of paper?—Quite so.

5951. And you call yourself an accountant, and you say you have been a lawyer's clerk?—Yes.

5952. And you expect the Commissioners to believe that. Do you really expect us to believe that?—I am only anxious and willing to tell the truth, the whole of it, from beginning to end. It is my desire to do that.

5953. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us regarding the second election of 1866—the part you took in it?—That is all.

SIXTH DAY.

Mr. H. C. White.

28 Aug. 1869.

5954. Now then, if you please, we will go to the first election of 1866. Just tell us what part you took in that. That was the time when you gave us the account of your first introduction to this business, your staying behind in consultation—in general consultation—with Mr. Andrew and Mr. Lovibond when Bagehot was coming forward, and requested to know how much money was required?—I have given the particulars of it.

5955. Is that all the part you took?—That is all the part.

5956. You expressed your opinion at that consultation as to what number of persons were likely to take bribes; and you went to some of the persons whom you thought were likely to take bribes, and told them if money was going they would have their share?—Yes.

5957. That is the whole part you took in that election?—That is the whole part I took in that election.

5958. What month was that?—I cannot remember the month.

5959. It would be early in 1866?

5960. (Mr. Anstey.) The debate in the House of Commons upon the motion not to issue the writ was in June; therefore it must have been in the month of June, just one month before the July election?—That followed hard upon.

5961. You see, Mr. Patton, vacated his seat in July in becoming Lord Advocate. Then came the election soon after that, did not it? or how was that? When was the election?

5962. (Mr. Price.) The second election must have been at the end of the year.

(The Mayor.) It was in July.

5963. (Mr. Anstey to witness.) Therefore, I did you injustice when I suggested that a month would elapse between your conversion from purity to gross impurity. It seems it was only a few days. The petition was presented the last of May, and you were superintending the bribery business of Bagehot's election in the month of June; is not that so?—If I signed that petition it must be so.

5964. You have no doubt you signed it, I hope. I will put it into your hands if you have any doubt about signing this petition, where you pledged yourself to the House of Commons that if they would only at the expense of the country, not of the borough then, issue a Commission, you would put them up to all sorts of wicked corruptions, such as would influence them in suspending the issue of the writ. A few days after that you were superintending bribery yourself in Bagehot's election. Is not that so? (A pause.) Yes, or no? Come, sir!—Yes.

5965. Can you tell me any other person in the same condition as yourself, who having signed that petition, took part in bribing for Bagehot in June or Vanderbyl in July or August?—I cannot tell you at all. I do not remember the list of those names.

5966. You are the only man that did that?—(No answer.)

(Mr. Price.) That resolution which we read this morning is a resolution come to by the Commissioners with regard to reporting to Her Majesty's Government. A copy of that resolution will be affixed to the door of this Court, so that all persons who may not have heard it, or may not have had an opportunity of reading it in the paper, may have an opportunity of informing themselves of it by reading it on the door of the Court.

5967. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were first of all appointed an income tax collector, were you not, in 1858?—I cannot tell without reference.

5968. How long ago? Was it ten years ago?—It might have been.

5969. Then did you cease to be the income tax collector?—I was appointed for one year. The appointments are always made for one year.

5970. How long did you hold it? After your first appointment, how long did you hold it?—I believe I held it for one year.

5971. Were you again re-appointed in 1862?—I really cannot answer those questions without I refer.

5972. Can you recollect whether you were appointed at a time when Mr. Hammill, a magistrate of this place, was one of the Income Tax Commissioners?—I remember Mr. Hammill being present.

5973. Do you recollect having some disagreement with Mr. Hammill about this very nonpayment over of the sums of money you collected?—I did not. I can remember having a disagreement with Mr. Hammill. He disagreed with me because I called upon him for the payment of those taxes, and he said I had called upon him sooner than I had called upon some of the others.

5974. Then you mean to say that his disagreement with you was as to his nonpayment of taxes, and not about your nonpayment of the taxes you had already received? Was the disagreement because Mr. Hammill did not pay his taxes or because you did not pay over the taxes that you received?—I produced the books and showed the payment.

5975. Will you answer the question?—

(Mr. Price.) Was that the cause of any disagreement, that he——?—That was the first cause of any disagreement that I had with Mr. Hammill.

5976. That he did not pay his taxes. That you came to him too soon?—That I came to him sooner than I came to the others.

5977. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you go to him sooner than you went to others?—Well, we used always in those days,——

5978. Did you go to him sooner than you went to others?—No.

5979. How did the disagreement arise?—There are some large payers——

5980. I suppose he is a large payer?—Well, moderately so, not particularly.

5981. Whom did you go to first the large payers or the little payers?—Generally the larger. It would depend——

5982. Did you go to him sooner than you did to others?—I went to the larger payments first of all, and then to him.

5983. Whom did you go to first, Mr. Brown or Mr. Hammill?—I cannot tell now without I had reference to my books.

5984. I suppose they were both of them large payers?—There are a dozen large payers in Bridgwater.

5985. But are they not large payers?—Very likely.

5986. Did you go to Mr. Brown or to Mr. Hammill first?—I cannot remember now. I did not take one man in particular. I remember his complaining to me at one time that I had called upon him earlier than I had called upon some others.

5987. And was not your disagreement with Mr. Hammill that, after he had accused you of not paying over the taxes you had received in proper time, he said, "Depend upon it you get them in time, "because you always come to me very early?"—I never remember his saying that. I have had one or two disputes with Mr. Hammill; I consider he is a very passionate man.

5988. Let us hear what those disputes are. All about taxes, were not they?—No, certainly not; private things.

5989. Then I don't want that. Did he not, as an Income Tax Commissioner, accuse you of not paying over the money you had received as soon as you ought to?—I do not say whether he was right or not, but did he not accuse you?—Not in the way you say.

5990. Tell us in what way?—

(Mr. Price.) Tell us what way, according to your view of it?—It happened like this: with regard to the payment of taxes they make an order upon you, we will say for so much money.

5991. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who make the order?—They appoint a day.

5992. Who make the order? You say they?—They send you a notice.

5993. Who are "they"?—The receiving officer at Taunton comes round regularly every six ——

5994. I say, whom do you mean by "they"? You say "they make the order." "They" do this.—I mean the Government.

5995. (Mr. Price.) Do the Government call upon you to make the payment of taxes?—To make a payment at a certain time.

5996. Well, go on; you have that money in hand, have not you?—Certainly not. Very often they make the charge before you have got a halfpenny.

5997. What was the cause of complaint, according to your view of it, as to taxes?—No more cause than there had been with others, as far as I understood.

5998. What was it; that you called upon him too soon?—That occurred at one time.

5999. (Mr. Coleridge.) Take Mr. Hammill in his corporate capacity as an Income Tax Commissioner, not as Mr. Hammill simply. Had he not a disagreement with you, and did he not make some charge against you while you were holding office?—He made no charge against me that I ever heard. I remember this perfectly well; it is a custom here, if the whole of the money is not collected before a certain time, for them to call you before the commissioners. I came before the commissioners with my books, and there is the amount of money in the books. Those books were produced to Mr. Hammill. Mr. Hammill saw them himself, and he was satisfied with them. I have never heard anything more from that time to this, and to me this is perfectly new.

6000. Then there was no squabble?—Not that I recollect.

6001. (Mr. Anstey.) You say this is perfectly new to you?—Perfectly new.

6002. That there was a quarrel upon that subject?—I produced those books to Mr. Hammill and the commissioners, or those that were present. They were satisfied that the thing was perfectly right. I went on collecting, and collected in the balance of the money, and paid it. In that year, I believe, there were some charges made upon parties. There was a charge made upon Henry Baker and various others, which charges were not true, and I was compelled so far as I may say to distrain upon several parties in order to get this money, which I did. They positively put distraint upon these parties to raise the money to pay off those taxes, which I did do, and settle the matter at once.

6003. (Mr. Price.) I hope that is intelligible to those who hear it in this court. It is not in the least degree intelligible to me. We shall adjourn now We may probably want you again.

(Witness.) At any time I shall very happy.

6004. (Mr. Price.) We shall adjourn to 12 o'clock on Monday, and you will have plenty of time to reflect. Sunday is a day of reflection, and I advise you to take the opportunity of that day of reflection to consider over whether you have really bonâ fide made a full disclosure. You will best know whether you have made a full disclosure to us of the part you have taken in the two elections of 1866. If you have not, and anything transpires in the course of this inquiry, as I have told other witnesses, it will then place you in a very awkward position with regard to the indemnity.

(Witness.) I shall be very happy to render you any assistance I possibly can.

6005. (Mr. Anstey.) Has William Heal come into town to-day?

(Mr. Heal.) I am here.

6006. (Mr. Anstey.) You must be here on Monday if you please.

(Mr. Heal.) I came here on Monday, and gave Mr. Purcell my address, and he told me that I should be sent for, and that is why I bided away, not because I would not come.

(Mr. Price.) There is no imputation upon you, but we were very anxious to have you at that particular time.

Adjourned to Monday at 12 o'clock.

SEVENTH DAY.

Monday, 30th August 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
DE TRACY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

6007. You want to make a further explanation?—Yes, Mr. Henry Lovibond has in his possession certain documents which in my interest ought to be handed in to the court; the lists given me by men who bribed the voters as to where the money went.

6008. (Mr. Anstey.) No doubt Mr. Lovibond will produce those when he is called, but you wish to have them at once?—I do; suppose they were never produced.

6009. (Mr. Price.) You wish to have them produced?—I wish to have them tendered to the court now and impounded.

6010. For the purpose of making any remark on them?—For the purpose of defending myself so far as so many who had their money from me.

6011. (Mr. Coleridge.) At present he has put in an account which accounts for almost more money than you said you had yourself, and which goes to your credit. That list makes up some 300*l.* or 400*l.* more than you say you received, assuming you received 3,700*l.*?—These accounts are in my own handwriting to show that I had a connexion, and was cognizant of them.

6012. You mean that he made up that account from your memoranda?—Yes, he did. I had them, from which he made it up at the time, and my handwriting is on these identical notes.

6013. You want the list so made out of the notes handed in?—I do.

(Mr. Lovibond.) It is right for me to state that I have no such lists; it was taken from the lips of Mr. Allan.

(Mr. Price.) We cannot hear your evidence, because you are not on oath.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You have not them?

(Mr. Lovibond.) I have not I will produce all the papers.

SEVENTH DAY.

A. Allan.

30 Aug. 1869.

(The witness.) I mean the bills; Babbage's bill.

6014. (Mr. Price.) Sir John Shelley's unpaid bills?—John Smith's list of voters that were paid, and Harry Bussell's list of voters that were paid.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Lovibond says he has produced all papers he has in his possession.

(Mr. Lovibond.) No; I have only produced the documents I was asked for. I have some I have not been asked to produce.

(Mr. Price.) If Mr. Allan wishes to have them produced in the course of his further examination you will produce them?

(Mr. Coleridge.) It is possible that Mr. Lovibond will be examined to-day or to-morrow; is there any reason for interfering at this stage?

(Mr. Anstey.) Excepting this, that I understand that Mr. Lovibond has had a summons, with a duces tecum clause in it, and he knows well that he can obey the exigency of that part without being on oath. Why should not he produce all the papers according to the exigencies of that clause, and then we shall see what he has.

(Mr. Price.) Can you do that?

(Mr. Lovibond.) Certainly.

(Mr. Price.) Have you your subpœna here?

(Mr. Lovibond.) I have it, but not here. I have got all the documents if you wish.

6015. (Mr. Price.) Then you must go and do that. Mr. Allan wishes, and as a witness who is clearing himself he has a right to have that if he thinks it material at the present stage of the inquiry. (To the witness.) I understand that you do say you think it material?—I do.

6016. Then I think it fair that you should have it, and Mr. Lovibond will produce the account of any payments made by you to them, and by them to voters?—Yes.

6017. Everything in fact which you gave up to Mr. Lovibond in connexion with the election?—Yes. The next thing I wish to put in is that I was accused on Saturday of being tampered with as a witness, and I want to clear myself as far as I possibly can (handing in a document.)

6018. What is this?—A copy of the particulars.

6019. Handed in by Mr. Lovibond on Saturday?—Yes, Mr. Lovibond gave me that copy on that Saturday. I wish you to know that I am in possession of that document.

6020. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any observation to make on that copy?—None further than if called into the box to give evidence, and speaking from memory or belief, having that copy in my pocket unknown to you it might affect me.

6021. Having that copy, does it enable you to tell us anything but what you told us before?—It would enable me.

6022. Does it enable you now to furnish us with any information which you were unable to do before you had it?—It enables me to furnish you with the information of three years ago if that is a correct copy of the original.

6023. We will assume that, putting the original in your hands, will it enable you to supplement your evidence with anything you have not already told us?—It would not.

6024. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you receive it on Saturday after the Commission arose?—No, before the Commission rose.

6025. Before the Commission met?—Before the Commission met.

6026. (Mr. Price.) This is what you got on Saturday morning?—Yes, and having had so sharp a reprimand I do not feel it right to hold that document in my pocket.

6027. The reprimand was not so much addressed to you as to what we thought an improper course to take, because it is so much better and more straightforward for every person who thinks that an inaccuracy has been stated before us to come forward and ask to be examined before us himself, than to seek to set it right through a conversation with the witness.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You may now, looking at that, be able to let us know.

6028. (Mr. Price.) That is all you wish to say?—At present that is all.

H. C. White.

HENRY CORNELIUS WHITE recalled.

(The witness.) I want also to make an application for a list which I gave Allan in my own handwriting which I am informed is in the possession of Mr. Henry Lovibond.

(Mr. Price.) He has gone away, but has a subpœna of duces tecum, which will compel him to bring every document he has, or to give a reason for not producing it.

(The witness.) I will give my evidence provided I have any documents to guide me by; it is three years ago.

6029. (Mr. Price.) We were asking you a good deal about your connexion with Boucher. Before leaving that subject and going to another election, the one we were upon on Saturday with regard to Boucher was the second election of 1866?—It was.

6030. Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—It was.

6031. You have said you were not on good terms with Boucher, and had not been from a very short period after the election of 1866, and therefore gave it as a reason that you had no opportunity of going into the accounts with Boucher, so as to satisfy yourself that he was right as to this 20*l.*, and that you were wrong; is that what you stated to us?—I complained to Boucher——

6032. Was not it said by you that there had been this coolness or quarrel which had existed from a short period after the 1866 election down to the present time?—Yes.

6033. Now, have you been in the habit of going to Boucher's house daily down to the last week?—Occasionally.

6034. Not daily?—Not daily.

6035. When you say "occasionally" how many times have you been in communication with him from time to time up to the last week?—I went to speak to him a day or two since.

6036. That is not the question. I ask you have you been in the constant habit of going to Boucher's house almost daily down to the last week?—I have to the shop.

6037. To the shop?—I have.

6038. Almost daily down to the last week?—For some——

6039. Give your explanation afterwards. Have you been in the habit of going into Boucher's shop almost daily?—No.

6040. What visits had you been making to him; how often during the week?—For a very considerable time after he had given up my house in St. John Street I did not go to him, but during the past six months I have as I passed (things have blown over) spoken to him.

6041. And been in the constant habit of going to see him?—No, not going to see him personally, but as I passed, perhaps, on matters of business I have spoken to him.

6042. Have you gone into his shop and had conversations?—I have been into his shop and had conversations.

6043. Do you mean then to represent that you were on bad terms with him ever since 1866, as you told us on Saturday?—I mean to represent——

6044. Now answer the question. You gave us as a reason why you did not clear up this 20*l.*, that you had been on bad terms ever since the election of 1866, and that if you could only have been with him in a room for a short time you could have cleared it up?—Yes, because I thought that he might have given me the names and we should have settled it perhaps.

6045. Have you on those occasions on which you have been to his shop and talked matters over with him, discussed the subject of the deficiency of this 20*l.*?—At the time, repeatedly, and since.

6046. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last?—I cannot speak to what definite time.

6047. (Mr. Price.) A week ago?—No.

6048. A fortnight ago?—No, certainly not; I have had no electioneering conversation with him for, I should say, 12 months at least.

6049. What have you been going to his shop for if you are on bad terms?—Merely as I passed. He sells articles of furniture.

6050. Were you on bad terms with him?—Prior to that I was.

6051. After you made it up what did you go there for?—Not about political matters; I never discussed the question, but always strenuously avoided it.

6052. You knew of this inquiry and would be certain to be called as a witness; you knew there was this dispute about this 20*l.* which was not cleared up since the election, and you told us on Saturday that if you only had an opportunity of talking it over with Boucher, you could clear it up, and that you believed he had embezzled that money. Now, do you mean to say that you have been in the constant habit of going to his shop and talking matters over with him and never discussed that 20*l.*?—Yes; because it had blown over and there was an end of it.

6053. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you speak to Boucher at all?—When I told you.

6054. When was the last day?—A day or two ago.

6055. Was it Saturday, before you gave your evidence here to us, was that the last time you saw him to speak to?—It was.

6056. What time was it on Saturday?—It was after I had given a part of my evidence, I went down St. John Street.

6057. Do you mean when the court adjourned?—When the court adjourned, I suppose.

6058. And then you went down to see Boucher?—Yes, I went down to see Boucher at the shop door.

6059. What took place then?—He began to abuse me, and I passed on.

6060. What did he say to you? Did he say you had been telling lies, or not?—He did.

6061. Did he tell you what the lies were about?—No, I did not stay a minute.

6062. You went down to him in order to be told by him you had been telling lies?—Certainly not.

6063. What did you go for?—At the instigation—the court asked me to go and see him.

6064. (Mr. Price.) The court did not ask any such thing of you at all?—To make up the accounts.

6065. No?—Did not you express a desire that I should go and see Boucher?

6066. No?——

6067. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean the whole conversation that took place was his telling you that you told lies? Who spoke first when you went into the shop; who was present?—Chant was outside.

6068. Was he within hearing?—Yes.

6069. Who was present besides Chant; was anyone in the shop when you spoke to Boucher, and he called you a liar?—It was not in the shop, it was at the shop door.

6070. But was anybody else within hearing?—If I could remember I would tell you in a minute.

6071. Was anybody within hearing at the shop door except Chant?—There was another person there standing talking.

6072. Who was that, a stranger?—No.

6073. Who was it?—I cannot tell.

6074. Do you mean you cannot tell us anything about what happened on Saturday afternoon?—I cannot.

6075. Do you recollect being examined here on Saturday?—Yes.

6076. Then try and recollect whether you cannot tell us what happened after you left this court?—It was not Saturday; it was the day before. I never went on Saturday. I obeyed your instructions. I have not spoken to a single witness at all.

6077. Do you mean to say now it was on Friday and not on Saturday?—It was on Friday.

6078. Is that the last time you saw him to speak to?—That was the last time.

6079. Chant being present, and some other person, can you recollect that Chant was present?—He was.

6080. Who else?—I do not remember the other person. I did not stay half a minute. I passed on.

6081. Two persons being present, who can corroborate or disprove your statement, what was the first thing you said to him which induced him to tell you you had been telling a pack of lies? Did he address you and tell you you had been telling the lies first of all, or did you say something that caused him to say that to you?—I really am very sorry ——

6082. You say it was on Friday last that you, in the presence of two other persons, were called a liar by this man. What led to your being called a liar? Was it that you said something first, or he met you in the street, and said "You are a liar"?—I spoke to him as he was standing at the door, and he began to abuse me.

6083. What did you say?—I said, "I have come down about the names of these persons."

6084. Why not tell us 10 minutes ago?—He began abusing me, and on I went.

(Mr. Price.) We have power, if we think you are not giving us truthful answers, and off at once, as you ought to do if you wish to speak the truth, of dealing with you as would make it a very unpleasant predicament for you to stand in.

(Mr. Coleridge.) At last, after this cross-examination, we have it that you told him you had come down about the names of these persons.

6085. What persons?—The names of persons he had paid.

6086. Is that what you said to him?—That is all I said.

6087. Is not what you said, "I have come down to "know from you the names of the persons whom you "paid at the election." Is that what you said?—Yes.

6088. You will swear those were your words. Is that as far as you can recollect on last Friday, what you said to him?—I cannot recollect the exact words; it was something about the money he had paid.

6089. To that, what answer did he make?—He began to abuse me.

6090. What did he say to you?—I scarcely caught the words he said; I walked as fast as I could on to Gilberts, and two or three other places.

6091. Do you mean that he threatened you with personal violence?—I am not afraid of him or anybody else.

6092. What did he say then?—I could hardly catch the sound of his voice, because I walked on as fast as I could.

6093. You know he abused you; what did he accuse you of?—He said I had been telling lies.

6094. Did you make any answer to that; did you say you had not?—I said I had not.

6095. And when you said you had not been telling lies, what did he say then? You know that Chant was present, and another person whom we shall have here, and Boucher himself; what did he say then?—He said I had.

6096. What did you say then? Did you ask him what you told lies about?—That is all that passed.

6097. You mean, that is the abuse, and you walked away as fast as you could, having been called a liar?—Of course I walked away, because I could not understand it.

6098. So you were so taken aback that you had to leave him, he having put you under the imputation of telling lies before two people. You accepted the position and went away; is that so?—Certainly, I did not accept any position whatever; it seems to me I am all at sea in this matter.

SEVENTH DAY.

H. C. White.

30 Aug. 1869.

6099. Do you mean really to tell me that conversation is all that took place, that he said you had been telling lies, you said you had not, and he said that you had, and then you walked away as fast as you could. Is that really what took place? I warn you that all these persons will be before us, and it will be a question of credibility. Is that as far as you know; consider your answer, and tell us exactly what took place?—I have suffered two or three years from loss of memory.

6100. Is it or not what took place to the best of your belief?—I do not believe five words took place.

(Mr. Price.) Do you mean that you, employed as an accountant in this town, have been suffering from loss of memory for two years?

(Mr. Coleridge.) To the best of your belief is what you have told us now what took place between you and him on this occasion? (The witness hesitated.)

6101. Recollect, I am only asking you to the best of your belief, and you can say yes or no?—Yes.

6102. And you will swear to that?—Yes.

6103. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you understand after the warning you have had from the learned Chief Commissioner, that you will not be allowed to waste any more the time of the court in the same way you have done, but I will ask you which of these statements you had made to-day you mean to persist in, and you have contradicted yourself at almost every point; "I have been in the habit, not daily, but occa- "sionally, of going to Boucher's shop almost daily "down to the last week, not almost daily, for a very "considerable time I did not speak to him; since "the last six months only I have gone into his shop, "not to see him, but in passing, and not into his shop. "I saw him last week. My object was to get the "names of persons who had money at the time of "the deficit; I repeatedly spoke to him about it, but "not lately. I have not spoken to him about elec- "tion matters for the last 12 months, but I have "about other things. The deficit business had blown "over. The last time I spoke to him was a day or "or two ago on Saturday after I had given a por- "tion of my evidence after the court adjourned. It "was at the shop door that he called me a liar. "Chant was there, and another person within hear- "ing, not a stranger, but I cannot recollect his "name. It was not on Saturday but on the day "before, it was Friday. I do not recollect the other "man's name. I was only there half a minute. I "spoke to him; I said, 'I have come down about the "'names of these persons you paid at the elec- "'tion,' I cannot be positive as to the words. I "could hardly catch the sound of his voice. He "said I had been telling lies. I said I had not. "He said I had; that is all that passed, and I walked "away because I could not understand him. I have "suffered two or three years from loss of memory, but "I can say that what I have told you is, to the best "of my belief, all that then passed." To which of those contradictory statements do you mean to adhere? Tell the truth now for once. Remember bribery and perjury are two sister vices, they are classified as crimes against public justice, and we have had too much reason to see in the course of this inquiry that one invariably involves the other; bear that in mind, and say which statement is true, for they cannot all be true?—I did speak to him, and Chant was one of the men who was present.

6104. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you pledge yourself to?—(No answer.)

6105. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you mention anybody's name to him in that conversation?—No.

6106. Not a soul?—No.

6107. (Mr. Price.) Was the question referred to by Boucher that you had accused him of embezzlement that you said he had kept the money, because you told us over and over again on Friday that your present belief was that Boucher had stuck to the 20*l.*, your then present belief. You said on Saturday that Boucher had stuck to the money. Was anything said by Boucher as to that to you. (The witness referred to a paper.)

6108. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you make a note of this on Friday?—No, I did not.

6109. Then what are you looking at now? You must put up that book.

6110. (Mr. Price.) The question is you had said on Saturday up to that time, and on that day your belief was Boucher had stuck to the 20*l.* You had said it on the Friday if I mistake not; was it with reference to that statement of yours that Boucher had called you a liar?—It was.

6111. What did he say—"You told a lie in saying "I stuck to the money"?—Yes, you told a lie or something. I hardly caught it just as I have given you the words.

6112. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you what you told the lie about?—Something about his sticking to the money.

6113. Why did not you tell us this morning?—Because you did not put it to me.

6114. (Mr. Price.) Consider whether you intend to stick to this statement, having told us that you have been in the constant habit, though not daily, of going to his shop during the last six months at least, is it true or not?—Yes.

6115. What did you mean by telling us on Friday when I asked you the question; did you mean to tell us that if you and Boucher sat down together a short time you could satisfy Boucher that he had that money?—Certainly not; he might have explained two other names to me, and that would have explained the whole matter.

6116. Now attend; this is the question—"Why "has he not done it?—Because we have not been "friendly?"—We had not been friendly.

6117. You said because we have not. Do you mean to say that is the reason because you have not been friendly with him that you have not gone into this question of the 20*l.*?—I mean to say that is the reason I have not gone into the question with him.

6118. Although you have been in the habit of going almost daily to his shop to talk about other matters?—I had not.

6119. You said this morning that you had for six months?—Yes, I had been into the shop.

6120. We have information about your movements?—It is very true that I have passed and gone into the shop; you seem to misunderstand me.

6121. Clear it up then if you can?—As I have passed, I may have spoken to him about other matters, but not on electioneering matters. I have had nothing to say to him upon electioneering matters.

6122. Then you have not been on unfriendly terms with him?—Yes, I was after the election, but not lately; after the election of 1866 for a very considerable time.

6123. How long?—I should say during the years 1866 and 1867.

6124. During that time you had no intercourse with him?—No.

6125. Then you resumed your friendly terms with him about six months ago?—It died off and I spoke to him.

6126. A great number of these matters were inquired into by the learned judge who was here in February; do you mean to say that all these matters of bribery were raked up at the election of 1868, and you knew an inquiry was going to be made by the Commissioners, and that you never talked over these matters with Boucher to see whether the 20*l.* could be cleared up?—I made up my mind never; I was so disgusted.

6127. Did you go into the question with him?—No, I have not the last six months.

6128. Now, I put it to you again, do you mean to pledge your oath that you have not at any time within the last six months, during which you say you have been in the habit of going to him almost daily, broached the subject of the bribery of 1866 ?—I do; to the best of my belief I do.

6129. Have you a sufficiently clear recollection to say one way or the other that you have had, or that you have not had, a conversation about bribery with him during the last six months ?—I have not.

6130. You swear it ?—I do.

6131. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your reason when you were called back on Saturday for not informing the Commissioners, but concealing from the Commissioners the conversation that had taken place in the interval between your previous examination and your then present examination, though you were asked repeatedly what you thought would be the result of the interview with Boucher; why did you conceal the fact that you had been, and he called you a liar ?—I mentioned the names of the parties.

6132. Why did you conceal that from us ? If you go on making these evasive answers I shall ask my colleagues to adjourn, and consider whether we shall fine you or not for contempt. Why did you deliberately on Saturday conceal from us this important conversation which you, in the interval, had with this man, whom you pretended to believe would come round if you and he once joined in a conversation together ?—No; I cannot remember anything about this list; that is the thing that has puzzled me.

6133. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean now to tell me after what has taken place between you and Boucher when he has accused you of telling a lie, when you said he stuck to the 20*l.*, that if you and he could get into a room together you could settle this matter ?—I mean to refuse to go into any room with him.

6134. Then why did you tell us on Saturday that if you were to go into a room, you could clear the matter up ?—Since then I have found out the whole of this money, it seems to me, and therefore I wish to produce this statement.

6135. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you seen Boucher today ?—Not to speak to him.

6136. Did you see him on Saturday ?—No.

6137. Did you see him on Saturday to speak to ?—He was here.

6138. Did you see him to speak to ?—No.

6139. How came you on Saturday, having been called on Friday a liar, to say that if you went into a room together you could settle it with him ?—Because I was not aware until after I left here on Saturday. I found another 10*l.* which it seems to me would make up this amount.

6140. How was it after you had been called a liar, and left him in anger on Friday, that you came to tell us on Saturday that if you went into a room you would be able to settle it and explain it; that is a falsehood on the face of it. Now how do you explain that evidence given on Saturday having had this quarrel, and this complimentary language passed on you on the Friday. Is it capable of explanation at all ?—Oh, yes.

6141. A quarrel on Friday, examination here on Saturday, and an explanation if you could go and talk to the man you could clear up this disputed matter ?—I was asked on Saturday whom I had spoken to.

(Mr. Anstey.) You need not tell us what you were asked.

6142. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is it capable of any explanation at all, that you having quarrelled with this man on Friday, told us here on the Saturday that by going into a room with him alone you could settle the whole matter, can you give any explanation how you came to make that statement on Saturday; I suppose by your hesitation that you cannot give any explanation ?—Yes, I can.

6143. (Mr. Anstey.) Then out with it, the time is more valuable than your evidence ?—I merely wanted just to explain these statements.

6144. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you had quarrelled with him on Friday; you were asked for an explanation of your saying that if you went into a room alone with the man you had quarrelled with you could make it all right ?—What I meant was that I thought that he and I together would be enabled to do so.

6145. After he had called you a liar ?—I believe now if I heard his evidence we could put it straight; if I could only hear his evidence first.

6146. (Mr. Price.) Boucher having told you you were a liar on Friday in saying that he had embezzled the money, do you still stick to it as your impression that he did embezzle the money ?—I do.

6147. You do think so ?—I do think so, that is until these things are cleared up, then I am right in making up this statement 215*l.* I am charged with, provided that is the amount Allan swears to. There is the statement for it.

6148. What is that document ?—Merely a memorandum I have made of these amounts.

6149. When did you make it ?—This morning.

6150. Where did you take it from, this memory of yours which had been so bad for two years ?—No, there was 10*l.*——

6151. Where did you make it from, your memory ?—From my memory except the one 10*l.* When I left here on Saturday night you asked me to try and find out the other 10*l.* I found, going over my bank book for 1866, that I paid Gilbert 9*l.* 15*s.* by a cheque.

6152. How did you happen to draw on your banker, did you pay this bribe money into your own banker's account ?—I gave him that from my banker.

6153. Did you pay the bribe money into your own banker's account ?—I did.

6154. And then you drew upon it ?—I did, I suppose.

6155. How long was it lying at your banker's, this 215*l.* ?—I did not pay the 215*l.* in.

6156. Do attend to this; you say you paid Gilbert by a cheque for his vote, here it is put down "For his vote, Philip Gilbert." (Referring to the bank book.) Do you mean you drew on your account ?—Yes, it was on my own account that I gave him a cheque.

6157. But you had received 215*l.* ?—Yes, but then it was out of that amount.

6158. How did you happen to have it in your banker's hand if you had not paid the money into your own account at the banker's, how came you to draw a cheque for Gilbert for 10*l.* if you had not received the 215*l.* already from Allan ?—I do not deny having received the 215*l.* I cannot tell what I received unless Allan will swear to that amount. He has not produced the list which he gave me at the time; that bewilders me altogether.

6159. How came you to draw a cheque on your own account to bribe an elector ?—I account for it to make up this 215*l.*

6160. Do you mean to represent that you drew this out of your own money, this 9*l.* 15*s.* ?—I mean to say that I paid it out of the bribe money I had received.

6161. What did you draw a cheque for ? You had received 215*l.* You have told us all the money was paid in local notes and sovereigns. Allan, I believe, said he paid a great number of local notes to you. Why did you draw a cheque on your bankers for any portion of that money ?—Because the balance of the money that was left that was not paid away I paid a month or six weeks afterwards to his bankers. I found those two names, one of the names was Philip Gilbert.

6162. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you give him ?—9*l.* 15*s.* and 5*s.*

6163. (Mr. Price.) Is this a correct thing ?—It is only correct from my memory; it is not unless I saw my own list.

6164. "Philip Gilbert for his own vote, 10*l.*; for three votes 30*l.* ?"—That is right.

6165. Then you say you drew the cheque ?—No, that is one of them; the 10*l.* for his own vote was the cheque.

6166. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you draw 9*l.* 15*s.* instead of 10*l.* ?—Because I believe he owed me 5*s.* for something; it is three years ago.

6167. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say now that, besides the 215*l.* which Allan says he paid to you you also drew a cheque for 9*l.* 15*s.* on your own account?—No.

6168. On your banking account?—No; I mean to say that it was out of the 215*l.*

6169. Then why was it done in the form of a cheque on your own account; why was it paid in the way of a cheque drawn on your own banking account; you had the money you know, do explain that. You had 215*l.* you say; now try and account for this 20*l.* and with regard to a sum of 10*l.* which you paid Gilbert by a cheque drawn on your bankers for 9*l.* 15*s.* he owing you 5*s.* You are an accountant, tell us why there was any occasion to draw a cheque for that sum if you had already the money, 215*l.*?—I did it at the time evidently, but I thought if anything should occur, if there was any petition or anything of that kind I should have to suffer from what I had done, and these men, Boucher and Gilbert, had been about with me during the day of this election, and I felt that the better way would be not to pay this money until a month or six weeks afterwards.

6170. That is your explanation?—That is my explanation.

6171. The cheque you say therefore, which you gave to Gilbert is dated a month or six weeks after the election?—About six weeks after the election I believe.

6172. (Mr. Coleridge.) What day was the election?—It was the second election, it was not Bagehot's election, but the other.

6173. (Mr. Price.) It was Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—It was.

(Mr. Anstey.) The nomination took place on Wednesday, this is the "Bridgwater Mercury," July 11th, and the poll was on the following day, then the 12th of July was the election.

6174. (Mr. Price.) You say, in consequence of your thinking there might be a petition; this is your own account of it, and as Gilbert and Boucher had been mixed up with you in paying money, it was better not to pay until six weeks after the election, and then you paid by cheque?—I did.

6175. But you had the 215*l.*?—I had according to that statement, but when I see my own list——

6176. (Mr. Coleridge.) You paid Boucher before the election 10*l.* himself, and 10*l.* for three other men?—No, not for himself.

6177. When for himself?—About the same time that I paid Gilbert.

6178. Before or after?—I think before.

6180. How much before?—In a cheque of 10*l.*

6181. Then that is what you mean by a cheque to Boucher 10*l.*?—I do.

6182. Did you also bribe a man named Babbage?—No; that is an account between me and Babbage, the auctioneer, when I went to a sale perhaps and bought anything.

6183. Did you pay a man called Morris?—No; that is an account for goods.

6184. Dibble?—That is also an account for stock or something of that kind.

6185. (Mr. Price.) There being 9*l.* 15*s.* paid to Philip Gilbert for his own vote, less 5*s.* owing you, and also a sum of 10*l.* paid in a cheque to Boucher; does that clear up the 20*l.* difference, or is there 30*l.* altogether?—If those two names at the bottom here are right he gave me according to the list I sent in, that clears up that matter.

6186. If so, you could have cleared it up at any time?—I never found out about it until I left here. I had not the slightest idea I had paid the cheque; it had gone out of my mind entirely, and I went through the cheque book and found these two cheques.

6187. What is the meaning of 5*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* paid before the election day to Plowman?—My taxes I suppose.

6188. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that a bribe?—No.

6189. (Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure that the reason you paid this cheque on your account was not because you had been charged by Allan with keeping 20*l.*?—I was not charged by Allan; I made a voluntary statement to Allan at the time.

6190. Allan says there was a sum of 20*l.* unaccounted for by you?—I told him so.

6191. How soon after the election did you tell him that?—I gave this money and sent in an account to Allan.

6192. How soon after the election?—I should think six weeks.

6193. Was that before you had drawn the cheque or not?—After I had drawn the cheque.

6194. Why did not you at once say to Allan, "I "have drawn two cheques on my bankers; I can "show them to you"?—I did not know at all. I went away on the Saturday night.

6195. But you must have known at that time that you had drawn the cheques almost simultaneously?—It does not refer to that. The difficulty is with the names Boucher paid. Boucher I can swear gave me those names.

6196. You see that Allan says at the election, when the account came to be squared, there was a question of 20*l.*, and you say you did not pay these men until about six weeks after the election, which is just about the time that Allan began to complain about this amount. Why did you not say to Allan, "I can account for the 20*l.* by showing the two cheques," when it was fresh in your mind?—I cannot unless he tells me the two names are right.

6197. What two names?—Allow me to read that.

6198. (Mr. Coleridge.) One of these two was drawn to Boucher and one to Gilbert?—That is it. I paid to George Coombes, in Barclay Street, 10*l.*, that I can swear to. Phillip Gilbert, for his own vote, I paid 10*l.*

6199. 9*l.* 15*s.*?—9*l.* 15*s.*

6200. What did he owe you 5*s.* for?—He will explain that.

6201. No, you explain. What was it for? Is that a per-centage you took out of this money?—Not the slightest.

6202. What did you deduct it for?—Something that was between us at the time.

6203. Tell us what it was?—I cannot tell; he bought something or other. He will tell you when he comes.

6204. You are the person to tell us, because you paid a debt of your own with this money?—I can explain if I go back.

6205. It amounts to this, that you paid with Mr. Vanderbyl's money a debt this man owed you. Now read on?—For three votes, 30*l.*

6206. Was that paid in cash?—In cash.

6207. Did you take any per-centage off that?—Certainly not. George Heal, Bath Bridge, that I paid.

6208. In cash?—I do not know how it was paid. It was paid. I know he will tell you what it was paid in. I cannot remember.

6209. You are the person to tell us?—In cash; I suppose it was paid in cash. George Kerle.

6210. That was 10*l.* in cash?—Yes, one of these packets, Powell, "Steam Packet Inn," which I handed to Philip Gilbert, 30*l.*

6211. Was that in notes or gold?—Two packets, and ten sovereigns open, I believe.

6212. (Mr. Anstey.) Your memory is not very bad, then, as to these facts?—It is bad.

6213. You do not suffer from that lamentable loss of memory here?—Yes, I suffer just the same as to this.

6214. (Mr. Price.) You remember two packets, and one open?—I did not remember until I asked Gilbert at that time, a day or two since, when I told you that I went out and spoke to him, and asked him what money it was this man had.

6215. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean that you are only stating at second-hand what Gilbert told you a day or two ago, and not stating from your own recollection or belief?—I am stating what Mr. Gilbert told me a day or two ago.

6216. And that is all you can remember about it?—I cannot remember about that.

6217. (Mr. Price.) Who else did you pay?—Sutcliffe, Polden Street, 10*l.* I do not know whether I paid that, or whether Boucher paid it.

6218. Why have you put it down on that paper, and on what information?—Having the name on my mind as being on the list supplied me by Boucher, or on the list of names that I had. Now the list of names was looked at by both of us, and he paid one lot, and I handed over the money to him to pay whatever he did; and this is to H. C. Bussell, for Squires, and Haste, and Turner, 15*l.* each. That was paid in Allan's house, and then the cheque to Boucher for his own vote, that was paid by cheque, 10*l.*

6219. That was paid long after the election. I want to know, while you had this memorandum in your pocket, what was the scruple in paying Boucher down on the nail?—It was a good deal better not to pay the men who were running about with me all day long; a great deal better to pay them after six weeks.

6220. Why?—Because it was a guilty act to do.

6221. Was not paying the other men equally guilty?—It was.

6222. Then why draw the distinction between Boucher and Gilbert?—Because they went about with me in the day.

6223. It is not true, Mr. White, but go on?—These names given by Boucher for the 40*l.*, are Scott, Torr, Dabinet, and Virgin.

6224. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you tried, what you were told to do the other day, to find out where Scott, the dissenting minister, is now to be found?—I cannot tell; I never saw him.

6225. Give us some information; what denomination does he belong to?—I always had an impression that he was a dissenting minister.

6226. What denomination does he belong to?—I do not know him.

6227. (Mr. Price.) On whose information did you put him down as a dissenting minister on that list?—My own memory; two men of the name of Scott and Torr.

6228. (Mr. Anstey.) You put him down as a dissenting minister from memory, you not knowing him?—Yes, I knew Torr.

6229. We are asking about Scott the minister. Was he a Roman Catholic priest?—No.

6230. Was he of the Church established?—No.

6231. What denomination then?—I thought he was a dissenting minister. I see I am confounding the two names.

6232. But what chapel did you understand him to be a minister of. He must have had a place to preach in?—I thought he was one of those local preachers.

6233. What was his locality then?—He lives somewhere down——

6234. At what place did people sit under him or listen to his preaching?—I do not know.

6235. How did you know he was a local preacher?—I thought from the name supplied me, and more especially because the name of Torr was supplied me.

6236. Was Torr a dissenting minister also?—He was, and a tailor.

6237. There were two dissenting ministers bribed then?—Yes, I understood those were the names supplied me by Boucher.

6238. Will you answer my question? Do you mean to represent there were two dissenting ministers bribed in your list, which you are now handing in, making up your deficiency?—I mean to represent that they were supplied to me by Boucher.

6239. Do you mean they were supplied as dissenting ministers?—Yes, one was.

6240. Which?—Torr.

6241. Why did you say Scott was?—Because I thought it was the same Scott that lived down Polden Street.

6242. Where is Torr to be found?—In Bridgwater.

6243. Where?—Down Eastover, somewhere. I do not know where.

6244. (Mr. Anstey.) What is his christian name?—I can tell you by the polling list, Charles. It is the old one, not the young one.

6245. Is he called the Reverend Charles Torr, or what is he called?—I do not call these men reverend.

6246. (Mr. Price.) Where does he preach?—I do not know; he is a local preacher.

6247. You mean he goes about the country to different villages?—Yes, the local villages.

6248. Does he preach in the town of Bridgwater itself?—I do not know.

6249. Is he any relation of John Torr?—I do not know that he has any relations, except he has one son. I know he is a tall young man.

6250. The old man, you understood, was the person bribed?—The person given me on Boucher's list.

6251. And where is he now?—Living in Bridgwater, in Eastover.

6252. What part of Eastover?—I know where the young man is, but not the old one.

6253. You said the old man was something else besides a minister?—He was a tailor originally.

6254. Are those all the names you can give us?—I cannot give you any more explanation until I get my list I have applied for from Mr. Henry Lovibond.

6255. Does that make up the sum of 215*l.*?—It does.

6256. Then that is all your list?—Yes, the only difference is in these two names.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Bussell in court?

(Bussell.) Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Has any name occurred to you in the course of this rambling statement of the present witness, which you recognize as the name of a person bribed, not by Henry Cornelius White, but by somebody else?

(Bussell.) I know White brought me the 45*l.* that I bribed the parties named with.

(Mr. Anstey.) Can you give us the names of any who were not bribed to your belief by White, but by some one else?

(Bussell.) No, I cannot. The names he mentions, Haste, Squires, and Turner, White brought us the money for. I do not recollect anything else.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Andrew Allan here?

(Allan.) Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Has any name occurred to you which you recognize as a name of one who was not bribed by White, but by some one else?

(Allan.) No.

6257. (Mr. Price to the witness.) Are all the names you returned to us names of persons now living?—George Coombe is alive, Culverwell is; Gilbert, George Heal, George Kerle, I do not know him.

6258. Who furnished you with these names?—Headford.

6259. Who is Headford?—A foreman in the brickyard.

6260. He gave you Kerle's names?—He did, George Kerle.

6261. Did you give him the money for Kerle?—I did.

6262. Headford is alive?—Headford is alive. Powell, of the "Steam Packet Inn," I gave that to Gilbert.

6263. That is what you told us about the first day?—Yes.

6264. You first said 40*l.*, and now 30*l.*?—That was 30*l.*

6265. Powell is alive, I suppose?—Yes, and Gilbert. Sutcliffe is alive, and Mr. Bussell has explained those three.

6266. Were there any names of persons there since dead?—There is one.

6267. Who is it?—John Virgin.

6268. What did he get?—10*l.*

6269. Who paid it to him?—I speak from memory. I believe it was in Boucher's list, and the reason I believe that is this: he lived in my house years ago; he voted for the Tories, and I objected to have anything to do with him.

SEVENTH DAY.

H. C. White.

30 Aug. 1869.

6270. And then you went and bribed him over to your side, and objected to have anything to do with him whilst he voted for the Tories, and then went and bribed him?—I did through another.

6271. (Mr. Anstey.) I have not the name Bottomley in the list you have made out to-day, though you gave us that name in the list of Saturday?—I can explain that circumstance.

6272. You abandon Bottomley, and admit that your statement of having bribed him is false?—I said that I thought that Andrew Allan had included.

6273. Do you mean to admit that you had not bribed Bottomley because you were contradicted by Allan, and though you did not retract that false statement do you now?—I do. I did not get him; he went up with me.

6274. That 10*l.* is accounted for?—That is accounted for by Allan. He did not give it to Bottomley.

6275. To whom did you give the 10*l.*, in order to discharge yourself of that amount which you falsely stated on Saturday you paid to Bottomley?—I did not falsely state that I believed the 10*l.* was paid to Bottomley, but Allan said he paid it to Bottomley himself. That caused me to turn over my bank book, and there I found 10*l.*, in addition to the 30*l.* paid to Gilbert, which made 40*l.*, in addition to the 10*l.* for himself.

6276. Then you say you gave this 10*l.* to Gilbert, not to Bottomley; is that your statement?—That is the amount.

6277. I am asking you for this specific 10*l.* You are an accountant, and know what I mean. You try to get rid of the 10*l.* liability, by stating falsely that you paid it to Bottomley. To whom did you pay it, as you find you did not pay it to Bottomley?—To Gilbert.

6278. Along with his own?—Along with his own. No, this 30*l.* I paid him; I do not know who that is for.

(Mr. Price.) This is what you said in answer to the learned Commissioner who is examining you. The Commissioner said that Allan made out his own hand bribed Bottomley, and you answer to the court Allan has made a mistake as to that 10*l.*

6279. (Mr. Anstey.) You heard Allan's evidence, and admitted that Allan was right, and that you did not pay it, and now you pretend or allege that you paid that 10*l.* to a man who, according to your statement, received another sum of 30*l.* How do you expect us believe that?—That 30*l.* I paid him was for three votes, which, unless I have the list, or some means of finding out, I cannot tell.

6280. Then do you mean that you paid him 10*l.*, besides his own?—No, for his own.

6281. I asked you just now distinctly the question, whether it was given with his own, and you said, "Yes." Now you say it was for his own?—I mean to say 30*l.* paid him was for three votes he paid out of the money when I gave it to him, and the other 10*l.* was for his own vote.

6282. And the other 10*l.* is the same you stated you paid Bottomley?—Which was the sum in dispute with Bottomley.

6283. Assuming that to be true, you got rid of 10*l.* out of the 30*l.* deficiency; but I will tell you that inasmuch as I shall consider every person who has been named in that list as having taken any money, and as to whom your evidence is corroborated, has been bribed, and, having done that, ought to be reported or scheduled accordingly, so I tell you, unless you discharge yourself of the 20*l.* not accounted for at all, I shall recommend you to be reported or scheduled as having actually detained that money under aggravated circumstances, in reward of your own vote, and therefore as a bribed person.

6284. (Mr. Price.) Have you any further explanation to give of that part of your evidence?—No, I have nothing further.

6285. That is the way you account for that 10*l.*?—If these names are right, I have accounted for all.

6286. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any houses at Highbridge?—No, I have some at Taunton, that were left me by my father, and one at Dulverton that my wife had, and an annuity she has. I will tell you all, if you wish to know, with the greatest pleasure. I never kept a shilling of the money.

6286. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know whether Symmons, Heal, and Cook, are all members of one family; that is, related in blood?—They are.

6288. I believe that is the common case in Bridgwater that all the bribing families are related in blood?—I do not know what you mean by that. I am not related in blood with any of them.

6289. Are you not?—Certainly not. I was born at Taunton, and am not a Bridgwater man.

6290. Therefore you are no exception. I ask you whether all the Bridgwater bribing people are not connected by blood, be it by descent or extending lineally or collaterally. For instance, is not Bussell a brother-in-law of Temblett, and are there not two Bussells who are brothers who bribe on both sides, and father and son taking different lines of politics, or brothers taking different lines, or the same lines of politics?—I have never taken any bribes myself.

6291. You have heard what I have said about the 20*l.*?—But these two names will make that clear in my opinion.

6292. This Symmons is stated to us as having influence over 130 workmen?—I know nothing about that.

6293. This person named to us as having influence over 130 workmen, and having received and not accounted for 100*l.* odd, is related you say to the two other people I have named, Heal and Cook?—Yes.

6294. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you anything to tell us about Mr. Bagehot's election?—I have told you about Mr. Bagehot's election.

6295. Have you anything more to tell us?—I have nothing to remember now.

6296. How much money did you distribute at Mr. Bagehot's election?—No money.

6297. What did you do then?—I went and got a list of names, and gave the names to Allan and he paid them.

6298. You never paid any money yourself?—I did not.

6299. Or any treating bills?—No, they never asked me.

6300. Did you treat anybody at that election?—I did not.

6301. Did you promise money to anybody?—I do not remember the names.

6302. I do not ask you the names, but having yet that list which you have told us of, having got those names of persons whom you thought would take bribes, did you tell those men when you asked them for their votes that you would get them money from Andrew Allan. (A pause.) You say you got a list of names of people whom you thought would take bribes, and you gave the list to Andrew Allan, and he paid them. That is so; you told us that?—I did not see him pay them, but I believe he did.

6303. How were you able to make out that list which you gave to Andrew Allan?—I suggested names.

6304. I know that; you have already told us so. How were you able to do that?—I went to John Smith, and I and John Smith sat down together. I told John Smith I would not touch the money if they brought it into the place; but, however, I do not mean to say——

6305. Will you answer the question. I suppose you and John Smith made out the list together. I suppose you suggested some names, and he suggested other names?—If I suggested a name, he would tell me if it was one.

6306. When you suggested the name to John Smith where did you get your information of the bribability of that name?—He suggested some.

6307. But you say you suggested some also. Now where did you get your information from? How did you know that you were not doing these people an injury in putting them down as being likely to take bribes ?—These people kept teasing me.

6308. That is exactly what I want to know. Did you get those names by those people having come to you and asked you to get them money ?—They would say to me, knowing I was a Liberal, that they would not vote without they had the money.

6309. It was from the voters themselves you acquired the information that you afterwards gave to Andrew Allan, was it not ?—Yes, but the names I first got from John Smith.

6310. But do you mean to say that in the first place you got a list, and then went and canvassed the voters, and they then said, "We will not vote without money." Is that what you mean, or did you tell John Smith that so and so has been to me, and has said he will not vote without money; put him down on the list ? Which is it ?—When this list was gone through I knew the names of pretty nearly all these people, and if I suggested a name John Smith would say, "He will do," or, "Do not say anything to him," and so on.

6311. Was the reason for their being put down because you suggested the names, from their having been to you, or you having been to them, and wanted money ?—They kept teasing me.

6312. That is exactly what I want to know. You supplied the information by which Andrew Allan paid the money ?—Yes.

6313. In fact you were an agent who furnished information as to persons who were bribable, and to whom money would have to be paid afterwards, were you not ?—Yes.

6314. And you were perfectly cognizant of the fact that every one of those names that you gave in to Andrew Allan would get the money ?—Yes, I believe they would.

6315. And did any one of those men complain to you afterwards that you had promised to get them money from Andrew Allan, and they had not been paid ?—No, I do not think so.

6316. Then every person you named were bribed by you or Andrew Allan ?—Yes, I think so.

6317. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not given us the names of two persons who came from Taunton ?—What names ?

6318. It is suggested to me that you have not named two other Taunton men ?—Taunton men ?

6319. Yes, who have done a good deal of business in the way of bribery at this election and previous elections ? You are a Taunton man, are you not ?—I came here in 1846.

6320. I ask you whether you are not a Taunton man ?—I was born in Taunton.

6321. Are you not aware that there are two men at Taunton who have been engaged a good deal in bribery as well as yourself, and as actively ?—I do not know that there are.

6322. I will name them to you, Joseph Pitman and Joseph Robbins ?—I do not know such names. Joseph Robbins ?

6323. You have not heard of such names ?—I do not know their names.

6324. On your oath have you not heard those names ?—On my oath I do not know their names.

6325. On your oath do you not know those names, and are they not the names of persons living at Taunton who have been concerned in bribery ?—Will you tell me the names again ?

6326. Joseph Pitman and Joseph Robbins ?—I have not heard of them. I do not know the names at all.

6327. Now about this banker's account of yours. How much of the 215*l.* did you pay into that banker's account on which you six weeks afterwards drew the cheque you pretend to have drawn ?—20*l.*

6329. That was mixed up there with your other monies ?—It was.

6330. (Mr. Price.) Give us your banker's account again. We want to see the credit side of your book (the witness handed the banker's book to the chairman).

6331. (Mr. Anstey.) How much did you draw upon that 20*l.*?—Those two.

6332. You have told us the name of one, and one only ?—I have told you the name of two; Boucher one, and Gilbert the other.

6333. Is there an entry of a cheque drawn by you in favour of Boucher ?—There is.

6334. Upon that sum ?—Upon that sum.

6335. Then I am to understand that that sum is not the 20*l.* in dispute between you and Boucher ?—Oh, no.

6336. Therefore Boucher was paid by you. You admit yourself to have paid Boucher 10*l.*?—Certainly I do.

6337. And Boucher does not remember that: he denies it ?—I do not know what he denies. I cannot tell what he denies until I hear what he says.

6338. But did he deny that he got 10*l.* from you for his own vote ?—Certainly not.

6339. Then the 20*l.* in dispute which you say he embezzled and which he says you embezzled, is a different sum altogether from that 20*l.* in your banker's account ?—No, it forms a part of this account.

6340. I am talking of your banker's account. That 20*l.* about which there is a dispute between you and Boucher, did you ever pay that into your banking account ?—Certainly not.

6341. (Mr. Price.) The account here says that you drew the cheque for Boucher on the 3rd of August ?—It was about six weeks——

6342. Do attend. Here it is, in black and white ?—All right.

6343. 10*l.* you drew for Boucher on the 3rd of August. When do you say you paid in the 20*l.* balance of the 215*l.* into your account ?—I cannot tell. It was paid in with other monies. I cannot tell when.

6344. It was paid in with other money ?—Yes; I cannot tell when. Every person is open to see my books——

(Mr. Price.) That is not the question.

6345. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean to say that you paid it in with your own monies, so that it could not be recognized as a distinct sum; is that it ?—Yes.

6346. (Mr. Anstey.) Do not you to this day hold a bill of sale over the furniture of this man Boucher ?—No. I do not know anything about a bill of sale.

6347. Speak to me, and not to the mob. Do not you to this present time hold a bill of sale over the furniture of this man Boucher ?—I do not.

6348. Not over any part of his furniture ?—I do not.

6349. Nor over any part of his property ?—I do not.

6350. Then what are your relations with this man Boucher ?—None whatever.

6351. You are not his creditor ?—Not the slightest, nor his debtor.

6352. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there a bill of sale at one time held by you over Boucher's furniture ?—Never.

6353. (Mr. Anstey.) Then what was the meaning of your turning round and speaking to somebody there, instead of answering the question ?—I do not know that I spoke to anybody.

6354. I heard you, sir: I did not hear what you said, but I heard the murmur of something you said to somebody behind you.

6355. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do not you know anything about a bill of sale held over Boucher's furniture ?—Certainly not, to the best of my belief.

6356. (Mr. Price.) You say to the best of your belief; do not you know ?—No; I never had a bill of sale on his furniture. I lent him some money, and he paid me back honestly.

6357. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you lend him money last ?—I cannot tell; give me the book and I will tell you in a minute. I will mention the sums that I have entered in this book.

6358. When did you lend him money last ?—February 15th he asked me for a cheque.

6359. (Mr. Price.) What year ? — 1866; but whether he had all that money lent him, or asked me to make up the cheque, I do not know. He was in the habit of coming to me sometimes, and he would pay me the greater portion of a sum of money.

6360. How much did you advance him?—I cannot tell how much out of it, 22*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*; but he has paid me, and he does not owe me a shilling.

6361. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the last occasion on which you advanced him money?—That is the last; I received a cheque of him.

6362. That is not the question, and you know it perfectly well, therefore I must request you to answer me, and without any mental reservation. Is that the last occasion on which you advanced him money? (The witness referred to the banker's book.) I want you to answer my question without reference to the book?—That was the last occasion.

6362*a*. That you swear?—That I do swear.

6363. Then when did he pay you back that money?—I cannot tell.

6364. Since the second election of 1866; yes or no?—I think not; I think before.

6365. (Mr. Price.) That is in February 1866?—That is in February 1866.

6366. (Mr. Anstey.) I ask you, when was it repaid to you?—I cannot tell, and I have no means of knowing. I cannot tell.

6367. (Mr. Price.) Would not the other side of the account show it, if he paid it into account?—I cannot tell; there are thousands of pounds I pay in. I cannot tell anything about the money.

6368. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not that 10*l.* of August 3rd a loan to Boucher?—That it was not; that I swear.

6369. You say immediately after the election you became on bad terms with Boucher?—Well, I meant by that immediately after the account had been made up with Andrew Allan, and sent in to him.

6370. When was the account delivered to Andrew Allan?—About six weeks after the election.

6371. Then were you perfectly good friends with Boucher between the time of the election, which was on the 15th July, and the 3rd of August, when you paid him that cheque?—No; that is when the dispute was.

6372. It is a very short time; it is only 15 or 16 days. Were you on good or bad terms with him between the 15th July and the 3rd of August, the time when you paid him that cheque?—I was on bad terms with him. He said he had not had his 10*l.*, or something to that effect, and I gave him the cheque.

6373. Do you mean to say that you gave him a cheque which would appear in that banker's book when you were on bad terms with him?—I do.

6374. (Mr. Price.) You told us there was a dispute as to that 20*l.*?—I mean to say yes; it was stuck to.

6375. (Mr. Coleridge.) Let me understand you. Your first answer to me only a minute ago was that you were on good terms with him until the accounts were sent to Andrew Allan six weeks after the election; and then you said that you were on bad terms with him immediately after the election. Were you on bad terms with him immediately after the election, or was it six weeks afterwards?—You have given both answers. You have said it was six weeks after the election that you were on bad terms with him, and also immediately after the election. Which of those answers is true?—Six weeks after.

6376. Six weeks after the time that you gave him that cheque. I ask you whether in the week succeeding the election you were on good terms with him?—It was not prior to the election.

6377. I do not say it was. You have made two different statements within a few minutes of each other. You say you got on bad terms with him after you sent in the account to Andrew Allan six weeks afterwards, and you also say you got on bad terms with him when you gave him the cheque. Which do you mean?—I believe I was on bad terms with him when I gave him the cheque.

6378. Then it had nothing to do with the list you sent in to Andrew Allan?—I did not send in the list six weeks after; it was not so much as that.

6379. Within two minutes you have sworn that you sent in the list to Andrew Allan within six weeks after the election. When did you send in the list?—I believe about three weeks after the election.

6380. You gave him that cheque on the 3rd August, and you have sworn you were on bad terms with him then; and you have also sworn that you were on bad terms with him when you sent in the list to Andrew Allan within six weeks after the election. You have sworn to both of those statements. Now I ask you, could the sending of that list to Andrew Allan have had anything to do with your being on bad terms with him? Which of those statements do you mean to say is the correct one?—The sending in the list was about three weeks after.

6381. That is no answer to my question. You said you were on bad terms with him about the sending in the list, and that was about six weeks after the election?—I was on bad terms with Boucher because we could not find out the money.

6382. Then it was not true that the reason you were on bad terms with him was about the sending in the list to Andrew Allan?—You see I was trying to make up my list. I had lost my papers, and I was trying to suggest the names.

6383. (Mr. Price.) Had you lost your papers?—Yes, the little bits of paper that Boucher had the names of me from.

6384. Did you pay the cheque of 10*l.* for Boucher's vote?—I did.

6385. You told him so?—I did

6386. Why did you not tell Mr. Allan so when he made up the accounts?—Why should I tell him so?

6387. You were to render him an account of the 215*l.*?—I did so.

6388. Then why did you not tell him so?—There is nothing in the world but those two names, and that you will find.

6389. (Mr. Anstey.) It is really a very simple case. You had a dispute with a man called Boucher, the result of which was that you accused Boucher of embezzling a sum of 20*l.* which you said you had paid him, and which he said you had not paid him. A few weeks after this do you mean to say that you drew a cheque in his favour for the sum of 10*l.* Is that true or not?—Oh, yes. I drew the cheque for 10*l.*

6390. Then, sir, is not this the fact, that you drew the cheque on your own account, after this unpleasant disclosure about the alleged embezzlement, in order to get rid of the business and hush it up?—No, I did not.

We shall form our own conclusions upon it.

6391. (Mr. Price.) It is the most extraordinary story. You are on bad terms with the man. There is a dispute between you as to who stuck to the 20*l.*, and you say you gave him the 20*l.*?—If you speak to him he will be able perhaps to give the names. Mr. Lovibond I do not think has acted right towards me in the matter.

6392. (Mr. Price.) Tell us how many 10*l.* you paid to Boucher?—If he has the list he can tell you. I cannot tell.

6393. How many 10*l.* did you pay to Boucher?—Never but that one 10*l.*

6394. You also said you gave him 10*l.* for Dabinett, Torr, Scott, and Virgin?—Yes; Dabinett, Torr, Scott, and Virgin.

6395. Then you did give him more than one 10*l.*?—I never gave him more than one 10*l.* for himself.

6396. How many 10*l.* do you reckon you gave him?—I gave him four 10*l.*

6397. What did he say to you on Saturday, with respect to your statement as to his having stuck to this money?—Never a word about it.

6398. You told us he did, and that he called you a liar?—He passed on. The conversation did not last two minutes.

6399. Then do you mean to swear he did not say that with reference to your charging him with embezzling this 20*l.*?—This 20*l.*?

6400. You said just now you did not know what he said?—I am very anxious to give you every particular I can. You made a statement about my banking account and the taxes, and you see I was over and above the amount. I offered him a cheque at the time for the taxes, and I was compelled to enter it at the time; I was very busy building, and I mentioned it to John Stone, and two or three others else.

6401. You stated that though you were engaged as bribing agent you held the money itself in such abhorrence that you would not touch it?—Bagehot's election?

6402. Well, at any election besides?—No, I did not at Vanderbyl's election. I paid the men.

6403. Yourself?—Yes.

6404. You come to that conclusion at last?—Of course I must do so as to this 10*l.*

6405. (Mr. Price.) You have spoken about the taxes. Are you aware when you were asked on Saturday, in as plain terms as anybody could be asked this question, that you gave no answer to it? This is the question, "You wish it to go forward that you cannot "answer the question whether you kept too long in "your hands the money you received?" and you gave no answer to that question?—I was summoned before the Commissioners.

6406. You were asked this distinct question?—I explained the matter and showed the assessment.

6407. You had the opportunity of putting yourself straight on Saturday, and you now complain that this question was put to you about the taxes. You cannot be surprised when this question was put to you, and you gave no answer to it. "You wish it to go for-"ward that you cannot answer the question, whether "you kept too long in your hands the money you "received?" You gave no answer to that at all.

6408. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that true or not?—I do not understand the form of the question.

6409. (Mr. Price.) Well, the form of the question is this: Do you wish it now to go forward to the public of Bridgwater that there was a complaint made against you that you kept back the money of the taxpayers longer than you ought to have done?—I cannot tell that now. There was a complaint, and I went and carried up my assessment.

6410. Was the complaint that you kept the money you had received too long in your hands?—That was the complaint, but I disproved it.

6411. On Saturday you went round, and round, and round, and we put that question to you over and over again and now, at last it comes out that the complaint made against you was, not that you called upon the people too often or too soon, but that you kept back the money you received?—Well, I shall call Mr. John Trevor.

6412. Never mind who you shall call, but that was the complaint?—It was a complaint.

6413. (Mr. Anstey.) There was a question which I put to you, and in the first instance got to it a decided answer "No." But I put it to you again the next day, and showed you the document, with an official copy of your signature to it, and you said you "did not know." Now, you have had plenty of time for recollection, and I ask you again, is it true, or is it not true, that you were, notwithstanding your denial in answer to the first question put to you by me on Friday last—— ?—Will you show me the document?

6414. Is it true, or is it not true, that you, who have done all these things, were nevertheless one of the persons promoting and signing the petition of the 80 purists of this borough to the House of Commons, praying for the suspension of the parliamentary writ, as late as the 29th of May 1866?—I did sign it.

6415. Then what did you mean by telling me in answer to the first question I had the honour to put to you on this inquiry, if it be an honour, that you did not sign it?—Because I forgot it.

6416. (Mr. Price.) Mr. White, if you wish to make any further disclosure with reference to anything you know, or anything in which you took a part in the election of 1866, now is your time to do it. Of course, I do not mean to say you will be shut out from giving an explanation on another day, but it will not come with the same effect if in the meantime we find out from other witnesses that you have not made a full disclosure of the part you took. If you now recollect anything else tell us so. You have had all Sunday in which to refresh your memory, and you have now an opportunity of saying whether there is anything else on your mind that you have to disclose, if you wish to be considered a witness worthy of belief and credit?—I do not remember anything at present, but if anything should occur I will come and tell you, but at present I do not remember.

6417. (Mr. Anstey.) You cannot remember anything more about any election?—I went about canvassing for Sir John Shelley.

6418. Any bribery?—No.

6419. (Mr. Price.) Nor corrupt practices of any sort?—No; and I do not believe a halfpenny was spent.

6420. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you canvassed for Sir John Shelley was there no treating going on at any of the houses?—I stopped with him and I had lunch with him down at——

6421. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know whether there was treating? We were told that there was treating, and that there was a sum of 500*l.* spent, and that treating was going on at Vanderbyl's election in 1866. Did you know about it?—No.

6422. Did you see it yourself?—There was one bill sent——

6423. Did you see treating going on at Sir John Shelley's election?—No. I saw lunching going on at different houses.

6424. Did men come to you and ask you for money?—Yes. The men asked me, and I would not have anything to do with it.

6425. In 1865 you say the men came to you about money?—They have in every election, and I would have nothing to do with them.

6426. Can you give us the names of those who came and asked you for money?—No.

6427. What did you tell them?—I told them I would not have anything to do with them.

6428. Will you say you had nothing to do with money?—No.

6429. Neither at Sir John's Shelley's election nor at any previous election?—Neither at Sir John Shelley's election nor at any previous election. I defy any man to prove it.

6430. You say men asked you for money at Sir John Shelley's election. What did you say?—I told them I would have nothing to do with them.

6431. Did you say there was "nothing going"?—I told them nothing about it.

6432. I do not suppose that they asked Sir John Shelley about it. You say you went canvassing with him?—Yes.

6433. You went canvassing with Sir John Shelley and you were asked about money by the men. Did they call you on one side when Sir John Shelley went on, or when did you give them the opportunity of speaking to you on the subject?—No.

6434. When did they ask you about money?—I never gave them any money.

6435. You say that they asked you for money?—That is a very common thing.

6436. I daresay it is. But if you say you went canvassing with Sir John Shelley, and they did not ask Sir John Shelley nor you when you were so engaged, when did they come to you? Did they come to your house?—Perhaps when I asked them for a vote and Sir John Shelley passed on they might say something about "Mr. Most," or something of that kind; but I told them up to that time I had nothing to do with bribery, and I do not think there was a single shilling spent in bribery.

6437. Who was it that spoke to you about "Mr. Most"?—I do not know.

6438. Just refresh your defective memory, and tell

SEVENTH DAY.

H. C. White.

30 Aug. 1869.

us the name of any single person who spoke of "Mr. Most" at that election?—I cannot remember.

6439. Not a single soul?—No.

6440. Had you nothing to do with Boucher then?—No.

6441. Nothing to do with Boucher at that election?—No.

6442. I think you said he was in your employ?—He is a tenant of mine.

6443. In your house?—Yes.

6444. A lodger?—A lodger! What do you mean?

6445. I want to know what you mean?—He is a tenant, and a tenant is not a lodger.

6446. (Mr. Price.) In your house or in your shop?—Not in my shop. I do not keep a shop. In my house.

6447. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he rent the whole of a house and shop belonging to you, or only a part?—He rented the whole of a house and shop of me in St. John's Street.

6448. Then all he had to do with you was to occupy a house and shop of you as your tenant?—Yes.

6449. Did you ever distrain on him for rent?—No.

6450. What was the quarrel between you?—Was it about rent?—When he did not pay I used to wait.

6451. Something more than that. Had you not a quarrel with him at one time, and distrained upon him for rent?—It might be something about the payment of money; I cannot tell what it was about. Nothing about voting whatever.

6452. You will put that forward. I am not asking you that. I ask you whether you had not had a quarrel in consequence of your threatening to distrain upon him for rent?—I never had a threat with him for rent.

6453. Had you not some quarrel about rent at the time he was your tenant, during Sir John Shelley's election?—I do not think he was my tenant at Sir John Shelley's election. I cannot tell you. If you will allow me to go home and look——

6454. I do not ask you for the exact date. Was he your tenant in 1865, or did he become your tenant in 1865?—He had nothing to do with me in Sir John Shelley's election.

6455. Is Boucher one of the persons who spoke to you about Mr. Most at Sir John Shelley's election?—Certainly not; he never did. I never spent a shilling, and I never knew that there was a penny forthcoming.

6456. I am not asking you about that. You said people would talk to you about "Mr. Most" at that election, and I ask you whether Mr. Boucher was one of the persons who talked about it?—No.

6457. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were the persons who talked about "Mr. Most"?—I do not know.

6458. Was Aldridge one?—I do not know the name.

6459. Was Cooksley one?—I do not know at all.

6460. Do not hesitate, but tell me yes or no?—It is very likely it was that class of men.

6461. Do you remember that Mr. Cook, the attorney, was present on one of those occasions; now, be careful?—I do not.

6462. Do you remember anybody bursting out into a laugh in Sir John Shelley's presence?—I do not.

6463. You do not remember anybody bursting out into a laugh when the expression "I shall vote for Mr. Most" was used at that election?—I do not.

6464. And saying, "I am for the man who will give the most?"—I do not.

6465. Were you the man who burst out laughing when it was said?—No, certainly not; I knew nothing at all about it.

6466. (Mr. Price.) You knew what it meant?—Oh, certainly.

6467. (Mr. Anstey.) You said nothing about it?—I was not there at the time.

6468. Will you listen to my question. When these people told you that they would vote for "Mr. Most," what did you say to them?—That I had nothing whatever to do with money.

6469. That you had nothing whatever to do with money?—That I had nothing whatever to do with money, and I never knew a halfpenny to be spent.

6470. And that is what you told them?—And I did not know that there would be a halfpenny spent. Sir John Shelley said——

6471. And that is what you told them?—That is all I have to say.

6472. You were going on to say what Sir John Shelley told them. All you told them was, "I have no money, and I do not believe there will be any money"?—I said that.

6473. Nothing more?—I cannot recollect anything more that I said at that time.

6474. As a fact, Mr. Cook, the lawyer, did canvass along with you and Sir John Shelley. Now, be careful?—I never knew about Mr. Cook at all in the matter; not in the slightest. If I did I would tell in a minute.

6475. Did Mr. Cook canvass along with Sir John Shelley when you were present?—Did Cook canvass?

6476. Yes?—It is very likely he did.

6477. Very likely he did, or very likely he did not?—Very likely he did.

6478. Do you believe that he did or did not?—I do not think he did.

Having previously said you believe he did, I shall not ask you any more questions, and I really do not wish to have any more information from you. You contradict the answer you gave before. You had better take care of yourself; you are not by any means out of the wood.

J. Boucher.

JOHN BOUCHER called and sworn.

6479. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A boot and shoe maker.

6480. Where do you carry on business?—In Eastover now.

6481. Where were you carrying on business in the year 1868, at the last election?—In Eastover.

6482. Whose house was it; was it your own house, or was it rented by you?—Mr. Saunders.

6483. How long had you been there in 1868, in Mr. Saunders's house?—I should think about 12 months.

6484. Did you take any part in the election in 1868?—I did not.

6485. None at all?—No.

6486. Nothing to do with it?—No.

6487. How was that; you had been an active politician before, we have heard. Why did you take no part in 1868?—I had made up my mind in previous elections, that I would have no more to do actively in the elections.

6488. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1868?—I did.

6489. (Mr. Price.) On which side?—Liberal.

6490. For both the Liberal candidates?—Yes.

6491. Vanderbyl and Kinglake?—Yes.

6492. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

6494. Who from?—Stacey was the man who paid me.

6495. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is his christian name?—George.

6496. (Mr. Price.) You call it taking no part in the election, when you voted and took 10*l.* for your vote?—I mean in getting others to vote.

6497. Oh! you made up your mind you would take no part in bribing others, but you would get money for yourself if you could. That is it, is it?—That was it.

6498. What time in the day was it that you got your 10*l.*?—It must have been very near 4 o'clock.

6499. Had you seen anybody on that day on the Liberal side and said anything about money to them?—No.

6500. Then how did you hear that there was "something going on?"—I did not know there was money going.

6501. How did you happen to get it from Stacey?—I will tell you.

6502. Do so, please?—I left my house, I think, about half-past 3, with the intention of going to poll. I had previously made up my mind not to poll that day.

6503. Why? — On account of previous rumours raised against me. I said I would never more have to do with electioneering, nor never poll again, except in a case of emergency and it was a very near run.

6504. And there was 10*l.* about?—No.

6505. At half-past 3 o'clock you went out to poll?—I did.

6506. Do you mean to say you made up your mind, in consequence of what had been said before, that you would not vote except in cases of emergency, and that you had not heard before half-past 3 o'clock, when you went out to poll, that there was money about?—I had not.

6507. Had you had anybody in your shop on that day, before you went out to poll, who asked you about voting?—Yes.

6508. Give us the names of any persons on the Liberal side, who called on you and asked you about voting?—I cannot.

6509. Had any of the lawyers called upon you?—I think not.

6510. Think again. Will you swear that none of the lawyers had been to you about voting?—I will not swear they had not. I am inclined to think, but I am not positive, I am inclined to think Mr. Reed called and asked me if I had been to poll.

6511. What did you say?—I said no.

6512. I thought we should refresh your memory. What did he say to you when you said "no."?—He said I had better go.

6513. Did he say why?—I think the answer he made was, "Every man is a man. It was getting to a near run."

6514. What time was it?—That I could not be certain of.

6515. How long before you went to vote?—I think it must have been about half an hour after dinner.

6516. (Mr. Coleridge.) After your dinner hour?—Yes.

6517. (Mr. Price.) He said, "Every man was a man, and it was getting a near run"?—To the best of my knowledge it was Mr. Reed.

6518. To the best of your knowledge? you said it was just now?—I believe it was now.

6519. You have no doubt about it?—I have a shadow of a doubt.

6520. Who are you doubting about?—I will not be certain whether it was Mr. Reed or Mr. Lovibond, but I think it was Mr. Reed.

6521. Whoever it was said to you, "Every man is a man." Did you know that Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed had been mixed up in bribery matters in the election of 1866?—Well, I cannot say that I did.

6522. Do you mean to say that in 1868, you did not know that money had come through Mr. Lovibond's hands to voters to pay them for their votes, and Mr. Reed's also?—I did not know that.

6523. Had you never heard it?—I never heard that it came from their hands until I heard it in this court.

6524. You never had the least idea then that they had anything to do with the matter?—No.

6525. Not the least?—No.

6526. You never heard the thing mentioned?—I never heard that it came through Mr. Reed's hands, not the least. I was surprised when I heard it in this court.

6527. What did you understand Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Reed, whoever it was, to mean, when he said this, "Every man was a man?"—I understood him to mean it was getting to a near run.

6528. And then you thought money would be going?—I did not.

6529. Then tell us how it was, that you, wishing never to have anything to do with elections, was tempted to do so. Did you mean, when you went out of your house, not to be tempted?—Quite so. I will tell you how it was. I was going up the town, and on passing the "Globe" by I thought I would run in and see how they were getting on in the large room, and I went in with that intention. When I got, I think, nearly to the top of the stairs, I met a gentleman of the name of Jarman. He was coming out of the room, and he caught me by the arm, and he said, "Have you been to poll," and I said, "No, but I have come thus far to go." He did not say anything more, but he took me by the arm and led me over the stairs. I did not know where he was going to lead me, and when we got down the stairs he led me through the street the same way I had come. He walked fast and I followed him.

6530. Did you not inquire of him where you was going?—No.

6531. You were led innocently away, and had no idea where you were going?—No, I had not. I thought he was going in search of a voter, and when we got down to the "New Inn" I went in there with him.

6532. Did he say anything to you as you walked along?—I do not think he did.

6533. Just think. Did you and he walk along in dumb silence together. Did you not want to know what you were going to do?—He walked a little faster than I did.

6534. I thought you said he had hold of your arm?—That was going down the stairs.

6535. You and he went on. Did not he tell you to follow him?—That was down the stairs.

6536. What did he say?—I do not think he said anything. I think he said, "Come along with me," or something of that sort.

6537. (Mr. Anstey.) He walked very fast, and what happened?—He walked down the street, and I walked down by the side of him, and I do not think anything passed; and when we got to the "New Inn" we turned in there; and I forget where it was, but I think it was somewhere down the passage that he went over a pair of stairs to a room behind.

6538. (Mr. Price.) You went in?—Yes.

6539. Did he go in?—Yes, and he asked me to come in.

6540. And you followed him in?—Yes; and went upstairs.

6541. That was not the polling booth?—No.

6542. Go on?—When I got to the top of the stairs he said something to the people in the room, I do not know what; he was a little in advance of me. Andrew Allan and George Stacey were in the room. He said something, I do not know what, and he turned round and went out of the room; and George Stacey handed me 10 sovereigns, and I do not think a word passed, and then I left.

6543. Was Andrew Allan there?—Yes, and George Stacey.

6544. Do you mean to say after you left the "Globe" nothing was said to you about your vote?—Not a word.

6545. Not a single word?—No.

6546. Then they did not know that you would go and vote, nor anything?—If I had not met Mr. Jarman I should have gone to poll.

6547. That is not the question. Do you mean to say that neither of those two men, Reed or Lovibond, whichever it was who saw you in the morning, or that Jarman, or Allan, or Stacey, never asked you about your vote?—No. There was not a word said about a vote; I do not think so. I will not swear whether Mr. Jarman said, when he accosted me first, "Have you been to poll?" and I said, "No."

6548. (Mr. Price.) You knew perfectly well, when you saw Jarman, and were walking along with him in this way, that he was going to take you to the "New Inn" to give you money?—I did not know it till I got to the "New Inn."

6549. Have the Conservatives canvassed you in this election?—Yes.

6550. I mean have they offered you money?—No.

SEVENTH DAY.

J. Boucher.

30 Aug. 1869.

6551. Have they spoken to you about money?—No.

6552. Or promised you money?—They said if I would vote for them it would be all right.

6553. Who said that?—I think Mr. Herbert.

6554. Who is he?—Mr. William Herbert.

6555. (Mr. Price.) Was it not after Mr. Herbert had told you if you would vote for the Conservatives it would be right you made up your mind to go and vote?—After that?

6556. Yes?—Oh, it was hours before Mr. Herbert said so.

6557. When did he ask you?—Many times. During the day I had been in conversation with him.

6558. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the last time before you voted?—I could not say.

6559. Was it before or after your dinner?—I think after dinner.

6560. Two o'clock?—Yes. He said that they were not spending any money. If any men would go and vote for Mr. Westropp they would be all right afterwards.

6561. What did you say to him? Did you say that you would not think of taking a bribe for your vote?—I do not know that I did.

6562. Having got this 10*l.* did you go and vote?—I did.

6563. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Jarman you say you followed in this blind confidence without saying a word. What part had Mr. Jarman taken in former elections that led you to follow him wherever he went?—I do not recollect having anything to do with him.

6564. When he called you out and said, "Follow me," what did you imagine he was going to do? Had not you the curiosity to ask him?—I had not.

6565. What did you think he was going to do?—I did not know what he was going to do.

6566. Had you any doubt whatever that he was going to take you down somewhere where you would get money for your vote?—I had no doubt when I came to the door.

6567. But when you left the inn had you any doubt?—I thought it was most likely.

6568. Had he ever done so at any previous election?—No.

6569. Had he given you money?—No.

6570. Had he ever spoken to you about it, or put you in the way of getting it?—No.

6571. What made you think when Mr. Jarman beckoned you down the street that you were going to get money?—When we came to the inn door——

6572. No, no. I ask you whether you had the slightest doubt when you were following down the street without a word being said on either side, before you got to the "New Inn," had you the slightest doubt that you were going to get money somewhere?—I do not think I had any doubt.

6573. What made you feel so confident about it? What was there about Mr. Jarman that made you have this confidence that you would get money if you went with him?—I knew that he was a liberal man.

6574. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not he say it would be all right if you came and polled?—No, I do not recollect anything of the kind.

6575. Did you know that he had bribed at former elections?—I had not knowledge of anything of the kind.

6576. Had you heard it?—I think I might have heard it.

6577. (Mr. Price.) You had heard that he was one of the persons who would take care to see a person paid if he went and voted?—Something to that effect. I would not say precisely.

6578. You went and voted?—Yes.

6579. Was that all you got on that occasion?—Yes.

6580. Are you quite sure?—Yes.

6581. Did you go and have some drink?—No, I never drink.

6582. You went nowhere with anybody else?—No.

6583. Was that all the part you took in the 1868 election?—That was all.

6584. Do you know of anybody who received 10*l.* in the same way as yourself?—I do not know.

6585. Not one?—I do not recollect.

6586. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had any voter shown you any money he received?—No.

6587. Did nothing whatever, except what you have told us, take place at the "Globe;" that you went upstairs, then Mr. Jarman beckoned you down, and you went away and got 10*l.*?—That was all.

6588. Not a word spoken?—No.

6589. Did you see where Mr. Jarman was coming from in the "Globe" when you first met him?—I met him at the top of the stairs.

6590. Coming from a room?—I think he was.

6591. Did you see into the room?—I do not remember.

6592. Did you see into the room, try and recollect?—I do not recollect.

6593. Did you see Mr. Lovibond there?—No.

6594. Mr. Reed?—No.

6595. Mr. Cook?—No.

6596. You cannot tell us anybody else?—No.

6597. And the only two persons you say at the "New Inn" were Mr. Allan and Mr. Stacey, and Mr. Stacey handed you the money?—Yes.

6598. (Mr. Anstey.) Has anybody told you not to recollect the name of any person who was in that respectable committee-room where all the gentry were—the lawyers and all the great men of the Liberal party? Has anybody told you not to recollect the names?—No.

6599. How is it that you recollect the humble names of Allan and Stacey and Jarman, but do not recollect whether you saw Lovibond or Barham, or Reed or Cook, or even Vanderbyl, at the "Globe," which was his own house, you know, that day?—Allan and Stacey, sir, please to observe, were at the "New Inn" where I had the money.

6600. I want to ask you how is it you did not manage to see these persons if they were there?—I did not go into the room.

6601. But the door was opened, or else Mr. Jarman, without performing a miracle, could not have come out?—Yes, the door was opened, but I met him on the stairs. I did not go into the room.

6602. The same motion that let him out of the room would let in your eyesight upon the people there. Now, tell us whom you saw?—I could not mention one.

6603. Do you mean by you "could not mention" you have given a promise not to mention?—I have not. Nobody has ever asked me.

6604. Did you not see any of the persons?—I saw lots of people there.

6605. Do you mean to say that you did not recognize the face of anyone of the lots of people there?—No.

6606. Did you look away not to see?—No.

6607. You are doing no sort of good by not mentioning the names?—I would state it, whether I recognized one or ten.

6608. Did both Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed come to you that day?—It was but one of them.

6609. At first you said nobody came. Are you quite sure that all the Liberal lawyers in the place did not come to you that day?—Quite sure.

6610. Did Reed come?—I think Mr. Reed.

6611. Did Lovibond?—No.

6612. Did Cook?—No.

6613. Did Barham?—No.

6614. Did Boys?—No.

6615. You are quite certain it was Reed?—I swear as nearly as possibly I can recollect it was Mr. Reed.

6616. Give us Mr. Reed's words as nearly as you can recollect. What was the first thing he said to you when he came in?—He said, "Have you been and polled?" I said, "No." He said "Why don't you go? Every man is a man. We are getting near driven," or something to that effect—"Every man is a man."

6617. What did you say to that?—I told him that

I had almost made up my mind not to poll any more. He said, "Nonsense! make haste and go and poll."

6618. Did he wink at you when he said that?—He did not.

6619. Did he give you any hint that if you made up your mind to go and poll you would find your account in it?—No.

6620. What made you merely, upon his saying "Nonsense," which is not a very promising word, take up your hat and go and poll?—I did not go then.

6621. What did you tell him?—I told him if I polled at all I should poll for the two Liberals, as I always had done.

6622. What did he say?—He said that the sooner I went the better.

6623. (Mr. Price.) The better for you?—No, he did not say that.

6624. (Mr. Anstey.) What more did you say?—Up to the present time I had made up my mind that I would not poll, because it was not a near run.

6625. When he went away was he under the impression produced by you that you were going to poll?—Well, I cannot say; I did not say I would or would not.

6626. You left it doubtful?—I did.

6627. Then did he say anything to you about the "Globe"?—He did not.

6628. How did you know the "Globe" was [the place where you were to find out what was going on? You told us just now that you went into the "Globe" to see how things were going on?—Yes.

6629. What made you go there on your way down to the poll, if he had not told you the "Globe" was the place?—I knew that the "Globe" had been at previous elections.

6630. Then this business of the bribery done at the "Globe" and the "New Inn" in this instance was quite conformable with what had been done at other elections?—I never heard anything about it.

6631. Was it quite conformable with what was done at former elections?—Not in the shape of bribing.

6632. You went into the "Globe" to see how things were going on. What did you go to see?—The state of the poll.

6633. You could have found out that at the very polling booth at which you were going to poll?—I did not know that I could.

6634. If your only object was to know the state of the poll, you could learn it at the same time that you were recording your vote?—I was not sure of that.

6635. Did not you go to the "Globe" for the purpose of finding out how other things were going on besides the state of the poll?—No.

6636. (Mr. Price.) Was the "Globe" in the way to the polling booth?—It was.

6637. (Mr. Anstey.) It was nearly 4 before you polled?—Yes.

6638. You lost time at the "Globe" and the "New Inn"?—No, not much time.

6639. You do not consider it lost time, for you gained 10*l.* by it, but it was within a minute or two of 4 o'clock when you voted?—I should think about 20 minutes.

6640. They had no choice but to bribe you? You would not have given your vote without?—Yes.

6641. (Mr. Price.) Why did not you go straight to the poll? It was half-past three, every vote was of consequence. Why did not you go straight to the poll?—It was only curiosity to see how the poll stood that I went to the "Globe."

6642. (Mr. Anstey.) If you really meant to go to the poll and vote whether you got the money or not, would you have lost time in running about the streets of Bridgwater at that late hour?—I had to pass before the "Globe" door.

6643. You had not to pass before the "New Inn" door?—Yes, I had.

6644. (Mr. Price.) Was not the list of the poll stuck up outside the "Globe," so that you could have seen it in the street without going inside?—I do not know.

6645. Did you look?—I did not.

6646. Did you ask anybody?—I did not.

6647. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you suppose that if you could keep back the things which you appear to be keeping back it would make us regard the transaction as any less black than it deserves to be regarded?—I do not want to keep back anything.

6648. (Mr. Price.) Do you say that you went in, and never looked to see whether the list with the state of the poll was stuck up outside, and never asked, but that on going in you turned round towards Jarman, came down the stairs with him, and were carried off to the "New Inn" and receive your 10*l.* Do you mean us to believe that you would have voted without that 10*l.*?—I should.

6649. Now, that being the state of things at the 1868 election, let us know what you did in 1866, Vanderbyl's election. You were employed, we understand, by Mr. White to bribe. How much money did you get from Mr. White?—60*l.*

6650. All in cash?—In 10*l.* packages.

6651. Tell us whom you paid that to, what you did with that 60*l.*?

(Mr. Price, to Mr. White.) Mr. White, give him that account of yours that you had in your hand this morning, that list. (Paper handed by Mr. White to the witness.)

6652. (Mr. Coleridge.) The next?—I think it is James Dabinet.

6653. How much?—10*l.*

6654. Yes?—Scott.

6655. His christian name?—I do not know.

6656. 10*l.*?—Yes.

6657. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he a dissenting minister or not?—Not that ever I heard.

6658. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well?—Virgin.

6659. (Mr. Price.) At the "Forester's Arms"?—Yes.

6660. (Mr. Coleridge.) 10*l.*?—Yes.

6661. What is his christian name?—I do not know.

6662. Yes?—James Turner.

6664. And 10*l.* for yourself?—No.

6665. (Mr. Price.) Is Turner the same man who received 15*l.* from Mr. Bussell?—No, I should think not.

6666. What is his christian name?—James Turner, carpenter, Polden Street.

6667. Is that the same Turner?—I do not know; I understand there are two on the list.

(Mr. Price, to Mr. Bussell.) According to your account, Mr. Bussell, you gave a man of the name of Turner 15*l.*?

(Mr. Bussell.) He is a draper.

(Mr. Price, to witness.) Then go on.

(Witness.) Joseph Reed, 10*l.*

6668. What did Mr. White tell you you were to have for yourself?—Nothing at all.

6669. Did not he promise you anything?—Yes, I was to poll on trust.

6670. You did not get, then, two forties from him?—No.

6671. How many men do you say you bribed?—Six men.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Six men 10*l.* each?

6672. (Mr. Price.) Did you bribe Torr?—No.

6673. Dabinet you did?—Yes.

6674. Virgin you did?—Yes.

6675. Turner you did?—Yes.

6676. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this all on the polling day?—Yes.

6677. Did you pay them before you polled them?—I paid Scott before he went to poll.

6678. Did you poll them yourself?—I did not poll Scott. I polled all the rest.

6679. Did you give Torr's name to Mr. White as one of these?—I am quite sure I did not.

6680. You did give him Scott?—I did.

6681. Is Torr a dissenting minister?—Yes.

6682. A local preacher and a tailor?—Yes.

SEVENTH DAY.

J. Boucher.

30 Aug. 1869.

6683. You are sure you did not pay him any money?—Yes.

6684. Did you get 10*l.* for yourself?—I did, a long time after.

6685. In what form did you get the 10*l.* for yourself?—I think that was the 10*l.*—— (A pause.)

(Mr. Coleridge.) Come!

(Witness.) I was endeavouring to distinguish between two. There is 10*l.* which Mr. White says he gave me a cheque for, but I could not recollect in my mind that he did give me a cheque for 10*l.*

6686. 9*l.* 15*s.* do you recollect his giving you a cheque for?—No, it was not me.

6687. Oh no, it was Gilbert; quite right?—Some time after the election he paid me. I kept on asking Mr. White. I said, "You promised that I should have 10*l.* for my vote, but I have not had it." "Well," he says, "you must wait a bit; you shall have it by-and-by."

6688. How long after the election was it that you got it?—I should think, as far as my recollection serves me, that it must have been quite three months.

6689. Not so early as the 3rd of August?—No.

6690. Have you any recollection of cashing a cheque of Mr. White?—No. I asked Mr. White many times for the 10*l.* He kept on putting me off. He said he was hard driven for money. I said, "You cannot be hard driven for that money because you have had it." He said, "I have not had it, but I will try to get it for you."

6691. (Mr. Price.) Had you heard what amount of money Mr. White had had entrusted to him for bribing purposes?—No, I did not.

6692. How did you know he had had that money?—I supposed so because he said that he should be paid.

6693. You challenged him with having it, and he said that he had not received it?—Yes.

6694. (Mr. Coleridge.) If you were not paid by him till three months after the election, what would the cheque which appears in his book as having been paid you for 10*l.* a fortnight after the election be? Had you two 10*l.* from him?—No, it must have been much longer than that.

6695. It appears in his banker's book as the 3rd of August, 10*l.* to you?—I did not get the money so soon, 6696. How long after that did you get the money?—Quite three months after the election.

6697. (Mr. Price.) About October or November?—Yes.

6698. Was it in a cheque?—I have told you the nearest I can bring to mind.

6699. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you receive it?—I think he brought it to me.

6700. To your house?—I think so.

6701. Do you think he brought it in gold?—I think he brought it in gold, because I recollect asking so many times for the money. I threatened that if he did not pay me I would go and acquaint the lawyers, and he was very insulting, and I did go to the lawyers.

6702. Whom did you go to?—I told Mr. Cook that I had heard that Mr. White had 10*l.* for me at the last election, and I had not had it. He said, "I know nothing about money matters; if Mr. White promised you 10*l.* you had better go to Mr. White." I said, "Will you allow me to make use of your name?" and I think he said, "You can if you like."

6703. What did you do next?—From Cook's office I went to White's office.

6704. (Mr. Price.) When was this, three months after the election?—I should think quite three months.

6705. You went from Mr. Cook's to Mr. White's?—Yes.

6706. Now tell us what passed?—I went to Mr. White's office. He was there alone. I said, "I want my 10*l.* that you promised me." I said, "I have seen Mr. Cook; he told me I was to come to you for it." I think he put his hand in his breast pocket and took out his cheque book, and he was about to draw a cheque for the money, and then he put down the book again, and sat back in his chair and said, "I won't give you a cheque for it now." I said, "Why not?" "Because I won't," he said. I said, "Why not give me a cheque for it? You have had the money." And he faltered and hesitated a long time about it.

6707. He did not deny having had the money?—He did not.

6708. Never?—No.

6709. Very well. Now go on?—I beg to correct that. He said to me once or twice, when I asked him, he had not had it. He would try to get it.

6710. That was in the first instance, but when you went to him this day after going to Mr. Cook, and challenged him with having received it, did he then say he had not had it?—No; after hesitating some time he closed the cheque book again, and he said he would see me with the money; so he brought it to my house either the same evening or the next day; but I am under the impression it was in gold.

6711. By whom was it brought?—I believe he brought it himself.

6712. Was anybody present when it was brought to you?—I have not the slightest recollection.

6713. To the best of your belief it was three months after the election, and in the shape of coin?—Yes.

6714. Does that enable you to say you remember the transaction about the cheque, and he said he would not give it to you?—Yes, he said he could not.

6715. Have you a clear recollection of that?—Yes, I have.

6716. (Mr. Anstey.) He said he could not what?—He said he could not give a cheque for it. I asked his reason why. He said perhaps it would be regarded as having to do with the election, bribe money, if I got it at the bank.

6717. Had he given you any cheque early in August?—I do not remember.

6718. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you received any money from him besides this 60*l.* between the election and the time of receiving the 10*l.* three months after?—I received the money for another voter.

6719. (Mr. Anstey.) Who brought you the 10*l.* in gold?—I think it was Mr. White himself.

6720. (Mr. Price.) Did he say anything when he brought it to you?—I do not recollect any other conversation.

6721. Who was this other voter that you say you had some money from White to pay?—A man of the name of John Sutcliffe.

6722. When did you get that money?—I polled Sutcliffe without money. Mr. White told me that I was to poll as many as I could without money; he did not know what money he might want, consequently John Sutcliffe went without his money; but I told him that Mr. White had told me that the money would be forthcoming for certain.

6723. When did you pay him?—I asked Mr. White several times after the polling day for Sutcliffe's money.

6724. Did you give him the name of Sutcliffe?—I did.

6725. As a man to whom you had promised money and had polled?—Yes.

6726. When you rendered your account?—Yes.

6727. When did he pay you for that?—Something like a week after. After my asking him a great many times he gave me five sovereigns, and he said, "You "take that to Sutcliffe and give it to him, and I will "make the rest right with him myself. He owes me "an account for hay. I shall make myself right with "him. I must make myself right whilst I have the "chance."

6728. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then he did not give you that in the form of a 10*l.* cheque?—No.

6729. We are told there was that 20*l.* which is said to be unaccounted for as between the money received from Andrew Allan by White, and the money accounted for by White. When did you hear of this money being missing?—The day after the polling day.

6730. Whom did you first hear it from?—From White himself.

6731. At that time you had not had your own 10*l.*, and you had only had the 5*l.* for Sutcliffe?—I had not had the 5*l.* for Sutcliffe then.

6732. Tell us what he said about it?—He said, "I am 20*l.* short in my account."

6733. Had you given your account to him then?—No. He asked me for the list, and I gave him the same list as I had polled the men from; and he said he would take it home, and he did. I saw him again afterwards. I says, "Is it all right?" He says, "No, I cannot make it come right." "Well," I said, "you know very well there is no mistake about what I had," and I refreshed his memory as to how I had the money. I fetched the money. Mr. White says he brought me the money. It is no such thing, I fetched the money at his house. First he gave me two packets of 10*l.* each, with them I paid the first two men. I went again to his house, and then I had four packets.

6734. Was anybody present?—I think not.

6735. (Mr. Price.) You called it to his mind?—I said, "You know I came over first and you gave me two packets."

6736. This was the next day?—The very next morning. And then I had, secondly, four packets, which made 60*l.* That was all the money I had, and the only times I went to his house for money.

6737. The first time you told him of this what did he say?—He said, "I do not know how it is, I am 20*l.* too short." I said, "You know very well that I can-" "not have had it; there cannot be very much mistake "about six packages of money."

6738. Did you decline to furnish him with any of the names to whom you said you had given money?—I gave him all the names correctly.

6739. You kept back no names?—No.

6740. Did you give away these 10*l.* packets of gold without opening them?—Yes.

6741. Every one of them?—There was one opened by accident. I think I said I paid them all the same day, but I did not. I carried in Virgin's the next day.

6742. Virgin is dead?—That I believe was open. I would not be sure.

6743. That happened to open, and you saw it was 10*l.*?—His wife is living, and she took the money.

6744. What further occurred when you gave Mr. White the names? Having given him the names, he said, "Well, then, I cannot make it out." He was 20*l.* short. What else passed?—Then he left again. He left my house. Whether it was the same day or the next I do not know; I think it was the next day; he came down again, and he still said he was 20*l.* minus.

6745. Did he tell you on either of these occasions how much he had received?—He did not.

6746. (Mr. Coleridge.) The second day after the poll he came again. Did you have a row then?—We did.

6747. Tell us about that?—He said he was 20*l.* minus. I got very much annoyed with him. I thought whether he had an idea or was insinuating that I had the money. I told him he must be satisfied in his own mind that I had not had the money. He said he could not recollect whether I had or not; he could not recollect how many packages I had, and so on. I told him he must recollect clearly what he gave me.

6748. Who was present? Was your wife there?—I would not be sure as to that.

6749. Was anybody present?—I do not think there was.

6750. Was your wife within hearing?—She would be in the next room.

6751. You say there was a row. If there had been loud voices would she have heard them?—Yes, I think she would. It was in the shop.

6752. (Mr. Price.) How did it end, then? Was that all that took place that day, this dispute?—Yes, it was. I told him positively and decidedly that he knew I had not got the money; and he saw I was very much annoyed and very much insulted.

6753. Were you his tenant?—I was.

6754. Were you owing him any money then?—Well, I think not. I do not think there was any rent due then.

6755. He said he had advanced money to you from time to time. Had he done so?—Not then.

6756. Did you see Andrew Allan about the matter?—I did not.

6757. You never took any further steps?—I will speak positively about that point, that we never spoke to one another about the matter from that day to this; and I never knew but what the 20*l.* had been accounted for till I heard Andrew Allan say he was 20*l.* minus.

6758. Were you on bad terms with him after this matter?—I did not speak to him for some time.

6759. When did you make up the difference? When did he begin to visit you again and come to your house?—It might have been some three or four or four or five months before we got on speaking terms.

6760. (Mr. Coleridge.) He had paid you in the meantime?—Oh, yes; he paid me the 10*l.*

6761. But that did not heal the quarrel at once?—Oh, I think——

6762. (Mr. Price.) Was nothing whatever said about the 20*l.* then?—Not a word.

6763. Not a word about keeping it back and your being wrong in that 20*l.*?—No.

6764. He never mentioned this deficiency?—No.

6765. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you swear distinctly and positively that he did not give you a cheque for 10*l.* some time in the first week in August?—I could not swear to that.

6766. If he did it would be another 10*l.*, because the 10*l.* you got from him for voting you say was paid three months after the election?—Yes.

6767. On the 3d August he says he paid you a cheque for 10*l.* Is that true or is it not?—I am under the impression that the 10*l.* paid me for the vote was not in a cheque.

6768. You have told us that. Can you distinctly swear that you did not in less than three weeks after the election receive a cheque for 10*l.* from him? Can you swear that distinctly?—I cannot swear.

6769. (Mr. Price.) But if you did, what would it be for?—I was going to say that if I did receive a cheque for 10*l.* from him, it was in this way. I had been in the habit, when making up an amount, if I was a few pounds deficient I would ask him to lend me a few pounds. If I had 6*l.* or 8*l.* and wanted 10*l.*, I would give him what I had and ask him for a cheque for 10*l.*, and he would do it.

6770. You were in the habit of cashing cheques of Mr. White?—Yes.

6771. You are quite sure that cheque was not for your vote?—It could not have been for my vote.

6772. But was it for your vote? This is a serious matter. Here is a payment to your name, by cheque on the 3d of August, of 10*l.* Are you perfectly certain that what you have told us is correct, that you did not get the 10*l.* for your vote till three months after?—I am sure I did not get it within three weeks of the time.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get it in the month of August?

6773. (Mr. Price.) Did you get it in August?—I could not say.

6774. The end of August would only bring it to six weeks. If you got it then, you got it within six weeks of the election. Would you swear you did not get it in August?—I cannot swear positively.

6775. You told us distinctly that you are certain that the money which was paid for your vote was paid you in sovereigns and brought to your house by Mr. White, and that what makes you recollect it is, that he pulled out his cheque book and was about drawing out a cheque, and then said, "Oh, I won't give you a cheque, because it would appear like bribe money"?—Yes; I believe that the cheque was not for the vote. I believe he brought it in gold. That cheque must have been had in the way I speak of.

SEVENTH DAY.

J. Boucher.

30 Aug. 1869.

6776. To the best of your belief you have stated the truth when you say that the 10*l.* which you got for your bribe was paid in cash by Mr. White himself?—I did.

6777. And that when you asked him for it he was about to draw a cheque, and then said no, he would not, because it might appear like bribery?—Yes.

6778. You are clear about that?—To the best of my belief.

6779. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there any other Boucher?—No.

6780. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember his filling up a cheque when he was hesitating whether he should give you a cheque or not? You know he took the book out of his bosom. May it not have been that he filled up a cheque payable to somebody or other, and did not give it to you?—No; he did not fill up a cheque, I think, because he put it into his pocket again, and I felt very much disappointed. I thought I was going to have the money.

6781. (Mr. Price.) Should you think that was as late as October?—I think it must have been very near that time.

6782. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know his handwriting?—Well, I do not think I could swear to his handwriting.

6783. I do not want you to look at any other part of this book. Just look at that one leaf there, the first. I do not want you to open all the counterfoils. Look at that one. Is that White's handwriting? (The counterfoil end of an old cheque book was passed to the witness.) Well, I could not say, sir. I could not say for certain.

6784. What bank was this on which he was going to give you a cheque? Do you know?—I really do not recollect.

(Mr. Anstey.) I must ask you, Mr. White; you speak of having paid people in cheques. Who is your banker?

(Mr. White.) Captain Ford, West of England bank.

(Mr. Anstey.) You name the manager of the bank, and you call him your banker, instead of naming the bank.

6785. (Mr. Price, to witness.) Well, that is your recollection, is it, of the matter?—Yes.

6786. As clear as you can bring your mind to bear upon it?—Yes.

6787. Well, that being so, you say that you never heard of any dispute about this 20*l.*, as between Allan and Mr. White, with the single exception of the day when Mr. White spoke to you about it on two occasions?—That is all.

6788. And you believed it had been all settled until you heard it stated in the box?—Yes.

6789. It is due for me now to put this question to you. Will you solemnly swear that you did not take any 20*l.* that you received for bribery at that election and put into your own pocket?—I do.

6790. That you swear solemnly?—I do.

6791. Nor have you kept back any name of any person to whom you gave money?—No.

6792. And the account you have given of the disposition of this 60*l.* is true?—Yes.

6793. And the people can be got at to vouch for your statement?—Yes.

6794. With the exception of Virgin, whose widow saw the money paid the day after?—Yes.

6795. Do you know whether or not any of those different persons whom you have mentioned had received money from anybody else at that election?—During that same election?

6796. Yes?—I heard, I do not know whether it is true.

6797. Tell us what you heard?—I heard that Scott drew another 5*l.*

6798. Whom from?—Allow me to say I paid Scott before he went to the poll.

6799. You gave him 10*l.*?—I gave him 10*l.* in his own house in the morning.

6800. I think you said he was not a dissenting minister?—No.

6801. What is he?—He is a brickyard labourer.

6802. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he in Bridgwater now?—Yes.

6803. What is his christian name?—I not know. He lives in Wellington Road. I was going to say that he promised me for certain that he would go and poll in his dinner hour; he did not want to lose any time, consequently I paid him the 10*l.* His wife had said he should not go to poll until she had the money; and I paid him early in the morning with the understanding that he should go to poll at dinner time, in his dinner hour. I heard in the after part of the same day that he would not go to poll before he had another 5*l.*, and if I recollect rightly the man's name was given to me who paid him another 5*l.* It was Mr. Bulpin.

6804. Charles Bulpin?—I do not know his christian name. I never taxed Scott with it. It was only reported to me.

6805. Is that the only instance that you know of these men that you gave money to where they have been said to have received their money again?—That is the only instance.

6806. Are there any of those that you have mentioned who you have heard received money from the other side at that election?—No.

6807. Were these men persons who you knew would take bribes?—Yes.

6808. What is Mr. Dabinet?—He is a boot and shoe maker.

6809. A master shoemaker?—No.

6810. A working shoemaker?—Yes.

6811. What was Virgin? The keeper of the "Foresters' Arms?"—Yes.

6812. Was he a shoemaker as well?—No.

6813. Scott you have told us was a brickyard labourer?—Yes.

6814. What was Turner?—A carpenter.

6815. A working man or master?—A working man.

6816. What were the others?—Hatch was a shoemaker.

6817. A working shoemaker?—Yes.

6818. You are a master?—Yes.

6819. Do any of these men work for you?—No; they have made an occasional pair for me, but never work for me regularly.

6820. How many men do you generally keep in your employ as a master shoemaker?—At that time I suppose I had seven or eight.

6821. In constant employment?—Yes.

6822. Then we may take it you were doing a very good trade?—I do not know about "very good." I was getting a living.

6823. Do you mean to say you were only getting a living?—Yes, that was all. I have a very long family. I have eight children.

6824. Do you know of anything that took place on the other side with regard to money paid that day?—No, I do not know that I knew anything.

6825. You cannot tell us anything of the kind?—No, I am sure I cannot.

6826. Had you been ever employed before at any other election to do the bribing business?—No.

6827. How was it that you came to be selected on this occasion?—I suppose it arose from the fact of my living under Mr. White, and he had a good deal to do with it.

6828. A good deal to do with what?—Bribery.

6829. Because you lived under Mr. White therefore Mr. White had a right to suppose you would go and do bribing for the party?—First of all Mr. White asked me if I would canvass the men for him. He came and showed me the list.

6830. Are you quite sure you were not under any money obligation to Mr. White, in the way you have told us?—No, not the least. I do not believe I was.

6831. You have told us that on the 3d August you might have had this 10*l.* cheque for the purpose of making up a sum of money to 10*l.* Are you quite sure that nothing of that kind was the state of things between you when he proposed for you to become a briber?—I am sure I have no recollection of the matter at all.

6832. Had he dealt with you in the way of your business?—Yes.

6833. And you were his tenant. Perhaps you owed him rent?—I do not think I did.

6834. Has he forgiven you any rent?—No.

6835. Has he ever forgiven you any?—No, he is the wrong man.

6836. Had you voted at previous elections?—At Bagehot's.

6837. Had you taken any money at Bagehot's election?—Yes.

6838. Did he know that?—Yes.

6839. Who gave it to you?—Mr. White.

6840. He has sworn that he had nothing to do with giving money at Bagehot's election. How much did he give you?—10*l.*

6841. Where?—It was allowed out in rent some three or four months after the election.

6842. Did he allow it out of his own pocket?—Not likely.

6843. Why do you say "not likely"?—Because I am sure he would not do it; I am sure he had the money.

6844. Did you hear at that time that he had money entrusted to him to bribe with?—I did.

6845. How much in that election?—Not in that particular election. I heard that he was a man who was always in the habit of having money for the purpose.

6846. Was it early, or in what part of Bagehot's election did he allow it out in rent?

6847. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who canvassed for your vote?—I was living in his house.

6848. (Mr. Price.) You were his tenant?—Yes.

6849. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the rent?—20*l.* a year.

6850. (Mr. Price.) How came you to have this bargain with him for your vote that you were to have 10*l.* allowed?—He had the list of names whom he polled, and I was down on that list, and as I was on his list I was put down for a payment for which of course he got the money.

6851. What was put down to your name?—10*l.*

6852. How did you know that?—He promised it.

6853. Was that before the elcction?—Well, I think it was polling day.

6854. And did not he tell you to go to Andrew Allan?—No.

6855. Well now, go on?—I went to poll on the faith of having 10*l.* of him.

6856. What time did you poll?—I do not recollect.

6857. Late or early?—I think somewhere about 10 o'clock in the morning.

6858. You polled on the faith of the 10*l.* When did you next ask him for it?—The week after the election.

6859. What did he say?—He said he could not pay me.

6860. Why?—He said he had not had it.

6861. How often did you ask him for it after that?—I might have asked him for it ten or a dozen times, perhaps more.

6862. Did he always say the same?—He said he had not had it.

6863. Eventually you did get it?—I asked him once or twice. I said, "If you have not had it, as I want money perhaps you will advance it for me. You say you are quite sure to get it;" and he said he could not do that. I told him I wanted money. I had bills to pay occasionally, and I wanted money. He promised me the 10*l.*, and I was depending upon that to help me.

6864. What time of the year was it that you owed him 10*l.* rent?—It would be coming due next quarter.

6865. When it became due did he allow you for it as rent?—Yes.

6866. Did he give you a receipt?—Yes.

6867. Have you got it?—Yes, I have got it.

6868. (Mr. Anstey.) Which of you proposed the allowing it out of the rent?—When rent day came I reminded him again of the 10*l.*, and I told him I should stop it out of the rent.

6869. What did he say?—He allowed me to do so.

6870. (Mr. Price.) You said, "I will stop it out of the rent," and he said, "Very well, you shall"?—Yes. He gave me the receipt.

6871. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know of his having received money to pay away at that election of Bagehot?—I did not.

6872. Did you know anybody that he paid besides you?—No, I did not.

6873. (Mr. Price.) You have not heard of it?—I have not heard of it.

6874. That was the way in which you say he came to you or asked you in the second election of 1866 to undertake to bribe?—Yes.

6875. At Vanderbyl's election you became a briber. At Bagehot's election you were only bribed. At Vanderbyl's you became a briber as well as a bribed man. You took it both ways. Was it in consequence of his finding that you would take money for your vote at a former election that he asked you if you would go and give other people money?—It might have been; I will give you the conversation. He asked me if I would help him bring these men up to the poll.

6876. Did he mention the names? Did he show you the list?—Yes.

6877. Those names which you have given us?—Yes, and some others. I told him I would. Then afterward, after I promised that I would canvass the men and try to bring them to poll, then he said, "You might as well pay them too." I told him I did not mind doing that.

6878. That was the way you were employed on that occasion?—It was.

6879. Well now, then is that all. You have made some very important statements, you know. Is that all that you can tell us with regard to the part that was taken by you in Vanderbyl's election of 1866 in conjunction with Mr. White, or is there anything more about it, because you are bound to tell us everything?—All that I did at that election was to try and bring men up to the poll.

6880. At Vanderbyl's election, when you were a briber, have you told us all that took place on money matters?—I was going to remark on the name of Torr.

6881. Torr is one of the names that Mr. White has returned as one that you gave to him. Now, I understood you to say you did not give him Torr's name?—Mr. Torr was one of the men in the list which I was to get to poll. I went to Mr. Torr and asked him if he would come to poll for us. I believe he always had been upon the Liberal side before. Mr. Torr said that he always understood that everybody else, or nearly everybody else, had had money.

6882. In Bridgwater?—Yes. It was a general report, and he did not see why he should not have money too. He said that he never had had any, but he did not see why he should not. I told him that I had no hands with the money myself, but I was only acting for Mr. White.

6883. Is Torr a master tailor?—Him and his son together.

6884. He is a master tailor?—Yes.

6885. And a local preacher?—Yes. I told him that I would tell Mr. White; I should give in his name as one who expected money. I reported so to Mr. White. Mr. White said, "He did not have money before." I said, "He tells me so, but he expects some; he does not see why he should not have some as well as other people." He said, "Try and get him to poll without, and we will pay him afterwards." I said, "Shall I poll him on the faith of your word?" and he said, "Yes. He shall have 10*l.* if you will poll him." And I went and told Mr. Torr that Mr. White had promised that he should have 10*l.* after the election, and the old gentleman went to poll on that promise. After the election was over I asked Mr. White for the 10*l.* I returned his name as one that had not been paid. Mr.

SEVENTH DAY.

J. Boucher.

30 Aug. 1869.

White said, "I have not got the money." I said, "You can get the money. He expects the money from me." "Besides," Mr. White said, "he did not ought to have the money. He never has had money." I said, "That "has nothing to do with you. I shall expect you to "get it. I promised the man, and he expects me to "get the money." Mr. Torr came to me ten or a dozen times, and asked me if I had heard from Mr. White. I knew what he meant. I held out a hope to Mr. Torr for weeks or months that Mr. White was promising me to get the money for him; and I had asked Mr. White for the money times without number, till finally I met Mr. White in Edward Street. When I saw him coming I thought I would ask him again for Torr's money.

6886. When was that?—I should think that must have been two or three months after the election. I met Mr. White in Edward Street, and I said, "Now, "Mr. White, are you going to let me have the money "for Mr. Torr?" and he said, "No." I said, "You did "not mean to pay him, for you certainly must have had "the money." He said, "I have not, for I cannot get "it." I said, "Why did you promise the man?" I said "We cannot get men to go to the poll again on "promise. Be decided with the men. Tell them "either that you mean to pay them or you don't mean "to pay them." I said, "What shall I tell Mr. Torr?" He said, "Tell him to go to hell and be damned." I said, "Is that your answer?" He said, "Yes." I never asked him for the money afterwards.

6887. Have you had any conversation with Torr about it?—I have told Torr time after time, time after time, that I had asked Mr. White for the money, but I have never told Mr. Torr, I believe, the last message that was sent.

6888. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not that civil message?—No.

6889. (Mr. Anstey.) Has Torr never had the money?—No.

6890. Not only never had the money, but has been positively and peremptorily and rudely refused the money?—He has.

6891. Therefore it is impossible that White can have made any mistake about this if what you are stating is true?—He cannot have made any mistake.

6892. You say you never did give him Torr's name as having been paid 10*l.*?—Never.

6893. Then if that 10*l.* is to be added to the other 30*l.* this makes 40*l.* Did you know anything about the 10*l.* that he had paid to Bottomley?—I never heard anything about it till I heard it in court.

6894. Suppose Mr. White has kept back 40*l.* of the money which he had, has he or has he not received something like 10*l.* more than the highest bribed voter out of that lot, which is Mr. Powell, who received 30*l.* If he has kept back this 40*l.* he has received 10*l.* to himself more than the highest bribed voter on that occasion?—I should think it is very likely.

6895. (Mr. Price.) You think it is likely he has?—I should think so. That is his general character.

6896. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there any room for a mistake? Is it possible that Mr. White can have made an honest mistake in this matter; or do you mean to swear that he has falsely sworn to what he has deposed to-day?—I mean to say that he has deliberately sworn false.

6897. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last see Mr. White to speak to him?—He has been coming to and fro to my house for some time.

6898. Was the last time Friday or Saturday?—That he called on me?

6899. Yes?—On Friday evening.

6900. Who was present?—Mr. Chant was standing at the door.

6901. Were you at the door?—I was.

6902. Who first spoke, you or White?—I think Mr. White spoke. I saw him coming by the window. He came up looking very smiling and good-tempered, and he said, "I have come down to speak to you." I said, "If you come inside my shop door I will kick your backside." He did not take that as an answer, but he still smiled and said, "We had better see about putting those two accounts together." I said, "You "vagabond, how did you dare to go up before the Com-"missioners and before the public, and say that I had "stuck to 20*l.*?"

6903. Did he hear you out?—Yes.

6904. Then did he make any answer?—No, he began to walk off.

6905. You are sure he heard all that complimentary language first?—Yes, I am sure he did.

6906. Is Chant in court to-day?—No.

6907. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the name of the other man who was there?—I do not recollect the second man.

6908. He said there was another man there, not a stranger, but a man whose name he does not recollect. He has forgotten in the interval between Friday night and to-day?—I do not recollect any other man.

6909. (Mr. Price.) Where does Chant live?—The very next shop to mine.

6910. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell us any other tens of pounds which Mr. White has taken credit for paying, but which he has pocketed?—I do not remember any other.

6911. (Mr. Price.) Is it not true that there is a strong feeling amongst the humbler class of voters in this town that those who have had the distribution of the money have stuck to it in many instances?—It is.

6912. It is the impression?—It is.

6913. Has that grown up from any accounts that have come out either at the last election inquiry or at any previous election inquiry, the accounts that have been given of the sums spent. They have seen, you know, the account of the sums spent, and they know what they have received, and therefore they have found that all the money has not gone in bribery?—I think it might have arisen from that.

6914. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the next time before this time that you told him you would kick him out of the shop; when had you seen him before in the shop to speak to him. During the last week had you seen him?—Yes.

6915. Had you had any conversation with him about these matters?—Not a word.

6916. When was the first time you had any conversation with him about this inquiry?—I do not think that ever we have mentioned it.

6917. How long since you got upon good terms again since that election when you fell out?—We were not bad friends not about two or three months.

6918. After he paid you the money you were pretty good friends?—We have been.

6919. From that time to the present you have been on good terms?—No, we fell out after that, after I left his house.

6920. Why did you leave his house?—The reason I left his house was because the wet came in the shop window and spoilt the goods.

6921. Did you pay him his rent?—I paid him his rent. What we fell out finally about was he had told some people that I owed him 20*l.* for rent.

6922. Then you had a quarrel with him. How long had you been on good terms with him up to the time of your threatening to kick him out of your shop?—From a few weeks after the election up to the time I left his house. Then from what he said about me then we were not friends for eight or ten months.

6923. For the last half year have you been on good terms?—Yes.

6924. Was the first time you mentioned this inquiry to him that day when he came up to your shop and asked you to go through the accounts?—Yes.

6925. During the last week have you been on sufficiently good terms to make up the accounts if he liked?—Oh, yes, I have bought goods from him and done business with him.

6926. He has told us that the reason he could not do it was that he was not on good terms with you?—It is a lie. He came in only the week before last.

Why I bought some cabbages of him, and I had bought them before.

6927. You had not any political conversation then?—No.

6928. Have you ever received anything for voting at a municipal election?—No.

6929. Not a farthing?—No.

6930. No beer?—No, I never drink it.

6931. Do you know whether it is the system to pay voters at municipal elections?—I do not know, I never mix up in them.

6932. You are a voter?—Yes.

6933. You never take any part in them?—No.

6934. There is no money going?—Not that I ever heard.

6935. Did you vote in 1865?—No.

6936. Why?—I had not got a vote.

6937. Did you have anything to do at that election as a messenger or runner?—No.

6938. In 1859 had you a vote?—No.

6939. The first time you ever voted was the first election of 1866?—Bagehot's.

6940. Then you got 10*l.* in coin; the next election you got 10*l.* in coin; and at the last election you got 10*l.* again?—Yes.

6941. (Mr. Price.) Were any payments made with regard to your rent or rates? Is there any system of paying a voter's rates for him to keep him on the register?—Not that I am aware of.

6942. Has there ever been?—No.

6943. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know the time the revising barrister generally comes to revise the lists here, Mr. Slade?—I do not.

6944. You never attend the revising court?—No.

6945. Have you given us a full disclosure of all the part you took in the election of 1868, and the two of 1866?—I have.

6946. Is there any other information respecting the part you took or the part taken by others, of which you know nothing, that you can give us any history of?—Nothing that occurs to me now.

6947. (Mr. Anstey.) Take care and bring us the receipt you have for your rent on the occasion of which you spoke, namely, when the amount of your bribe was allowed you by Mr. White in your rent?—I will bring it to-morrow.

6948. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that receipt of the usual form, or was there any memorandum of the circumstance?—The usual form.

6949. (Mr. Price.) When you say that you think with regard to this 10*l.* cheque it must have been that you took 6*l.* or 8*l.*, that he added the difference and gave you a cheque; did he take any memorandum or I O U, or anything of that kind?—Always; he never lent money without.

6950. According to that, if that was a transaction of this kind, this 10*l.* is the 3rd August; he would have a memorandum of it, that he would make you sign if there was one?—He would always enter it in a pocket book he kept.

6951. Did he make you sign it so as to show you had the money?—Yes, always.

6952. Can you say whether you have ever paid him back any sum, any balance at any time?—I could not speak of any particular time.

6953. Were you often having these money transactions with him?—No, not very often.

6954. When you paid back anything did you see him scratch out of his book your name?—No.

6955. What then?—He would take an I O U, and I would sign it, and then he would give it up to me.

6956. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any of those I O U's?—No, I have not. I used to tear it up at once.

6957. Are you aware that with all these transactions you have spoken of this is the only time that your name appears in this book, which extends from 1864 to 1868? Do you think there was any other time that he gave you a cheque except this time, if he did give you one then?—Yes, I think so. I have had two or three in that way of him.

6958. (Mr. Price.) Would they be filled up in your name, or "self," or "bearer," or what?—"Pay to the bearer."

6959. Would your name be filled in?—No, it would not be filled in.

6960. (Mr. Anstey.) That is what I asked just now?—I did not understand that.

6961. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he make it payable to order or to bearer, generally had you to sign your name?—I did not get it cashed. If I got a cheque it was to send away somewhere.

6962. (Mr. Anstey.) Used you before you sent it to endorse it?—Without endorsing it.

6963. (Mr. Price.) You sent it in the way of payment of goods?—Yes.

6964. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is only fair to state that I am under a misunderstanding here, that Boucher's name does appear more than once. There is, "October, 10*l.*," and "November, 5*l.*" Those are the only two?—I fancy I have a recollection of a larger sum than that.

6965. (Mr. Coleridge.) I cannot find it. Is there a man of the name of Bowditch in the town?—There might have been.

6966. (Mr. Price.) October, 10*l.*, and November, 5*l.*; do you think there is still a larger sum?—I fancied there was.

6967. How much do you think?—I fancied I had a cheque of his once of something like 21*l.* on which I paid him 15*l.* or 16*l.* down, and he gave me the balance for the cheque. I am not very clear on that point, but I should have said so if anybody had asked me.

6968. Did he ever do such a thing as pay you a cheque of someone else's which he had received in any way?—No.

6969. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember the occurrence which White was speaking about, the complaint made against him with respect to his receipts of money as collector of Inland Revenue or income tax?—I do not.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled. H. C. Bussell.

6970. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell me on whose recommendation your father was appointed to the highly responsible office which he held in the gaol in 1836; he having distinguished himself in 1832 and 1835 as a practised briber at parliamentary elections?—I do not know.

6971. Do you remember what influence was then paramount, the Liberals or Conservatives?—I believe there was a change, and a new municipal corporation came in, but I have no knowledge of the matter.

6972. Was it after, and in consequence of the transfer of power from the close corporation of Bridgwater to the municipal corporation of Bridgwater under the new Act that he obtained the post in the gaol?—I should think there was a vacancy and he got the appointment.

6973. After that change?—Yes.

6974. (Mr. Price.) Whilst you are there I should like you to tell me, in consequence of information which we have received, what truth or what foundation you think there was for your statement the other day that Colonel Tynte had received 1,000*l.* from Brighton, which he had spent in gambling?—You asked me to say all I had heard, all hearsay, and I gave it to you as hearsay. It was reported at the time, that is all the foundation I had for it. I should not have named it if you had not asked that from me.

6975. Colonel Tynte has written to us, and so it is due to him that we should state it that he indignantly denies those imputations, and says that there is not the slightest foundation for them; and no doubt if he has seen the report he would have seen that it was stated only as what you had heard?—There is no doubt that a large number of parties I named would say it is untrue, but then they must go into the box.

6976. I think you said the same thing to the same extent with regard to some money being supplied by Lady Cooper, his sister?—That was a report, the same as the 1,000*l.* was. I do not know anything of my own knowledge.

W. Heal.

WILLIAM HEAL sworn.

6977. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A manager of a brickyard.

6978. In Bridgwater?—No, at Durston Station.

6979. Have you lived in Bridgwater any time?—Yes, I lived some years prior to my going away.

6980. What were you then?—A brewer.

6981. A master brewer?—Yes.

6982. Employing a good number of men?—One or two.

6983. Had you any what are called public-houses of your own?—Two or three.

6984. When did you cease to be a brewer?—About three or four years ago.

6985. That would be 1866?—About 1866 I should think.

6986. Dtd you then leave the town and go and live where you are now?—No, I went to live at the "Bath Bridge Inn," on the Bath Road.

6987. Leading into Bridgwater?—I did.

6988. When did you leave that?—One or two years ago, not so long as that.

6989. Was your house open at the last election?—Last April twelvemonth.

6990. Was it open for treating at the last election?—I was not here.

6991. Was the inn open; was it your house?—It was not my house.

6992. Who was the occupier of it at the last election?—I do not know.

6993. When did you part with it?—I became bankrupt, and it was taken from me. I was not here at the last election at all.

6994. Now, the election before that, Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866; were you then living at the "Bath Bridge Inn"?—No.

6995. You were then a master brewer?—Yes.

6996. Did the "Bath Bridge Inn" belong to you?—Yes, the "Bath Bridge Inn" did belong to me then.

6997. What other house had you of your own then?—We had a house on the Wemdon Road, out by the "North Pole," the "Compass."

6998. Now, what had been your politics up to that time?—I always was a Liberal.

6999. All your life?—Yes.

7000. Had you always voted for the Liberals?—No, I voted in one case for the Conservatives.

7001. When was that?—At Westropp's election.

7002. That was in 1865, when he was unseated?—Yes.

7003. Did you get any money for it?—I went to London.

7004. Did you get any money for voting for him? I cannot answer that question now at once, but I will come to that by-and-by.

7005. Why cannot you answer that?—Yes, I did get money; I do not want to keep anything back.

7006. Then you did get money at Mr. Westropp's election in 1865, for voting for the Conservatives?—I did.

7007. How much did you get?—200*l.*

7008. Do you mean to say that you got 200*l.* for your vote;—I did, I kept it.

7009. Did you get that 200*l.* for your own vote?—Yes, I kept it for my own vote.

7010. Did you get it for your own vote?—It was given to me to give to others, but I kept it.

7011. Given to you to bribe other people with?—Exactly.

7012. How much was it arranged that you yourself should have?—Nothing at all was ever offered me for that.

7013. Did you ask for anything?—I did not.

7014. What on earth induced you to take 200*l.*; did you promise to distribute it away in bribery?—I did; it was given me for that purpose.

7015. Who gave it you?—I do not know.

7016. Where did you get it?—I got it the night before the election, in Queen Street, in this town.

7017. Where at?—In the part of the street up by the Methodist chapel.

7018. At what house?—No house; it was in the street.

7019. Who gave it you?—I do not know.

7020. A perfect stranger?—A perfect stranger.

7021. What was said?—The money was given to us, and that was all.

7022. Who was with you?—Mr. Jarman.

7023. It was given you to bribe other people, you say?—Yes.

7024. Who made that bargain, that you were to have the money to bribe other people?—I attended a meeting.

7025. Where?—At Mr. Harden's, the baker, who is now keeping the "Golden Ball."

7026. Was that a meeting of Westropp's supporters?—Yes.

7027. How came you to attend that meeting if you are a Liberal?—Because I was promised on a former occasion 40*l.* by a man named Foster.

7028. To do what; what were you bribed for?—For working an election.

7029. Was it for your vote?—No, it was for bribing.

7030. You were promised 40*l.* to go and bribe with?—Yes.

7031. Did you get it then?—I never did get it.

7032. Were you to have nothing for yourself?—Never.

7033. Had you promised men to give them the money?—I gave it them.

7034. Out of your own pocket?—No.

7035. Now, you went to attend this meeting, you say, of Mr. Westropp's supporters, at Frederick Harden's?—Me and Harden, Frederick Temblett, and then a man in the moon, I suppose he was called.

7036. A stranger?—He was an utter stranger to me.

7037. (Mr. Coleridge.) And Jarman?—Yes.

7038. What sort of looking man was this man in the moon?—Well, he was another such a gentleman as you, but was stouter.

7039. Was he dark or fair?—He was a fairish man, as well as I can remember, but in stature he was about your height.

7040. You are sure he was a fair man?—I would not swear it.

7041. Was he disguised?—Not the slightest.

7042. How was he dressed?—Gentlemanly like.

7043. Dark clothes?—Well, I believe he had on dark clothes. I would not be positive, but in every respect he appeared to be a gentleman.

7044. (Mr. Price.) Had you any conversation with him?—Very little.

7045. What did he say?—He wanted in the first place to give me and Jarman about 70*l.* or 80*l.* I believe was the amount, but we told him it was no use; then it was afterwards decided that we should have 500*l.* After a little the gentleman went, and I and Jarman went down into King Street, and I believe that he came from a house—there are two little houses there, where Mr. Reed the missionary lived—and my impression is that he came from one of the houses, not from Mr. Reed's, but my impression is from the neighbourhood there in King Street, and he brought out five packets, and gave me two and Frederick Jarman three packets; then he left us, and never said anything to my knowledge more than that there were two for me and three for Jarman. Then I and Jarman went down along the Quay and walked up as far as the brewery, and Jarman opened one of the packets there and gave me 50*l.* out of it, and I had 250*l.* and Fred Jarman had the same. Then in the morning I went down, and of course you will know I daresay that if a person has done a thing wrong and afterwards repents I think there is forgiveness for it.

7046. Tell us what you did?—I then went home and took 200*l.* from it; in the morning I went down with 50*l.*, and into the "Golden Lion," and it was about 10 minutes or a quarter after eight, and I distributed that 50*l.*, and Jarman brought me his 250*l.*

7047. To whom did you give the 50*l.*? — To parties I did not know. I do not know their names, only two out of the lot, Philip Gilbert was the one came and asked me.

7048. The same one as spoken of by White?—Yes, that is the one, but he had no money.

7049. Who did you give it to? — Philip Gilbert came, and I put 10*l.* into his hand, he wanted 15*l.*; I would not give him 15*l.*, but he returned the money back to me again, and I believe there was a man named Stoodley, an utter stranger to me, all of them.

7050. Do you mean to say that intending to bribe these people with this money you gave it to utter strangers without inquiring who they were, or whether they were voters or not?—Yes, and I will tell you how it was.

7051. (Mr. Anstey.) We may come back to that, or we may not, by-and-by. You have never seen that man since?—Never.

7052. Would you know him again if you saw him? —No.

7053. You mentioned just now 40*l.* that had been promised you by Foster if you would undertake to bribe voters at an election?—I did do it.

7054. Is that the election of 1857?—It was the election that Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett were returned at I believe.

7055. But there were several where they were returned in the election of 1857, which came two years before the election of 1859, and Mr. Kinglake was first returned?—I had nothing whatever to do with it.

7056. With which had you nothing to do?—The one you are speaking of. I am speaking now of Colonel Tynte's and Follett's election, that is the election I was promised 40*l.*

7057. In 1852 you were promised 40*l.* by Foster? —That was by Foster at Tynte and Follett's election.

7058. That money was never paid to you?—Never.

7059. Another election came in 1857, when Mr. Kinglake was returned?—I had nothing to do with that.

7060. Mr. Kinglake lost in 1852, and was elected in 1857. I want to know whether you asked anybody for the payment of the 40*l.* which had been standing over for five years unpaid?—I did.

7061. Who?—Foster.

7062. What did he say?—He refused paying me.

7063. On what ground, did he give you any ground? —Yes, he did.

7064. Tell me what he said?—He told me that he never had the money to pay me.

7065. He did not deny the promise? — Certainly not.

7066. He is now dead?—He is dead.

7067. And have you had that promised to you since by anybody?—No.

7068. From nobody?—No. With regard to being promised the money I have never had a direct promise for it.

7069. (Mr. Price.) In 1857 you say you asked for this money of Foster?—Yes.

7070. Did you vote?—I believe I did.

7071. In 1857 were you not at Gloucester, and had no vote for this place at all?—Not that I am aware of.

7072. When were you at Gloucester; were you ever residing at Gloucester, and had you lost your vote? —Yes, I was in Gloucester two years ago, when I am not sure.

7073. Are you sure it was not 1857?—I am not certain of it.

7074. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a vote for Gloucester?—Certainly not.

7075. In 1852 did you receive any money of Forster at all?—I really do not know.

7076. Yes, you do?—I really cannot tell you.

7077. Try and recollect?—The only money I received of Foster was at the election when Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett was returned, let it be whatever time it was.

7078. Who were the candidates? — Tynte and Follett, I think, and Kinglake and Lord Henley.

7079. You are right, Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett were the two members returned?—Yes.

7080. In 1852, did you get any money from Forster at that election when Tynte and Follett were returned?—Certainly I did.

7081. How much?—Different sums.

7082. How much?—It may be from 100*l.* to 200*l.* I am not certain what it was because it was given me in about 10*l.* and 20*l.*, and as it was given to me so I gave it to the voters.

7083. Did you render an account of that?—Never in my life.

7084. You never rendered any account?—No.

7085. Were you ever accused of being short of 100*l.* by Foster?—No.

7086. Is not that the reason you were refused the 40*l.*?—No, it was the 40*l.*

7087. You were 40*l.* short?—Yes.

7088. And you put that in your own pocket?—No, I was never any money short.

7089. What was it, then?—I was accused of 40*l.* I was told I kept the money, but I did not. There were 10 voters down at Captain Crocker's at the "Fountain," and the 10*l.* were promised if they would bide, and would not go to the poll on the Conservative side, they should be paid each of them 10*l.* after the election was over. I had 60*l.* left, and I applied for 40*l.* to Hasland, who used to work with me, and he put his hand in his pocket and gave me 40*l.*, and I went down to Crocker's and gave 10*l.* each, and that is the way I disposed of it.

7090. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were promised the money not to poll for whom?—Not to poll against the Liberals.

7091. (Mr. Price.) Not to poll for Follett?—Yes.

7092. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you were on the Liberal side then?—I was; but the fact was they did not want to poll at all.

7093. (Mr. Price.) You wanted to bribe them with this money not to vote for Follett?—I did.

7094. We were told that you could give us information of several elections from 1835, to that of 1847, when Colonel Tynte and Mr. Broadwood were the two members?—I never had anything to do with it. I never had a farthing of money at that election.

7095. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote?—No, I think not.

7096. Was your bill paid for treating?—No, I never had any bills for treating.

7097. (Mr. Price.) You took no part in the 1847 election?—I believe I did.

7098. We have been told, and have information about you, therefore you may as well try and clear yourself, that you had to do with several elections from 1835 down to the very last of all. Now about 1847?—I never had anything to do with giving money only on three elections in my life; that was when Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett were returned, when

SEVENTH DAY.

W. Heal.

30 Aug. 1869.

Mr. Westropp was returned, and the last member, Mr. Vanderbyl, was returned.

7099. Did you receive money for your vote?—Never in my life.

7100. Except what you told us?—That is it, except what I kept.

7101. Then you had no money when Colonel Tynte came out with Mr. Broadwood?—No.

7102. You are sure of it?—I am sure of it.

7103. Did you receive money to bribe the others?—I did not.

7104. Was your house opened for treating?—I did not keep a public-house then.

7105. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which side were you at Vanderbyl's election?—On the Liberal side; in fact I did not poll, I was ill and never went out of the room.

7106. At Mr. Vanderbyl's first election in 1866 tell us what you did?—Then I received some money.

7108. Who from?—Andrew Allan.

7109. What did you receive that for?—For bribing.

7110. Whom did you bribe?—I bribed two or three; in fact I gave the money to three.

7111. Give us the names?—I gave William Stone 10*l.*; and I gave Abraham Frost I would not be positive whether 9*l.* or 10*l.*, because my memory I fancy strikes me it was 9*l.* I gave him; and 10*l.* I gave a person named Richard Thomas, and he gave that to a man named Richards, in fact he told me so, and I have no doubt he did.

7112. That is 30*l.*?—That is the 30*l.*; then Symmons brought me 130*l.*

7113. What did you do with the rest of the money?—I could not dispose of it then because I had been ill, and unless I tell you the circumstance I could not bring round the other; I met with a misfortune in falling down, and was ill for three weeks or a month.

7114. (Mr. Coleridge.) What day was it that you paid this away?—The day of the polling.

7115. (Mr. Price.) Was that all?—No, I paid more because I received the money; you must hear how I received the money to pay away.

7116. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us that Andrew Allan gave you the money?—So he did 60*l.*

7117. (Mr. Price.) What did you do with it?—I could not pay it away until I had more money.

7118. Why?—Because Halliday was in the room, and he was a Conservative.

7119. What room?—My private room where I was ill; Symmons brought me 130*l.* after that.

7120. When you were ill in your own room?—Yes, he brought me 130*l.*, and 60*l.* made 190*l.*, and out of that I had paid 30*l.* first, and then I was in the habit of paying or bribing some of the men, and Foster will tell you that Halliday wanted me to go out and get the voters up, and I told him I was unable to do so; then Halliday would bide and Foster was obliged to go; I gave him the tip like, and Halliday told me he was coming again; I then got Charles Kirk.

7121. What was Halliday in your house for?—Because he was agent of an association that I belonged to.

7122. What association was that?—Where they paid the money to the Accidental.

7123. You said just now that you could not pay the money because Halliday was a Conservative and was at your house?—It was in my house.

7124. Was Halliday a Conservative?—Halliday was a Conservative.

7125. Then what association was he secretary of which you belonged to?—The Accidental; he was one of the agents, and I had had an accident and was unable to go out; then I sent for Charles Kirk and he came in to me, and I let Charles Kirk have 100*l.* to go and distribute, because if I had bided I should have kept the money then, and I could not, because I was afraid that Halliday would come there.

7126. You were obliged to stay in because you wanted the Accidental money?—I could not go out.

7127. Had you made a claim on the Accidental?—Of course I had, or I should not have been there.

7128. What was the accident?—I fell down and hurt my side.

7129. Were the voters to come to you?—Yes, they would have been brought to me, and I should have paid.

7130. You paid three or four?—I paid three.

7131. At your house?—Yes.

7132. (Mr. Anstey.) You paid Stoodley?—Down at the other house.

7133. Did you pay him or not?—That was on another election.

7134. (Mr. Price.) Go on with your story about this 130*l.*?—That was 130*l.* I paid.

7135. (Mr. Coleridge.) 30*l.* you paid, and 100*l.* to Kirk?—Yes.

7136. What did you do with the other 60*l.*?—There were 10*l.* for expenses.

7137. What expenses?—We gave a lot of beer away.

7138. 10*l.* in treating?—Yes, and then there was 50*l.* left.

7139. (Mr. Price.) How much did you put in your pocket? Let us get at it as shortly as we can?—The remainder of it I fancy I paid another man.

7140. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who else?—I do not know. I cannot say whether I did or not.

7141. Then you kept 50*l.* at that election, and 200*l.* at the election before?—I did.

7142. (Mr. Price.) How much during your life have you kept altogether of the money you received to bribe with?—Nothing more than that.

7143. 250*l.*?—That is all.

7144. And the 40*l.* the dispute with Forster was about?—I never had it.

7145. You never disputed it?—Forster did not.

7146. He claimed it of you?—He never claimed it, because I never had it.

7147. (Mr. Anstey.) Have not you told a different story about these transactions?—Yes, I am coming to that.

7148. Have not you told a different story about these different circumstances?—Yes, I have told it.

7149. (Mr. Price.) You knew you were on oath?—I did.

7150. And know now?—Yes; I told it wrong in London.

7151. (Mr. Anstey.) For instance, did not you inform the election committee which tried the petition against the return—— ?—That is what——

(Mr. Price.) If you do not listen to the question most undoubtedly you will be sent to prison for the night.

7152. (Mr. Anstey.) You are reported as telling the committee which tried the election petition against Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake's return in 1865, the committee sitting in 1866, in answer to this question: "Was there any sum of money mentioned?—I mentioned 40*l.* that I had been promised on a former "election which they cheated me out of. I do not mean "to say that Mr. Lovibond did, and I am not speaking "of Sir John Shelley. Then you are asked, "Tell "us the history of that;" and you say: "I have told "you that I have in my time, and I am not ashamed to "own it, taken much interest in electioneering matters, "and in the election in the year 1857 I was promised "40*l.* if I would get the members into parliament. I "worked hard, and we returned them, and I did not "get the 40*l.*" Then again, "I told them at Lovi-"bond's about the 40*l.* that was promised me." Upon which you are asked this question: "You told "Lovibond and Barham?" and you tell them "Yes." And to "What did they say when you told them that "the 40*l.* which had been promised in 1857 had never "been paid?" you answer, "Mr. Lovibond said he "did not know it, and I told him that Mr. Foster, a "clerk of his, who is dead, had promised it, and that "he had not paid the 40*l.*" Now you stated the election at which you were promised this was the one of 1857. Do you mean to tell us you took no part in that election, and were promised no money and got none?—I believe it was the election that Follett and Tynte were returned.

7153. Now attend. Did not you represent, and I believe most truthfully to the committee, that you had been bribed at every election that had taken place for 30 years immediately preceding 1866; that would bring it to 1836?—I have no remembrance of doing that.

7154. (Mr. Price.) You have told us to-day that you took no part in any election till the one in which Tynte and Follett were first elected?—In giving money.

7155-6. Nor taking money; we put it to you both ways. This is what you are reported to have said at the commencement of your examination: "Are you a "brewer, carrying on your business in High Street, "Bridgwater?—I am." Then the next question is: "Were you at the last election, and have you been for "many years a registered elector in the borough?— "30 years. Have you voted on all occasions at which "you had an opportunity during that period?—Yes." Then a little further on you are reported thus: "Did you offer bribes to anybody for purposes of "voting for the best candidate?—Not the last "election; I do not say anything about the previous "ones." You have told us to-day you did offer bribes to people at the last election, that is 1865, Stoodley and others, and they objected that the money was not enough?—That was at the "Golden Lion."

7157. Here you told the committee that you had not, but that you had offered bribes at some others. Then, to make it more specific in cross-examination by Mr. Powell, who says, "I believe this is the first time you "ever voted for the Conservative party?" you say, "Yes." And a little further on you tell your counsel, "This was the first time at the Bridgwater election "that you had not been guilty of bribery?—Yes." Having told us to-day you were guilty of bribery at that election, I will ask you, with all these answers before you and the answers you have made to-day, is it not a fact that having voted at every election, there is not one of them at which you have not been guilty of bribery, either giving or receiving bribes, or both?—Yes, I think I have.

7158. Here is your own statement.—Very well, sir.

7159. You have told us to-day that you were guilty of bribery at that last election referred to?—So I was.

7160. You told the committee in 1866 that you were guilty of bribery at every one except that?—I deny that.

7161. (Mr. Price.) What do you deny?—What I told in London was not correct.

7162. You swear deliberately that that was false?—I do, and I will tell you why I did do it.

(Mr. Price.) We will hear the rest of your discreditable story to-morrow. You must be here at 11 o'clock, or you will be brought here.

JAMES CHANT sworn. J. Chant.

7163. (Mr. Coleridge.) On Friday last were you down at Boucher's shop?—Yes.

7164. In the afternoon?—Yes, outside the door.

7165. Do you recollect seeing White come down?—Yes.

7166. Did you hear him say anything to Boucher?—No.

7167. Did you hear Boucher say anything to him?—Yes.

7168. What was that?—White was about to enter Boucher's door, and Boucher said to him, "You "scoundrel, will you dare to enter my house, you "know what lies you have been telling at the hall "about me."

7169. Did Boucher say anything about what he would do with him if he did?—I never heard that.

7170. What did White say?—I do not know the reply he made at all; I went into my own shop and left them.

7171. You heard that said by Boucher about White?—Yes.

7172. Did you hear White at all?—No, I do not know what he said; he attempted to say something, but what I cannot say.

7173. Afterwards, did you see him go away rather quickly?—I saw him cross the street towards Monmouth Street.

7174. (Mr. Price.) Directly after Boucher said this?—Yes, that is all I heard.

7175. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there another man standing by within hearing?—I do not know of anybody else.

7176. Had you a vote at the last election?—Yes.

7177. How did you vote?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

7178. What did you get?—Nothing.

7179. Nothing at all?—Nothing at all.

7180. Was nothing offered you?—No.

7181. Did you vote at the election before the last?—Yes.

7182. Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—Yes.

7183. Whom did you vote for?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

7184. Did you get anything at that election?—No.

7185. Were you offered anything?—No.

7186. Have you ever got anything?—No.

7187. Never a farthing for voting in Bridgwater?—Never a fraction, nor offered me.

7188. How long have you had a vote?—About 30 years.

7189. (Mr. Price.) Have you always voted one way?—I have always voted in the Liberal interest.

7190. (Mr. Coleridge.) Never anything offered?—Never anything offered nor asked.

7191. Have you distributed any to anyone else?—No.

7192. Ever given a bribe?—No, nor heard of anyone.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

EIGHTH DAY.

Tuesday, 31st August 1869.

PRESENT :

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
DE TRACY GOULD, Esq., Acting Secretary.

EIGHTH DAY.

H. C. Bussell.

31 Aug. 1869.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

7193. (Mr. Coleridge.) According to our request you have supplied us with a list of persons who polled in 1865 for Mr. Westropp, and in 1866 for Mr. Bagehot? —With the voters that plumped for Mr. Westropp in 1865, and voted for Mr. Bagehot in 1866.

7194. Job Cavill?—Yes.

7195. John Cooze?—Yes.

7196. William Francis?—Yes.

7197. Thomas Gane?—Yes.

7198. Richard Glanville?—Yes.

7199. Frederick Hodge?—Yes.

7200. John Hodge?—Yes.

7201. Joseph Reed?—Yes.

7202. Joseph Stoodley?—Yes.

7203. John Staples?—Yes.

7204. John Thomas?—Yes.

7205. John Brawley?—Yes.

7206. Did you, or some one on behalf of the Liberal party, pay them in 1866 for coming round to Mr. Bagehot?—I am under the impression that I paid five of them.

7207. Are you under the impression that the whole of them were paid by some one or other?—Yes, I believe.

7208. Do you believe in 1865, at Mr. Westropp's election, any were paid by the Conservative side?—I do.

Mr. W. L. Winterbotham.

HENRY CORNELIUS WHITE was called, and not answering, Mr. WASHINGTON LAFAYETTE WINTERBOTHAM sworn.

7209. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A surgeon.

7210. Practising here?—Practising here.

7211. What do you say as to the state of White's health?—By my advice he remains at home. He has almost a threatening of brain fever, and is in a highly nervous and excited state. I saw him last night, and he was rambling in his talk, and very excited, occasionally breaking down and crying. He had not slept every evening, he told me, for a week; and I quite fancied he had not.

7212. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you White's regular attendant?—No.

7213. Who is?—I cannot tell.

7214. (Mr. Anstey.) I will take the opportunity, while you are in the box, of asking, are you one of those who with White signed the petition of 80 to the House of Commons which we have heard so much about?—Certainly.

7215. And have you any evidence, not now, perhaps, but at any future stage, to give this Commission in support of the very grave allegation which that petition contains, and to which your name appears as the third signatory, and on which you must have been understood to wish that the two Houses of Parliament should act?—No more than Mr. Benjamin Lovibond communicated to me a statement he had 101 cases of which he had notes in his office, and which he and his clerks were occupied three months in taking down.

7216. That was all?—That was all.

7217. Have you stated to anybody since this Commission was first appointed, but before it opened, that your only object in signing that petition, and you believe the object of the other signatories, was to prevent a new election taking place, lest a Tory should be returned?—Certainly not.

7218. You have not stated that to our secretary, for instance?—Certainly not, so far as my memory goes.

7219. (Mr. Coleridge.) You cannot have forgotten it since our secretary could have asked you?—No. In that I believe he certainly clearly quite misunderstood me if I used such an expression to him.

7220. (Mr. Anstey.) I am not asking as to the expression, but the fact; words may vary but the substance remains the same. Did you say anything in substance bearing out that expression?—I did not.

7221. What did you tell him then?—I have not the least recollection.

7222. Though it is only two months or six weeks ago?—Certainly not; I cannot remember the words that occurred.

7223. Do you remember his asking you the question?—I do not.

7224. Whether you were offered in evidence in support of that petition?—Not in those words.

7225. We are not speaking about words; nor did you ask him anything to that effect?—The meaning a man wishes to convey is——

7226. Will you answer the question? In effect did our secretary ask you any question which led you to suppose that you were to be examined here touching the allegation in the petition of which you were a promoter?—To this extent he said I was subpœnaed: because I was one of the petitioners.

7227. But what did you tell him?—That I was one of the petitioners, and that was because it appeared to me from what I had heard, that the state of the town was such that it would be far better that it should be disfranchised than that things should continue in the state they were.

7228. You swear that is all you said?—Certainly.

7229. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you say that Mr. Lovibond had been preparing in his office?—I was attending him at the time, and had been for some years, and I knew from being constantly, almost daily, in attendance upon him, that there was a great deal of work going on in his office; that for some months he was getting up evidence against Mr. Westropp. He told me they had evidence to the amount of 101 cases, or some such number; and it was upon hearing his opinion as an old electioneerer, on the state of the borough, that I felt strongly the necessity of some interference.

7230. Was Mr. Henry Lovibond present when Mr. Benjamin Lovibond told you this?—No.

7231. Was anybody present?—I think probably that Fletcher was, but they are both dead.

7232. (Mr. Price.) You came to the conclusion, crediting Mr. Lovibond's statement as to the number of cases he could prove, that it would be better for the town to be disfranchised than that such a state of things should continue?—Certainly, if nothing better could be done. My object in signing was that some interference might take place, where the writ, as at Gloucester, would be suspended for a certain time; and if that could not be done I thought it better to get rid of the electoral franchise altogether than to let it remain as it was.

7233. You will probably be able to tell us the state of Mr. White's health to-morrow, if we want to see you?—Certainly. I should think White, when he has recovered the effects of all this excitement, will be able in a very short period to give his evidence.

EDGAR WILLIAM NICHOLLS sworn. E. W. Nicholls.

7234. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you an elector of this town?—I am.

7235. What are you?—An ironmonger.

7236. Were you an elector in 1866?—I was.

7237. Did you sign the petition which we have called the petition of 80, praying the House of Commons in that year "that no writ be issued until the House had had "an opportunity of considering the same, and that the "House will address Her Majesty for the appointment "of a commission to inquire into the practices above "referred to, those practices being a much larger "number of cases of bribery capable of being dis-"closed than is apparent from the evidence taken "before the committee appointed by the House on "hearing that petition, inasmuch as the case of the "petitioners was stopped by the committee when a "few cases only had been heard, and the petitioners "were induced to abandon their proceeding to a "scrutiny on account of the expense thereof." Do you recollect signing that petition?—I do not recollect doing so.

7238. (Mr. Price.) Are you so constantly in the habit of signing documents without knowing what they contain?—No, I sign very few documents.

7239. Why did you ask to be examined?—Because I have been subpœnaed. I asked for a week's leave of absence last night.

7240. Had you been summoned as a witness?—Yes, I had.

7241. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whilst you are here I will ask you did you vote at the last election?—I did, for Vanderbyl and Kinglake; I voted very late.

7242. Did you get anything for your vote?—No.

7243. Were you offered anything?—No, certainly not.

7244. Did you offer anything to anybody?—No, certainly not.

7245. Did you vote at the election before?—I did.

7246. How did you vote?—For the Liberals. I have always voted for the Liberals.

7247. Did you receive anything then?—No.

7248. Were you offered anything?—No, never.

7249. Did you give anything to anybody?—Never.

7250. Did you vote at the election before that?—I believe I did. There was one election, I forget which it was, at which I did not vote.

7251. Have you always voted for the Liberals, and always without any reward or promise of reward of any shape or kind?—I have; I swear it.

7252. And have you, at any election at this place, at any time promised anything to anyone, either in meat, drink, or money, for voting or refusing to vote at all?—Never in my life.

7253. (Mr. Price.) Is there any other person of your name a voter?—I have two brothers, Alfred Nicholls and Henry Frederick Nicholls.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I take it it was your brother Alfred who signed the petition.

7254. (Mr. Price.) Is he of the same business as you?—No, he is a draper.

7255. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you been paid money for supplies at elections, such as gunpowder and things of that sort?—I supplied gunpowder, I think, at the election of 1866.

7256. Which one?—I cannot say for certain.

7257. There was one in June and the other in July?—I think it must have been the July one.

7258. (Mr. Coleridge.) What amount?—I think there were four quarter barrels; that is 100 lbs.

7259. What is the amount of your bill?—I think it was about 16*s.* 6*d.* a barrel; four times that would be 3*l.* 6*s.*

7260. The most material thing is, did you charge the fair and ordinary price which you would have charged anybody at that time?—My regular price.

7261. Or did you get an extra price because it was election time?—I did not.

7262. (Mr. Price.) Were you paid at that election, or at some subsequent election?—I think about a week afterwards, to the best of my recollection.

7263. (Mr. Anstey.) I have two sums here in the list of sums paid for flags, colours, powder, &c., under your name, both for powder, 5*l.* 15*s.* and 4*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* That comes to upwards of 10*l.*?—What year was that in?

7264. 1866?—I never supplied 11*l.* worth of powder in my life at any election.

7265. If this account states that these two amounts were paid you on this occasion it is untrue, is it?—I believe that it is false.

7266. You had better look at your book?—I will.

7267. It is, "Account delivered 4*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* Duddridge and John Smith; account delivered 4*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*?" —John Duddridge is the only one, I think, I supplied powder to.

7268. The other is John Smith, six barrels of powder, 5*l.* 11*s.*?—I think that was not 1866.

7269. Yes, both of them; look at it, and explain it?—That is my handwriting; one of them is.

7270. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that all that powder was required at that one election?—They had it undoubtedly; what they did with it I do not know.

7271. Is not it an extravagant quantity to fire away?—I believe at some elections they have fired away very much more than that.

7272. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it your brother who supplied at the same election colours, &c. to the amount of 2*l.* 11*s.* 1½*d.*?—That I do not know.

7273. It was not you?—No.

7274. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you aware at the time of that election that colours were illegal?—Well, I think I did hear something about colours.

7275. Because there seems to be some misconception on that subject, and it may be as well that what the Act of Parliament says upon that should be known: "No candidate before, during, or after any election, "shall, in regard to such election, by himself or agent, "directly or indirectly, give or provide to or for any "person having a vote at such election, or to or for "any inhabitant of the county, city, borough, or "place for which such election is had, any cockade, "ribbon, or other mark of distinction." Do you know of that?—No.

7276. What is the reason why your bill is for that large amount, and Thompson Brothers, who also supplied gunpowder, yours apparently not being sufficient, figure in Mr. Lovibond's account for 2*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* only at the same election?—I do not know what quantity they had.

7277. Had you not supplied more than enough for any purpose for which gunpowder could lawfully be required?—I do not know what quantity they fired away. I know guns were fired almost all day and night.

7278. What guns?—Some cannon they have on the eastern side of the river.

7279. Supposing you had not been favoured with these two orders, to a high amount, would you have felt aggrieved?—No, not at all.

7280. Would you have voted all the same?—Yes, certainly; I did not supply any powder at the last election that I am aware of.

EIGHTH DAY.

W. Heal.

31 Aug. 1869.

WILLIAM HEAL recalled.

7281. (Mr Price.) I think the last thing we got to yesterday was your admission of having committed perjury before the election committee in London?—Quite right.

7282. You were going to give us your explanation why you had committed such a crime?—Yes.

7283. What have you there which you are looking at?—Some notes of my own.

7284. When were they made?—Since last evening, to refresh my memory as to anything you should ask me.

7285. Let us see it. (The witness handed it.) Have you refreshed your memory by talking with anybody else since last night?—No.

7286. Since you were examined yesterday have you been talking about your evidence with anybody?—Not about my evidence. I have been asking about some of the dates.

7287. Who from?—Thomas Hill.

7288. These are the dates of the election?—Those are the dates of the election, to refresh my memory.

7289. (Mr. Anstey.) That paper can have nothing to do with the question which the Chief Commissioner has asked; which is, why you went to London to commit deliberate perjury on that occasion?—I was going on to tell you.

7290. (Mr. Price.) Now tell us the reason why you committed perjury before the House of Commons?—There was a petition about to be presented against Mr. Westropp, and I was called one evening to Mr. Joseph Richard Smith's, in this town, to a private house, and after some conversation there they got me to sign the document.

7291. Who got you?—Mr. Temblett was there, and Tom Boys.

7292. Who asked you to sign this document?—When I came over there we got talking about the election, and then they made out a document.

7293. Who are they?—Tom Boys made it out.

7294. Did you read it over?—It was read over to me.

7295. What did it contain?—The purport of it was that I knew nothing of the election, and I, in an unguarded moment, signed it; then I went to London, fearing that document would be put before me or against me, and I said I had not been there. That was the whole and sole reason that I had in going to London to speak what I did. On the one hand, if I had gone and said one thing, they would have that document before me, and what was I to have done?

7296. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who were you going for?—I voted for the Tories then.

7297. Then was it the Liberals who persuaded you to say that you knew nothing about it?—No, the Tories.

7298. Whereas you knew a great deal?—I knew all about it. I was the very one who knew all about it.

7299. (Mr. Price.) You are a Liberal, you say?—I am.

7300. You have received a great deal of election money in your time?—Yes, some hundreds, I think.

7301. Then what influence was brought to bear on you that you should go and tell the Conservatives you knew nothing about the election?—Because they asked me to do it.

7302. You did it because they asked you?—Yes, I did.

7303. You agreed to tell a lie because the Conservatives asked you?—That was the whole and sole reason.

7304. Because he asked you?—Well, I did do it, which I repent of.

7305. Did you get any money for signing it?—Not a farthing.

7306. Will you swear it?—I do; not a farthing.

7307. Did you get any money afterwards?—Not a farthing.

7308. After you had been to London?—No, I had my expenses in London, 7309. Had you a promise of anything?—Not a farthing; nothing more than my bare expenses in going like the others.

7310. You mean to tell us, that being a Liberal in politics you deliberately went to the Conservative side and offered to keep back the evidence you could give?—I had voted for them; for Mr. Westropp.

7311. Then you received a great deal of money for voting for them?—I had; that is how it was I had voted for Westropp.

7312. And you had bribed for Westropp?—That is the time I went to the "Golden Lion."

7313. Then they wanted to call you as a witness against Westropp?—No, they wanted me to go in his favour, and say that I had not received or paid any money.

7314. You had not bribed for Westropp?—I had bribed for him.

7315. And received money?—And received money.

7316. And you were to go and say you had done nothing, and knew nothing?—Yes; it was on the document.

7317. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that all that was in the document that you signed?—Yes.

7318. If that was all that was in the document which you signed, can that be any reason, I do not say any excuse, for it or not for your not only telling the election committee in 1866 that you knew nothing of the particular election of 1865, at which you had taken that part, but going on to tell the committee a great many things which you yesterday told me were also false? for instance, that you had been an elector for 30 years, and had taken an active part at every election, and had bribed at every election, except that one only of Westropp, and that you had corruptly voted in 1857, on the promise of 40*l.* from one Foster, Mr. Lovibond's managing clerk. I asked you yesterday whether you made those statements which I read to you from the blue book, and you said you had made them all, and they were all false; and now, as there was nothing about them in that document of Thomas Boys, why did you make those false statements?—The document that I signed, I cannot exactly tell you the expression I used on it; but, as I told you before, the purport of the document was, I was to know nothing about the election.

7319. About any election?—About that particular election.

7320. I ask you any election? I want to know why did you tell the Committee of the House of Commons one story, which you now state to be false, about every other election preceding the one of 1865 during the long period of 30 years; whereas you told us yesterday that those stories were false, and you told us other stories which, if the first were true, must be false. Why did you do it?—I did tell them it.

7321. Why did you?—Because it was on the face of that document.

7322. Did the document contain any reference to those former elections?—The whole of that I told them in London was untrue.

7323. Did that document contain any reference to other elections?—Nothing, only Westropp's.

7324. Why did you go up and tell the committee—I will tell you one by one what you said—you were not bribed by a promise of 40*l.*, that is what you say now; but you told the House of Commons over and over again, in the passages which I have read, that you were bribed in 1857; why did you tell them that if untrue?—I had no vote in 1857.

7325. Why did you tell them that if you had no vote in 1857?—I may have made a mistake in the elections, they were too close on one another.

7326. But you were asked particularly whether it was not in 1859, and you said no?—Well, I worked for the Liberals in 1857 although I had no vote.

7327. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get paid for working for them?—That is the election of the 40*l.*

7328. (Mr. Anstey.) You also told the committee in the passages I have read, first upon your examination in chief, and then in cross-examination, and finally in reexamination, that until you had turned Conservative you had been a corrupt man, and that you had voted and had taken a part in every election for 30 years past, that is, from 1836, and at every one of those elections you had personally bribed ?—I do not know. I never said that.

7329. If that story be false, why did you tell them that ?—It is false ; I never told it in London.

7330. I read the passages yesterday to you, and you admitted their accuracy, and even interrupted me to say, "Yes, I know that is all false, and I will explain why I did it." Now, explain why you did it. I do not want the detail, but explain why you told them what was all false?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Under what inducement you were led ?

7331. (Mr. Anstey.) Who told you ?—No one.

7332. Why did you do it ?—When there was any money going in Bridgwater I have had it.

7333. Why did you tell the House of Commons that ?—I do not know why I told them that.

7334. Is it true or false ?—Some part is true and some false.

7335. Is it true that you took part at every election from 1836 down to 1866 ?—I was away at two elections out of it.

7336. Then is it untrue ?—Of course it is.

7337. Which is the election you say you took no part in ?—I was not here in 1841, but in Taunton.

7338. Were you in gaol in Taunton ?—I was not in gaol.

7339. Where were you ?—In a situation, where I can get a character for 40 years.

7340. What was the other election you took no part in?—In 1835 I voted for Tynte and Leader ; I had 50*l.* for my vote. In 1841 Drew and Robinson and Broadwood put up here, and a little after 1855, I do not know exactly the month——

7341. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are on 1841 ; now you are skipping to 1855 ?—I was not here in 1841 ; I was away at Taunton five years.

7342. In 1847 were you bribed ?—That was the time I had the money from Foster. I had no vote because I had gone to live at Gloucester in 1857. In 1847 I took no part in bribing at all.

7343. (Mr. Price.) When did you first have a vote ?—I had a vote in 1835 ; I voted for Colonel Tynte and Mr. Leader, and I had 50*l.* for my vote.

7344. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything for bribing other people ?—No, never had a farthing.

7345. Who gave you that ?—My brother.

7346. What was his name ?—James Heal.

7347. Is he alive ?—No, dead.

7348. Did he give anything to anybody else at the same time ?—Yes, a great many.

7349. Did you see him give it to those persons ?—No, he told me so.

7350. How much altogether ?—He bribed 20. I have no doubt he did do it.

7351. Was 50*l.* the ruling price ?—Yes, it was.

7352. (Mr. Anstey.) There was an election in 1836 ?—1835.

7353. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you voted for Leader and Tynte, and got 50*l.* ?—I did.

7354. And then you went to Taunton. Do you know how much Leader spent at that election ?—Some thousands of pounds.

7355. How many ?—Some say 10,000*l.*

7356. And that was all spent between Friday and Monday morning ?—I believe it was.

7357. (Mr. Anstey.) Then the election of 1837, when Leader and Broadwood resigned ?—I was not here in 1837, but at Taunton.

7358. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long were you at Taunton altogether ?—Between five and six years.

7359. It is only ten miles off ?—But I had no vote.

7360. (Mr. Price.) You had lost your vote ?—Yes, I had lost my vote.

7361. Then there was another election in 1837 ?—I was not here for six years.

7362. Then in 1841 ?—I know nothing about that either.

7363. 1847 ?—I took no part at all in it.

7364. How was that ?—I do not know.

7365. How much money had you at that time ?—Nothing at all ; I had not been entrusted before.

7366. Did you get money for your vote ?—Not a halfpenny.

7367. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did you vote for ?—I believe Tynte and Gazelee ; Tynte however.

7368. (Mr. Price.) Is that the time Gazelee stood ?—It was.

7369. Did you get any money then ?—I did not, and never had in my hands a farthing.

7370. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a public-house at that time ?—No.

7371. In 1852 ?—I believe that was a pure election.

7372. When Mr. Follett was returned ?—I believe it was. I believe there was a coalition between them.

7373. Between Tynte and Follett ?—Yes, I do.

7374. Tynte was a Liberal and Follett a Conservative ?—Well, they were returned.

7375. What do you mean by a coalition ?—I believe they coalesced together.

7376. To keep Kinglake out ?—I believe so. I do not believe there was a farthing of money, and I did not see a farthing, and did not hear of anyone who had a penny.

7377. (Mr. Anstey.) In 1857, did you take part in that election ?—Yes.

7378. Did you receive a promise of 40*l.* for voting by Foster ?—I did.

7379. Yesterday you denied again and again that you had anything of the sort ?—I do not know that I did.

7380. You said 1859 and not 1857 ; you would persist in it ; and I had to confront you with your evidence of the House of Commons, which agrees with the evidence to-day ?—Well, I believe you allow witnesses to correct themselves if they possibly can.

7381. (Mr. Price.) Have you not said this morning that you were at Gloucester in 1857 ?—Yes.

7382. Had you a vote then or not ?—I tell you that I came from Gloucester at the latter end of January or beginning of February, and I believe the election took place in March.

7383. What did you get ?—40*l.* for bribing voters for Foster ; I was to have it.

7384. (Mr. Anstey.) Whom did you bribe ?—I do not know.

7385. Give us a name or two.

7386. (Mr. Price.) Let me caution you, because we have information about you. Will you solemnly swear that you did not get money in 1852 from Foster, and that you were short 100*l.* in your account ?—That was not the time ; that was 1857.

7387. You must answer deliberately, because you have committed perjury once, and we shall see whether you do again ?—To the best of my belief it was so.

7388. In 1852, I have it here in black and white, a witness, who will be called to speak to this matter, says you received money of Foster, and were 100*l.* short of your account ?—I believe that was 1857.

7389. Will you swear it was not 1852 ?—I will not swear it.

7390. (Mr. Coleridge.) Consider this, and let everybody in court consider it, that our certificate does not free you from any charge that may be brought against you for perjury. Perjury is different from everything else.—I cannot answer.

7391. (Mr. Price.) What did you say a minute or two ago, that in 1852 you got nothing ; you said it was a pure election, that they coalesced to get out Mr. Kinglake, and you got nothing ; and now you will not undertake to say you did not get money from Foster, and were short in your account ?—No. I still believe there was a coalition between the two.

7392. The question is, did you get any money from Foster ?—I do not know that I did.

EIGHTH DAY.

W. Heal.

31 Aug. 1869.

7393. Will you swear that you did not?—I will not swear it. I do not know which election.

7394. Will you swear that you were not short 100*l.* in your account in 1852?—I was never accused.

7395. Will you swear you were not short that amount?—I will swear it.

7396. You do swear it?—I do. I was never accused of it.

7397. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were 200*l.* short in your account on one occasion?—Yes, I own that.

7398. (Mr. Price.) Now, in 1857 you were at Gloucester?—Yes.

7399. And came over here about election time?—Yes; and that I consider was the election I had the 40*l.* that Foster promised me, the 40*l.* I considered it was. If I have made an error of course I retract. I am not positive or certain, neither will I be certain which of the two elections it was. I cannot recollect which it was.

7400. In 1857 you got, you believe, you say, a promise of 40*l.* from Foster?—Yes.

7401. To go and bribe with?—Yes.

7402. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's clerk at that time?—Yes.

7403. Was that all the money you had?—I had not the 40*l.*

7404. How did you have the money?—It was given me in 10*l.*, 20*l.*, and 30*l.*

7405. How much?—I cannot tell; it was ever so much money, some hundreds.

7406. Some hundreds?—Yes, there is no doubt about it.

7407. Give us some of the names?—I cannot really give you any of the names of the persons; it is so long ago, and I never kept any of the books.

7408. If you cannot give all the names, give some or one of the names of the persons you bribed personally in 1857 out of those monies you received from Foster—several hundreds?—I do not know that I can give you the names of them.

7409. Could you if you had the poll sheet before you?—No, I do not think I could.

7410. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did you get the money from?—I got the money from Foster.

7411. (Mr. Price.) You cannot give us the name of any one single voter?—I cannot. I never kept a scrap of paper in my life.

7412. You do not remember the name of one person whom you bribed at that election?—I do not.

7413. If you saw any of them now, should you know them?—Not that I know of.

7414. Did you know them at the time?—Probably I may have known some, but it was done darkly, not openly; but I put out my hand, and gave them the money. I did not see one voter in ten; it is quite impossible to give the names.

7415. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not mean to tell the Commission that you gave money to persons you did not believe were electors?—Yes, and hundreds of pounds.

7416. To persons you did not believe to be electors?—The electors were all put to me.

7417. Who put them?—Foster.

7418. Anybody else?—I do not know.

7419. Give the name of some one living?—At one of the two elections, I cannot refresh my memory which it was, Edwin Gooding. He was one of the attorneys. That is the only one.

7420. (Mr. Price.) He is dead, I suppose?—He is dead.

7421. (Mr. Anstey.) You say that Foster put them to you, and it was in the dark. Do I understand you to mean that you were sitting in the room with the money doing the business of stranger, and that Foster, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's managing and confidential clerk, was doing the business of pointing out to you as they came in the persons to whom you gave the money?—Referring them to me.

7422. What house was that?—Down at the "Golden Ball."

7423. Who was the landlord at that time?—James Leaker, I believe.

7424. Is he dead?—No.

7425. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he the landlord of the "Clarence"?—Yes, he is now.

7426. (Mr. Anstey.) And how many persons did you bribe at James Leaker's house?—A few; I do not know how many.

7427. 20 or 30?—I cannot tell, because I do not know which of these elections it was. I carried the money down, as I told you, to the 10 voters to Captain Crocker's on the quay, at the "Fountain."

7428. Are you sure that James Leaker was not at that time keeping the "Globe"?—No, I never knew James Leaker keeping the "Globe"; he never kept the "Globe."

7429. Now you say some hundreds of money altogether?—There may be two or three hundreds.

7430. You said some hundreds?—Two or three would be some hundreds.

7431. That is all you got?—Yes.

7432. Did anybody else bribe besides you?—Yes, Hasland.

7433. Is he alive?—No, but it is a well-known fact to the gentlemen; every one around here, I suppose, knows that it is facts I am speaking of. They know that Hasland was one of that kind of men.

7434. If you were doing this part, merely the paymaster, what was the object of taking you, whose face must have been very well known from 1835 down to that time in 1857 in this borough? You were no stranger, were you?—No.

7435. Why were you put there? Why did not Foster do the business himself?—I cannot tell you why.

7436. Are you sure you are telling the truth about that?—I am sure of it.

7437. I do not understand why you were chosen for that purpose?—I was chosen for it.

7438. (Mr. Coleridge.) What room of the "Golden Ball;" did you go upstairs?—Upstairs.

7439. Was it darkened?—No.

7440. What time of the day—the polling day?—Yes; morning.

7441. And then kept by Mr. Leaker, the present landlord of the "Clarence." Is that so?—Yes.

7442. Did you see Mr. Leaker at that house, besides the persons you bribed, and Foster, and Hasland?—No; I do not know anything of him, Mr. Leaker, in my life.

7443. Who showed you into the room?—Foster took me upstairs.

7444. No waiter?—No one at all.

7445. (Mr. Price.) You were a well-known man at Bridgwater?—Yes.

7446. As well known as anybody?—Yes.

7447. There could not be a single person in Bridgwater, an elector, who did not know you?—I suppose they did, most of them.

7448. Do you mean to say you did not know them?—I did not. There are scores of voters I do not know.

7449. I daresay there have been since the last Reform Bill; but do you mean to tell us that you took the part you did in the elections before 1867, yet did not recognize any of the men you paid the money to?—I did not.

7450. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the amount given to each voter at that election?—10*l.*

7451. How much did you keep back out of each 10*l.* yourself?—Not a farthing.

7452. What did you get yourself?—Not a farthing.

7453. What were you promised for yourself?—40*l.*

7454. At the ensuing election of 1859, although you had not been paid that 40*l.*, you voted for the Liberals again?—I did.

7455. (Mr. Price.) And kept back the 40*l.* for yourself?—No, I did not. It was never paid me.

7456. In 1859 you voted?—Yes.

7457. For Tynte and Kinglake, I suppose?—I believe I did.

7458. You did not vote on both sides?—No.

7459. The next election you were bribed?—No, I was not.

7460. Well, you bribed others?—No, I did not.

7461. You swear that?—Yes. I never had a farthing from Foster.

7462. You know Foster is dead. Then it is not true that Foster charged you with having kept back 40*l.* at that election?—No; I never had the money.

7463. Did Foster then retain 40*l.* on account of the 100*l.* which he said you had had in 1852, and had not accounted for?—But he told me he had paid me.

7464. Then there was something between you and Foster?—He told Colonel Tynte he had paid me, the old gentleman.

7465. Paid you what?—I asked Colonel Tynte whether he had paid him 40*l.*, and the old gentleman told me he had.

7466. Had done what?—Paid him the 40*l.* When Foster refused me the 40*l.* I said I would speak to Colonel Tynte about him; and I went to Colonel Tynte, the old gentleman, and told him I had not received, and he told me I should be put right. Hasland went with me.

7467. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is dead?—Yes, he is dead; but still there are many people who are living.

7468. (Mr. Anstey.) What did Colonel Tynte say to you?—He said he had given Foster the 40*l.* for me, and I said I never had it, and he said I should be put right.

7469. That was in 1859?—I believe it was in 1859.

7470. Did not you in 1865 revert to this 40*l.* again in a conversation with Benjamin Lovibond?—I did.

7471. How did you go to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's office?—Mr. Barham fetched me.

7472. Mr. Eustace Barham brought you up to Mr. Lovibond's office, and did you mention to them there the alleged grievance of 40*l.*?—I did.

7473. And what did those two lawyers tell you?—They told me it would be right.

7474. Then what did you mean yesterday, when I asked you the question in a general way, whether anybody, since 1859, had promised to pay you the sum of 40*l.* which Foster had promised to pay you but had not paid you; what did you mean by saying, "Nothing of the sort"?—I did not consider——

7475. Do you mean to say you did not say so?—No, I did not say that.

7476. I understood you so; I stopped explaining to you as soon as I heard you give the answer?—I do not say so.

7477. (Mr. Price.) What was your reason for saying that yesterday?—I did not understand the way the question was put to me.

7478. (Mr. Anstey.) Then I understand you that both Colonel Tynte and Colonel Tynte's father in 1862, and Benjamin Lovibond and other lawyers in 1865, recognized Foster's promise, and undertook to settle your claim?—Colonel Tynte.

7479. Colonel Tynte's father since 1859?—No.

7480. You told us so just now?—That was the first election.

7481. (Mr. Price.) You had better take care what you say?—It was before that election of Colonel Tynte.

7482. Was it in 1859?—No, it was prior to that election.

7483. Was it between 1857 and 1859; was it between the two elections?—It was between 1857 and 1859; no doubt in the world about it.

7484. And it was Colonel Tynte's father, between 1857 and 1859, who made you that statement?—No doubt of it.

7485. And Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond made the same statement when you went to Mr. Lovibond's office in 1865?—Yes.

7486. Have they paid you the money yet?—Certainly not.

7487. Did you vote in 1859 in consideration of the statement made to you by Colonel Tynte's father?—He never promised me anything.

7488. Well, he stated something to you; did you vote for them in 1859 in consideration of that statement?—Colonel Tynte told me——

7489. Did you vote in 1859 in consequence of that statement or not?—Of course I voted.

7490. In consequence of what Colonel Tynte said; in consequence of his having told you that he had paid the 40*l.* for you?—Yes.

7491. In consequence of that statement that he had paid the 40*l.* for you?—Yes.

7492. Did you vote for the Liberals in 1859 upon that statement?—Certainly not.

7493. Had you any money?—No, I had not a farthing.

7494. Then what did you mean by telling the House of Commons that 1865 was the first time at a Bridgwater election in which you had not been guilty of bribery?—Well, I may have told them so.

7495. But was that true?—No, it could not have been, because I did not vote for them at that election.

7496. Here it is in black and white; it is question 2780 here in the blue book?—I do not deny it.

7497. It is perfectly false that you were not guilty of bribery in 1865; you have admitted that. I want to know, is it true that you had been guilty of bribery at every preceding election, including 1859?—I had not a vote.

7498. Never mind about your vote; I ask you whether you had been guilty of bribery?

7499. (Mr. Anstey.) You might be guilty of impersonation?—I have got the notes——

7500. Do you consider a promise bribery?—Yes, a promise is bribery.

7501. Do you consider payment bribery?—Yes.

7502. Do you consider that payment and receiving are bribery?—Yes.

7503. Then do you mean to say in 1859 you were not in some way or other connected with bribery?—I never had a farthing.

7504. (Mr. Price.) Then why did you say so to the House of Commons?—I never referred only to that election.

7505. (Mr. Anstey.) But at another period when your own counsel was examining you, in your own examination in chief—I am quoting from number 2671—you are asked this question, "Did you offer "bribes to anybody for the purpose of voting for the "best candidate?" That is in 1865, and then your answer is, "Not the last election. I do not say about the previous one," meaning that you did offer bribes in 1859, which was the last election?—I never offered anything then.

7506. But you did say that to the House of Commons?—I did.

7507. (Mr. Price.) You certainly deserve to be indicted for perjury if anybody does in the world. You told us that the paper you signed at the office of the Conservative solicitors was as to the election of 1865, and all these statements you volunteered because you would not say so much about the election before.

7508. (Mr. Anstey.) Who is this Tom Boys who put his name to this paper pledging you to perjure yourself?—Who was he?

7509. Yes?—A clerk in Mr. Smith's office.

7510. That is the Tory attorney?—Yes.

7511. Is he now the managing clerk in the office of a Liberal attorney?—Yes.

7512. Who is that?—Reed and Cook.

7513. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you attend any place of worship at all?—Sometimes.

7514. And have you ever considered at all whether there is any value in an oath?—Yes, I consider I went to London and did wrong.

7515. Then you consider when you went to London you had done wrong?—I do consider I have done so now.

7516. And do you consider that if you perjure yourself to-day you do wrong?—Certainly. I came here to-day to speak the truth, although for what I said in London I am very sorry, and repent it.

EIGHTH DAY.

W. Heal.

31 Aug, 1869.

7517. (Mr. Anstey.) You have committed perjury to-day; you have already contradicted the evidence you gave yesterday over and over again?—I cannot tell.

7518. (Mr. Price.) You say you came here to speak the truth?—Yes, so I will.

7519. You have said in 1852 you did get nothing; now you say you will not swear whether you did not get money from Foster?—I will not swear whether it was 1852 or 1857.

7520. Now, having sworn that, I will just call your attention again to 1859, and ask you whether in 1859 you did not pay away 40*l.* more than you had received, and whether Foster did not refuse to repay you, and say that he retained it upon account of the 100*l.* you were short of in 1852?—I never saw Foster during the whole of the day.

7521. Anybody else?—No, nobody else. I never had a fraction or a farthing from anybody else. Looking at my list——

7522. Never mind your list; I neither believe what you write nor what you say. Then there is no truth in the fact that you paid 40*l.* away more than you received?—No, I never saw an attorney.

7523. Never mind seeing an attorney, that is not the question; but it is not true, when you asked Foster for that 40*l.* that he said he retained it in consequence of the 100*l.* which you were wrong about in your account of 1852?—I never stated I was wrong.

7524. Never mind what you stated; is it true, or is it not true?—It is not true.

7525. You had better take care. Now we have got to the election of 1865, I want to ask you this: you say Colonel Tynte, the old gentleman, told you that Foster had charged the 40*l.* as against you?—Yes.

7525*a*. Why it was not the old gentleman who was the candidate?—I cannot help that; but I have no doubt he had to pay the money.

7526. He had to pay the money?—No doubt about that.

7527. (Mr. Anstey.) Also besides what you said about Colonel Tynte making that statement, you said that money was promised you by Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham. Before passing on give us the details of that conversation in Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's office. First of all, who fetched you there?—Mr. Barham.

7528. What did he say to you?—He asked me if I would go down and see the candidates there.

7529. Did he know at that time you had gone over to the side of the Tories?—I daresay he did.

7530. You went on with him to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's office?—No, I went on afterwards.

7531. To Mr. Lovibond's office?—Yes.

7532. Did you meet Mr. Barham there?—Yes.

7533. Who spoke first?—I daresay Mr. Lovibond spoke first. I do not know who spoke first.

7534. What was said?—I think it was about voting.

7535. Did you say anything about what they were going to give you?—No.

7536. Take care. Was nothing said about shutting up the shutters?—No, you will not find that out.

7537. Do you mean to say you did not tell the House of Commons that you told Mr. Lovibond you were not going to support them because you had been ill-used, and then when the question is, What did Mr. Lovibond say to that, you told the House of Commons he said, If I was going to vote for them, he'd be d——d if he would not put up his electioneering shutters?—He did say so. Lovibond said so.

7538. Well, I will ask you that; is that true?—That is true.

7539. Did you say you were not going to vote for them?—That is true.

7540. You said that was not true just now; did you tell them that the reason you were not going to vote was in consequence of your not having got the 40*l.*?—Yes.

7541. Tell us first what Mr. Lovibond said?—He said it would be put right.

7542. What did Barham say?—I believe those were the words, the one or the other of them; I will not be positive which one it was.

7543. Did the other say anything against it?—Not a word.

7544. Were the candidates there?—No.

7545. I thought you said you were going down to see the candidates?—They were in another room.

7546. In another room there?—Yes; and I saw them in another room.

7547. (Mr. Price.) That was the election of 1865?—1865.

7548. Now we come to 1866. Did you know Mr. Temblett, the pawnbroker?—Yes.

7549. How much money did you get at that election?—In 1866?

7550. Yes, the first election of the two; Mr. Bagehot's?—When Bagehot was beaten?

7551. Yes?—Nothing.

7552. How did you vote?—I am not certain how I did vote; probably the poll-book will tell you.

7553. Probably you did not vote at all, as you got nothing?—Oh yes; I have voted before without anything.

7554. You say you paid yourself well on that second election; you say you got 200*l.*?—Yes; that was Vanderbyl's election.

7555. You got that from the Conservative?—Yes.

7556. And you put every sou of it into your pocket?—That is in 1865.

7557. No, it is not, indeed; take care what you are about. We have got rid of 1865; we have been just discussing 1866. Did you get any Conservative money in 1865?—In 1865 was the time when Westropp put up, that was the time I got the money.

7558. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1865 I understand you got 200*l.*?—That is correct.

7559. And after that there were five packets of 100*l.* each, of which Jarman had three, and you had two?—Yes.

7560. And he divided his money with you, and gave you 50*l.*?—Yes.

7561. And who did you bribe with it?—I bribed 30 voters.

7562. Thirty voters with 50*l.*?—No, the gentleman, the "man in the moon," whoever he was, met us down in King Street, and there he gave us about five packages of 100*l.* each; he gave Jarman three packages, and he gave me two packages, that was 500*l.* altogether.

7563. I understood you to say that yesterday. And then Jarman divided that with you, and made what you received amount to 250*l.*?—Yes.

7564. You spent 50*l.* in bribing others, and put 200*l.* into your own pocket?—Yes.

7565. And you subsequently got some more from somebody?—Yes, from Jarman.

7566. (Mr. Price.) What did you do with that last 250*l.*?—Gave it to the men.

7567. How many men?—30.

7568. What are their names?—I cannot remember their names. I told you two other men yesterday, and I have got two other to-day; that is all I can tell you.

7569. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did you give us yesterday—William Stone?—No, that was not that election.

7570. No, it was not; you are quite right. These are the three men you can recollect?—I did not tell you three men. I did not give it to three men; I offered it to Gilbert, and he refused it because it was not enough. There was a man of the name of Stoodley, I believe I gave it to him.

7571. How much did you give to him?—10*l.*

7572. (Mr. Anstey.) You were asked that question before the House of Commons, and denied it?—Yes.

7573. Who else besides Stoodley?—I gave it to a man named Southwood.

7574. Is that all you recollect?—Yes; all the rest were strangers.

7575. Is that all you can recollect ?—Yes.

7576. Is the Jarman you now speak of a relation of Jarman who bribed on the Liberal side ?—I cannot tell you.

7577. This Jarman you mention is on the Conservative side ?—Yes.

7578. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is this Jarman ?—A baker.

7579. Is there Jarman a hatter ?—I cannot tell you.

7580. Are they brothers ?—They may be relatives.

7581. (Mr. Price.) How much did you put in your own pocket at that election in 1865 ?—200*l.*

7582. But you have not accounted for this other money ?—Which other money ? Yes, I have.

7583. Is this Southwood James or William ?—James Southwood.

7584. What is he ?—A carpenter.

7585. In Dunwear Street ?—No. I believe he lives in a place called Salmon Lane.

7586. Did he vote for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray at the last election ?—I do not know.

7587. You are sure he is a carpenter, and his name is James ?—Yes, I believe his name is James. He is a little short man.

7588. (Mr. Price.) The embezzling of 200*l.*, is that all the part you took in that election of 1865 ?—Yes.

7589. You were never asked for that 200*l.* ?—No ; nobody ever asked me for a penny.

7590. You knew that 200*l.* was given you to distribute in bribery ?—Yes.

7591. (Mr. Anstey.) Then what on earth made you put it in your own pocket ?—Because I thought I might as well put it in my pocket as put it in anybody else's.

7592. (Mr. Price.) Did you go to Mr. Leaker on the occasion for money ?—No.

7593. You told us you went to the "Golden Lion" ?—No, the "Golden Ball."

7594. You said you never went to the "Golden Ball" in your life ?—Pym's was the "Golden Lion ;" James Leaker's was the "Golden Ball."

7595. (Mr. Coleridge.) I ask you whether Mr. Leaker, who now keeps the "Clarence," once kept the "Golden Ball" ?—Yes.

7596. And you went to that house in 1852 ?—I am not positive whether I went to the "Golden Lion" or to the "Golden Ball."

7597. It may have been both ?—Yes.

7598. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you go to Leaker's house in 1865 ?—Never.

7599. (Mr. Price.) Who gave you these two sums of money that you got in 1865, Mr. Temblett ?—It was the strange man ; he gave me 200*l.*, and Mr. Jarman gave me 50*l.*

7600. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now we come down to the election of 1868. In 1868, did you not try to get hold of 300*l.* from the Conservatives, and because they would not let you have it did you not go over to the Liberals ?—When was that ?

(Mr. Price.) 1868.

7601. (Mr. Coleridge.) The last election ?—I was not here.

7602. (Mr. Price.) Never mind that ; will you answer the question ?—I was not here.

7603. In 1866, did you try to get hold of 300*l.* ?—I did not ; nobody ever asked me for a fraction, and I never had none.

7604. In the first election of 1866, did you not try to get hold of 300*l.* ?—Certainly not, and I never had a penny piece.

7605. You swear that ?—I do ; I never had a fraction.

7606. It is not whether you had it. Just attend to me ; they would not trust you, it is not likely that you would get it. The question is, whether you would not try to get it ?—I never asked for it ; I never asked one single soul, and I swear I never had any.

7607. Is that as true as what you said before ?—That is a fact, I never had a farthing. I would tell you the truth if you would allow me now. I have come here on purpose.

7608. Would it be a fact that you bribed for the Conservatives or not ? Having bribed in 1865, and having put this money into your pocket, did you on the next election go over to Bagehot, and vote for the Liberals ?—I may have done so.

7609. What did you do that for ?—Because I did that on principle.

7610. Do not speak of principle, sir ; it is disgusting to hear you making use of the expression. In the second election of 1866, whom did you vote for when Mr. Vanderbyl came ?—When who came ?

7611. Vanderbyl ?—I did not vote at all.

7612. You got no money, I suppose ?—Yes, I had money.

7613. Who from ?—From Mr. Allan.

7615. (Mr. Coleridge.) What for ?—For bribery.

7616. Whom did you pay ?—Three or four of the parties who were there ; I told you Stone and Frost.

7617. And Thomas ?—Yes, Thomas had not the money himself ; he gave it to Roberts.

7618. What did you get for yourself ?—50*l.*

7619. (Mr. Price.) And you did not vote ?—I could not vote, I could not go out of the house.

7620. Why ?—Because I was too ill.

7621. And you got 50*l.* to vote, although you were too ill to go out and vote ?—Yes. I will tell you the truth.

7622. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who brought you that ?—Allan brought me 60*l.*, and Mr. Symons gave me 130*l.*

7623. 190*l.* in all ?—Yes.

7624. (Mr. Anstey.) I will mention to you another name which you may recollect in connexion with the election of 1865, a voter named Staples ?—I do not recollect him at all.

7625. Do you mean to say Staples never made a statement to you on that occasion about his vote ?—No.

7626. About how he was going to give it ?—No.

7627. Did Staples tell you anything about getting money ?—He told me he could get money.

7628. From whom ?—From the other party.

7629. From the Liberals ?—Yes.

7630. Did you ask him anything about his having got money from Mr. Westropp ?—Well, there may have been a conversation about it.

7631. Did you ask him that question ?—I may have done so. I am not positive whether I asked him or not.

7632. What did he tell you ?—I am not positive what he did tell me. I do not know what he did say ; I cannot tell. I know we had a conversation about it.

7633. You did speak to him about whether he voted for Mr. Westropp, and whether he had had money from Mr. Westropp ?—I cannot remember it at all.

7634. I will just give you the very words. Is it true, as you stated to the committee of the House of Commons, that on the day after the election, at your own office, you said to Staples, "Well, Jack, you "have had your money of Mr. Westropp, and gave it "up ?" Did you say that to him ?—I may have done so.

7635. Did you say that ?—I cannot recollect. I cannot refresh my memory as to whether I did or not.

7636. What was his answer to that ?—I cannot tell. I cannot answer it.

7637. Did you tell the House of Commons that he told you it was for freight ?—If it is there I may have told them so.

7638. If it is there you must have said so ?—Yes.

7639. Was it true or false what you said in the House of Commons, that Staples told you it was for freight ?—I have no doubt of it.

7640. That he told you it was for freight ?—I believe so. I believe I can refresh my memory, now you have told me of it.

7641. Then how did you learn that he could have money from the other side?—Because he said he could have had it from the other side.

EIGHTH DAY.

7642. Why did you not tell the House of Commons that?—I do not know why I did not tell them so.

7643. (Mr. Price.) I warn you again, because having once committed perjury, according to your own confession, it requires a great deal for us to believe you now. If Mr. Temblett, the pawnbroker, says that you tried at the election of 1866 to get 300*l.* from the Conservatives and did not succeed, and then that you went over to the Liberals, he will tell us that which is false, you say?—Yes. I never did do it.

7644. Never did do what?—Never asked for the 300*l.* at all.

7645. Did you know anything about the 300*l.*?—Mr. Westropp came to me when I was at the "Clarence" hotel, and he said that if 300*l.* could be procured he would pay it over again. They were talking about matters——

7646. If it could be procured he would do what with it?—If 300*l.* could be procured to carry over the election it would be paid over again.

7647. What should be paid over again?—Why, the money.

7648. Why should he come and tell you that for?—There was a conversation——

(Mr. Price.) You had better let us have it all out.

7649. (Mr. Coleridge.) Let us have all about the "Clarence" hotel?—At the "Clarence" hotel I was there with Mr. Westropp, and we were talking over matters about the former elections, and it was thought Mr. Patton would not win.

7650. (Mr. Price.) Who said so?—Mr. Westropp.

7651. Was Mr. Westropp down at Mr. Patton's election?—Yes.

7652. (Mr. Price.) Then it was thought Mr. Patton would not win?—Yes. Mr. Westropp said Mr. Patton would not put out any money, and then they asked me what sum I thought would win the election, and I said 200*l.* or 300*l.*, if they would try to get it.

7653. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us that at this election you did not vote because you were too ill in bed?—No, I did not. That was the prior election.

7654. (Mr. Price.) I asked you that question before, and until I mentioned Temblett you never denied anything of the kind. I asked you if you did not try to get 300*l.*, and, not succeeding, whether you then went over to the Liberals, and you denied having tried to get 300*l.*?—No. I did not try to get it.

7655. You asked Mr. Westropp what would do?—I did.

7656. What did you say?—He asked me if 300*l.* would do. Mr. Westropp told me himself if there could be 300*l.* or 400*l.*—300*l.* is the amount—procured, that it would be paid again.

7657. Did he think you could procure 300*l.*?—I do not know, Perhaps he thought I had a friend from whom I could get it.

7658. As soon as you had had this conversation and you had heard there was no money going, you went and voted for Mr. Bagehot?—Probably I did.

7659. Is that all you have to tell us of yourself?—I think it is.

7660. (Mr. Anstey.) One thing more. In the election of 1865, after taking Mr. Westropp's money, and pledging yourself in the way you say you did to vote for him, did you not promise also Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake to vote for them?—No, I never did promise them.

7661. If Sir John Shelley stated that on oath before the committee of the House of Commons, was that statement true or false?—Yes, false; and I told him so in the House of Commons.

7662. And Sir John Shelley is also dead?—Yes. I told him in the House of Commons that it was false, and you will find that is so in that report.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not see that at all. I do not see that you had any opportunity of doing so.

7663. (Mr. Price.) Where were you in 1868?—I was not here.

7664. Where were you?—At Durston.

7665. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you no vote?—No.

7666. And had you lost your vote?—I had been away two years nearly.

7667. (Mr. Anstey.) Where do you live?—I live at Durston.

7668. What is your occupation?—I manage for Messrs. Colthurst and Symons.

7669. (Mr. Price.) What are they?—In the brickyard.

7670. Have you the payment of any money for them?—I do not know what you mean.

7671. Have you the payment of their men's wages?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) They had better look out then.

7672. (Mr. Anstey.) Are there 140 men in Mr. Symons' employ?—They have got more than that, probably.

7673. Is that the gentleman who spells his name with a "y"—Symons?—Yes.

7674. Do you know of his having had 100*l.* which he obtained on a promise to use it in bribing, and kept?—Mr. Symons!

7675. Did you know anything about that at a previous election?—I do not think he could be capable of that.

7676. I am not asking you for your opinion as to what he is capable of. It is not a question of your opinion, which no doubt must have great weight, but the question is, did you know anything of that kind occur?—No. I do not believe it did.

7677. Or did he ever give you a sum of money at any election, and tell you to go and bribe with that?—I told you he gave me 130*l.*

7678. Who did?—Mr. Symons.

7679. When? What election?—Vanderbyl's election.

7680. Which of Vanderbyl's election, 1866 or 1868?—1866. That is how he disposed of that 130*l.* by giving it to me.

7681. And what did you do with it?—Gave it away.

7682. But you have not given us the names?—Yes, I have.

7683. Not all the names?—Yes, I have.

7684. I thought you had no recollection?—Mr. Symons would not keep a penny. He would sooner give it away.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

7685. (Mr. Price.) Is that the 130*l.* you talked about the other day? I think you said Mr. Symons had not accounted for 130*l.*?—When I spoke in my preliminary evidence about the money Mr. Symons had from me, you will find a proviso.

7686. I know. Is that the sum that you said Mr. Symons had not accounted for?—Mr. Symons had 140*l.*

7687. He had only one sum of 140*l.*?—Yes.

7688. And this man says—if you could believe anything he says—that Mr. Symons handed it over to him for bribery. That would account for it so far as you are concerned. You have not heard that it had been disposed of in this manner before?—No.

7689. (Mr. Anstey.) Then it was 140*l.* it seems?—That would account for it all but 10*l.*

W. Heal.

WILLIAM HEAL recalled.

7690. (Mr. Anstey.) Then what have you done with the other 10*l.*?—The other 10*l.*?

7691. Yes. You have heard what Mr. Allan has just said?

7692. (Mr. Price.) That he gave Mr. Symons 140*l.* You say he is too respectable to take the money himself. We will suppose that he gave you the whole amount?—No doubt of it. I have no doubt he gave me every penny piece he received.

7693. Then how do you account for it?—I have accounted for 190*l.*

7694. Then you got 140*l.* from Mr. Symons?—Yes, no doubt in the world.

7695. You told us you accounted for 130*l.*?—No doubt, if Mr. Allan gave Mr. Symons 140*l.*; he came straight to me, and gave me the whole of the money.

7696. (Mr. Anstey.) How many of the men that you bribed with the 130*l.* on that occasion were persons in the employ of Mr. Symons?—Not one of them.

7697. Not one?—Not one of them. The only man who was with Mr. Symons was Mr. Thomas. I do not know whether he was with Mr. Symons; he was some time ago; but Mr. Symons took that money, and gave it to Mr. Roberts.

7698. What relation are you to Mr. Symons?—I was a brother-in-law once.

7699. What relation are you to Mr. Cook?—A brother-in-law to Mr. James Cook.

7700. And what relation are you to Mr. George Heal, and one or two other Heals, I believe, but to Mr. George Heal in particular?—A brother.

7701. Is Mr. George Heal on the Conservative side, and you on the Liberal?—He was before this election. I believe he voted Liberal two or three times.

7702. And two or three times Conservative?—I believe so.

7703. The same as you have done?—Some two or three years he voted on the Liberal, and he has voted on the Conservative.

7704. That is like the Bridgwater cases. The two brothers spread their nets, and one brother gets the Liberal money and the other the Conservative money?—I do not doubt it.

7705. Do not you know that a good many small tenements have been built here for the purpose of giving votes, before the passing of the Reform Act, 10*l.* houses?—Well, 10*l.* houses; Bridgwater is a flourishing place.

7706. There has been one general election since '32 nearly every two years and six months, and at each election the quantity of money spent in corruption has been 10,000*l.* I ask you, do you know of any cases of builders or other persons having run up 10*l.* tenements for the purpose of enabling people in their employ to come in for a share of this enormous revenue?—Never.

7707. You never heard of that?—Never in my life.

7708. (Mr. Price.) You have given us an account of the part you took in this election. Mr. Bussell told us that his mantle fell upon your shoulders, and you took up the bribing?—Mr. Bussell took up mine.

7709. Mr. Bussell told us you were the man who took up his. Who did your business before you went to Taunton?—I do not know.

7710. You do not know?—I do not know that. I did not come to Bridgwater during the three years I was away more than two or three times.

7711. (Mr. Anstey.) You came on one occasion all the way from Gloucester to bribe?—I came here to reside.

7712. (Mr. Price.) I suppose you could get no money at Gloucester for your vote?—No, I suppose not.

7713. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you at Gloucester in 1857?—I left Gloucester the latter end of January or the beginning of February. I cannot tell you which month, neither can I tell you to a week.

(Mr. Price.) You stand in a very different position to any other witness who has been called before us, because you stand self-convicted of as gross a crime as it is possible to be committed, a crime which is of more evil consequence than any other except the taking away of life, the crime of perjury; for no man's life or property is safe if a man like you wilfully and deliberately swears to that which is false, for his own interests and motives, and declaring that he did so. If you have not made a full disclosure you not only will not get a certificate from us, but I will tell you further, that it is strongly our opinion that you should be prosecuted by Her Majesty's Attorney General; and the consideration of course whether we shall recommend that or not will be considerably increased if we discover in the course of this inquiry that you have done before us as you did before the committee of the House of Commons, that is to say, committed perjury.

7714. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you leave, I have to ask you a question which bears on your position towards those who are what is called the respectable people in this borough. Have you in consequence of the revelations of your guilt during the last 30 years, and more especially during the late elections, have you lost employment, or friendship, or reputation, or suffered in any way amongst your patrons and friends in this borough?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) I thought not.

7715. (Mr. Price.) You were thought equally well of on both sides?—Oh, yes; I could have got credit to any amount.

7716. And how long have you been in Mr. Symons' employment?—I suppose 16 or 17 months.

7717. And those 16 or 17 months are all subsequent to the frightful disclosures which came out in this blue book of 1866?—Well, I do not know that.

(Mr. Price.) That is all.

(The witness.) I do not know that.

(Mr. Price.) You leave the box, Mr. Heal, a thoroughly discredited and disgraced man. Now you may go. (The witness then left the box.)

(Mr. Price.) That man must not go out of court. If we keep him here to-day it will be a punishment to him. He must not go out of court. Keep him here.

(The witness.) I do not want to go out of court.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Heal, will you step into the box again? (Mr. Heal then returned into the box.)

7718. (Mr. Price.) You told us yesterday that you paid 100*l.* out of the 190*l.* which you received at Vanderbyl's first election to a man named Charles Kirk, who is now dead?—I did.

7719. What time did you pay him, what time of the day?—In the middle of the day. I had met with an accident, and it was just after Mr. Halliday went away from my room.

7720. Who was Mr. Halliday?—He was the agent of the insurance office. He came there, and I could not dispose of the money.

7721. Was he one of the men who came to your bedside, or to your room?—Halliday was.

7722. And Kirk came there while Halliday was there?—No, not while Halliday was there.

7723. Well, just after he had gone?—Yes.

7724. When about was that?—Some time in the morning.

7725. About what time?—It was the middle of the day.

7726. Was it before one o'clock?—My impression is it was before one, but I would not swear it was before one.

7727. (Mr. Anstey.) Kirk left a widow?—Yes.

7728. Where does she live?—Well, I really and truly do not know.

(Mr. Price.) Well, we will find out.

7729. (Mr. Anstey.) What is she?—A widow—nothing; she is in no business, I believe.

7730. (Mr. Price.) Where did Kirk live?—He lived at "Tynte's Arms."

7731. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does his widow keep it on?—No.

7732. (Mr. Price.) Was anybody present when you paid it to Kirk?—No, nobody at all.

7733. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you are quite sure that

EIGHTH DAY.

W. Heal.

31 Aug. 1869.

100*l.* did not stick to you?—I am quite sure it did not.

7734. (Mr. Anstey.) If you did not pay it to Kirk, did it stick to you?—I did pay it.

7735. But supposing you did not pay it to Kirk, I suppose you will admit you did stick to it. You have no other explanation to give of it, except that you gave it to him. Is that so?—Yes.

C. Torr.

CHARLES TORR called and sworn.

7736. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

7737. Anything else?—No.

7738. Are you what is called a local preacher?—Well, sir, yes, I am.

7739. What denomination of dissenters do you belong to?—The Wesleyans.

7740. You are a local preacher of the Wesleyans?—Yes.

7741. And you are a voter of this borough?—Yes.

7742. May I ask you how old you are?—Why, in my 78th year.

7743. Now, did you vote at the election of 1868, the last election?—No.

7744. You did not vote at all?—I did not vote at all. The reason I did not vote was this: I met with an accident, and I told Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl that they must excuse me, for I did not want to be for them or against them. That is why I did not vote.

7745. (Mr. Price.) What had been your political opinions up to that time?—For the last 20 years I have always voted for the Liberals.

7746. For 20 years?—For 20 years.

7747. And what did you do before the last 20 years; how did you vote then?—I had no vote.

7748. You have always voted Liberal?—I have always voted Liberal.

7749. And have you received any money for it at any time?—No, not a farthing.

7750. Never in your life?—Never in my life, and I never gave nor received anything. I never had a farthing; I always went up.

7751. Do you know that your name had been returned? It may be your son. We were told it was the "old gentleman;" the man yesterday said so.

7752. (Mr. Anstey.) Bouchier. Do you know a man named Bouchier?—I do.

7753. Do you remember him coming and asking you for your vote on behalf of the Liberal candidates, either at the last election or the one before that, or at any election?—(The witness hesitated.)

7754. (Mr. Price.) Listen to this. Is it true or not that he promised you 10*l.*?—Who?

7755. Bouchier?—Yes; but that was after the election was over.

7756. (Mr. Anstey.) What election was that; the last election?—No.

7757. When Vanderbyl was first returned?—Yes.

7758. The second election of 1866, then?—Yes.

7759. Bouchier promised you how much?—He said that he tried to get for me 10*l.*

7760. Had you asked him; had you told him this, that "other voters were to have 10*l.*, why should not I have it"?—Yes.

7761. And then he said he would try and get it for you?—Yes.

7762. Have you ever had it?—I have never had it.

7763. You have asked for it?—I have passed the compliment when I have been there. Mr. Bouchier and I were always very intimate.

7764. But have you ever asked him for the money since?—I think——

7765. Have you asked him to pay the money?—I believe I have.

7766. But you never got it?—I never got it.

7767. (Mr. Price.) Then you never did get a farthing?—I never got the worth of a penny.

7768. But you told him that you had heard that nearly everybody at Bridgwater had money for his vote, and you must have some also?—I thought it was due to me, because I always went honestly to the poll soon after breakfast; always when I voted.

7769. So you thought, as you had always gone honestly to the poll at previous elections, you would for once go dishonestly. You thought you ought to get something at 78. Better late than never. Had you asked for money on that occasion?—Yes.

7770. Had you heard that anybody at Bridgwater had got money for their votes?—I had heard that a great many had; but I never asked any person for a halfpenny, nor have I ever received anything. I never had so much as a glass of beer.

7771. You did ask Bouchier?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Then that confirms Mr. Bouchier's story. That is all.

C. Faun.

CHARLES FAUN called and sworn.

7772. (Mr. Price.) Have you received a summons this morning?—This morning, at 11 o'clock.

7773. Where do you live?—Ball's Lane.

7774. Have you a brother of the name of Henry?—He is dead.

7775. What are you?—I am a printer.

7776. A master printer?—A master printer.

7777. How many men do you employ?—Two.

7778. How long have you been a master printer?—36 years.

7779. Have you had the printing for the Liberal party at the elections?—Yes.

7780. Always?—Yes, I have.

7781. The whole of it?—Since I have been in Bridgwater; not the whole. The printing has been divided between three.

7782. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

7783. For whom did you vote?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

7784. Did you get any money for it?—Certainly not.

7785. Were you promised any?—No, certainly not, never in my life.

7786. Did you receive any money for the purpose of bribing other people?—No, never in my life. I am speaking for the first time in 1831.

7787. We are going by steps. In 1868, did you receive any money?—1868?

7788. Yes, the last election, in 1868. Did you receive any money to bribe other people with?—Never in my life.

7789. Had you ever been employed by the Liberal party to bribe others?—Never.

7790. Then what that man has told us is untrue?—About me, sir?

7791. Yes?—Certainly not.

7792. Then we understood from him that you were one of the persons who were with him, Mr. Charles Fawn?—It must be Henry Fawn.

7793. Did your brother take an active part in that work then?—I believe he did. I do not know of my own knowledge. He had a nephew, Foster.

7794. Who was clerk to Mr. Lovibond?—Who was clerk to Mr. Lovibond.

7795. He probably was the one; it was a mistake. I thought you were the person he spoke of. You were going to speak a minute or two ago about the election of 1831?—That was the first election I polled.

7796. And you have voted at every election since?—Yes.

7797. And you never received anything?—No, I never received anything.

7798. Have you ever asked for anything?—Never in my life.

7799. (Mr. Coleridge.) What sort or character of election was that in 1831?—That was Mr. Astell and Colonel Tynte, and Mr. Shirley.

7800. Was much money spent at that election?—I heard so, on Mr. Astell's side.

7801. Was there any petition?—I do not know.

7802. You voted in 1831, and you heard that money was spent in bribery?—I heard so.

7803. I mean you heard it at the time?—Yes.

7804. In 1832, were the candidates Tynte and Tayleur?—Yes.

7805. Was any money spent at that election?—No.

7806. Then in 1835, Tynte and Temple Leader's election; there was a lot of money spent then?—I believe there was.

7807. What was the report as to the money spent by Mr. Temple Leader?—I believe 10,000*l.*

7808. Then in the next election, in 1837, Mr. Broadwood was returned in the place of Mr. Sheridan resigned?—Yes.

7809. Was there any money spent then?—I believe so; it was said that Mr. Broadwood spent a good deal of money then.

7810. Was there a petition then?—Yes; and I believe it would have been carried out if it had not been for the death of King William IV.

7811. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you not making a mistake?—I believe not.

7812. There was a petition against Mr. Broadwood for gross bribery by himself and his agents?—Yes.

7813. You are aware that William IV. did not die till the end of June?—I do not know whether he died in June or July.

7814. Well, he did not die till the end of June. There were petitions by Sheridan and Lethbridge, and by a number of electors. There were two or three petitions against that return of Broadwood?—I believe there were.

7815. And one of them was tried; one of them was what was called "struck"?—Yes, I believe it was.

7816. Now listen to this: after this petition had been received, do you remember Mr. Broadwood, before William IV. died, writing a letter to the Speaker published in the journal, informing the Speaker that it was not his intention to defend his return?—I never heard of the letter.

7817. You never heard that he retired from the representation, and said he was not going to defend the return?—I never did know.

7818. After William IV. died, but before the day appointed for adjudicating upon the petition against Mr. Broadwood's return, do you remember a second petition being presented, a sham petition from this borough, from persons praying to be allowed to defend in the stead of Mr. Broadwood?—I do not recollect it.

7819. You have no distinct recollection on the subject?—I have not.

7820. (Mr. Coleridge.) At which of Mr. Leader's elections was it that he said, if Mr. Broadwood came here with his piano-fortes he would come with his piano-fifties?—Mr. Leader only got in at one election.

7821. Do you remember his saying that?—No, I do not.

7822. There was another election at King William's death, when Mr. Broadwood and Mr. Courtenay were returned?—Yes.

7823. And was there any money spent then?—No, I believe not.

7824. In 1847, we had Tynte and Broadwood; was that a pure election?—I cannot tell. In the year 1832 there were 37 of us prosecuted for riot and assault, at the time when there was so much emotion in the country. I was one of them, and I made up my mind I never would mix in the elections again.

7825. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean that you were tried at the Wells assizes?—There were 37 of us. I was tried at Wells sessions.

7826. And you made up your mind you never would mix yourself up actively in the electioneering again?—Yes.

7827. But simply vote?—But simply vote.

7828. You remember this year of 1837. Now try to recollect something about that which took place in the following year. Do you recollect in 1838 the trial of an action brought by a common informer of the name of Webb against Mr. Smith, then an articled clerk, for 500*l.* penalty for having bribed at the election of 1837?—I remember it well.

7829. You remember it well?—Yes.

7830. It was tried before a special jury at Taunton assizes?—It was.

7831. Were you present?—I was not.

7832. Is that Mr. Smith still alive?—He is.

7833. What is his present condition?—I believe he is retired. He is paralytic.

7834. What is he called? Is he the alderman?—No, Richard Smith. The alderman is Joseph Richard Smith.

7835. Is he the son then?—The brother.

7836. The brother of Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—He is.

7837. Where is he living, this Mr. Richard Smith?—At Binford Place. It is called Binford House. It is only two doors from me.

7838. Has he any other name besides Richard?—Not that I am aware of.

7839. Because it has been stated by some of the other witnesses that he is the Richard Joseph Smith?—He is not.

7840. He is not?—He is not, I am quite certain.

7841. When you say he is paralytic, do you mean that he is utterly incapable of being moved?—I should say so; not of being moved, but I should say incapable of great exercise.

7842. Is he, to your knowledge, a person of sound mind and memory?—Well, I cannot say.

7843. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you last see him?—About a couple of months ago.

7844. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he speak to you?—Oh yes.

7845. That is what I mean. He can understand questions, and give intelligible answers to them; two months ago he could?—Oh yes, he could.

7846. Why did you hesitate just now?—I did not understand you.

7847. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean, that if we went down to his house, as we have the power of doing, that he would be able to understand our questions and give us intelligible answers?—I cannot give any opinion upon it.

7848. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know who his medical attendant is?—Dr. Farmer, I think.

7849. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware that the particular feature in the case against him was, that he could, if he had liked, have informed the House of Commons who the "man in the moon" of that year was, because he was the person who indicated to the "man in the moon" the voters who were to receive the money?—I never heard a word about the "man in the moon."

7850. You never heard about it at his house?—No, never.

7851. You never heard that on this election people were bribed in a darkened room, at the house of a man called Murlis, by a stranger to the borough, to whom the voters were pointed out and introduced by this Richard Smith?—What year is that?

7852. Why, in 1837. I am only talking about one election?—Well, I have heard so.

7853. Then do be careful, sir, what answers you make?—I have only been just subpœnaed about it; I had no idea of the questions that would be asked.

7854. I ask you again, do you remember that that was the nature of the case which was made against Mr. Richard Smith?—I remember it perfectly well.

7855. Have you ever heard that that man who is called the "stranger," or the "man in the moon," or whatever you like, in 1838, has ever been seen in Bridgwater since—the man who acted on that occasion for the Tories?—I never heard him called the "man in the moon;" I heard him called the stranger.

EIGHTH DAY.

C. Faun.

31 Aug. 1869.

7856. Well, the stranger; you know the man I mean, the person who paid the money to the people indicated by Smith. Have you ever heard who he was?—No.

7857. Are you aware that in 1838 there was the most remarkable petition that ever proceeded from Bridgwater, signed by almost all the respectable people at that time in the place, praying for the disfranchisement of the borough, and referring to these practices as reasons why the place should be disfranchised?—I remember nothing of the kind.

7858. Do you remember that Mr. Ward presented that petition, and that there was a conversation with the House of Commons for two hours and a half?—I recollect nothing of the kind.

7859. In which Mr. Courtenay and his colleague, Mr. Broadwood, took part?—I recollect nothing about it.

7860. Signed by 156 out of 568 registered voters; and their names comprising some of the most influential and respectable persons in the borough, namely, 2 yeomen, 13 gentlemen and esquires, 6 merchants, 2 dissenting ministers, 3 surgeons, 1 solicitor, 1 conveyancer, 7 innkeepers, 1 lieutenant, and 119 shopkeepers. You never recollect that petition?—I never recollect anything of the kind.

7861. Your memory is a most convenient one?—I beg to say I am telling you nothing but what is the truth.

7862. (Mr. Price.) You did not sign such a petition?—Never.

7863. (Mr. Anstey.) Presented in December 1837, and made the subject of debate in 1838?—I have never heard of it.

(Mr. Price.) It was a mistake about your name. It was no doubt your brother who was mentioned, and you were mistaken for him, or otherwise you would not have been summoned.

J. Bouchier.

JOHN BOUCHIER recalled.

7864. (Mr. Price.) You were asked yesterday some questions, and it appeared only fair to you that you should have an opportunity of refreshing your recollection. You were asked several questions yesterday about the cheques which you had received from Mr. White?—Yes.

7865. And you were under an impression that all the cheques you had received from him, as far as we understood it, were cheques which were payable to you, and you had nothing to do but to present the cheque to the banker and get the money for it. You were particularly asked by my learned friend, Mr. Coleridge, whether you had ever had to put your name to a cheque being payable to order, and you had nothing to do but to present the cheque and get the cash for it, and you said, "No, you thought not." That is so, was it not?—That is what I thought.

7866. It was fair that you should have an opportunity of re-considering that question, and having had that opportunity I ask you, are you very clear about it, or not?—I was not clear at the time.

7867. Now I will put into your hands that cheque, and Mr. White, unfortunately not being able to be present, will not be prejudiced by anything that I am doing now, because he will have every opportunity we hope, at some time or other, if we require it, of giving any explanation. But this is a cheque which I am going to put into your hands dated July 30th, 1866. Now, in his banking book we observe there was a cheque of the 3rd of August, that there was put to his debit, "3d August, Bouchier, 10*l.*" The probability is therefore, of course, that though the cheque might be dated July 30th that you did not pay it into the bank until the 3rd August; because we know perfectly well that bankers would not put down the date of the cheque, but would put down the date on which it is paid in. I believe that is the custom. Now, if you will look at that cheque (handing the document to the witness), and will look at the back of it, you will see a signature. I ask you whether that is your signature at the back of it?—Yes.

7868. Turn to the back first. Is that your handwriting at the back?—Yes.

7869. That is your signature. There, you see, that is a cheque payable to order, which, of course, the bankers would not cash without having your indorsement upon it. Now, does that refresh your recollection? This is dated, you see, the 30th July 1866, and no doubt it is the cheque which is entered to the debit of Mr. White in his book as of the 3rd August. Therefore, you probably paid it in on the 3rd August, or somebody paid it in for you. Do you remember anything about that? You know yesterday you stated that you thought that that 10*l.* cheque, which was on the 3rd August, and which was a very short time after the election, was not a cheque given with respect to the bribe, but was given with respect to a sum of money which he gave you to make up a sum which you wished to have?—Yes, that was my impression.

7870. Does the fact of your seeing this indorsement of yours refresh your recollection at all as to what the transaction was?—It does not, not for the minute. I have no recollection that that 10*l.* was the 10*l.* that was promised me for my vote; I do not think so. I have a clear recollection now, as I said before, that Mr. White drew out his cheque book.

7871. It was much later than that. You say still that you, being still unpaid the 10*l.* that you had been promised, then went to him and asked him for it, and he drew out his cheque book, and drew a cheque, and said, "No, I will not give you a cheque, because it may appear against me;" and then eventually he paid you in cash?—Yes, that was my impression, and is still.

7872. Does the fact of this indorsement of yours, cheque payable to your order, alter your view at all about the matter, as to whether it was given to you for your vote or in the way of an advance, as you stated yesterday?—I do not think it was given to me for the vote. I will turn it over in my mind, but I cannot now remember.

(Mr. Price.) Do so.

7873. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you brought the receipt you were asked about?—I cannot find it; I have searched for it.

7874. You have given the effect of it correctly?—Oh yes, I am certain of it.

7875. (Mr. Price.) It has been just suggested to me that there are two others. I think we had better have the banker, because the banker will tell us. Can you remember how you disposed of this cheque?—Will you kindly give me the cheque, and I will endeavour to find something at home bearing upon it?

7876. Did you send it away; I understood you to say, when you wanted these advances you wanted them generally for payment of goods in the way of your trade?—Yes.

7877. And you say you might have sent it away to London?—Yes, that is what I thought.

7878. Was that the general rule, that when you got advances you always wanted them in the way of your trade?—To the best of my recollection always.

7879. And having indorsed it, you would send it away to whoever wanted money from you?—Yes.

7880. That being the fact (and the fact you ought to know), you will find that there are two other names down here, at the bottom of this cheque in the corner, which shows that it passed through some other hands; does that enable you to say positively whether that was for your vote, because it was for your vote we would assume you would go and get it cashed for 10*l.* at once?—Will you allow me to take this home?

(Mr. Price.) No, you cannot do that. I think we had better call the banker as to that.

7881. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you sued on one cheque, on the back of which you had put your name?—What! a note of this kind?

7882. Yes?—No, never.

7883. Because if you look at the corner you will find it is endorsed somewhere, something versus Boucher, as if it were ear-marked in that way, and paid in that way by the bank; can you at all explain that?—No. I can hardly understand that question. Will you kindly repeat it?

7884. You will see at the corner of that cheque some name, Tuckem, or something of that sort, versus Boucher. Just look at it. My object was to see if you might not have been sued, or some action brought on that occasion, and that that was some mark made by the banker's clerk?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Was there ever any demand made upon you for a debt by a court of law, in an action in which you were defendant, and in which you paid that cheque in to satisfy the demand; were you ever sued by anybody for anything supplied to you in the way of your trade, and have you gone to get an advance of money from Mr. White, and then paid the cheque in that way, so that it would be endorsed; do you recollect anything about that?

7885. (Mr. Price.) In July 1866, were you at that time being sued?—I was just recollecting the date. There was a time I was sued by one of my creditors at Leicester.

7886. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is his name?—Garner.

7887. Do you know a person with whom you dealt, and with whom you might have sent this cheque, whose name was something like Tuckem?—No.

7888. What is the name of your leather merchant in London?—I do not deal with any leather merchant in London.

7889. With whom then do you deal?—At Bristol.

7890. With whom there?—Nicholls.

7891. Anybody else?—No.

7892. Anybody at Leicester besides Garner?—Yes. I must have been doing with a man of the name of Creek.

7893. Anyone of this name?—Nothing near that name. In fact, there is no other person who has sued me or attempted to do so at that time.

7894. There is one other question which this question gives rise to. Supposing this cheque was drawn on the 30th July, and you had to make up an account, and you sent away the cheque in the way you have told us. You say you took 6*l.* or 7*l.* of Mr. White, and you say you wanted a few more pounds, and he gave you a cheque and you took the money. Have you any books to show that he did pay you 10*l.* about the 30th July 1866; that would be just 15 days after the election?—The only thing I would be likely to have would be I took up a bill of the bank.

7895. It seems very desirable you should clear this up as well as you can?—I will try to.

7896. (Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure that the transaction with regard to the money you received was not in the way of a direct bribe, but that it was understood you were to have assistance from Mr. White if you wanted it at a particular moment?—What! the 10*l.*?

7897. Yes?—The 10*l.* was for my vote. That was the 3rd August 1866.

Mr. William John Ford sworn.

Mr. W. J. Ford.

7898. (Mr. Price.) You are the manager of the South Wales and West of England District Bank, at the Bridgwater branch?—I am.

7899. Will you take this cheque, drawn in favour of Bouchier by Henry White on your bank, endorsed "John Bouchier," and explain it to us if you can by anything you see on that?—It came to us from the Bank of England through the clearing house and our London agents, Messrs. Glyn and Co.

7900. What are those names on them?—I could hardly decipher them this morning.

7901. It looks like "Bouchier," the bottom name?—Yes, no doubt about it.

7902. Your London agents are Messrs. Glyn and Co.?—They are. If you like I will send the cheque to them and ask them to inquire at the Bank of England of whom they received this cheque; that appears to me to be the best way of obtaining the information.

7903. It must have gone to London, clearly?—No doubt, and came to us through our agents.

7904. It had been paid away through the Bank of England?—No doubt about it, because the Bank of England stamp is upon it.

7905. And they cashed it?—Yes, or took it perhaps from some customer of theirs; it has no doubt gone through the Bank of England in London, because it is stamped with the stamp.

7906. Then, of course, the bank in changing the cheques at the clearing house with your agents have handed that in as against you at Glyn's, and Glyn's have transferred it to you and charged you with it?—Yes, that is it. I will get some information from them as to how the Bank of England obtained the cheque, if you like.

7907. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think the course you suggest is the best one, because that would enable us probably to trace where the cheque came from?—Yes, we can trace it, no doubt.

7908. (Mr. Price.) I think perhaps it would be as well that you should?—I will.

7909. It is a long time ago?—That would make no difference. I will tell you on Thursday morning I have no doubt.

7910. It is only fair in justice to Bouchier and White that it should be cleared up?—That is why I handed it in. It occurred to me yesterday that I could produce the cheque. I did not mention the subject to anyone, but simply handed the cheque to your secretary, and I will get all the information I can on Thursday morning, if you will allow me.

7911. Because it is fair to both the men that the thing should be cleared up?—That is merely why I thought I would hand it in.

7912. If it is a business transaction you will probably be able to trace it?—No doubt.

7913. There seem to have been other cheques passed to Bouchier which it would be of advantage to know something about; there are two other items debited to White's account with you?—Yes.

7914. We should like to know whether the previous accounts were in the same form—similar transactions?—I will get them for you.

7915. Because Bouchier says he had two similar transactions?—Yes.

7916. And the book shows you there were two?—Yes, certainly; I could find the cheques. I do not know whether it is worth while mentioning it, but White spoke of a cheque he had given Gilbert for 9*l.* 15*s.* I also have that cheque; and it appears to have been paid over our counter in nine sovereigns and 15 shillings silver.

7917. (Mr. Anstey.) Just look at the counterfoil here; that is one of your cheque books (handing a cheque book)?—It is.

7918. In whose handwriting is the counterfoil?—Well, it appears to me to be the handwriting of Mr. Cooke.

7919. The lawyer?—I think it is. I would not swear to it; to the best of my knowledge at the present moment I believe it is.

7920. That is the only book, I think, which has blank cheques?—May I turn to the notes on the counterfoil?

7921. Yes; but that is the only book that has blank cheques; therefore I do not know whether these others have been issued by your bank. Look at them, and see whether they have?—They have all been issued by our bank.

7922. All these books?—All those cheques, certainly.

EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. W. J. Ford.

31 Aug. 1869.

7923. None of them from Sealy's?—No, none of them.

7924. Do you see the same handwriting?—I do not think that is Mr. Cook's handwriting.

7925. Whose?—I should think it is Mr. Barham's; it is very like Mr. Carslake's. I would not positively swear.

7926. You mean Mr. Eustace Barham, his partner; it is either Barham or Carslake, is that it?—There appears to be a different handwriting on this counterfoil, certainly.

7927. How is that marked on the book, is it No. 5 or No. 4 in Roman numerals?—It is No. 1.

7928. Take that one first, then, and give me the different handwritings if you can; for instance, No. 1?—Really I should hardly like to say. It appears very much like Mr. Eustace Barham's handwriting the first counterfoil, but I would not swear that it was.

7929. Then there is a minute, which is illegible to me, of the cashier, I suppose; some initials at the foot. Whose is that?—I should think it was "Jas. T.;" James Trevor. I am only speaking from guess, I do not know.

7930. What had he to do with the bank?—He is a solicitor; perhaps it was something to do with electioneering.

7931. Mr. Barham would be on one side and Mr. Trevor probably on the other; how would that be?—I cannot say. It occurs to me it is very like James Trevor.

7932. Is that a cashier's mark?—No, nothing to do with a cashier.

7933. (Mr. Coleridge.) What does it denote?—I do not know; I cannot tell; it is made by our customers; we never see them again.

7934. (Mr. Price.) It is a note made by the drawer of the cheque?—Certainly.

7935. (Mr. Anstey.) You think the first counterfoil is in Mr. Barham's handwriting?—I think very likely.

7936. If not Mr. Carslake's?—I think it is more like Mr. Barham's than Mr. Carslake's.

7937. I do not want to waste your time by asking you to go over and tell me the handwriting of all the counterfoils that appear to be the same, but pass on to the first that is different from that?—The next is different, No. 2 counterfoil.

7938. Whose writing?—I have no doubt it is Mr. Cook's handwriting.

7939. The lawyer?—The present lawyer; he was then either a clerk or an articled clerk at Carslake and Barham's.

7940. The next?—The same; Mr. Cook.

7941. (Mr. Price.) That is a cheque book in all probability which has been in the custody of Messrs. Carslake and Barham?—No doubt about that.

7942. That has been a cheque book of Carslake and Barham's office?—No doubt about it. I have no doubt in my mind it is.

7943. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you go on until you find some that are different?—No. 23, I do not think that is Mr. Cook's handwriting, and I am entirely unable to say whose it is; the word "John" resembles it, and also the "1857," but the name does not, in my idea, resemble Cooke's handwriting.

7944. Go to No. 2 book and look through it in the same way?—Yes, the first cheque I have no doubt is Cooke's handwriting.

7945. They appear to be all in Cooke's handwriting?—I believe they are, to the best of my belief.

7946. No. 3, if you please?—They appear to be in Mr. Cooke's handwriting.

7947. No. 4, particularly at No. 1 cheque?—Yes, I believe that to be Mr. Cooke's.

7948. In whose handwriting is the red ink across—I do not want it read out—on number 1 of book No. 4?—There is no red ink crossing.

7949. Then you have not looked at No. 4?—I have not got No. 4, this is No. 6.

7950. Do not read out what it is, but just look at it?—I do not think that is Mr. Cooke's handwriting.

7951. Whose is it?—I could not say; I do not know it.

7952. But the counterfoil is, you think; the rest of it?—In this cheque book; no, I do not think any of it is.

7953. Then whose handwriting, do you think you can recognize this by going through it?—This is not my cheque book.

7954. Is No. 5 one of yours also?—No. 5 is.

7955. Whose cheque book is No. 4; this one you have given back?—Messrs. Sealy and Prior; the first of No. 5 are Mr. Cook's, I have no doubt.

7956. And the red ink?—Yes, the same handwriting.

7957. On the crossing?—Yes.

7958. Go on until you find any in a different handwriting, and then tell me whose that is until you come to the end of the particular year of which it begins with?—Well, I think No. 16 is the last of Cook's handwriting.

7959. Look at that, or if it is not there look back, and see what I call a minute, "E. B." does not appear?—Yes.

7960. Is that Eustace Barham's handwriting?—I do not think it is.

7961. Whose is it, do you know?—No; I could not charge myself.

7962. Is it that of any officer in your bank?—Certainly not; we do not have these cheques after they are returned to the customers. I could not tell you in whose handwriting.

7963. You do not think Mr. Barham's?—No, I do not think it is.

7964. In the same cheque book there are dates following on, a year afterwards or nearly a year afterwards, with a peculiarity connected with them which you will see consists in the crossing of some of them; one name is crossed over the other?—Yes.

7965. Do you know in whose handwriting the different counterfoils for that year are; particularly those entries which run across. They are not Mr. Cook's?—No, certainly not. I do not know whose they are.

7966. And all those have "E. B." too, have they not?—At the bottom?

7967. Yes; what I call a minute?—Yes, but I do not think they are Mr. Barham's handwriting.

7968. Now the last book of all, No. 6?—The first one I have no doubt is Mr. Cook's handwriting.

7969. I think you have gone through that, have you not; that is the first I showed you?—No, I only looked through the first counterfoil (referring). I have no doubt they are Mr. Cook's.

7970. All of them?—Yes, all of them.

7971. And there are some blank cheques not used?—Yes, a great many.

7972. (Mr. Price.) Then you will be good enough to do that for us?—I will; and I shall be able to give you the information on Thursday morning I have no doubt.

J. Bouchier.

JOHN BOUCHIER recalled.

7973. (Mr. Price.) You have heard these particulars; it may refresh your recollection?—It has. I think it is more likely to be a Norwich house that the money was paid to, where there was a man of the name of Lulham. I recollect a person there with whom I did business.

7974. (Mr. Price.) Does that look like the name of "Lulham"?

(Mr. Ford.) Yes, it does. I think it may be "Lulham."

7975. (Mr. Price.) Has the Bank of England a branch at Norwich?

(Mr. Ford.) I could not tell you from memory.

7976. (Mr. Price.) If so, this would have been stamped with the name of the branch, would not it?—

I think it would have been stamped by the Bank of England at Norwich.

(Mr. Price.) It looks very like "Lulham."

(Mr. Ford.) Yes.

(The witness.) I will try and find a bill.

7977. (Mr. Price.) You had a man named Lulham with whom you had business transactions?—Yes, in Norwich.

Mrs. Emma Collins sworn.

7978. (Mr. Price.) You are now the wife of Mr. Collins?—Yes.

7979. And were formerly the wife of Kirk?—Yes.

7980. Who kept some inn?—The "Kent Arms."

7980*a*. Do you remember the election of Mr. Vanderbyl, the first time when he came down, in 1866?—I do.

7981. To stand against Mr. Patten?—Yes.

7982. Was your then husband, Charles Kirk, a voter for the borough?—Yes, I believe so.

7983. Do you know the man who has been examined here, Heal?—Perfectly well.

7984. Was that the time that Heal was ill at his own house?—I do not remember it; he might have been, but not to the best of my knowledge.

7985. You do not remember whether that is so or not?—No.

7986. Did you see Heal at all at your house about that time?—He frequently came in and out.

7987. But just about the time of the first election of Vanderbyl?—He might have been.

7988. You cannot say?—No.

7989. Did you talk over election matters with your husband at all?—No.

7990. About his vote?—No.

7991. About which way he was going to vote?—No.

7992. Did you know from him which way he was going to vote?—No, I did not.

7993. Did you hear him say at any time that he had got anything for his vote?—No.

7994. Now Heal says he gave your husband 100*l.* at that election to distribute?—I do not believe anything of the kind.

7995. What?—I do not believe it.

7996. Why?—Because most probably I should have known something of it if he had.

7997. You would have known if he had 100*l.*?—Most probably I should have known something of it. I should have heard something or other of it.

7998. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you take care of the money?—Yes, generally.

7999. Was your husband an active man in election matters?—No.

8000. Was he a likely person to have 100*l.* given to him to go and bribe other people with?—Not likely, I think.

8001. From what you know of him, had he done anything of that kind of thing before?—No, he did not.

8002. You are quite sure of that?—I am quite sure of that.

8003. You think you would probably have known if he had got into bribing other people?—Yes.

8004. Was he Vanderbyl's man?—He was that side, I think.

8005. Do you think he was a man that would take money for his own vote?—No.

8006. Had you ever heard of his doing so at former elections?—No, I never did.

8007. Heal says he gave him 100*l.* when nobody was present. Do you think if your husband had received 100*l.* you would have known it?—I should have known something of it, most probably.

8008. Why do you say so?—Because I think I should.

8009. Because he might keep such a thing from you, and not tell you?—I certainly think I should have known it.

8010. Used most of the electors to come to your house at election times?—No, not many.

8011. Not any?—I do not say not any.

8012. Was there any treating going on?—No.

8013. Any bill against Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

8014. Have you never sent in any bill for treating?—Never.

8015. You had customers of your house of course?—Yes.

8016. Was it a Liberal house?—No; it belonged to Colonel Tynte.

8017. You are sure you had no drinking or treating going on?—Nothing of the kind.

8018. (Mr. Coleridge.) No treating or drinking of electors without its being paid for?—No.

8019. Or any bill being sent in to Mr. Vanderbyl, or Mr. Barham, or Mr. Kinglake, or anybody?—No.

8020. (Mr. Price.) Did you see anybody in the habit of taking part at elections come down and talk at your house to your husband, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Barham, Bussell, or any of them?——

8021. You have heard the persons mentioned here, and you know them?—Yes.

8022. Do you remember any of them coming to your husband and asking for his vote, or to do anything for the election?—Never.

8023. Was he at all a friend of Heal's?—Not particularly, that I am aware of.

8024. Was Mr. Heal a customer of your house?—No.

8025. Did he supply beer to your house?—No.

8026. Never?—Well, I do not know; we might have had a cask, or anything of that kind.

8027. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this a free house, or a brewer's house?—A free house.

8028. You could buy your beer where you liked?—Yes.

8029. (Mr. Price.) And you may have had a cask of beer, or something of that kind, but not bound to take it all from Heal?—No, not at all.

8030. Did you ever know your husband was on such terms with Heal that he would be likely to entrust him with 100*l.* to bribe voters with?—No, I do not believe he would.

8031. You know nothing of any intimacy between them which would induce Heal to let your husband have 100*l.* to bribe voters with?—No.

8032. Was your husband busy about the election on the day of the election, or where was he the greater part of the day; was he amongst the voters?—I really cannot tell you. I do not remember where he was that day.

8033. You cannot say whether there were many voters about your house?—There were not many at that time, that I know of.

8034. The reason you were sent for was because we understood that you are quite sure that your husband did not get that 100*l.*?—I do not believe he ever had; because it is most probable I should have known something about it.

8035. That is what makes you think so?—Yes.

8036. Did he never speak to you about it?—Never.

8037. When did he die?—Two years ago, the 13th of May last.

8038. He lived one year after the election?—Yes.

8039. And never said a word about this?—Never in his life.

8040. Did he ever render an account to Heal of the way he had spent the 100*l.*?—No.

8041. And you never heard him breathe a word of it?—No, nothing of the kind.

8042. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect at any other election your husband getting a sudden accession of wealth?—No.

8043. I mean any election during the years you were married, his receiving any money at any election?—No, I do not.

EIGHTH DAY.

Mrs. E. Collins.

31 Aug. 1869.

8044. Do you believe he ever did ?—No.

8045. (Mr. Price.) Do you know whether your husband had promised his vote ?—No.

8046. You say he voted Liberal ?—Yes.

8047. Do you know whether your husband went up to the "Clarence" to see the gentlemen on the other side about the middle of the day ?—No.

8048. Did you ever hear him say he was going up to the "Clarence" to see the Conservative side ?—No, never.

8049. Did he ever tell you about a lot of voters being bottled up at the "Clarence" ?—No, never.

8050. (Mr. Price.) All you can say is that you do not believe your husband got it, because you think if he had he would have talked to you about it ?—I should most probably have heard something of it.

8051. He never kept a secret from you in your life, do you mean ?—That I cannot say, I am sure.

8052. You never heard of his going to the "Clarence" that day ?—Not at all.

8053. Do you think it likely—you know what his politics were—that he went to the "Clarence" that day, about the middle of the day, and offered to take money, asked them to give him money for his vote, or promised to vote for the Conservatives if they would give him money ?—No, I do not think he ever did.

8054. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you say he had always voted for the Liberals ?—Yes, to the best of my knowledge; I never knew him vote any other.

8055. How many elections do you remember ?—I am sure I do not know.

8056. (Mr. Price.) Did you take an interest in elections yourself ?—No.

8057. Not at all ?—No.

8058. Did you wear the colours of either party ?—No.

8059. You never got any ribbons or anything ?—No.

8060. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever hear of his voting for the Conservatives on any occasion ?—No, I never did.

W. Heal.

WILLIAM HEAL recalled.

8061. (Mr. Price.) Did you get any return from Kirk of the way he had spent this 100*l.* ?—Not a farthing; I never got any.

8062. Did you ask him for it ?—I did repeatedly.

8063. Did you go to his house for it ?—I did repeatedly.

8064. You went immediately to his house; I thought you were ill in bed ?—It was after Mr. Allan called on me to make an account.

8065. How long after the election ?—It may be a few days after; I am not prepared to say the day.

8066. You got all right directly after the election and were able to go out ?—I went out soon afterwards.

8067. The insurance man had gone. Had you got your money out of the Accidental Insurance Company ?—Not a farthing.

8068. They would not pay you ?—They would not.

8069. You made a claim upon them ?—I made a claim upon them.

8070. And they would not pay you ?—And they would not pay me.

8071. They investigated the case and would not pay ?—Yes.

8072. Did any medical man attend you ?—Dr. Symes.

8073. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he alive ?—Yes.

8074. (Mr. Price.) How long did he attend you ?—Three weeks or a month, more than probable.

8075. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why would not the office pay you ?—I considered it because I did not vote for the Tories.

8076. Did you bring an action against them ?—No.

8077. Why not ?—Because I did not.

8078. Why, if you thought you ought to be paid and had insured your life and limbs, did you not bring an action against them ?—Because there was some doubt about whether I could get the insurance or not.

8079. (Mr. Price.) Why was there any doubt if you had a real accident, and were insured in the office ?—The accident was this, that I went to get on a pole and fell down; I threw my legs on a pole.

8080. What were you doing ?—Merely a little fun, that was all.

8081. Do you mean to say, you choosing to go at your time of life and play the fool on a pole, then, because the accident happened, you brought a claim against the office ?—Yes, I did, and I oftentimes have such games as that.

8082. When was it you went down to Kirk's house and saw him about making a return of this money ?—I saw him two or three times.

8083. In the daytime ?—Well, I saw him at night.

8084. At his own house ?—Yes.

8085. Did you see his wife ?—Yes.

8086. There is Mrs. Collins (in court) ?—Yes.

8087. Have you made a demand from him in her presence ?—Never.

8088. What have you done when you have been down there ?—Spoken to him about it.

8089. Nobody present ?—No. I have spoken to him personally two or three times.

8090. What did he say ?—He told me he had laid it out.

8091. Did he give you the names of anybody ?—He did not.

8092. When you gave an account to those who entrusted you with the money, did you tell them that Kirk had never accounted for this 100*l.* ?—I did not give any account at all.

8093. Did not he never ask you for it ?—Allan came to me afterwards.

8094. Did he ask you to give an account of how the money had gone ?—He did.

8095. What did you say about Kirk ?—I did not say a word about Kirk.

8096. Did not you tell him that you entrusted Kirk with 100*l.* ?—I did not ever.

8097. Why ?—I do not know why. I did not do it.

8098. Did you pretend you had the distributing of 60*l.* yourself ?—Yes.

8099. How did you account for it ?—To whom ?

8100. To the man who gave you it ?—He will tell you. I never accounted at all.

8101. Did he ask you to account ?—He did.

8102. Did you refuse to give an account ?—I did.

8103. Then there is no doubt that you put it into your own pocket. You may go from the witness box. —I wanted to correct myself. On the 7th June I voted for Patten instead of Bagehot.

8104. (Mr. Anstey.) You did vote for the Conservatives again ?—Yes.

8105. That you call a correction ?—Yes.

8106. I call it a downright falsehood if your first statement was true, and I call your first statement a downright falsehood if this statement is true. I do not call it a correction at all.

(Mr. Price.) There cannot be the slightest doubt that the impression left on our minds will be that you received that money and put it in your own pocket, and what you have told us about Kirk is untrue, and you will be inserted as a person who has received bribes.

(Mr. Anstey.) And will most probably be prosecuted for perjury.

PHILIP GILBERT, jun., sworn.

8107. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A carpenter.

8108. You are a voter for the borough?—Yes.

8109. How long have you been a voter?—Lord Henley's election was the first I voted at.

8110. Was that in 1852, when Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett were returned?—Yes.

8111. Have you voted at every election since?—No; at one election I had no vote.

8112. Which was that?—Well, I think it was when Colonel Tynte was returned the first time.

8113. That would be 1847. Did you vote in 1859 and 1865, the two elections in 1866, and the last election in 1868?—Well, I believe I have ever since.

8114. At the last election whom did you vote for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

8115. Did you get anything for voting for them?—No.

8116. Nothing?—No.

8117. Were you promised nothing?—No.

8118. Did you ask for nothing?—No.

8119. Did you get any money from them to go and bribe other persons?—No.

8120. None at all?—No, none at all.

8121. Was the only part you took in the election going to vote?—No, not exactly that.

8122. Then tell us what you did?—I merely got people to go to the poll as fast as I could.

8123. Did you promise them money?—No, I did not.

8124. What time of the day did you poll?—9 o'clock.

8125. What time did you go about getting other people up to the poll?—About the middle of the day; 2 o'clock or so.

8126. What did you find, that they were keeping back?—I found that they would not come to the poll.

8127. Why did they not come to the poll?—I cannot say.

8128. They did not tell you?—No.

8129. Did you hear of any money going at all on the part of Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—No.

8130. Not after Mr. Kinglake left the town?—No.

8131. You had nothing to do with money matters at the last election?—No, not the least.

8132. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave you a list to get the people up to the poll there?—Well, I had a list from John Smith's.

8133. Not that list. Did he not give you an account of how much you were to have?—No.

8134. Did he not say anything about "all right," or something of that sort?—No; I did not hear any money mentioned.

8135. Have you that list?—No.

8136. How many names were on it?—I think some 70 or 90.

8137. How many of the names can you recollect?—I can recollect a great number; at least I could pick out the names.

8138. Then give them to us?—James Hunt, William King, Isaac Lovell, Charles Burton, Henry Morrish, John Bidgood, George Hart, Henry Baker, William Bird, John Dunn, James Prescott, William Baker——

8139. Never mind more. When you had this list of 90 voters——?—I do not know whether it was 90.

8140. And as we have heard, there are hardly 90 on either side who vote without money in this place, do you mean to tell me you had nothing to do with promising or giving money to those 90?—Never one of them.

8141. When was it Mr. Smith gave you the list?—Mr. Smith did not give me the list.

8142. Who did then?—Parties in the room; I do not know.

8143. You told me that John Smith gave you the list?—I had it at Mr. Smith's I said.

8144. When that list was given you did anybody say anything to you about how these people were to be paid?—No.

8145. You did not expect they were going to vote without?—I knew if the Tories did not give any our voters would not have any.

8146. At the former election you had been paid yourself?—Afterwards, a long time after.

8147. 9*l.* 15*s.* by White you had been paid?—That is right.

8148. Having been paid at the former election, why did not you expect it at this?—I never expected to be paid then.

8149. Do you mean that was altogether a boon at the former election which you had not expected?—I did not expect it; they never asked me, and never promised it.

8150. How came you to get it?—White asked me to render an account of what I had done before, and he said, "Would you like to accept of anything?" I told him yes, I certainly should, for I had had a good deal of trouble.

8151. Why did not you get some one to ask you to accept something at this last election?—Well, I did not, and nobody said anything to me about it.

8152. Did you not know that money was going?—No, I did not. I did not think there was until I got to the hustings.

8153. (Mr. Price.) If you had none would you have asked?—No, I should not.

8154. Not for your share?—No.

8155. Why did you take it before?—I never asked at any time.

8156. But why did you take it? If you are a man desiring to vote and independent enough to vote without money, why did you take this 9*l.* 15*s.* on the former occasion?—White told me if I interested myself and got all the voters to the poll I could, he would reward me afterwards.

8157. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was before the election?—At Mr. Bagehot's election.

8158. And before you voted he told you that?—Yes.

8159. When he said if you would vote, you would be paid for it?—No, I did not know I should get anything.

8160. You knew the first time he told you you would get something if you voted for the Liberals?—He would try and do something for me.

8161. And you knew that meant to get some money?—I did not know, I thought I should get my day's work.

8162. (Mr. Price.) What would be your day's work, 9*l.* 15*s.*?—No.

8163. Did not you fall down on your knees and thank Mr. White for his generosity then?—I was very thankful for it, certainly.

8164. How was it that it was 9*l.* 15*s.*?—I believe White passed my door several times before that, and he said, "I will call in a day or two," or something of that sort. When he did he found he had not got money enough to pay me.

8165. Not for your day's work?—No.

8166. You accepted your day's work. What would you have charged for a day?—He told me he had got 12*l.* for me.

8167. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did he tell you that?—Some time before.

8168. Before the election?—No; weeks after the election. He had not enough to give me without giving me a cheque. He said, "I have not got "enough now unless I give you a cheque for the "whole amount," because, he said, "I have some 5*s.* "or 6*s.* loose in my pocket, and I will give you a "cheque for 9*l.* 15*s.*"

8169. Did you ever hear of that until he told that to you here yesterday?—Yes, I certainly did.

8170. (Mr. Price.) You mean to tell us now that the transaction was that he drew a cheque for 9*l.* 15*s.* rather than draw it for 10*l.*, because he had 5*s.* in his pocket?—I know nothing; not that I am aware of.

8171. How came it to be 9*l.* 15*s.*; he said there

EIGHTH DAY.

P. Gilbert, jun.

31 Aug. 1869.

was some account between you and him ?—I think that is a mistake on his part.

8172. Your account is that he had 5*s.* in his pocket and gave you the 5*s.*, and drew a cheque for 9*l.* 15*s.* ?—I believe he said that would look better at the bank. I believe those were the words.

8173. Did you receive from him, besides that 10*l.* after the election, 30*l.* before the election to pay away to get other votes ?—Yes.

8174. How much did you get from him ?—30*l.*, but not all at once. I had two thirties ; the 30*l.* was only once to one.

8175. You paid that; you paid 30*l.* to a man named Powell ?—Yes, I did, to the daughter.

8176. Are you sure it was not 40*l.* ?—No, it was not 40*l.*

8177. What ?—No, I know it was not.

8178. Are you sure you did not get 40*l.* from White ?—Quite certain ; that is I am not quite certain, because——

8179. He said he gave you 40*l.* to pay Powell with. Powell's wife had said he would not vote for less than 40*l.*, and the Tories had offered him 35*l.* Do you remember that ?—White never told me that.

8180. Did you know from Mrs. Powell ?—No, I know nothing about that.

8181. How came you to be at Powell's to pay this money ?—I was not. I had been engaged with White in the distribution of that money in the morning.

8182. Then he took you to Powell ?—Yes.

8183. And asked you to pay Powell ?—Yes.

8184. And you paid the daughter ?—She might have been. I did not know it was the daughter.

8185. Whom did you pay—Mrs. Powell ?—It was not Mrs. Powell.

8186. Who was it ?—The daughter, because she said, "Now father will go to poll."

8187. Is she alive ?—I do not know. I am not acquainted with the parties at all, and should not know them again.

8188. Then you paid this 30*l.* you say ?—Yes.

8189. Are you quite sure it was only 30*l.* ?—It was two packets.

8190. What was in the packets ?—I cannot say.

8191. You said just now 30*l.* ?—Two packets. White told me it was 30*l.* I understood so.

8192. You never saw the money yourself ?—Ten sovereigns, in sovereigns loose.

8193. You saw them ?—Yes.

8194. What was the other — notes ? — No, in packets ; two 10*l.* packets.

8195. That is only 20*l.* ?—Then I had the 10*l.* loose in sovereigns. That made the 30*l.*

8196. You received 30*l.* from him to pay for three votes ?—Yes, that is right.

8197. And you had paid them away ?—I had paid them away before.

8198. And then he gave you some loose sovereigns ?—Yes, and two packets.

8199. Ten loose sovereigns and two packets ?—Yes.

8200. After you had paid the other 30*l.* away ?—After I had paid the other 30*l.* away.

8201. Then you went down to Mr. Powell ?—Then I went down to Mr. Powell.

8202. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does this man Powell keep an inn ?—Yes.

8203. Is his wife named Jane ?—I do not know. It was his daughter that I paid.

8204. (Mr. Price.) Should you know her again ?—I do not think I should. She told me it was her father ; that is all I know.

8205. That was the election of 1866 ?—Vanderbyl's first election.

8206. (Mr. Anstey.) You have told us quite enough to show that you have been guilty of these practices. Do reconsider the evidence you have given about the election of 1868. You do not wish us to suppose that you became pure all at once in 1868, after having done what you now confess in 1866 ?—I tell you the truth.

8207. Do you know the place called the "Bath Bridge" inn ?—Yes.

8208. You say that you did not do anything wrong at the election ?—I did not say that. I did not say that I did not do anything wrong—about the money.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You said you did nothing at all except voting and taking up voters.

8209. (Mr. Anstey.) At the "Bath Bridge" inn before the election, did you do anything wrong ?—We were there just two or three days.

8210. A few days or weeks before the election, did you do anything wrong with reference to the coming election ?—I had something to drink there.

8211. You were in the chair there ?—Well, we had no drink that night.

8212. Were you in the habit of taking the chair at meetings at the "Bath Bridge" inn with reference to the coming election ?—No.

8213. You never did ?—Only that once, that is all.

8214. What ?—That was on the Thursday, I think.

8215. Was that on that one occasion; was there treating or not ?—There was not.

8216. Do you swear there was not ?—I swear there was not on my part, and I never saw any.

8217. But was treating going on that night when you were in the chair ?—No, I believe not.

8218. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay your own score ?—I never had any.

8219. (Mr. Anstey.) I am not asking about your actions. You said you were in the chair, and said you were guilty of treating on other occasions, but on this occasion, when not yourself guilty of treating, was treating going on ?—Not that I am aware of. They had something to drink for which they paid for between themselves, the men.

8220. Who was at the door to prevent your being disturbed on that occasion ?—I do not know. I was in the chair and did not go to the door ; I do not know who was.

8221. Do you know William Baker ?—Yes.

8222. Was he there ?—I saw him in and out there.

8223. Was he not keeping the door ?—Not that I am aware of.

8224. Did he keep the door on the nomination night ?—Not that I know. I was not there then.

8225. Did you ever order drink yourself for the voters ?—Yes.

8226. How many times ?—Twice.

8227. That is double what you have stated just now ; when were those occasions ?—I think on the Friday, the night before the election.

8228. And the other ?—After the polling was over, the same evening.

8229. How many men did you debauch on the first occasion ? — I do not know that I debauched them at all.

8230. Well, treating ; how many hundred ?—About 30 or 40 there. I do not know.

8231. Tell us as nearly as you can ?—It might be 30 or 40.

8232. Electors ?—I do not believe they were all electors.

8233. Who trusted you with the money to treat ?—I had no money at all.

8234. Did it come out of your own pocket ?—I never paid for it.

8235. Who authorized you to order the drink ?—No one at all.

8236. Then how have those people been paid ?—Well, that is a mystery to me.

8237. It was no mystery to you. You knew perfectly well that you would not dare to order drink unless you had authority from some one ; give me the name of that person who employed you to debauch these persons ?—No person living.

8238. You, a common carpenter, taking the chair at the place described, and ordering drink for electors and others—for your munificence was not confined to electors—do you mean to tell us that you had no authority from Mr. Lovibond, or Mr. Barham, or some person?—No, I never spoke to them on the subject.

8239. (Mr. Price.) How came you to order drink on your own account?—I did not intend.

8240. But did you?—I did. I expected to be paid for it some time or other.

8241. Who did you tell them to put it down to?—I told her not to draw it.

8242. Did she draw it?—There was a person of the name of Bowden began to spend money for drink there, and after they had tasted the drink they would not stop, and ordered 30*s.* worth more.

8243. For how many people?—I think 30 or 40; something like that.

8244. Who did you tell the landlord to put it down to?—It was not a landlord at all, it was a woman.

8245. Who did you tell her to score it to?—I told her to put down to me that I ordered.

8246. What is the name of the person?—I think it is Pitman now.

8247. What is the name of the inn?—The "Bath Inn."

8248. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you paid that?—No.

8249. (Mr. Anstey.) And I hope she will sue you if she has not done it. Has she?—No.

8250. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has she been paid?—No.

8251. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you been told by any lawyer if you are sued for it it will be all right?—No.

8252. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you ordered that intending to pay for it out of your own pocket?—No.

8253. Then what right had you?—I thought it would be paid out of the election expenses.

8254. By whom?—Well, the candidates I expected would pay it.

8255. (Mr. Anstey.) You still expect it?—I do not know what to say about it now.

8256. You would have expected it but for these inquiries; you think you would have been paid but for the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn and the present inquiry?—I did believe it.

8257. By whom?—I expected it would come from some one or other; I did not know whom.

8258. You are a practised briber and election agent, you must have known from whom you expected it would come?—I never did wonder at that.

8259. Tell us on your oath whom you expected it to come from immediately?—I do not know; I had no knowledge.

8260. Are you in the habit of conducting your ordinary business in that way, making yourself liable for heavy demands, not knowing how you are ultimately to meet them?—I took the room of the woman, and offered to give her so much for the room. That is how it commenced.

8261. Who told you to take the room?—No one. I spoke to Mr. Cook about it.

8262. (Mr. Price.) Did you take it for the candidate?—No.

8263. What do you mean by taking the room?—We had a Liberal Association, and the room at the "Globe" was too small, and we intended to divide the association into two sections.

8264. Was this an association formed for the purpose of drinking?—I told the woman when we took the room that I had nothing to do with the drinking whatever.

8265. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that for the purpose of promoting the interest of Vanderbyl and Kinglake?—Yes.

8266. Was it called the "Shepherds?"—No, it was the Liberal Association.

8267. Then it is nothing more than a meeting of voters and others calling itself an association?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Meeting at a public-house and consuming beer to the amount of 30*s.* a night.

8268. (Mr. Anstey.) Supplied by a carpenter out of funds which he knows not of. Do you mean us to believe such stuff as that?—That is right.

8269. (Mr. Price.) This association was founded by men like yourself, who were to take the room and order drink, and charge the candidate for that?—I thought it was a great sum, 2l.

8270. That is a Liberal Association formed for the purpose of taking the room and drinking as much as you could at the expense of the candidate?—No.

8271. What else did you do but drink?—Talk, nothing else.

8272. What did you talk about?—About the election.

8273. And how much money would be going?—I never said anything about it; there was a general talk there.

8274. (Mr. Anstey.) Now I will take you to the nomination night. Was not there a good deal said on the nomination night about what sums were going or likely to go to voters?—I believe there was.

8275. (Mr. Price.) At these Liberal Association meetings?—Yes.

8276. (Mr. Anstey.) Were not you present at the "Bath Bridge Inn" on that very night with several voters till very late?—I was.

8277. Then what you meant to deny was that you were in the chair?—I was not in the chair.

8278. And the discussion was about money?—What I heard.

8279. I have it all down here; tell me yes or no; were you there with several voters?—Yes.

8280. But you say yourself it was very late that night?—No.

8281. You said just now you were there very late?—About 11 o'clock I think.

8282. Were you treating them there that night?—The nomination night?

8283. Yes?—I never had any drink that night.

8284. I did not ask you whether you had into your own mouth any drink, but were you treating these voters?—I told the woman——

8285. Will you answer the question; were you treating these voters?—No, I was not, because I did not order drink.

8286. Do you know a man called Samuel Bowden?—Yes, I do; Samuel Bowden.

8287. Did you see him there that night?—Well, I might.

8288. Did you see him; yes or no?—I do not know.

8289. Did you see Samuel Bowden on any of the nights when you were at his place?—Yes.

8290. And you saw him there when you yourself were in the chair?—I do not know that I did. I do not think he was there that night.

8291. Did you treat Samuel Bowden on any of these nights?—Yes, on one night; I believe a Friday night.

8292. And on the nomination night did you again treat him?—I do not know that he was there. I never saw him.

8293. If he swears he was there and you treated him, that is that you allowed him to drink free of expense, will you contradict him, for he may be called?—I cannot say; he may have been there.

8294. Did you ask Samuel Bowden on that occasion to poll early?—No, I did not.

8295. Did you on any occasion ask him to poll early?—No, I did not.

8296. Or to poll at all?—No, I did not.

8297. You will swear that?—I will swear I never asked any man to poll early.

8298. Did you say anything to Samuel Bowden about polling?—No.

8299. Or about voting?—No. I do not believe I spoke to him on the subject.

8300. At any time?—I do not believe I did.

8301. Did you ever tell him that he should have what was going, or words to that effect?—I never told him so personally, and I do not believe I ever told anybody else so.

8302. If Bowden swears positively that you said to him; "Poll early, and you shall have what is going,"

EIGHTH DAY.

P. Gilbert, jun.

31 Aug. 1869.

will you contradict him?—I swear; I might have said so in his hearing.

8303. (Mr. Price.) You told us a short time ago that you took no part in the election of 1868 except just to ask the voters to vote?—I did not know what you meant.

8304. What you are asked now is whether you said to this man, "Poll early, and if there is anything going you shall have it?"—Not to that particular man.

8305. But you told us never to anybody?—I believe the words I made use of were these, they were talking about money, and just as if buying pigs, I said, "You go to the poll, and in 12 months time you will "be just as well off as they." I believe I said that.

8306. (Mr. Anstey.) That means "Vote, and you will have your bribe paid you in 12 months?"—Yes.

8307. Now, which of the lawyers or gentlemen in the place told you that?—None of them.

8308. Who authorized you to make that statement?—No lawyer at all.

8309. No gentleman?—No.

8310. No candidate?—No.

8311. Nobody at all?—No.

8312. You invented it out of your own head?—Yes.

8313. That you wish us to believe. Did you when you made that statement to them believe it was a false statement; did you believe that you were then stating what was false?—I did not know what to say to them.

8314. Did you believe it was untrue that they would have it in 12 months time, or before?—No, that was only by way of putting them off. I did not know what to say.

8315. Did you believe you were putting them off by making a false statement; did you believe you were making a false statement to them?—No, I did not believe I was making a false statement at all.

8316. Why did you not believe it was a false statement; what ground had you for it?—Because I believe if there was any bribery on the other side ours would do the same.

8317. You believed that?—Yes.

8318. From your experience?—Yes.

8319. And who would have found the money out of which your people would bribe?—I believe it would come through John Smith, Allan, and Bussell, and so on.

8320. Now, with reference to this very election, do you, remember a man called Phillips, or a man called William Pollard?—William Pollard I knew well.

8321. Did you and William Pollard, or either of you, visit Samuel Bowden during the morning, either of the nomination day or the polling day?—I did not. Pollard told me he did.

8322. Do you swear you did not go there with Pollard?—I did not.

8323. Or by yourself?—I was not in his company during the day.

8324. Will you swear you were not several times during that morning at Bowden's place?—Never in his house during the election. Pollard told me he had.

8325. Did you tell Bowden on that day that there was then nothing doing, but there would be by-and-bye, and if he would go to the poll for Kinglake and Vanderbyl he should have whatever figure was going?—I did not.

8326. Nothing of that kind?—Nothing of the kind. I never saw the man.

8327. Did Pollard tell you he had made that representation himself to Bowden?—He did.

8328. What did you say to him?—I told him that Bowden made a mistake. I did not say anything at all to him.

8329. What did you say to Pollard when he told you what he had said to Bowden? You told me that Pollard informed you he had made this statement to Bowden; what did you say to him when he told you this?—I told Pollard that Samuel Bowden had charged me with promising him he should have as much as anybody else.

8330. I am asking you what took place at this election, and the answer was that Pollard told you this communication he made to Bowden?—Yes, he did.

8331. And when he said to you "I have told Bowden" so and so, what did you say to him?—I told him that Bowden made a mistake, because I never spoke to the man.

8332. I am talking about the election; you have said that Pollard told you "I have been to Bowden and promised him?"—No.

8333. That is what I asked you?—That is after.

8334. Did Pollard tell you that?—Not that day. I never saw Pollard that day, that I am aware of.

8335. Do not you know that Bowden, who was previously a Conservative, voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl that day through the promise that had been held out to him by you and others at the "Bath Inn"?—He never had a vote before in his life.

8336. Do you know whether he had a vote before? I thought he voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl through the promises you made to him?—I know he had not.

8337. He did not vote?—He did not vote before.

8338. Do you know that he voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl through the promises you made him?—I do not, because I did not know which way he voted.

8339. Did you go to the "New Inn" that day?—Yes.

8340–1. Was there treating going on there?—I do not know; I did not stop there a minute.

8342. You know William Marels?—Yes. I did not know him at the time, but I know him now.

8343. Was he at the meeting at the "Bath Bridge Inn" when you were in the chair?—He came into the room.

8344. Was James Hunt there?—Yes.

8345. John Dyer?—Yes.

8346. George Dymond?—Yes, the carpenter.

8347. And others?—Yes.

8348. Did you hear anybody say, "Well, if there is "anything to do we ought to have it early, and not "let the stragglers stop till late and walk off with 40*l.* "or 50*l.*?" There was much talk about money at the last election. Did you hear anything of that kind?—Nothing of the kind; I never heard such words.

8349. Did you hear of this, "You will know what "we want, we are all poor working men?" They were men who had votes for the first time?—Yes.

8350. And they were all bribed, were not they?—No, not one of them, to my knowledge.

8351. You say you promised those that were there. You said, "Those who vote shall have the same as they," meaning if they would wait a twelvemonth for it?—That is a general promise I made, if you call it a promise.

8352. Amongst others this general promise was made to these poor working men. Did all those men vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—No, not half of them.

8353. Not half of them did?—I do not know whether half of them did or not.

8354. Did you hear Dymond say, "This is not the place to discuss money matters, we must have that alone here?"—He did.

8355. And did they accordingly leave off election matters?—No, you could not stop them.

8356. Did you and he?—I was not talking to him.

8357. Did Dymond leave off talking money matters, as he himself said, "This is not the place for it?"—That is the only remark he made about it.

8358. Are you determined to force me to come to the conclusion by-and-bye that you have not answered my questions. If you do I warn you that you shall have no certificate as far as my signature goes, and I ask you again and again questions which the meanest capacity could take in, and you do not answer. You said Dymond said, "This is not the place to discuss "money matters;" accordingly, did Dymond then leave off discussing money matters?—I did not hear anything more about it.

8359. But the others went on talking about it?—Just that way.

8360. Was Abraham Baldwin there?—Yes.

8361. Did you hear Baldwin say to Marels, "You "are not one of our party, and I wonder at your "impudence in coming here; you have no business "here, it is a private meeting?"—No, I never heard anything of the kind. I believe I was down at the bar afterwards, and I heard that he had said so.

8362. Was not John Hunt the man who said that at the bar, and not this man?—Both of them went down.

8363. Was not James Hunt the man who said to the landlady, "Marels ought not to come in; it was "very unfortunate, and would cause a good deal of "ill-feeling. I have been tossing for a gallon of beer, "and lost," he added on the same occasion?—He came and said the conversation he had with the landlady, but I do not know any more.

8364. Do you remember his getting a gallon of beer on his telling the landlady that he tossed for and lost it?—I saw them tossing there; I did not take much account of it.

8365. Do you remember the landlady saying, "All right, Mr. Hunt, you may have it?"—I did not hear that, because I was not there.

8366. You are aware that no portion of the beer consumed that night was paid for?—I do not know about it.

8367. How much beer did you have?—About three gallons I believe.

8368. Four; was not it?—I do not know, it might have been three or four gallons.

8369. There was spirits also on the Friday, were not there, as well as beer?—Yes; they found that Mr. Bowden sent down the man to send up some beer, and he took it all out in brandy and water.

8370. Did not you give the order to the landlady for what drinking and spirits were taken up by the party there?—No, I did not; that out of the kitchen I had nothing to do with—our room.

8371. Did you give any orders to the landlady for taking up spirits and beer to your room?—Yes.

8372. And what you did order was actually taken up by the landlady?—Yes, I believe I took it up myself.

8373. Did you also order drink—you—for people who were downstairs?—Not that I am aware of.

8374. The landlady will be called?—It was altogether.

8375. You did order some for those downstairs?—It was altogether; they drank what they was minded to.

8376. If it was altogether it was divided amongst those upstairs and down?—Not those in the bar.

8377. But were there any downstairs for whom you ordered drink?—Yes.

8378. Did not the score that night amount to very nearly 4*l.*?—I believe it did, and I got an account for it.

8379. Did not Marels himself keep the account in chalk?—I never saw him do it.

8380. If he was with the landlady you could not see him do it?—I never saw him there. I saw the landlady chalk it down.

8381. Did you pay her 1*l.* that night?—No.

8382. Had you paid her 1*l.* on a previous occasion?—No.

8383. Did she give you credit for 1*l.* she said she got from you?—No; she never said she got it from me.

8384. Did she give you credit then, whether or not?—A Mr. Bowden paid her 1*l.*, that is how the drinking began.

8385. Did she give credit in that account for 1*l.* said to have been paid by you?—I believe she did.

8386. On the nomination night I believe you people were remaining there until 3 in the morning, were not you, at the "Bath Bridge"?—I do not know; I was not there.

8387. You came as late as 10 or 11 yourself?—Yes.

8388. There were a great many people there that night?—Yes.

8389. And all drinking?—Yes.

8390. Were not there at one time as many as 100?—No, the house would not hold them.

8391. Were there as many there as the house would hold?—Nearly.

8392. (Mr. Price.) How many would it hold?—There are only two rooms they could get that I know anything about.

8393. Fifty or sixty?—Yes, I suppose so.

8394. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there a man standing at the door of that inn that night?—Not that I am aware of; I never saw anyone in particular.

8395. To keep anyone from going in who was not right?—No, nothing of the kind.

8396. Were you there the next day, the polling day?—I went about 7 in the morning.

8397. During the whole of that day was there not plenty of drink of all kinds, including spirits, tobacco, and cigars, for anybody who liked to have it?—I do not know; I was not there.

8398. You were there at 7 in the morning?—Not five minutes the whole day.

8399. But whilst you were there did you see anything of the kind?—No.

8400. Were there not lists of voters in that house both upstairs and down on that day?—Not that I know of; I did not see anything of the kind.

8401. Did not you yourself give or agree to give Mrs. Cape 10*s.* a day for the use of that room?—No.

8402. What did you agree?—2*l.* for the time we wanted it.

8403. At all events, what rent was paid was agreed to be paid by you?—Yes.

8404. Do you mean to say you were not in that room that day for which you had paid or agreed to pay the rent?—Not the whole day.

8405. Do you mean to tell me you did not see the lists of voters there?—No; I simply went to look for a person there. I could not see him and went out again.

8406. That we may see how much truth and falsehood is in your statement, tell me whether these persons can throw any light upon it if called. Bond, at Symon's brickyard, was he there any of these days?—Yes, some days, but not that day. I never saw any person there.

8407. Popham?—I never saw him in the house.

8408. Hunt?—Never.

8409. Dymond you have spoken of. Parson; Henry Baker?—They were in the house previously.

8410. The man Burton we have heard of, was he there?—Yes.

8411. Hart?—Yes.

8412. Bird?—Yes.

8413. And Manley?—I never saw Manley there.

8414. Now has not Mrs. Cape made out a bill of no less than 18*l.* for treating done under your auspices on these occasions?—Yes, the bill made out some 17*l.* altogether, reckoning the rent at 2*l.*

8415. (Mr. Price.) Has it been paid?—No.

8416. You have not paid it?—No.

8517. And do not intend?—I never intended to.

8418. You do not intend?—I suppose I shall have to.

8419. You have ordered it, and you consider, if nobody else does, that the landlady may sue and make you?—Yes.

8420. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you not told her then to distinguish between so much of the bill as relates to things you ordered and so much as relates to things which what you call the blue party ordered?—No, I never distinguished anything between the parties.

EIGHTH DAY.

P. Gilbert, jun.

31 Aug. 1869.

8421. Do you mean you never told her this, "I "won't pay for what the blue parties have had, but "only for what I myself have ordered"?—I never said a word about any parties at all.

8422. Did you say anything to that effect, that you would not pay for more than what you yourself had ordered?—Yes, I did.

8423. Then what you dispute is not the amount of her bill, but you say for the whole of what is in her bill you had not given orders. Is that what you mean?—Yes.

8424. Who was the person who gave the orders that you did not?—It was drawn on her own account.

8425. Is her name Mrs. Pitman now?—Yes. I cautioned her not to do more drink.

8426. I believe her bill was made out by a certain Mrs. Harris, the wife of a butcher?—I do not know who made it out.

8427. That is all about the election of 1868, in which you truthfully told us you took no part beyond giving your vote?—I did not understand that.

8428. It appears you both treated and held out promises of bribes payable in a twelvemonth.

8429. (Mr. Price.) Did you take any part at the first election of 1866, Mr. Bagehot's election?—Vanderbyl's election?

8430. No; you have told us about Vanderbyl's election. Did you get anything more besides the 60*l.* you told us of at Vanderbyl's election?—No.

8431. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got 9*l.* 15*s.* paid you afterwards?—Yes.

8432. (Mr. Price.) Anything more besides that?—No.

8433. Did you do anything at Bagehot's?—Yes.

8434. What?—I bribed, I think, four or five.

8435. How much did you give them?—10*l.* apiece.

8436. Where did you get the money from?—Allan let us have the money, I believe.

8437. Give us the names?—Joseph Turner. I believe I am correct; I do not know; it is so long ago, and I never expected to be called on, and may make a mistake. John Bouchier, George Coombes, George Falkner, and John Davies.

8438. White had nothing to do with that election?—No money that I know of.

8439. What had he to do with it?—He came where I was at work and asked me to do all I could.

8440. The first election of 1866?—Yes.

8441. He asked you to do all you could?—Yes.

8442. Did he tell you what you were wanted to do?—He told me to get voters to the poll if I could.

8443. To get voters bribed?—No.

8444. How was it he wanted you to do it?—I was up at the "Commercial Inn," at Eastover, and he said, "Gilbert, I want you by-and-bye, do not go away;" and I bided there. I did not know what he wanted because I did not do anything of the kind before, and knew nothing about it, and in a large room up over, I believe, he gave me the money.

8445. And you agreed to do it at once without any scruple at all?—Yes.

8446. Having never done anything of the kind before?—Never.

8447. Did he tell you then that you were to have any money for your own vote?—No.

8448. How came you then to get that 10*l.* after the election?—I met Allan down at the "Queen's Head," and he called me in and said, "Gilbert, I have some-"thing for you at home." He said, "I am going away "now, but if you call in any other time you will have "it." But how I got the money I do not know; whether it was sent, or whether I called at Allan's house.

8449. But you did get the 10*l.*?—I did, but how I do not know.

8450. Is that all you did at that election?—That is all.

8451. Was there any treating?—That was all.

8452. What were you trying to recollect?—Anything else, but not at that election that I am aware of at present.

8453. What did you do at the election before that?—I had nothing to do with that; that was Sir John Shelley's election.

8454. Mr. Westropp had?—Yes.

8455. Did you do anything at that election?—No.

8456. Nothing at all?—No.

8457. Did you vote?—Yes.

8458. Did you get anything for your vote?—No.

8459. Did you ask for anything?—No. I was told there would be nothing at all.

8460. Did you ask?—No.

8461. How did you happen to be told that there would be nothing?—Because you hear plenty such tales about.

8462. Is it always the talk at a Bridgwater election, is the first thing, not about a candidate but what money is going?—Yes.

8463. The first thing is not about the candidates, or their politics, but whether there will be money?—I believe that is generally so.

8464. You were examined in 1866 on oath before the committee of the House of Commons?—I was.

8465. There you distinctly swore that you were offered a bribe in these words: "that if you voted as "you were asked to do you should be better off than "you would be if you voted for the other side?"—That is on the other side you know. I did not know that you were referring to that.

(Mr. Price.) We asked you what was done about the election. We did not ask you who offered you the money.

8466. (Mr. Anstey.) Let me ask you whether in the long and painful examination we have been making into former elections you have been practising the same mental reservation as now? My reference to you had reference to bribes from any quarter. Do you mean us to understand that at the election of 1868, and the two elections of 1866, you have understood our questions as merely referring to the bribes you have received or paid on one side only?—Yes.

8467. Our questions relate to all, both sides?—I never had anything to do with others.

8468. In 1865 did you bribe on the Tory side?—No.

8469. Did you take any bribe on the Tory side?—No.

8470. Did you have an offer of a bribe on the Tory side?—I did.

8471. Tell us what it was?—I was offered 10*l.* by Mr. Heal.

8472. (Mr. Price.) Thomas Hill?—No, Mr. William Heal.

8473. The man we have had here?—Yes.

8474. On the Tory side?—Yes.

8475. (Mr. Anstey.) You told the House of Commons it was a lawyer of the name of Veysey?—He got me to go there. He got me to go to the House.

8476. Do stick to the truth and the fact. Who said to you, "I will get you 10*l.* if you vote for the Tories"?—Mr. Veysey did.

8477. (Mr. Price.) You said it was Heal a minute ago?—He did offer it to me.

8477*a*. (Mr. Anstey.) As well?—Yes.

8478. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you tell Heal it was not enough?—No. I told Mr. Heal that I should not vote for Westropp for 10*l.*

8479. How much would you have voted for him for?—I did not tell.

8480. (Mr. Price.) Did you give him to understand that you would not vote for 10*l.*, but you would if the figure was raised?—No, I did not intend to vote for him at all.

8481. (Mr. Anstey.) Had not you asked him what the figure was?—Yes.

8482. Veysey told you to wait in the Tory house; Pimm's, "Golden Anchor," was not it?—The "Golden Lion," I think.

8483. Very well. You went there upon an invitation worded as I have expressed it: "If you vote "for Mr. Westropp you shall be better off than you will be if you vote for the other side"?—I believe that was it.

8484. Then having been so invited you went to Westropp's inn, or committee room, or whatever it is called; the "Golden Lion," kept by the notorious Pimm, and there you waited until Veysey came?—No, he took me up into the room at once.

8485. There was a number of voters there?—Some three or four, I think.

8486. And you waited half an hour?—Quite that.

8487. And you submitted to be treated on that occasion to drink?—I had just ——

8488. You said, "We had something to drink," and we know what that means in your mouth. It means gross and horrible treating?—They put it on the table, but I did not take much.

8489. After you waited for half an hour did you say anything to Veysey?—I told him I was not going to be kept there all day, I wanted to go home.

8490. What did he say to you?—He told me to wait a minute.

8491. When he told you that did you, becoming impatient at length, open the question of money to him yourself, and say, "What about the money?"—I never said anything about the money. I said, "Mr. "Veysey, I am not going to stop here all day. I shall "go home and go to poll."

8492. But you told the House of Commons, when you were asked, "Did you at length say anything to "Mr. Veysey on the subject of money?" You told them pregnantly and concisely "Yes"?—Whatever I said there is correct.

8493. (Mr. Price.) Did you say anything about money?—It was so long since that I do not remember.

8494. Now recollect. Do you pledge your oath to say that you did not, whilst you were waiting there, say something to Vesey about money?—He talked about money, and so did I.

8495. (Mr. Anstey.) You were asked at the House of Commons whether you opened the question of money to him yourself; and you said you did?—If I said so then it is the truth.

8496. Recollect what did take place?—It is so long since I do not bear it in my mind.

8497. You have already said that you asked him what the figure was?—He told me the figure was 10*l.*

8498. What did you say?—I said, "I shall not vote "for Mr. Westropp for 10*l.*"

8499. What more?—He whispered in my ear and said, "You shall have 5*l.* more to make it up 15*l.*

8500. Was it he or Lock who said that?—Mr. Veysey said that.

8501. Was it Mr. Veysey who said to you, "We will "make it 15*l.*"?—It was Vesey. I believe so.

8502. You told the House of Commons, "There "was some one I believe of the name of Lock told me "if I had not spoken so loud they would have made it "up to 15*l.* They told me they were doing 10*l.* I "said, 'I shall not vote for 10*l.* for Mr. Westropp'"?—Yes.

8503. Then Lock told you that if you had not spoken so loud you would have had 15*l.*?—No, I believe Lock told me not to speak so loud. Mr. Veysey said, "Well, make it up to 15*l.* We will give another five."

8504. What did you say to that?—I said, "Where "is it to? I do not see anything at all. I do not see "nothing moving here." We were locked in a club room there behind, and I thought they intended to keep us there.

8505. (Mr. Price.) You thought he intended to keep you there?—I thought so.

8506. (Mr. Anstey.) To bottle you?—Yes, I said, "Where is it? I don't see any sign of it."

8507. "Where is the money," you meant?—Yes. He told me I should go into another room, and I told him I did not see any sign of it. He said, "You shall "go in the very next. You must wait till the other "parties are gone." Then I went over the stairs and went up a long passage somewhere.

8508. What did you do?—Waited at the bottom of the stairs. Mr. Heal came to the bottom of the stairs and asked what I wanted.

8509. That man that was examined to-day?—Yes. I did not make any reply, but Veysey said something to me. I do not know exactly what it was. I think Mr. Veysey asked me whether I wanted to see the stallion, or something. I do not know what he meant by it.

8510. When you went into the room where Heal was, did you say to Mr. Veysey, You will recollect, Mr. Veysey, I shall not vote for 10*l.*?—That was before I got inside the room.

8511. You did say that again?—I did.

8512. What did Veysey say to you in Heal's presence?—It was not in Heal's presence.

8513. What did Veysey say to you when you said, "You recollect I shall not vote for 10*l.*"?—He said, "You go in. That will be all right."

8514. Did he say, "You go in Philip; that will be all right?"—Yes.

8515. Did you go in?—I did.

8516. Did Veysey go in with you?—No.

8517. But when you got in you saw Heal there?—Yes.

8518. Did you tell Heal again that you would not vote for 10*l.*?—Mr. Heal knew me. He looked at me, and said, "Well, young fellow, what do you want?" I said, "I hardly know what I want."

8519. Did you tell him again you would not vote for 10*l.*?—Yes.

8520. Did you tell him, "I have told Mr. Veysey the same thing?"—Yes.

8521. What did Heal say to you?—He said Mr. Veysey ought to know better before he sent me in here. Then, he said, "Go about your business." I said, "That is what I want to do."

8522. What you split upon was 5*l.* If you had 15*l.* offered you, you would have voted for Westropp, or promised to vote for Westropp; probably broken your promise?—I would not.

8523. But you would not do that for 10*l.*; that was it?—Yes.

8524. You split for 5*l.*?—I thought it the best way. I thought that was the best way not to get it. I did not intend to get it.

8525. All this came out, you know, before the Committee of the House of Commons in 1866?—Yes.

8526. And nevertheless I believe your position has been such since that time in Bridgwater that it has not diminished; that the confidence of the Liberals in you has not been diminished by this revelation; but, on the contrary, you have been employed to make objections—to take objections—at the annual revision of voters, to do the general legal business of the party, and finally to do your best to bribe; their confidence not having been diminished in you by these revelations before the Committee in 1866. Is not that so?—That is right, I believe.

(Mr. Anstey.) That speaks for the borough again.

8527. (Mr. Price.) But when you were taken up to London to give this evidence (I want just to understand), had you gone to the Conservatives for the purpose of betraying them; or had you gone there intending to sell your vote if you could get your price for it?—I did not intend to go there at all. Mr. Veysey dragged me very nearly.

8528. Do you mean to say you were dragged by Mr. Veysey?—I went out of curiosity.

8529. Curiosity?—Just to see what they were doing.

8530. Did you go there for the purpose of betraying to your own party what you had seen or heard?—No.

8531. Then how did you happen to get to London to tell them all this story, and to be examined?—It was done accidentally.

8532. Where was it done accidentally? Whom did you tell so that they had got you up to London. Whom did you tell what passed between Mr. Veysey and Mr. Heal?—In a conversation between Mr. Cook and me afterwards.

8533. (Mr Anstey.) Is there any doubt that if you had got the 15*l.* into your hand you would have gone and voted for Westropp?—I think I should.

31 Aug. 1869.

8534. (Mr. Price.) Are you a master or workman?—I do a little myself.

8535. Do you employ men under you?—No; perhaps a man for a job, or something of that sort.

8536. Have you got a warehouse or shop?—A shop where I work in.

8537. And a house?—Yes.

8538. What rent do you pay?—Not anything at all; I own it.

8539. Oh, it is your own house. You are a freeholder?—Yes; not freehold to me, you know.

8540. Is it mortgaged?—Yes.

8541. (Mr. Anstey.) To whom, to Cook?—Yes, they were the agents, I believe.

8542, (Mr. Coleridge.) Just tell me what position do you hold in the revision court? Do you sign the notices of objection?—Yes.

8543. And you attend the court itself to support those notices before the barrister?—Yes, I did on the last occasion.

8544. Does not any lawyer attend too?—Yes, several lawyers.

8545. You do not do the talking?—Oh no, sir.

8546. Who does that on the Liberal side?—The lawyers.

8547. Well, who are they?—I think Mr. Reed was last time, and Mr. Lovibond.

8548. Who on the Conservative side?—Mr. Trevor and Mr. Brice.

8549. (Mr. Anstey.) Who did it on the Conservative side before Mr. Brice was a Conservative?—I do not know. I did not have anything to do with it then.

8550. (Mr. Price.) Is it your judgment as well as that of Mr. Bussell and others that there are not above 80 voters on the one side and 150 on the other side who would not take bribes?—I could pick out of those who would not take bribes at all about 200 or 250 voters.

8551. On both sides?—Yes.

8552. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you include in this number all the lawyers who are paid for their services?—Yes, certainly.

8553. And all the agents who are paid in different ways?—Yes.

8554. And all the beerhouse keepers and other people who have treating bills? Do you consider those people who won't take bribes?—I did not count them.

8555. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not include amongst the bribable persons the tradesmen who make pressing demands at an election for bad debts that have been standing over since former elections?—Some I passed over and some I did not.

8556. (Mr. Price.) We have got to the election of 1866, you know, the first election. Did you take any part in 1859. You took a part in 1865 you have told us. You have given us that. Now did you have anything to do with 1859?—Who was the candidate?

8557. I will tell you; Mr. Tynte and Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp?

8558. (Mr. Anstey.) Only one Conservative candidate?—That is the election we have been speaking of.

(Mr. Price.) No, this is 1859.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We have been talking of 1865.

8559. (Mr. Price.) The last time Mr. Tynte stood, the last time Mr. Tynte was returned, when Mr. Tynte and Mr. Kinglake came in?—I know nothing about that election I do not believe.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Bussell will tell us the candidates I daresay.

(Mr. Bussell.) Padwick and Westropp the two Conservatives.

(Mr. Price.) Padwick and Westropp the two Conservatives, and Tynte and Kinglake the two Liberals.

(Witness.) I had no vote then.

8560. Did you take any part in the election?—No.

8561. Did you go about from curiosity anywhere?—No.

8562. You had no curiosity at all then?—No, I took no part at all, except that I went and held up my hand in favour of the Liberals.

8563. There was money going?—I attended the hall here when there was a public meeting or anything of that sort.

8564. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you a messenger? Were you paid?—No, I never was.

8565. In 1857 had you any business to do?—No, at no former election.

8566. (Mr. Price.) Nothing beyond 1865?—No.

8567. Now then, is there anything else you know? You were under a misapprehension that we were going to ask you as to the misdeeds of your own side only. We equally want to know anything of the misdeeds of the other side. Is there anything with regard to the manner in which elections have been conducted since 1865, that you know that you have not told us?—Not that I am aware. It might occur to me afterwards, but if I know anything more I will tell it with all my heart.

8568. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you tell me what relationship there is, if any, between Henry Jarman the briber on one side, and Frederick Jarman the briber on the other?—I fancy I have heard they were cousins or something of that sort; I do not know anything positive.

(Mr. Price.) Very well, that will do, Mr. Gilbert, for the present.

Mr. W. Symons.

Mr. William Symons sworn.

8569. (Mr. Price.) Do you live here in Bridgwater?—Yes.

8570. What are you, Mr. Symons?—A merchant.

8571. And a brickmaker, are you not?—Yes.

8572. And a large employer of labour, as we hear?—Yes.

8573. Well, you take an active part in politics, I suppose?—I have, a little, in my time.

8574. In the election of 1868 did you take an active part?—If you can give me the names; I have no dates.

8575. (Mr. Coleridge.) The last election?—Oh, no, nothing.

8576. (Mr. Price.) How was that?—Because I had no desire, that is all.

8577. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is your reason?—Well, there were other elections that I have not taken part in, any active part.

8578. Why not at the last?—The last I did not.

8579. (Mr Price.) But why?—Because I did not feel inclined.

8580. Have you any particular reason?—Well, yes.

8581. Well, tell us?—Certainly I have particular reasons for not doing it.

8582. Well, tell us, unless it is anything of a private nature. Was there any reason for it with regard to the manner in which the elections have been conducted, or anything of that kind?—Well, there was something in that. I never did like exactly the way elections were conducted. That is about the nearest I can give you.

8583. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you assisted in the conduct of them for all that?—I did not assist at all in the last.

8584. In the former ones?—Yes.

8585. Only you objected?—To some I did, and some I did not.

8586. At the last election, are we to understand, you really took no part whatever?—I did not.

8587. Did you attend any meetings—the working men's meetings?—I did not.

8588. Did you vote at all?—I did.

8589. For Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

8590. Did not I understand you to say you took no active part? Did you understand that it was intended on the part of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl that it was to be a pure election, or that it was to be conducted on the old principle of Bridgwater elections?—Yes, I understood it was to be.

8591. Upon the old principle?—Well, I thought it was very likely it would be.

8592. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you told it would be?—No, because I did not go to the meetings.

8593. (Mr. Price.) What made you shrink from taking an active part?—Because I took an active part in the election before, and I did not feel inclined to do that again.

8594. Did you never go near the candidates, or their committee rooms, or to the "Globe Hotel"?—Oh yes, I went to the "Globe Hotel," I think.

8595. Did you know what was going on during the day?—No, nor did not inquire.

8596. Did you know of Mr. Kinglake going away in the middle of the day?—That I did not know.

8597. You did not hear that?—No, I was home at my house with friends, and did not know anything of it.

8598. How did your men vote?—I do not know.

8599. Did you never interfere with them in any way?—No.

8600. Did you canvass them?—No.

8601. How many men do you employ?—Perhaps two or three hundred men and boys.

8602. Most of your men I suppose are under the new franchise?—Some are, and some are not. I really cannot tell you how many, I have not the least idea.

8603. That is all you did at the last election. We will go if you please to the election of 1866, the second election, when Mr. Vanderbyl first came out?—Yes.

8604. Did you take an active part in that election?—Well, I did.

8605. Did you know of Mr. Vanderbyl being brought down here?—Yes, I heard he was coming down.

8606. Were you consulted at all, or in consultation at all, with the legal gentlemen who brought Mr. Vanderbyl down?—No.

8607. When did you first hear he was coming?—I cannot answer that question. I did not take interest enough to know. I made up my mind to support him.

8608. You promised your support to him. Were you introduced to him?—No. He never asked me for my vote.

8609. You were never brought into personal contact with him at all?—No.

8610. You knew who he was?—No, I did not.

8611. Did you know that he was a rich gentleman who contested Yarmouth?—No, I did not know anything of that till afterwards.

8612. After what? Did you know when you heard Mr. Vanderbyl had come down, or was it told you, that he was a man who had plenty of money, and that he had contested Yarmouth, and he came down with Mr. Brogdon who had also done the same?—No, I never heard anything at all about it.

8613. What induced you to take an active part?—That I can easily tell.

8614. Well, tell us?—The election before I did not take any active part in. I was in company one day with a few gentlemen after Mr. Patton's election.

8615. Who are they? We must know?—One is Captain Brydges; William Brice, Esquire; Frank Brice, Esquire. Dr. Hurman I believe was there. I was an officer in the Volunteers (the 26th), at that time; and we went to have a glass of wine.

8616. Doctor who?—Dr. Hurman I believe was there. I am not sure.

8617. You were talking this matter over. How did that make you take an active part?—Well, I was inquiring.

8618. Were these gentlemen all of your views in politics?—No, all opposed except one. The others were opposed.

8619. Who is the exception?—Why, Dr. Hurman.

8620. He was not a Conservative?—He always voted for the same interest as myself.

8621. The others were Conservatives?—Yes.

8622. You were in conversation you say?—At the election previous I must tell you I had nothing at all to do with it then any more than I did last time. Then as we were talking one said, "Last time we got "in one of our candidates, Mr. Patton, and at the next "general election I will lay ten to one we will get in "both."

8623. Who said that?—Captain Bridges.

8624. Did you take his bet?—I offered to take it even ten times over.

8625. Did you make a bet?—No, I could not get it. (Mr. Coleridge.) It would have been a very good bet.

8626. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on?—That caused me to take an interest in it.

8627. I can understand that if you had got this heavy bet upon it?—I had no bet, I could not get it.

8628. If you had the bet on I could understand it then?—I took an interest in it.

8629. I do not see why this made you take an interest in it?—I had a little English blood in me, you know. I had got that.

8630. You determined to do your best or your worst?—I did.

8631. Tell me, what was your best?—I did not make any bet. I asked whether he intended simply to go on as at the election before.

8632. You asked Captain Brydges?—No; I asked Mr. Allan and he said no, he was determined to win it if possible.

8633. How did you know anything of Allan?—I had seen him about at previous elections.

8634. What did you mean?—I was aware it was going to be pretty much as before.

8635. What did he tell you?—He said it was; I was pretty sure how it was with almost all the elections, I do not mean all, most of them were managed so.

8636. Allan told you this?—Yes; I said there were several parties who must be looked after, or it would go the same as the election before.

8637. You told him parties must be looked after or they would go as they had done the election before, vote for Patton?—I had no bet. In the morning at about 11 or half-past I found our party was 37 behind, I thought they were going. Feeling as I did then I made up my mind almost to do anything rather than be beaten. I went to Mr. Heal and he was dissatisfied with the way he was handling them, because he did not get money enough. I went down and spoke to him.

8638. Do not turn away?—I was looking to see whether he was here.

8639. Who?—Mr. Allan.

8640. Never mind whether Mr. Allan is here or not?—That is the one that I spoke to about it.

8641. You told him you were not satisfied with how things were going?—That was the case. Well, then after a few words conversation he gave me some money to take up to Mr. Heal.

8642. How much?—He saw that I was in a bit of a pet seeing the way it was going on, and in my pet I took it.

8643. How much did you take up?—I could not be positive at the time; as I took it I gave it to Heal.

8644. You got some money from Mr. Allan, how much you do not know?—The money was put into my hand and I took and gave it to Heal. The best thing I can answer that by is what I have in my pocket, there it is (producing a slip of paper). There is the receipt given at the time, it is not in his name.

8645. Did you take that from Heal?—Yes; he does not know anything about it himself I am sure, but I do not know it would be possible for any man to deny his own handwriting.

EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. W. Symons.

31 Aug. 1869.

8646. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whose handwriting is that?—Mr. Heal's.

8647. 135*l.*, and is that the whole of what you received from Mr. Allan?—That is the whole of the money.

8648. (Mr. Anstey.) Not 140*l.*?—That is the amount (referring to the receipt). That is the amount that he gave me the receipt for; I never counted it.

8649. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you give all the money you received from Allan to Heal?—Yes.

8650. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Heal ever account to you afterwards for his application of that money for which he gave that receipt?—No; I never asked him anything at all. That was all I had to do with it, I only like any errand boy carried it to him.

8651. That was not all given at one time by Mr. Allan?—No, the 15*l.* was given first.

8652. Did not Mr. Allan pay you 30*l.* in three sums?—Certainly not.

8653. Are there two Mr. Symonses who go about bribing in the borough?—I cannot tell you, I can only answer for myself.

8654. Are you quite sure you were not paid 30*l.* in three sums?—I am quite sure I was not.

8655. And that you did not tell him what you had done with it, and were rather indignant when he asked you and refused to let you have more money?—That is a wrong impression altogether, I gave it all to Heal.

8656. Did you have high words about it, and did Mr. Barham, who was in the passage, come to the door and tell Mr. Allan to let you have 100*l.*?—I do not remember Mr. Barham speaking a word.

8657. It is a very serious contradiction between you; just let me read it over to you again?—I have not seen the evidence; I have not read it.

8658. I did not say you have, just attend. "I paid Mr. Symons 30*l.* in three sums," now is that true?—That is wrong.

8659. It is not true?—That is not true.

8660. I will just ask you, did you see Mr. Allen more than once that day about money?—I did. I saw him a second time.

8661. Did you get money from him more than once that day?—Twice.

8662. You did?—I got 15*l.* the first time.

8663. This is the 15*l.* put down here?—That is it.

8664. That is all. On the next occasion you got 120*l.*?—120*l.*

8665. You are quite sure about that?—Yes.

8666. Did you count it?—No; because I saw Mr. Heal count it. As it was put into my hand I gave it to him. I never put it out of my hand till I gave it to him.

8667. Did you see Heal count it?—I did.

8668. Then it is not true that you were paid 30*l.* in three sums; and it is not true that you did not tell Mr. Allan what you had done with it, and that you were rather indignant when he asked you, and that he refused to let you have any more money? that is not true?—It is not.

8669. And it is not true that you had high words about it?—Oh yes, we had high words.

8670. What about?—About the money. I said to him, "You are just going on as you did last time." I told him it appeared to me they were going to do as they did last, spend money and make themselves fools, and lose the election. I thought they were better while they were about it to win it, to let them have a little more, because I was almost sure there was money going on both sides.

8671. Did Mr. Barham, who was in the passage, come to the door and tell Mr. Allan to let you have 100*l.*?—I do not remember Mr. Barham speaking to him. I do not remember.

8672. Did you see Mr. Barham there?—I was a little bit annoyed. I am not sure that he was there.

8673. If you were a little bit excited, and a little bit annoyed?—I said I was a little annoyed. To show you that he came in the course of the day and begged my pardon, and was sorry that he should behave in such a manner to me.

8674. Did you never let him have an account of how you had disposed of the money?—No, I only took it to the man he told me to. He gave me the money for the express purpose of giving it to Heal.

8675. (Mr. Anstey.) Consider the question. You had some money originally from Mr. Allan, then you had high words about that money?—Because——

8676. I am reminding you. You had some payments made to you first of all by Mr. Allan; then you had high words about not accounting for that money?—No, not about that. It was because Heal complained that he could do nothing with it.

8677. You had some high words about the first sum of money which he paid you. Then after you had those high words you received 100*l.* from him; and you think it is very likely that that hundred pounds was paid to you through the interference of Mr. Eustace Barham?—I do not remember whether it was Eustace Barham or who.

8678. You say you think it probable it was done. I am repeating your own evidence. Well now, that being so, you were indebted for the 100*l.* to Mr. Barham's interference. Where does it appear that you received the 130*l.* or 135*l.* for the specific purpose of being paid over in one sum to your brother-in-law Mr. Heal? Where does that appear? How does that appear? You say you received it for the specific purpose of its being paid over to Heal, and "it was put "into my hand, and I carried it to him, and never "opened it till I gave it him." You have already said that the reason why it was paid to you, was because you had suggested to him that at this time the money had better be effectually applied, and not spent like fools?—Not sparingly, not to spend a lot of money and lose the election.

8679. Therefore you intended, did you not, to see that this money was spent?—Well, I was in hopes it would be well managed.

8680. Had you confidence in Heal?—I had then. I thought he was the best in the town to manage it.

8681. Had you any confidence in his pecuniary accuracy?—No, I did not know anything of that.

8682. Had you any confidence in him?—I had confidence in him then.

8683. But now you have not?—It is a different thing altogether. I have heard things said in this hall to-day that I had never heard then.

8684. Do I understand you that when you received this money it was your purpose to pay it all over to Heal, and let Heal apply it according to his wisdom or cunning, and not to interfere with it in any way?—I had no meaning to do it. He had been an active man in that way for years. I had every confidence that he would do it right.

8685. Did you intend to pay over the money to him, and leave him to deal with it as he liked?—I did.

8686. Did you communicate that purpose of yours to Mr. Andrew Allan, if you gave him the 135*l.*?—I did not ask for that.

8687. Will you allow me to put the question, sir?—If you please, and I will answer it.

8688. Did you tell Mr. Andrew Allan that you would give him the 135*l.*?—I did not say any such thing to him. There!

8689. Will you please to let me put the question to you. Lay aside that manner at once, or, I warn you, you stand the chance of going to gaol?—You send me there if you like. I will be treated as an Englishman.

8690. But listen to my question.

(Mr. Price.) Listen to the question, and then answer it.

(Witness.) I will endeavour to do so.

8691. (Mr. Anstey.) Pray listen to the question. Let it be put to you. Did you tell Andrew Allan that you were going to hand this money over to your brother-in-law Heal, and leave the application of it to Heal's unfettered discretion?—The very thing was that and that alone; that it was to be carried there, and he knew it. It was given to me to take to him, and I did it.

8692. You told him so?—Yes, he knew it.

8693. Then you did give him an account of it?—Who?

8694. Allan?—It was not counted. It was given to me in the hurry, and I did not know how much it was, whether it was 100*l.* or 120*l.*, or what.

8695. Did you tell him that you gave it to Heal?—I did not tell him that; I never saw him afterwards.

8696. Did you tell him that you were going to do it?—I do not quite understand that.

8697. When you asked him for the money?—I did not ask him for the money at all. He asked me to take it to him.

8698. Did you tell him you were going to pay it over to Heal?—It was Heal that I was speaking of. With respect to Heal, that he was dissatisfied, and he gave me this money, and I took it to him, and I took it to him and never counted it. I do not know whether he knew what money was there. I did not till Heal counted it over and gave me that piece of paper.

8699. If you have any further explanation to offer I am willing to hear it, but down to this moment I cannot understand your story at all about your previous payment?—I had no previous payment.

8700. Yes, the 100*l.* What were the high words about, if this was the first payment?—That was that I had been and seen Heal, and Heal was not satisfied that he had means to carry things on in a proper manner. Allan had the management of it. I told him Heal was dissatisfied, and he said he should not do anything more. I said, "You are just going to do as you did last," and then there were a few warm words in that respect, and he said. "Take that and carry it up," and I did it.

(Mr. Anstey.) I do not understand your story.

8701. (Mr. Price.) You are quite sure that the high words were not because you had refused to give Mr. Allan an account of what you had done with the other sums of money?—Yes.

8702. And you are quite sure you did not have three sums of money paid you?—I am quite sure.

Mr. Andrew Allan recalled.

Mr. A. Allan.

8703. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Allan, you told us, you know, that you paid Mr. Symons 30*l.* in three sums. This is what you said, "He did not tell me what he "had done with it, and was rather indignant when "I asked him, and I refused to let him have more "money. We had rather high words about it, and Mr. "Barham, who was in the passage, came to the door "and told me to let him have 100*l.*, which I did. He "never let me have any account of the manner in "which he disposed of this money." Now, do you adhere to that as an account of what took place?—That was my examination in chief.

(Mr. Anstey.) There is no "examination in chief" here.

(Mr. Price.) That was your examination, you know, on Friday.

(Witness.) I wish to ask the Court if the document you hold in your possession, which I was bound to bring, whether that would be the original document that I gave Henry Lovibond or not. If the papers I gave Mr. Lovibond prove it then I will believe it.

8704. If you find Symons down for three tens?—No, if my handwriting is on the document, then I am bound by it of course. The documents handed in yesterday by Mr. Lovibond, the items and receipts, then I am.

8705. Is "W. Symons" the man. Is that the witness in the box?—"W. Symons" is the witness in the box.

8706. I find there is one 10*l.* put down to him?—What I wish is the Court to satisfy me that that is the original document. I have not the slightest doubt of it.

(Mr. Price, to Mr. Symons.) There is put down here 30*l.* given to you in three different sums, Mr. Symons.

(Mr. Symons.) It was given to me in one.

(Mr. Andrew Allan.) I have endorsed the papers on the back.

Examination of Mr. Symons continued.

Mr. W. Symons.

8707. (Mr. Price.) Did you get the sum of 20*l.* for a Mr. Webb?—I do not remember the name at all.

8708. Try and recollect. You are put down in Mr. Lovibond's account which we understand, as far as we know, was an account to Lovibond by Mr. Allan. You are put down for three sums, two sums of 10*l.* and one of 20*l.*, and the one of 20*l.* is put down, "Symons W., for Jer. Webb, 20*l.*" I suppose that is Jeremiah?—I know nothing about it.

8709. You never heard of it?—No, I never heard the name.

8710. You never had such sum?—No, the money I mentioned I received, and that is all.

(Mr. Anstey.) Here is a voucher to support Allan's statement. Have you any voucher to support your own?

(Mr. A. Allan.) I wish to ask the Court whether you will accept this as the original statement.

(Mr. Price.) As far as we understand at present Mr. Lovibond made this out at the time from you.

(Mr. A. Allan.) Then I will give evidence from it.

(Mr. Price.) What does that mean, "W. Symons for Jer. Webb?"

(Mr. A. Allan.) James Webb. I will give the whole detail.

(Mr. Price.) We understand this to be the document which Mr. Lovibond took down from your dictation or from your papers; and he gave it up to us the other day, or to you rather, when you went to his office the other morning, as the one he had taken down in your presence.

(Mr. A. Allan.) Now that I understand it I can describe the whole method by which Mr. Symons had the money.

(Mr. Price.) Now I point out to you, Mr. Symons, that this purports to be an account rendered by Allan to Mr. Lovibond of the various sums he had paid away; and he told us in his evidence that he had given you 30*l.* in three sums; and he is supported in that by the fact that your name occurs three times on that paper; once for 10*l.* a second time for 10*l.*, and a third time under your name is put, "ditto," which means you again, 20*l.*; and then a little lower down is 100*l.*, which makes 140*l.*, which is the original sum in point of fact with which you were debited; and then there is Heal's receipt for 135*l.*; first in a sum of 15*l.*, and secondly in a sum of 120*l.*

(Witness.) That is how I gave it to him.

8711. Then you wish to stand upon that, that you never did get the sum of 20*l.*, and that you never got two separate sums of 10*l.*, and a separate sum of 100*l.*?—No other name was mentioned. Neither did I mention any other name.

8712. Do attend. One does not wish to do anything that would be offensive to you. Do we understand from you that you deny that you got two separate sums of 10*l.*, and then a separate sum of 20*l.*, and then a separate sum of 100*l.*?—I do deny it.

8713. Then you represent that you got two sums, one a sum of 15*l.*, and the other a sum of 120*l.*?—That is it. No other name was mentioned.

8714. Never mind about the name. The question is more important to us whether your memory is sufficiently accurate that you can place your recollection in conflict with Mr. Allan. Mr. Allan is vouched,

EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. W. Symons.

31 Aug. 1869.

This is a voucher, you see. You rendered him no account. Mr. Allan vouches this as a document which he gave to his own prejudice, against his own interest. He renders this account of moneys to Mr. Lovibond, and you are debited with the receipt of those sums. Now, have you a sufficiently clear recollection to swear positively that you did not receive separate sums, three separate sums of 10*l.*, 10*l.*, and 20*l.*, and one of 100*l.*?—I will positively swear that I had nothing at all to do with anyone but Mr. Heal and Mr. Allan in the matter.

8715. That is one way of answering it. Can you undertake to say that you did not have these sums, never mind whom they were to go to; that you did not have these sums which are put down here?—I did not.

8716. (Mr. Anstey.) And you also say that the sum total was 135*l.* and not 140*l.*?—135*l.*

8717. And you also say that this was in the year 1866, was not it?—I think it was 8718. In 1866, after your brother-in-law's conduct at former elections in stopping money, all which he himself has deposed to, must have been notorious, not only to all the rest of the community, but also to you; you place such unlimited confidence in him that on receiving this money, which was intended to bribe other men, and not to bribe your brother-in-law, you passed it all over into his hands, and left the disposal of it entirely to himself?—I did.

8719. On your oath, was not that done for the purpose of enabling him to put the whole into his own pocket?—On my oath, I never thought of such a thing; and I never heard about that money, the 200*l.*, till I heard it in this hall.

8720. It was not to enrich your brother-in-law?—I did not nor would not, for anyone in the world.

8721. I shall form my own opinion?—You can form what opinion you like; and if you do not know me there is enough in this room to know very well that what I say is true, and who believe me.

8722. (Mr. Price.) You have disposed, you know, of that 135*l.* in the way you tell us, and it certainly is a very strange story. I cannot make it out in any way. However, was that the only sum that you received. I do not mean from Mr. Allan. Was that the only sum you received at this election for bribing purposes?—That was all the money I received at that election.

8723. For bribing purposes?—For bribing purposes; or any other election since I can remember.

8724. Was there any treating that you did on that day; on the day of election; any treating at any public-houses?—No; I don't go to them.

8725. Therefore you took no part whatever in that?—No; no part whatever in that.

8726. Although you say you were determined to do your best in the matter, and stop at nothing to win the election for your favourite candidate, all you did was merely to get this sum of 135*l.*?—I did not ask for any sum.

8727. But all that you did was that?—I wanted Heal to be satisfied, for I felt that he could win the election; and I knew it was no go to do anything else but fight the enemy with the same weapons he fights with. If there is anything further that you wish to ask me I should be quite willing to come. I came now from Devonshire, and did not stop to drive.

8728. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you been engaged at former elections also?—Never.

8729. Is this the only election in which you have ever had to deal with money at all?—The only election in which I have dealt with money in my life.

8730. Did not you know the transactions of Mr. Heal, who I understand is some connexion of you?—I never had anything to do with them.

8731. (Mr. Anstey.) He has been in your employment how long?—Some months.

8732. How many years?—Not years at all; about 18 months; 16 or 17 months perhaps. I cannot tell.

8733. At this time he was in your employment?—No.

8734. When you gave him the 135*l.*?—No, he was a brewer then.

8735. You have heard, I presume, what he himself has stated?—I have not.

8736. Of his having kept back money which has been given to him before for the purpose of bribing?—No; I never heard it till to-day in this hall.

8737. Is not it notorious in this borough?—It may have been notorious, but I never heard it at all.

8738. (Mr. Price.) What is the meaning of that cross against the 120*l.*?—I do not know. There it is as he gave it to me.

8739. Heal made these figures?—He made it as a memorandum of what I gave him. He counted it himself.

(Mr. Price.) We had better have Mr. Heal up.

Mr. W. Heal.

Mr. William Heal recalled.

8740. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Heal, you told us, or, rather, there has been so much confusion about this matter, that I understood you to say that you got 130*l.*?—I did not know it was any more until Mr. Allan made it 140*l.*

8741. Is it 120*l.*, 135*l.*, or 140*l.*?—I do not know which it was. I have no doubt that that is the correct amount.

8742. Did you after you had counted it put down at the time on a paper how much it was?—This is the bill of it, I presume.

8743. How many times did you receive it in?—I cannot tell you whether it was once or twice.

8744. Or three times?—No, I do not think it was three times. I believe it was not. I am not prepared to say whether it was once or twice.

8745. How did you receive it?—In notes. I believe the whole of it was in notes, or pretty well the whole of it.

8746. (Mr. Anstey.) What bank?—That I cannot tell.

8747. (Mr. Price.) Tell us whose handwriting that is in. Look at that envelope, and tell us whose handwriting those figures are in. (Envelope handed to the witness)?—That is mine.

8748. Well now, you see it is 135*l.* there?—Yes.

8749. What is the cross put against the 120*l.* for?—No doubt I might have received the 15*l.* first, and then the 120*l.* afterwards?—I cannot account for anything else.

8750. (Mr. Anstey.) The whole of it you received from Mr. Symons?—I did.

8751. Therefore did you receive 15*l.* first; then 20*l.*; then 100*l.*? You must have received it in three times from Mr. Symons?—It does not say there three times.

8752. But if you did it must have been from Mr. Symons?—I received it in two payments.

8753. (Mr. Price.) Do you know a person named Webb—Jeremiah Webb?—I do not.

8754. James Webb, a voter?—I do not know such a man at all.

8755. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you bribe him?—No.

(Mr. Price.) You may go now, Mr. Heal. I should like to ask you a question or two, Mr. Allan, about that.

(Mr. Heal.) Will you require my services any more? I have a situation. If I lose my time——

(Mr. Price.) Where do you wish to go to?

(Mr. Heal.) To Durston.

(Mr. Price.) You can be brought here again if you are wanted.

(Mr. Heal.) Shall I wait until you send for me?

(Mr. Price.) Are you expecting to leave home?

(Mr. Heal.) No, sir.

(Mr. Price.) A letter would reach you I suppose.

(Mr. Heal.) Yes, about half-past 10 in the morning. Then I shall wait until I am sent for ?

(Mr. Price.) Yes, you may go home to Durston to-night.

EIGHTH DAY.

Mr. W. Heal.

31 Aug. 1869.

Mr. A. Allan.

Mr. Andrew Allan recalled.

8756. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Allan, take this list, just look at that. Symons appears for two tens, and then a twenty, and then one hundred ?—That is exactly as my copy.

8757. Your copy is made from this ?—My copy was made from that.

8758. I want to know whether, looking at this which is supposed to be made at the very time you rendered the account to Mr. Lovibond, you can tell us at all what is the meaning of this, "ditto for Webb" ?—I can. I can give you a full explanation of the whole matter.

(Mr. Price.) Well, then, we will have that to-morrow morning. Come here to-morrow morning. Do not speak to anybody else about it to-night. Come here to-morrow morning and explain it to us at 11 o'clock.

Adjourned to 11 o'clock to-morrow.

NINTH DAY.

NINTH DAY.

A. Allan.

1 Sept. 1869.

8759. (Mr. Price.) You said you would go through the thing very carefully again and give us some explanation about these four items of monies paid to Mr. Symons ?—The first time I saw Symons about money matters was on the morning of the election, and before the poll was up, it was at John Smith's house, and in John Smith's presence. I was standing talking to Smith when Symons came running upstairs, he was in a very angry and excited mood, and addressed me in this style. He says, "Do you know what you have "done, sir ? You have insulted Mr. Heal. Do you "know who Mr. Heal is ? Do you believe him to be "a pauper ? What is he to do with the sum you have "given him this morning for election matters ?"

8760. You said that ?—Symons said so to me. He said, "What do you expect him to do with the sum of "money you have given him this morning for elec-"tioneering purposes ?" I said, "I have given him "all I had in my possession at the time, and I will go "and give him more." I went straight up and gave Heal 50*l.* That was the second sum he had that morning.

8761. What was the first ?—60*l.* I went back and gave him 50*l.*

8762. Therefore Symons must have known at the time he came to you that Heal had already received some money ?—Certainly, that Heal was in direct communication with me for electioneering purposes. Symons was cognizant of the fact before the poll was open. I did not see Symons before half-past 10. That was at my own house, in the room upstairs ; no one was present but myself. That was the second time.

8763. The first was at Smith's ?—The second time I saw him was in the room upstairs at my own house, when I was alone ; he came and took a chair and sat down. I know it was past 10 for this reason, he had 10*l.* in paper currency, which was money I had received at the second issue, but not at the "Globe."

8764. Was it the second time he made use of this expression about what Heal should do with the money ?—In Smith's presence.

8765. What, the second time ?—He came and took a chair and sat by the side of me. I was in the room there, and he said, "I want some money."

8766. (Mr. Price.) This was the second time ?—The second interview I had with him ; the first it was at my own house.

8767. This was the second money ?—No, the first. I gave him 10*l.* If he liked to take 10*l.* he was as welcome as anybody.

8768. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it for himself ?—He did not say for what purpose he wanted it.

8769. He gave you no name ?—No ; I gave him the 10*l.* because he asked me for it.

8770. You returned that to Mr. Lovibond as 10*l.* to Symons ?—I did, three or four days after the election. About half an hour afterwards it would be, he came into the room again, and in the same way said, "I want some more money, give me another 10*l.*"

8771. (Mr. Anstey.) Who did, Symons ?—"Symons," I said, "who do you want it for, because I have a "duplicate list of every list of men who are paying "money in the town. If you want any money for "men on John Smith's or Bussell's lists, I will not "issue it, because the money is already out."

8772. You only wanted to check the lists ?—I only wanted to check the lists. I said, "Tell me who for, "because it is possible the men for whom you want "the money may be paid twice."

8773. Did you say that ?—I did, and he got angry with me being so particular, and I gave him the second 10*l.* to get rid of him.

8774. When did you see him again ?—Very shortly after that he came a third time. He brought me the name. He says, "Give me 20*l.* for George Webb." I advanced the money without comment or remark.

8775. Did you know George Webb ?—I did not know the man personally, but I knew he was the landlord of the "Devonshire Arms" at Eastover.

8776. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did you give 20*l.* instead of 10*l.* ?—I had an interview with Mr. Barham, and he told me not to stick to the list of prices.

NINTH DAY.
A. Allan.
1 Sept. 1869.

8777. (Mr. Anstey.) Who said that ?—Mr. Barham.

8778. Eustace Barham ?—Eustace Barham, and for that reason I paid 20*l.* instead of 10*l.*

8779. (Mr. Coleridge.) He told you not to stick to the list of prices ?—He did, and not to miss a vote, and I sent the same message to every one who had lists in the town, at least I did to the important ones, Smith and Bussell. I sent the same message to them as came to me.

8780. (Mr. Price.) Where do you say Webb lives ?—At the "Devonshire Arms," at Eastover.

8781. (Mr. Coleridge.) After this 20*l.* did you see him after that day ?—Yes, it was a longer period of time after he had the 20*l.* for Webb than it was before.

8782. Where should you put that 20*l.* down about ?—About near to 12 o'clock I should put that 20*l.*

8783. What time was it you saw him at Smith's ?—It was before the poll was opened in the morning.

8784. At Smith's before eight ?—Before eight.

8785. And the first time at your house 9 o'clock ?—No, after the bank was opened, because he was paid in paper currency.

8786. Then after 10 ?—After 10.

8787. And again the second 10*l.* ?—The second 10*l.*, well it might be a quarter of an hour or 20 minutes after.

8788. And the third ?—Very shortly after.

8789. About 12 o'clock the 20*l.* ?—Yes, that was about the time we altered the list of prices. I would not have advanced 20*l.* at half-past 10 to Webb, but after being told by Mr. Barham not to stick to the list I did not.

8790. Did Mr. Barham come to you or you go to him ?—He came to me; I never left the room.

8791. What instructions did Mr. Barham give you on this occasion before altering the price, besides saying what you have told us, "Do not stick to the list of prices, and do not miss a vote." There must have been some conversation which led to that, can you recollect what ?—No, he came into the room bringing me money, he brought me money every quarter of an hour or 20 minutes all day, 200*l.* at a time, and he came in and said, "Do not miss a vote, "do not miss a vote; do not be particular as to the "list of prices."

8792. And you acted accordingly, and he went away ?—I acted on his instructions.

(Mr. Price.) I cannot find such a man on the list of voters as George Webb.

8793. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he an old man ?—I did not know him personally.

8794. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are speaking of the 1866 election ?—It was the election on the old constituency.

8795. Mr. Vanderbyl's election ?—Mr. Vanderbyl's election.

(Mr. Price.) I see it is George Webb, Eastover.

8796. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came he to have lost his vote ?—I believe the man is dead.

8797. (Mr. Price.) Then there is the 100*l.* ?—The 100*l.* was further on in the day.

8798. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have got to about 12. Did he come in again ?—That was only the 20*l.* for Webb.

8799. Then the next time ?—It was some little time after that.

8800. Tell us about that ?—He came in and was in an ecstacy of excitement. He said, "We shall win "the election, we shall win; give me 100*l.*"

8801. (Mr. Anstey.) Symons did ?—Symons did.

8802. And did you give it to him ?—I said, "No, I "will not," and I felt indignant at his asking.

8803. Why ?—It was unreasonable. I had no orders to give 100*l.*

8804. Did you take the 100*l.* to be for himself ?—I understood it to be for himself; he had no list.

8805. You did not understand that he was going to carry it down to Heal who had a list ?—I did not know.

8806. Do you believe he ever did carry it to Heal ?—Is that a fair question to ask me.

8807. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, but I will not press it if you object ?—Well, I do not believe he did.

8808. You do not believe he took it to Heal at all ?—I do not believe he did.

8809. Do you believe he took these other sums to anybody ?—I never had any power to know that he did.

8810. You never met anybody who said he had got the money ?—No.

8811. Did Webb ever complain that he had not got his money ?—Not to me.

8812. Did Heal ever say anything about having got all he expected ?—He never said anything to me about it.

8813. Heal and Symons are brothers-in-law, are not they ?—I believe they are.

8814. Is not Cook a relation ?—Cook is son-in-law to Symons.

8815. (Mr. Anstey.) Which Cook ?—The solicitor.

8816. Therefore Heal is uncle-in-law of Cook ?—Not being a native of the town I cannot give the family connexions so well as some people.

8817. Did you give him that 100*l.* ?—Not then, we simply quarrelled, I let him out of the room, and he went downstairs making a good deal of noise.

8818. What state was he in ?—Excited with political excitement, nothing else.

8819. He had not been drinking ?—Oh dear no.

(Mr. Price.) You re-affirmed yesterday what you had told us before, that you complained to him he had not given any account of what he had done.

8820. When I get through the fact of his having all the money, I will tell you that.

8821. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then he came back again to you, and you gave him the 100*l.* ?—He went away, and I would not give him it; then Mr. Eustace Barham and he came back together, and I advanced him the money.

1822. From what Mr. Barham said, you gave him the money ?—Mr. Barham walked in where I was, and Symons was in the doorway. I saw them both. Mr. Barham, in his natural mode of expression, winked to me, and said, "Let Symons have 100*l.*"

8823. And you did ?—I did.

8824. (Mr. Anstey.) He winked at you and said, "Symons must have 100*l.*" ?—Yes; Mr. Barham left that moment and Symons came into the room, when Barham had gone, and I gave him the money.

8825. (Mr. Coleridge.) What in ?—Notes, because the gold was all gone at 10 o'clock.

8826. (Mr. Price.) Therefore he had, as you say, 140*l.* ?—That is right.

8827. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he try to get out any more of you that day ?—No, he did not.

8828. (Mr. Anstey.) What o'clock was this ?—It must have been after 12.

8829. How much after, do you recollect ?—Near the end of the day. It was at the time our position was decisive, that we had won, because he was in an ecstacy; he said, "We have won, we have won."

8830. (Mr Anstey.) Who does Symons bank with ?—I do not know I am sure.

8831. Did you hear of his making any payments that day to anybody, or about that time ?—Not to my knowledge.

8832. Do you recollect what notes they were in ?—Most of them were notes belonging to the West of England and South Wales District Bank. I did see some Bank of England notes pass through my hands that day.

8833. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do all the banks here issue their own notes ?—Yes.

8834. They do not use Bank of England notes ?—They issue their own. I do not know whether the others as well.

8835. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not the Bridgwater bank a branch of the Bank of England ?—No, it is a private bank.

8836. (Mr. Price.) Do you know a man of the name of Joseph Reed?—No, I do not.

8837. You do not know any Joseph Reed?—No, unless you describe him more fully.

8838. Joseph Reed, Polden Street, and Edward Street?—I do not know him.

(Joseph Reed was called and did not answer.)

8839. Did you ask anybody at all since you have been examined here what money he had received?—Me?

8840. Yes, since this inquiry has been going on, and you had to give an account of the way in which the money was spent. Have you been to anybody to see what money he had received, so as to square your account?—I have not. I asked Henry Bussell the last time I saw him. I have not spoken to a voter since last night to know how much money he had of me, and he said he did not know, and that is the only time I have spoken to him on money matters since the case has been going on.

8841. You never offered any money to any one to say that you had given him so much, in order to square your account?—No, I will swear I have not, I would rather bear the responsibility of it.

8842. (Mr. Anstey.) You have stated in the course of one of your examinations that a good deal of this corruption was imitated, that is to say was owing to example: people said, "Why should we not have bribes as well as other people?" I may ask you have you found that that sort of contagion, the contagion of example, has spread into the neighbouring districts, within the west division of the county, that they have asked for bribes too, because the Bridgwater people got bribes?—They have never got any contested election since I have been in the county.

8843. Therefore it would not arise?—No.

8844. Your elections do not go back to the time when Mr. Sanford stated in the House of Commons that he found he was met in that way?—No, it does not.

8845. Can you name any people who can give me any information on that subject? There was a petition presented by the late Mr. Perratt of Middlezoy, by Mr. Sanford, and Mr. Sanford backed it with his own statement to that effect?—I was not in the county.

8846. You have stated that the corruption has spread as the constituency has increased; the constituency increased before the late Reform Act by the simple growth of tenements in Eastover, have you any reason to believe, and you heard the question I put to witnesses yesterday, that any of these tenements have been run up on spec with a view of qualifying people to get their share of the plunder of rich strangers?—I have no proof of knowing it.

8847. Is that your belief; many of these are very small tenements you know?—Well, I have no proof. I cannot support it, I do not know.

8848. Do you know of a joint purchase, it may have been a purchase in common, or a purchase in joint tenancy, of property in the neighbourhood of this town effected some time ago for the purpose of erecting tenements?—I have no personal knowledge.

8849. (Mr. Coleridge.) Somewhere about the country did not you and Mr. Barham and some one else purchase a property jointly?—No, not me.

8850. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there another Allan here?—There is the Allan of Bunham.

8851. Did you ever hear of such a practice of the lawyers joining in a purchase in joint tenancy, or in common?—No, I have no knowledge of it.

8852. (Mr. Price.) At Wembdon?—I have not.

8853. Are you the owner of any property?—Yes, I have a four-acre field; I own it myself, and have no connexion with anybody else.

8854. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has Mr. Barham an adjoining property?—I don't know that he has, Mr. Danger has.

8855. (Mr. Price.) Have you built upon it?—No, it is a field.

8856. How far from Bridgwater?—A mile, or a mile and a half out of the town.

8857. (Mr. Coleridge.) In the borough?—No, in the parish of Wembdon.

8858. (Mr. Price.) When did you buy that?—Three or four years ago.

Mr. William Symons recalled.

Mr. W. Symons.

8859. (Mr. Price.) Have you heard the whole of what Allan said?—No, I could not.

8860. He has said you came to him in the morning before the poll, and that then you asked for money, and did not get any. He saw you before the poll at Smith's, and then you said, "Do you know what you "have done?" and afterwards he saw you again at his own house, and you had 10*l.* from him; that he says he believes was for yourself, you did not say what you had it for, nor had you any list?—No.

8861. I do not think you have said you had any list, is it true or not that you got that 10*l.* from him?—It is not true.

8862. You mean to swear that?—I do swear that.

8863. You swear you did not get that 10*l.* from him?—Yes, I took two amounts as I told you afterwards.

8864. Then he says you had another 10*l.* from him?—Somewhere about 12 o'clock or before. I did not see Allan until just after 11, not until the evening; he came and begged my pardon for what he had said to me.

8865. Then you did not get that 10*l.*?—No.

8866. Then he says very shortly after that again you got 20*l.* for a man named George Webb who appears to have lived at Eastover, and who was a voter at that time, but since dead?—I never heard his name mentioned.

8867. Therefore you never got that 20*l*?—I did not.

8868. Then he says that you came again, and in a very excited state, saying you were winning the election and asked for 100*l.*?—I did not.

8869. And that he refused you, and you went away thinking it an unreasonable thing as you had no list, and that they thought they had won the election, and that you came back again with Eustace Barham, and that Mr. Barham gave some intimation to Allan which he understood to mean something, and that he said he must have the 100*l.*, and then he gave you the 100*l.*, and that he gave it to you in notes, some of them he believes of the West of England Bank, and some of the Bank of England?—That proved to be 120*l.* I heard nothing of what was said; a parcel was put into my hands.

8870. Did you go back with Mr. Barham?—I did not.

8871. Did you meet Mr. Barham after you left him?—I do not remember seeing Mr. Barham the whole time.

8872. Do you mean to say you did not meet Barham, and tell him you had not got the 100*l.*, or the money you asked for, and that you did not go back to Allen with Mr. Barham.

8873. That you say distinctly?—I swear distinctly it is not true.

(Mr. Price.) Write your name and the word "Received" on two envelopes, first with a quill, and then with a steel pen; write the word "Received," and then your name, "W. Symons." You may go down for the present, and write it on a table below where you can do it in your ordinary way.

(Mr. Allan.) Will you allow me to add to the evidence last Friday night; when I saw Mr. Barham in his own office he told me that it was Mr. Cook, the lawer, who influenced him, and that it was for that reason he came to me to get Symons the money.

(Mr. Price.) Last Friday?

(Mr. Allan.) Yes, last Friday.

NINTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

1 Sept. 1869.

Mr. Eustace Barham sworn.

8874. (Mr. Price.) We are only going to examine you on this one point now. You have heard the statement made by Allan to-day about getting this 100*l.* for Symons, and you have heard Allan give an account of it. You were in the room I suppose, and heard it?—Yes, I have heard it.

8875. Saying that Mr. Symons came back together with you, whether both went into the room with Allan does not matter; is it true that you saw Symons that day, and he mentioned to you that he had not got the 100*l.* the money he asked for, and that you went to Allan, and said to Allan that he must give him the 100*l.*?—I saw Symons on that day in George Lane; he did not tell me he had not got the 100*l.*, but Mr. Cook, the solicitor came to me and told me that such was the case, that Mr. Symons had applied to Mr. Allan for the 100*l.* and had been refused, and Mr. Cook said he thought it was a very great pity, and upon that I went upstairs to Allan, and told Allan to let Mr. Symons have the 100*l.*, whether Symons was then near upon the stairs or not, I am not quite certain; my impression is that Symons followed me upstairs—that is my impression.

8876. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you seen Mr. Symons after Mr Cook told you this?—No, I did not speak to Mr. Symons at all.

8877. But had you seen him. Was he within your sight at all during the short interval which elapsed between Mr. Cook's statement to you and your visit to Allan?—I believe he was close to me all the time, but I did not speak to him.

8878. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you believe that 100*l.* to be for Symons yourself or to distribute to others?—I believed it was for Symons to distribute to others.

8879. Did Mr. Cook tell you who those others were?—No, he did not.

8880. Because it would make a material difference whether it was to influence one vote or to influence 10 votes?—He did not tell me who it was. I did it on Mr. Cook's request. He was the solicitor acting in the election, and I thought when he made that request it was due to him to comply with it.

8881. (Mr. Coleridge.) On what was your belief founded? You saw no list and did not speak to Symons. What was your belief founded upon that Symons did not mean to keep it himself?—Because I did not think that Symons was a man who would keep it himself.

Mr. J. Cook.

Mr. James Cook sworn.

8882. (Mr. Price.) Are you the Mr. Cook who is related to Mr. Symons?—I am.

8883. And to Heal?—And Heal.

8884. Tell us about this 100*l.* Did Symons come and complain to you that Allan had refused to give him it?—To the best of my recollection I believe that I did see Mr. Symons in George Street upon that occasion, and that he told me. I saw him in some degree agitated. I saw he was not pleased about something, and I believe he communicated that he had seen Mr. Allan about money matters, and that he had refused him, and I think then upon that I saw Barham, whom I regarded as acting in the matter, and communicated to him what I have no doubt was Symons's statement.

8885. Did you understand that Symons wanted the money himself?—Certainly not.

8886. Did he tell you what it was for?—He did not, as far as I can remember.

8887. He was not a list man?—Certainly not. You must remember this, the conversation between Mr. Symons and myself took place in George Street. I saw no list.

8888. (Mr. Coleridge.) But did he say, "I have a "certain number of voters whom I can manage if I "can get money, and Allan will not give me the "money"?—I do not think that could have been the conversation that he had a list or anything of that sort.

8889. Did he say, "I have voters I could influence, and Allan will not give me the money"?—I know this from the surrounding circumstances of Mr. Symons. First of all, I have no doubt whatever the money was not required for himself.

8890. (Mr. Price.) Why do you say it was not required for himself?—From his position, and from the fact I have never known him, as far as I can carry my recollection, associating himself at any previous election.

8891. (Mr. Anstey.) And that is all?—That is all.

8892. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew that Heal, his brother-in-law, had associated himself very strongly?—I knew that.

8893. You knew he was his brother-in-law?—Certainly.

8894. And your own?—No.

8895. How is Heal related to you?—Heal is an uncle by marriage.

8896. (Mr. Price.) Do you know that Heal had stuck to 40*l.*; there had been a dispute about 40*l.* at the previous election?—I heard that in the committee room.

8897. That was before this transaction?—Clearly.

8898. Did you know that Heal was bribing for the party on this occasion we are speaking of, Heal, who had stuck to 40*l.*, and was ready to stick to anything, I should say, in the way of money, that he could get, did you know that he was employed under Symons to go and distribute money?—I heard so that morning.

8899. From whom?—From members of the family.

8900. (Mr. Anstey.) Had Mr. Symons mentioned Heal to you that morning or before?—I should not like to say one way or the other. He was excited unquestionably at the moment. Whether he mentioned he wanted the money for Heal I do not know.

8901. Do you remember the words you used?—No, I cannot.

8902. He came to you in the street?—No, I think rather I saw him standing still in the street, and I saw by his manner that something had not pleased him, and I think very likely I interrogated him, and I think, as far as I can charge my memory, he said he had been to Allan about some money. and had been refused, or something of that sort. Whether Heal's name was mentioned I cannot say.

8903. Did he tell you how much money?—I think not, as far as I can judge.

8904. Did he tell you that he had got money, and had been refused more?—No, he said nothing about having any. The effect of it was that he had been there and Allan had refused him money.

8905. And that is all you can recollect that he told you—he had been refused money, not saying for what purpose, by Allan, and then, from your personal knowledge of the man, you thought it was not likely that he wanted it for himself?—I have no doubt whatever in my own mind that he did not require it for himself.

8906. I did not ask you whether you have any doubt, because that is for us to consider, and not for you, but when he made this statement to you you had no doubt then, from the character of the man, from the knowledge of his circumstances, his wealth, that he wanted it for someone else, and not for himself?—Certainly.

8907. Did it cross your mind at the time that he might have wanted it for his brother-in-law, Heal?—I should say, if I had any impression at all, that must have been it.

8908. Would you from your knowledge of Heal and his circumstances pecuniarily have had the same confidence that Heal wanted it for others, and not for himself?—Would you repeat that question?

8909. You say from your knowledge and personal opinion of Symons and his wealth he did not want it himself?—Certainly.

NINTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

1 Sept. 1869.

8910. Then from your personal opinion of Heal, founded on all his antecedents at all previous elections, and your knowledge of Heal's circumstances at that time, had you the same confidence, that Heal wanted that money for others, and not for himself?—I am sure I have the greatest willingness to answer, but it is very long, and whether the question has reference to Mr. Symons or to Mr. Heal I do not know.

8911. To Heal. You are a lawyer and must understand?—Yes, I am, but the question is a long one.

8912. You have answered as to Symons; now as to Heal?—Do you ask me whether I would have trusted him in the same way as Mr. Symons?

8913. Yes?—Certainly not.

8914. (Mr. Price.) If you had known Symons was going to pay that over, would you have asked Mr. Barham to persuade Allan to let Symons have the 100*l.*?—What I might have done, perhaps; I cannot state.

8915. But with your knowledge of Heal at the time?—I say I should not have done it personally.

8916. Mr. Symons kept concealed from you and everyone, so far as you knew, what he was going to do with this 100*l.*?—Certainly, as to the appropriation of it, but I had no doubt in my own mind whatever.

8917. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he the only person at that election to whom so large a sum of money—I speak of bribe agents— as 100*l.* and more—(140*l.* and 135*l.*, it is indifferently stated at—) was entrusted without a list, without vouchers of any kind, and without knowledge on the part of the payer as to what persons the money was to be given?—I had no control over money matters, and therefore, until the disclosures in this court, was not aware whether there was larger or smaller.

8918. But you cannot recollect a single person intrusted to that degree as bribe agent which Mr. Symons represents himself?—I cannot.

Andrew Allan recalled.

A. Allan.

8919. (Mr. Price.) Did you go to Symons the night of this election and beg his pardon for what you had said to him?—I remember some time afterwards it was for a political matter altogether; political diplomacy.

8920. What did you beg his pardon for?—We were almost fighting over that 100*l.* when I would not give it to him.

8921. But he says he only saw you once that day, and when he the next time saw you it was when you came to beg his pardon. What is that story?—About this quarrelling with me at the "Globe" tavern.

8922. He had got his 100*l.*?—He got it afterwards.

8923. When did you give it to him?—I never spoke to him.

8924. You gave it by Mr. Barham's instructions?—Yes.

8925. He says the next time was when you begged his pardon?—The only time there was anything said about reconciliation in the matter was six months afterwards; it may be six or seven, at the "Globe" in the presence of George Trevelyan and Robert Hart, two commercial travellers. Mr. Symons was there. I went down to meet these travellers at the hotel. We did not speak, and the travellers noticed it, and they asked what was the matter. How it was that we did not know one another, and looked different ways, and I said, "Since the last election we have not known one another." I did not explain the reason, but it was the 100*l.* They proposed that we should shake hands in the matter and stand a bottle of champagne, which I did, and Mr. Symons stood two.

(Mr. Price.) Now tell me, because it is a serious matter, and I should like to know exactly how you made out this list to Mr. Lovibond, which I hold in my hand, so as to be able to vouch for it. There are two tens, and then "ditto to George Webb, 20*l.*"

8926. How did you make out that account with this particularity?—I had a pocket book, and noted down at the time everything that went up, the name it went to, where it went, and up to 12 o'clock there was not an item that was not as correct as could possibly be, and if the persons had worked slowly and businesslike there would be no deficiency shown at the bottom, but after 12 o'clock they altered the list of prices. The agents came to me, and wanted some money. They would not go for the money on the list, but wanted 10*l.* more, and up to 12 o'clock I was as clear as could be as to that item.

8927. Had you any document that would have enabled you to put down, in rendering your account to Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Symons for these two tens, and ditto to George Webb for 20*l.*?—I had the book written in "Symons" and copied in that list at the time I told Mr. Lovibond.

8928. What became of that book?—It was destroyed.

8929. Did you hand it to Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Lovibond saw it.

8930. Then you had the book with you when you and he made out this account?—I had.

8931. Did Mr. Lovibond see, for instance, such an item as this. When you were making it out would he see, "Ditto for George Webb, 20*l.*?"—I showed it to him; I concealed nothing.

Mr. Henry Lovibond sworn.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

8932. (Mr. Price.) It is only on this matter, as to the correctness of this account that we shall examine you now. You have heard Mr. Allan's description of the way he made it to you, the kind of vouchers he showed you; do you remember the way it was made out?—He read from his book, and I took down that from what he stated.

8933. From his lips?—From his lips.

8934. Did he also point out to you the items in the books, so that you could see them?—I believe some of them I did.

8935. Have you any recollection of his giving you "Symons, William, 10*l.*" and "Ditto," "for George "Webb, 20*l.*"?—I have a recollection about the name George Webb, and Allan stated that he believed that was the only man that Symons paid. I have a distinct recollection about George Webb, and he also added he would have voted without being paid.

8936. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean paid at the time this list was made out. He stated Symons only paid George Webb?—I do.

8937. And stuck to all the money himself?—That is what I inferred.

8938. (Mr. Anstey.) The only person said to be paid by Symons was Webb, and Webb was a man who would have voted without being paid?—Yes.

8939. When did Webb die?—I do not know.

8940. What was he?—I believe he kept a beerhouse called "The Devonshire Arms."

8941. If Webb was a man whom Allan is correct in saying would have voted without being paid, is there any evidence beyond Symons' assertion that he paid this to George Webb?—None that I am aware of.

8942. And he is dead?—I have heard in this court that he is dead.

8943. (Mr. Price.) Therefore we may clearly take this to be a perfectly accurate list if Allan's was accurate?—Most certainly it was an account rendered by him to me, and Mr. Barham accounting for the money received.

NINTH DAY.

A. Allan.

1 Sept. 1869.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

8944. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any reason to believe that even George Webb was paid by Symons beyond Symons' mere statement that it was so?—I have no knowledge that he was paid beyond Symons' statement with reference to that list. There is not an item in that list but what is bonâ fide the fact—that I declare. You will find omissions, things not charged.

8945. (Mr. Price.) Do you know when Webb died?—No.

8946. What made you think he would vote without being paid?—John Smith can give you every information about Webb.

8947. But what made you think he would vote without being paid?—I did not say he would. Mr. Lovibond said it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Who was it, Mr. Lovibond?

(Mr. Lovibond.) Mr. Allan at the time; it was his remark.

8948. (Mr. Anstey to the witness.) You pointed out the name of George Webb to Mr. Lovibond observing "That is the only man whom Symons has "paid, and he would have voted without being paid"?—I could not have supplemented "without being paid," because I did not know him personally.

W. Symons.

WILLIAM SYMONS recalled.

(The shorthand writer was requested to read his note of Mr. Symons' evidence this morning, which he did as follows: "(Mr. Price.) Have you heard the "whole of what Allan said?—No, I could not. He "has said you came to him in the morning before the "poll, and that then you asked for money, and did not "get any at that time. He saw you before the "poll at Smith's, and then you said, 'Do you know "'what you have done?' and afterwards he saw you "again at his own house, and you had 10*l.* from him. "That he says he believes was for yourself; you did "not say what you had it for, nor had you any list?—"No. I do not think you have said you had any list, "is it true or not that you got that 10*l.* from him?—"It is not true. You mean to swear that?—I do "swear that. You swear you did not get that 10*l.* "from him?—Yes, I took two amounts as I told you "afterwards. Then he says you had another 10*l.* "from him?—Somewhere about two o'clock or before. "I did not see Allan until just after 11, not until the "evening; he came and begged my pardon for what "he had said to me. Then you did not get that 10*l.*? "—No. Then he says very shortly after that again "you got 20*l.* for a man named George Webb, who "appears to have lived at Eastover, and who was a "voter at that time, but since dead?—I never heard "his name mentioned. Therefore you never got that "20*l.*?—I did not. Then he says that you came "again, and in a very excited state, saying you were "winning the election, and asked for 100*l.*?—I did "not. And that he refused you"?

8949. (Mr. Price.) Stopping there. You have heard what Mr. Cook has stated, that you made a complaint to Mr. Cook that you could not get the 100*l.* Do not shake your head, but hear the question, and do not smile about it, because someone must be committing perjury in this matter. You said you did not go for 100*l.*, and that you did not get refused. Now, Mr. Cook has said that he met you in George Lane, that you complained of not having got this 100*l.*, that he communicated with Mr. Barham; and you have heard that Mr. Barham went down to Mr. Allan's, that although you may not have gone with him, yet that you went close together, and that you were on the stairs, if not in the room, and that he told Allan to let you have the 100*l.* and he gave it to you. Do you mean to say again that you were never refused that 100*l.* that you did not complain about it, and that you did not go back and get the 100*l.*?—The difference is this. I did not mention any amount. I said Heal wanted to be attended to for more money. That is what I said.

8950. You merely want to deny the 100*l.*?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) My impression is that I put "or any sum of money."

8951. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Cook has denied your mentioning any name, now you say you mentioned Heal's name?—I am speaking of mentioning to Allan.

8952. (Mr. Price.) Then you did not mention to Mr. Cook any name?—I do not remember about that. I mentioned to Allan who it was for.

8953. (Mr. Anstey.) You hear that Mr. Barham who derived his information exclusively from Mr. Cook not having spoken to you at all that morning confirms Allan's statement as to this specific sum of 100*l.* being mentioned. Allan says Mr. Barham came with you; Mr. Barham said, winking at Allan, "Give him 100*l.*" Now Mr. Barham's only informant he says that morning was Mr. Cook and Mr. Cook's only informant was you. If you did not mention to Mr. Cook this specific sum of 100*l.*, pray how did Mr. Barham ask for that identical sum about which Allan says there had been a previous dispute that morning between him and you?—I do not remember mentioning any sum.

8954. (Mr. Price.) Then Mr. Barham must have imagined the sum you wanted to meet. You mean that?—It is possible.

8955. You mean us to believe that Mr. Barham mentioned this very large sum of 100*l.* without any comment or suggestion on your part, he mentioned that that was what you wanted?—I do not remember mentioning any sum.

8956. Do not remember?—Well, I did not to the best of my belief mention any sum.

8957. Do you mean us to understand that Mr. Barham mentioned this very large sum of 100*l.* without any suggestion on your part to Mr. Cook that that was the sum you wanted?—I do not remember mentioning any sum.

8958. Will you pledge your oath that you did not?—I will not go so far as that.

8959. Who are your bankers?—Stuckeys.

8960. Has Heal any banker?—I do not know.

8961. You must know whether he had any banking account, had he at that time?—I really do not know anything about him.

8962. He is your relation?—Very well, so he may be, but I may not have seen him for a long time.

8963. (Mr. Anstey.) You told me yesterday that Heal was at that time enjoying good credit, he was a brewer, and not as he is now, a poor man, and was in nobody's employment?—Yes.

8964. How came you to speak to his credit, and about his being able to pay his way, and being in a good position, when you are not able to tell us even who his bankers are?—I said he was in business at the time.

8965. (Mr. Price.) But is it a fact, or not, that for the last two or three years, Mr. Heal's pecuniary position is very different from what it was formerly?—Yes.

8966. Was it so in 1866 when you gave him this 100*l.*?—He was in business. Nothing of the kind had happened then.

8967. Nothing of what kind?—Nothing of his reverse of circumstances.

(Mr. Anstey.) He had taken bribes before that in former elections.

8968. (Mr. Price.) He stuck to 100*l.*?—I had nothing to do with him in former elections. I had heard him complain that he had been promised 40*l.*, and had not had it.

8969. (Mr. Anstey.) Surely you knew of the inquiry which had taken place only that very year, 1866, before the House of Commons, which had been reported in all the newspapers, which had also been published in a blue book, and in which it appeared that Heal was not only a briber, but a person who withheld money which had been given to him to bribe with from the persons to whom it was to be conveyed by him in the shape of bribes ; that is to say, he was so needy a man, and so rapacious a man, that he stuck to money which was entrusted to him to distribute in bribes ?—No.

8970. Have you not read the blue book ?—No.

8971. Then have you not read the newspapers ?—No.

8972. (Mr. Price.) You knew that he had expected 40*l.* for his vote. Is that consistent with what you say as to his high position, that he should want to be paid money for his vote ?—I knew he had complained of not having got 40*l.*

8973. Is that consistent with your statement of his being a large brewer, his requiring 40*l.* as a bribe for his vote ?—He has not been a brewer for many years. At that time he was receiving from 12*s.* to a pound a week.

8974. Then it was after he got bribery money in his hands that he managed to start in business ?—Well, he went into business. Who found the money I cannot tell you.

8975. (Mr. Anstey.) If you know anything about it at all, you must know that he was a brewer in 1865. He, in 1865, asked for that identical 40*l.* over again, as the price of his next vote, the vote for that election, it having, as he said been dishonestly withholden from him since the previous elections 1857 and 1859 ?—I never heard of it till yesterday.

8976. But it was in the newspapers ?—So it may be, but I did not see it.

8977. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was your own brother-in-law ?—So it may be. I may not be on the best of terms with him as with the rest of people.

8978. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that you would give 100*l.* to a man without a voucher if you were not on the best of terms with him ? if you had been on bad terms with him, would you have given him that 100*l.*, as you say you did ?—I was not on bad terms with him.

8979. You have said so. Do take care of your answers ?—I do take care, and I will take care if you do.

8980. (Mr. Price.) To clear up that amount, we insist upon having your banking account of that date ?—You are welcome to have it. Will you allow me to ask a question of Allan.

(Mr. Price.) Certainly not.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You can make a statement of what you want to ask him, and we will put the question to him.

8981. (Mr. Price.) You say now you were not on bad terms with him ?—I shook hands with him.

8982. When was that ?—On the evening when the commercial travellers asked us to make it up.

8983. What is this story about the three bottles of champagne ?—We met together at the "Globe."

8984. Had you a quarrel again after you had had the champagne ?—Never.

8985. You say you shook hands with him ?—Yes.

8986. Had you got on bad terms with him from the time you shook hands, until the time you drank the three bottles of champagne together ?—No.

8987. Then what is the meaning of the two commercial travellers saying, "Let us have some champagne, and make it up" ?—I do not remember that.

8988. What are the names of those travellers ?—I do not know.

8989. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not remember shaking hands with him in the presence of some commercial travellers, and asking him to make it up ?—I do not remember it.

8990. Do you remember ; yes or no ?—I think we had some champagne together. It is very likely I did.

8991. And did the commercial travellers on that occasion persuade you to make it up ?—I do not remember that.

8992. You swear that ?—I do not remember their saying anything about making it up. I am an Englishman, and do not like to bear ill will, and I asked him to shake hands.

8993. (Mr. Price.) Never mind about your being an Englishman. You have referred to that before. We shall have to make up our minds as to whether you or Allen have perjured yourself as to the money you received that day. Now you have heard the account which Allan gave of it. He said that on the day when he made up this account with Mr. Lovibond, that he vouched the payments put down here by entries in his book, made at the time, that he was on no unfriendly terms with you, because it was after you had shaken hands, and after the election, and Mr. Lovibond distinctly remembers the item of 20*l.* for George Webb. Now, that being the state of things, I ask you to be cautious. Try and recollect yourself. It may be it is a slip of the memory, but if you are going to pledge your oath that you did not receive that money, it may be a very serious matter for you. Now I do not want to trap you into giving an erroneous answer, but as there are some things which are very important, that you do not remember, which one would suppose you would, I ask you, having heard of that, and having heard what Lovibond said about the way in which Allan vouched his payments, do you positively say you did not receive these two sums of 20*l.* and 100*l.* ?—I positively swear I did not.

8994. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you not only contradict Mr. Allan, and his documents, but also, to a very considerable extent, Mr. Barham and Mr. Cook, whose evidence you have heard this day. Do you mean to do that, to contradict them on your oath ?—The only thing——

8995. Do you, or do you not contradict Mr. Barham or Mr. Cook's evidence ?—I have nothing to do with Mr. Barham's evidence.

8996. You have heard his evidence to-day ?—I did not go upstairs with Mr. Barham, to the best of my recollection. In fact he was not there with Mr. Allan at all.

8997. You were there ?—It was 120*l.* It was not 100*l.* at all.

8998. (Mr. Price.) That is what Mr. Allan disputes ?—It is 120*l.* I gave to Heal.

8999. (Mr. Anstey.) It could not be so, because Mr. Barham says, "I asked for 100*l.*" ?—Is not that possible ?

9000. I do not care whether it is possible. It is inconsistent with your story. You heard what Barham said, that he repeated Cook's information to Allan, and that it was 100*l.* which was mentioned ?—I positively say that that 120*l.* was put into my hands, and I counted it before his face. I did not ask for any sum at all.

9001. Did you not hear Barham say that he repeated Cook's information to Allan, and that he asked you for 100*l.* ?—I did not ask for the money.

9002. It will take a good deal of new evidence, not corroborative evidence, to make us believe that ?—I am right, you may depend upon it.

9003. If I am induced to believe that your statement is true, I must have, not corroborative evidence, but entirely new evidence, for I do not think there is anything in your evidence which is worthy of belief ?—I tell you now as I told you yesterday, I care very little for what you say or think of me.

9004. (Mr. Coleridge.) It will be our duty to consider whether we shall exercise the power we have of committing you to prison.—You will find that I am right and the others are wrong.

9005. Unless you withdraw what you have said to my friend, Mr. Anstey, I for one shall recommend my brother Commissioners to send you to prison ?—What for ?

9006. For the way in which you spoke to Mr. Anstey.—Well, I do not care. As long as I have the good feeling of my fellow-townsmen in Bridgwater,

NINTH DAY.

W. Symons.

1 Sept. 1869.

where I have carried on business for so many years, I care very little for what other people who are strangers think.

(Mr. Price.) Then we will just adjourn for a moment to consider what we shall do with you.

(The Commissioners then withdrew, and after a short time they returned into court, when)

Mr. Price said: We have considered your conduct in the witness box, both yesterday and this morning, and your conduct this morning we are all of opinion has been excessively insolent and contemptuous to the court, and in exercising the powers which we have to punish for contempt of court, we have made up our minds to fine you the sum of 50*l.* for your conduct towards one of the Commissioners this morning. That sum of money will be recovered from you by the Court of Exchequer, and we trust that will be a warning to you and to others, that proper respect is to be paid to Her Majesty's Commissioners.

J. Smith.

JOHN SMITH called and sworn.

9007. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A grocer.

9008. (Mr. Anstey.) Is your shop called "York House"?—Yes.

9009. (Mr. Price.) And you have taken an active part in electioneering matters for some time?—A very active part.

9010. Now, with regard to the last election, when Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl stood, did you take an active part in that election?—In no way whatever.

9011. How was that?—Well, I made up my mind some eight or nine months before not to do it, for two or three reasons.

9012. Give us the reasons?—First of all I had been very ill for some 12 months, and, as a speculation, I always lost money by elections, that is, so far as my personal position was concerned; and I considered up to that time, if I had had nothing to do with elections, all the business I had lost by making ill friends with my customers, and all the money I had lost, I should have had then, and I should not have lost anything. As it was I lost 500*l.* or 600*l.*

9013. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you had nothing to do with the last election?—Very little.

9014. How was it then that you gave two sums of 15*l.* each to Mr. Bussell?—I did not remember that.

9015. You must guard yourself. You said you had nothing to do with the last election?—I mean the nomination day and the polling day.

9016. (Mr. Price.) You mean to say you had nothing to do with the last election on the nomination day and the polling day?—I was in the committee room at the "Globe."

9017. Can you tell me at what time in the day your party made up their minds to spend money?—About a quarter after 3.

9018. Before that time did you know money had been spent?—Not a farthing.

9019. Would you have known it if it had been?—I think I should.

9020. Now, then, at a quarter past 3, what was done to your knowledge?—I met Andrew Allan coming over the bridge, and he tapped his coat on the left-hand side. I knew what that meant. He said, "Come down to the 'New Inn'." I did not go; I went home, and there I stopped till after 4 o'clock.

9021. (Mr. Price.) I believe that you said you knew that money had begun to be spent?—Yes, by the indication that Allan made on his coat.

9022. You knew by that that money was going?—Yes. I knew by the way he did it.

9023. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he send for you after that to come to the "New Inn"?—He did not.

9024. You did not go?—No.

9025. You voted, I suppose?—Yes, at half-past 8 in the morning. The reason I went home was, I thought it was foolish to spend money at a quarter past 3 in the day. We had no right to spend a shilling that day. The election was ours at a quarter past 3.

9026. (Mr. Price.) In the morning Mr. Kinglake had gone away in despair?—I did not know that.

9027. You knew he was so very far behind at 12 o'clock in the day, or 1 o'clock?—Yes, at 1 o'clock he was 248 behind.

9028. At 1 o'clock, when he was 248 behind, do you mean to say the election could have been won without money by Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—That was a quarter past 3.

9029. (Mr. Coleridge.) At a quarter past 1, or 1, could you have got that large minority into a majority without the use of money?—I contend that the old constituency kept back the new constituency.

9030. That is no answer to my question. At 1 o'clock, being in a large minority, do you say, of your own knowledge, that it could have been cut down to a very small minority by 3 o'clock except by the using of money?—I do not think it could.

9031. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not hear on that morning what had been alleged to have been stated by the lawyers and others at the "Globe," namely, that "We have lost the election unless money is going"?—I heard that.

9032. And did you not hear that 3,000*l.* was thought by competent persons quite insufficient to save the election then?—That is not true.

9033. Did you hear it?—Yes.

9034. (Mr. Price.) Why did you say it was not true?—Because I heard Allan make that statement, and I told him it was not true.

9035. Why was it not true?—It is not so. It was never made in my hearing on that occasion.

9036. You were there, and Allan said you made it?—Yes, and Mr. Allan made that statement to me three weeks ago, and I stoutly deny it.

9037. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he make the statement himself that the 3,000*l.* would not be sufficient?—No.

9038. Nor anybody else?—No.

9039. (Mr. Price.) What was the discussion about? It was 12 o'clock. There was myself there, Mr. Bulpin, Captain Bussell, Mr. Reed, Mr. Cook, Mr. Henry Lovibond, Mr. Allan, and myself.

9040. (Mr. Anstey.) Who do you call Captain Bussell?—Mr. Henry Bussell. We call everybody captain here.

8041. What was the discussion about?—The discussion was about the majority that Mr. Westropp then had over Mr. Kinglake, and also over Mr. Vanderbyl. I believe, as I said before, that was about 248. We had been in the small room about three or four times in the course of the morning, and we came out. Nothing was said, and we came away. I said, "It is no use. If you had money, "mind you, it is not a bit of use to attempt to catch "Westropp now, for this reason, if you reckon these "men up, it will cost between 2,000*l.* and 2,300*l.* "to get alongside of Mr. Westropp; whereas, if I "had anything to do with the election, I would never "have anything to do with the money now, if I were "you, for this reason, that immediately after, or half "an hour after, your money will go to the 'Clarence.'" I reckoned up the majority which Mr. Westropp had over Mr. Kinglake, and I reckoned each of those men would have to be paid 10*l.*, that is, if they polled the old constituency, and I knew they would not go without it. Then there was an end of it, and I came out.

9042. (Mr Price.) Do you mean to say there was no further discussion that took place at all, as to what money would do?—I mean to say there was not a word said about the 3000*l.*

9043. Was nothing further said?—No, I went home and had my dinner.

9044. They took what you said as to the real state of things, and there was no argument or discussion about it?—Oh, yes; I could tell better than Andrew Allan could.

9045. Why?—Because I have been longer at it.

9046. (Mr. Coleridge.) You could know no more about the new electors than they did?—I know; but I found that the large majority of the new electors were stopping back with the old electors. The old electors were keeping the new ones back. I could see them outside my door hour after hour.

9047. What do you mean by the old electors keeping the new ones back?—Well, they said, "Do not poll; "there is sure to be money by-and-by; do not poll." You would see an old elector standing about amongst four or five of the new electors.

9048. (Mr. Price.) And that kept them back?—Yes.

9049. So that the new electors would very soon be as corrupt as the old, if the borough of Bridgwater should continue to be represented in Parliament?—I am afraid so.

9050. You say you went home after this discussion. When this inquiry took place, how came you to advise Mr. Bussell to go away, if you knew nothing of any money being spent. You say you knew nothing of any money being spent?—I did not.

9051. When you heard about this election inquiry being about to take place before the learned judge, you knew of no money having been spent. Did you believe any money had been spent?—I believed it.

9052. What made you persuade Mr. Bussell to be so ill-advised as to go away?—I took that upon myself. I went over to Bussell three or four times.

9053. Who asked you to go to him?—I went myself, voluntarily. I went to him personally. I am connected with him in shipping matters ,and I go to him two or three times in shipping matters, and I go to him two or three times in a day.

9054. You are no relation to him?—No.

9055. You are no relation to the other Smiths in this town?—No.

9056. Are you any relation to anybody in this town?—No. I am a London man. I do not belong to Bridgwater.

9057. Go on. You went down to Bussell?—I went down to Bussell two or three times, and he was in an awful state.

9058. Pray do not laugh.—And he wanted to get away, and I thought myself the best plan was that he should go away.

9059. Why did you think that?—I cannot assign a reason what for. He was very anxious to go away, and I did not think it was doing wrong to advise him to go away.

9060. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say you did not know, that if he had appeared and given his evidence before the learned judge, and had spoken the truth, that he would have got a certificate to protect him?—No.

9061. Do you mean to say you did not know that?—No.

9062. Did you pay him the money to go away with?—I paid him the money.

9063. Did you see anybody about his going away?—Yes, Mr. Reed.

9064. Had you been in communication with Mr. Reed before you advised him to go?—I went up to Reed's after I had been to Bussell, and told him Bussell wanted to go away.

9065. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you ever been to Reed before with respect to Bussell's going away?—No.

9066. Had you ever told Reed that it was worth while to get Bussell away?—No.

9067. Did you ever hear it mentioned by anybody that it would be as well to get Bussell away?—No, not by any solicitor.

9068. By anybody?—It was talked over the town that he had gone away.

9069. That is not an answer. Before you advised Bussell to go away, had you heard the question of his going away mentioned in Bridgwater?—Nobody but his wife.

9070. When was that?—Oh, it was a matter of general conversation.

9071. I mean before you advised him to go?—Oh, no.

9072. You were the first person to advise him?—I think it is very likely.

9073. (Mr. Price.) Now, go on. When you went to Mr. Reed to tell him this, did not Mr. Reed say, "Nonsense! let him stay here; if he speaks the truth the judge will protect him by his certificate"?—No; He said I was a fool for coming there the first time I went.

9074. He said you were a fool for coming there?—Yes; and thought I was.

9075. Why?—Because I thought I had no right to go and ask him a question like that; and then Bussell said, "What did you want to go for?"

9076. Did you tell him that Bussell wanted to go away, knowing that if he stayed he would be called as a witness?—Yes.

9077. Did not Mr. Reed tell you, as a lawyer, that the learned judge would protect him by his certificate if he appeared and told the truth?—No.

9078. Did he pay you any money for him then?—No.

9079. Did he make any remonstrance? Did he say it was no use Bussell's going away?—No.

9080. Was it with Mr. Reed's full concurrence that Bussell went away?—Yes.

9081. The second time you went you got some money from him?—Yes.

9083. Did you send him some more money afterwards?—Yes, after he came back.

9084. He came back?—Yes. He had another 15*l.*

9085. And you sent him away again?—Yes.

9086. And you gave him 15*l.* again, which you obtained from Mr. Reed?—I did.

9087. (Mr Coleridge.) What did you send him away again for?—It was in consequence of the Taunton assizes I believe.

9088. (Mr. Price.) It was in consequence of what the learned judge said, that if he did not come back he would remain an outlaw, and would be prosecuted whenever he did come back?—I think so.

9089. You sent him another 15*l.*?—Yes.

9090. You do not know, I suppose, where Mr. Reed got the money from for the pure love of party?—I do not know.

9091. He did not pay it out of his own pocket?—I could not tell.

9092. That was all that you gave Bussell?—That was all.

9093. Have you told us all the part which you took in the election of 1868, before or after the election?—No. There was a man named Garratt. Mr. Reed gave me 5*l.* to send to Garratt.

9094. To get him out of the way?—He was gone.

9095. To send to him?—He was gone. Garratt wrote me a letter.

9096. He was an inspector of railways?—That is the man.

9097. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you advise him to go?—No; I never knew he was gone from Bridgwater till I had a letter from him; until I received a letter to say he was at Teignmouth.

9008. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you known him before?—Yes, I had known him as a voter.

9099. (Mr. Anstey.) You knew he was a person who had been employed to bribe?—No; I never heard of it till I came here. I was amazed when I heard it. I never knew he took a part in it.

9100. Was it in consequence of your house being so well known to fame in connexion with bribery for so many elections that the term "sugar" arose?—Very likely.

9101. (Mr. Price.) I should like you to explain why it was, when they began bribing, that they did not entrust you, you being their accredited agent for the town, with the knowledge of the fact that they were bribing?—They knew I would have nothing to do with it.

9102. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had they asked you?—Yes; they knew 12 months before that I would have nothing to do with it.

NINTH DAY.

J. Smith.

1 Sept. 1869.

9103. (Mr. Price.) You had a virtuous fit, and, therefore, would not have anything to do with it?—They knew it.

9104. You told them that you had been convinced of the impropriety of the whole thing, and you would have nothing else to do with it?—I did not tell them that.

9105. Can you tell us why you broke off with the party, and gave up this electioneering business? Did they distrust you?—Oh no. As I told you before, I had lost by the electioneering, and had been ill for a long period before that.

9106. That is the reason, because you had lost your business and had been ill?—Yes.

9107. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you not, or had not your house been so much associated with these corrupt practices, that the very terms by which bribery is known down here on both sides, that is to say, the term "sugar," and so forth, are supposed to have allusion to your trade of grocer? Do not you recollect that that was mentioned by a witness before the election committee, as long back as 1866, with reference to the election of 1865?—I think the first reference to "sugar," in connexion with money was in Sir John Shelley's election. Some days previous to Sir John Shelley's election some sugar casks were turned out of our warehouse on to the quay, and they were left there by the man, and there was a large mob rolling them up and down the quay; and as they rolled them up and down they kept crying "Sugar;" and from that day it has been known as "sugar." It was a new name from that day.

9108. Do you know Fenner?—Very well.

9109. This is what Fenner says, after speaking of the use of the word "sugar" in the election of 1865, as applied to the bribery of voters: he is asked, "In "your experience in Bridgwater have you acquired a "knowledge of what 'sugar' means politically?—"Yes. What does it mean politically?—It means "money." And he says further down, that might have reference to your business of a grocer?—It might be. I never heard of it before.

9110. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else you have to tell us with regard to that election of 1868?—I do not remember.

9112. Have you learnt since from any communication you have had with Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook, or any of those gentlemen, how much money was spent at that election in bribery?—No. There was one thing I should like to mention, which happened that day in the committee room. I was there smoking a cigar. It was just about 12 o'clock, just before I went home.

9112. (Mr. Anstey.) At what hotel?—At the "Globe."

9113. (Mr. Coleridge.) 12 o'clock at mid-day?—Yes; and there I saw Mr. Henry Lovibond, and I there complained to him of this very stupid management of his, and he said, "I assure you Smith, it has "nothing to do with me; we were prepared for any "emergency in the morning, and if any fault is to be "found, it is with Messrs. Reed and Cook."

9114. (Mr. Price.) You told Mr. Henry Lovibond, you very much regretted that bribery had not been started earlier in the morning?—No; I referred to his mismanagement as I call it.

9115. You told him your opinion of his mismanagement in not commencing bribery earlier?—Yes. He said he was prepared, but Reed and Cook were not prepared.

9116. When he said he was prepared I suppose he meant with money?—Just so.

9117. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you understand him to say, that "we," speaking for Mr. Kinglake, for whom he acted, were prepared, in case of an emergency, and that Reed and Cook, who acted for Vanderbyl, who was a rich man, ought to have come forward prepared too?—Yes; they were not prepared, that is what he said.

9118. Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake at any time during that election, or before or after?—I saw Mr. Vanderbyl.

9119. Personally to speak to him?—Yes; on the Sunday.

9120. From your recollection of your conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl, have you any doubt that he was aware that money was spent in order to procure his return at that election?—That was on the Sunday before the election; the nomination was on the Monday.

9121. Have you seen him since the election?—Passing in his carriage.

9122. Have you spoken to him since the election?—Yes.

9123. From your communication with him before or since the election, have you any doubt in your mind that he was perfectly aware of the bribery that took place at his election?—He told me on the Sunday before the election, when I met him on the back quay; he said, that if 1*s.* spent in bribery would procure him the seat, he would not spend it; and I said I was very glad to hear it.

9124. Were you not one of the deputation who went up to Mr. Vanderbyl after the Lundy Island Granite Company's disclosures, to convey to him the assurance that you felt he had done nothing in connection with that company to disqualify him from being a member, and an elected candidate?—No.

9125. You were not one of the deputation?—I was not.

9126. Were you at the meeting when that conclusion was come to?—No; they were discussing it when I went away.

9127. But, as a matter of fact, you did concur with them in your vote?—I never voted.

9128. But you did at the election?—Yes.

9129. Therefore, as far as your vote was concerned, you concurred in the fact of Mr. Vanderbyl's being a fit person to represent Bridgewater?—Yes.

9130. Did you not know that that meeting was called because it was found inconvenient to put Mr. Vanderbyl forward, so long as that declaration of his against bribery was unretracted, and therefore they wanted to get rid of him on the pretext of the Lundy Island Granite Company's disclosures, and other disclosures?—From what I had heard of it a day or two before in the London papers, it was something with respect to the Lundy Island Granite Company.

9131. Do not you know that it was in consequence of his being against bribery that they abandoned him, and therefore they tried to get rid of him on that pretext?—Not on that pretext.

9132. (Mr. Price.) On what pretext then?—Why the pretext connected with the disclosures in the London papers, with reference to the Lundy Island Granite Company.

9133. (Mr. Anstey.) That is the very thing. And was not that because of his imprudent declaration against bribery, as they thought it, that they endeavoured to get rid of him?—I never heard of it.

9134. I will put it to you as a matter of common sense, whether Vanderbyl was not intriguing against Kinglake, and Kinglake intriguing against Vanderbyl down to the election, in order to get returned with Westropp without any expense?—I never knew it until I was in this hall.

9135. (Mr. Price.) They kept a good deal from you until you got into this hall?—Yes. I never went to a public or a private meeting.

9136. I want to know how it happened you were at this consultation, when you talked about this 2,500*l.*, if you had given up all idea of engaging actively in the election?—They asked me what was my opinion; what was the best course to pursue, and how they stood. That was my only reason, and my only motive.

9137. You have said that Vanderbyl told you this about the 1*s.*?—Yes.

9138. Did you ever hear that Kinglake had ever said anything of the same sort?—I never heard Mr. Kinglake say that.

9139. Which of the two would you more especially patronize, or give preference to, Mr. Kinglake or

Mr. Vanderbyl?—I would pawn my coat for Mr. Kinglake.

9140. Then Mr. Kinglake is your man?—Mr. Kinglake is my man.

9141. Had you any idea that money was spent at that election?—Not the slightest, until I heard it in court.

9142. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you to say that it is your belief, or that it is not your belief, that immediately after their election and before the trial of the petition, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake were fully aware that there had been gross and corrupt bribery practised in order to effect their return to this borough?—I cannot answer this question.

9143. Is there, to your belief, a single person in Bridgwater who was ignorant of it, or had any doubt of it, the day after the election?—No.

9144. Is there anybody you know who doubts it?—No, not the slightest.

9145. Then do you believe that Mr. Kinglake, who lives in the neighbourhood, and Mr. Vanderbyl, too, and who were both back here the day following the election, or the same day, could not have heard by possibility what was notorious to everybody in the place, namely, that their election had been procured by gross bribery?—I do not know; I do not think Mr. Kinglake knew anything about it.

9146. (Mr. Price.) I understand Mr. Lovibond to have been Mr. Kinglake's own especial agent for bribing?—I believe so.

9147. And you say Mr. Lovibond said to you that "we," that is, he and Mr. Kinglake?—I understood him so.

9148. "Were perfectly prepared for any emergency this morning?"—Yes.

9149. And you understood by that that they were prepared to spend money early in the morning?—Yes.

9150. Then if they were prepared early in the morning, he and Mr. Kinglake, do you mean to say that when he had gone away in despair, and afterwards found himself elected, that he was ignorant that any bribery had been practised on his behalf to turn the scale?—I should think he was cognizant of it.

9151. You know what he said before the learned judge here?—No.

9152. You are not aware that he was perfectly astonished at the statements made before the learned judge?

9153. (Mr. Anstey.) Does this astonish you, after your answers and what you have known on the subject? Mr. Kinglake was sworn and examined before the learned judge, and is asked this question, "Had you "taken every step, by directions to everyone about "you, to secure a pure election here, whatever might "be the result?—A. I think I must do the justice to "Mr. Lovibond." On which his counsel wisely interrupted him with this remark, "Just take it generally, please." On which Mr. Kinglake says, "The determination to conduct the election within "the strict bounds of legality originated I must say "with Mr. Henry Lovibond, my head agent." Does that astonish you? Can you reconcile that with Mr. Henry Lovibond's statement to you at 12 o'clock on the morning of the election?—No, I cannot.

9154. (Mr. Price.) That they were perfectly prepared, but Reed and Cook were not?—No.

9155. It is quite irreconcileable?—Quite.

9156. (Mr. Anstey.) Then this question is put to him, "This evidence has brought facts to your know-"ledge of which you were perfectly ignorant?—A. "Entirely." Does not that surprise you after what you have said?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) The date of this statement is the 26th of February 1869, many months after.

9157. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you pay anybody else to keep out of the way besides Bussell?—No.

9158. You did not pay any money to Allan at any time?—No.

9159. Is that all you have to tell us with regard to 1868?—Yes; I am trying to remember.

9160. We do not want to hurry you; you must make a full disclosure of everything within your knowledge?—There is one thing I omitted to state just now with reference to my staying here at this time, at the 1868 election. I had given notice to a friend of mine, a Mr. Heard of Shepton Mallet, that I intended to go to Shepton Mallet on the Monday.

9161. Before the election?—Yes; previously to then I saw Mr. Cook. He says, "Smith, I hear you are going away." I says, "Yes, I am not going to stop at this election." He said, "I wish you would not go away." "Why," he said, "we are all behind in this "work; you have made out the lists for so many "years——"

9162. The lists of those who were going to be bribed?—No; I was going to explain. In heretofore elections I took the eastern ward, or rather the eastern side, for the making out of the list; I took the whole of the eastern side. Heretofore we had a class of men who were called together by a circular, and they generally came to my house for a list, each man. For instance, each man would go through the names. He would take the letter A first, and every man he knew under A, he would try to poll him. He would perhaps take 20 or 30, and we would go through the register in that way. Mr. Brown would try to poll Mr. Jones, and if he could not poll him by persuasion, he would endeavour to do so by money. In that case I told Mr. Cook I would stop, that I would not go until after the election.

9163. Will you just explain this a little more. Do you mean that they were general lists of voters in a district, quite irrespective of their politics, or their chance of voting without money; or were they lists of men whom you looked to be dealt with in the way of bribery?—Lists of men whom we looked to be dealt with.

9164. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were they all "balance" men in these lists?—No, there were some of the new constituency.

9165. (Mr. Price.) Go on?—I promised him I would stay behind and prepare those lists for him. I asked him when he would let me have the books so that I might copy off the lists, because I was not aware of their previous business at all at the meetings they had had, for the reason that I had never been to one.

9166. Do you mean to say you were not aware of the business they were engaged in? Do you mean you were not aware of the way they were going to conduct the election?—Just so. Before I went out I said, "Look here, Cook, before I go to these men in "this eastern ward, am I to understand there will be "any money or no?" and he said, "Smith, there will not be a shilling." I had previously given him to understand if there was a shilling I would not undertake it, and he said, "Smith, there will not be a shilling."

9167. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you to say that if there were bribeable voters to be bribed you would not make out the lists of bribeable voters?—No. I told him I would prepare the lists.

9168. These lists must be lists of bribeable voters, cui bono. What good were these lists if not a shilling was to be spent?—I told him that they expected to be bribed if there was money.

9169. (Mr. Anstey.) Now about this 1*s.* Was it not the decent hypocrisy which cloaks the vice?—It is rather a difficult question to answer.

9170. (Mr. Price.) You were to prepare a list of bribable men?—Yes.

9171. So that they might be prepared to bribe them if there was money?—There were the old and new constituency.

9172. I know. Could there be any other reason for asking you to stay and assist them, except from your experience you could make out lists of men who were comeatable, who could be dealt with in the way of bribery?—They showed an anxiety, no doubt, about it.

9173. Something strikes me that it is only a matter of reasoning, that when he said there was no money going it was useless for you to be in the town. If there was not a shilling there were no lists wanted?—Oh yes.

9174. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there ever an election before without a shilling being spent?—I think there was.

9175. When?—Sir John Shelley's.

9176. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not heard the evidence probably which has been given before us?—There might have been treating.

9177. (Mr. Price.) You draw a distinction?—Yes. I mean not by money.

9178. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard the evidence which has been given before us, as to promises of money having been made at that election?—Yes.

9179. I suppose what you mean to say is, that it was comparatively pure, more pure than any other?—I do not think there was any money tendered at that election.

9180. On neither side?—I do not know anything about the other side.

9181. But you know Sir John Shelley, who did announce to the voters, not to his agents, that he was not going to bribe, did not pay the treating and other bills, and did not bribe, and lost his election; and that, I believe, is the only instance of any candidate having taken the course of warning the electors here that they were not to expect money; and the moral is, that such a candidate must expect to lose. Is not that the case?—I do not know that Sir John Sheiley did warn the inhabitants.

9182. Well, it is sworn on oath, and it is uncontradicted, as I understand, by those who are interested in contradicting it?—It might be, but I do not believe it.

9183. (Mr. Price.) You were finishing your story about Mr. Cook begging you not to go away, but to stay to make up these lists?—Yes.

9184. You said that if you knew there was going to be a shilling spent you would not make them out?—I did.

9185. Did you make them out?—I did.

9186. And did they make use of them when the time came for spending money?—They took the lists away with them.

9187. And were they, in point of fact, lists of men whom you knew on former occasions had taken or were promised bribes?—The whole constituency of Bridgwater, the whole of them.

9188. Every voter?—No; every voter whom we thought could be treated.

9189. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you price them?—No.

9190. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you, in preparing these lists, take into consideration that there was what is called "balance club" men, or "balance" men's club in this place, having its president and secretary?—No, I never knew there was.

9191. Did you never hear of such a club?—Never.

9192. (Mr. Price.) Who helped you to make out these lists; any of the men whom you had employed on former occasions?—Yes.

9193. Who helped you?—It was Sunday evening, November 15th.

(The witness then produced a memorandum.)

9194. Is that a memorandum made at the time?—Yes.

9195. Then you may read it off from that?—James Bennett, James Jordan, Phillip Headford, William Francis, Joseph Glanvill, jun., Francis Westlake, Thomas Parminter, John Dyer; a man of the name of Pearce, whose christian name I do not know; Charles Bowden, John Peach, Stephen Collin Jones, Thomas Hill, William King, Henry Vearncombe, W. Robinson, Charles Hydon, James Honeyball, George Kidner, Philip Gilbert, George Pollard, James Alway Garratt, Thomas Skinner, and Going Murray. I think that is all.

9196. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are those all bribeable men you put down?—No. Those are the men who took the lists on the eastern side of the bridge. We marked out a certain number of men each, and with men to look after them.

9197. (Mr. Anstey.) Some of the names of these persons are the names of persons whom you know to be bribeable persons?—Some of them are.

9198. Was Garratt one of them?—No.

9199. (Mr. Price.) You did not know Garratt before?—No.

9200. It is the same man who has been mentioned here?—Yes.

9201. (Mr. Anstey.) Point out the names of those persons whom you know to be regular bribery agents?—James Alway, my ownself, George Pollard, and Phillip Gilbert. I think that is all.

9202. (Mr. Price.) That was all that you did in respect of what Mr. Cook asked you about?—We had the list finished by Sunday night.

9203. And then you sent them in on the Monday or Sunday night. Did you see Mr. Cook at all afterwards?—No.

9204. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you do with the lists?—Gave one to each man, so that on the following day they should poll the voters they knew. After the nomination day it was the duty of everyone who had that list to look after the men, and to poll them the following morning.

9205. Did you or did you not tell them, "Mind, tell all the voters that there is no money going?"—Yes.

9206. You did tell them that?—Yes, I did. I think we had finished the lists about half-past 12 o'clock.

9207. On Sunday night?—Yes; and we were all going away when Pollard stood up and said, "Look here, Mr. Smith." I said, "Well, we have got the lists, all of us?" I said, "Yes." He said, "It is "not a bit of use our taking these lists to see all the "men without you can tell us how much you are "going to give them." I said, "Pollard, I am sur-"prised you should make an observation of that sort; "I tell you once for all, there is not a single shilling "going to be spent, and if you cannot induce these "men to vote without promising them money, put "down your papers and go home."

(Mr. Price.) Pollard seems to have been a very practical man.

(Mr. Anstey.) What did the others say when they heard that?—Nothing.

9208. Do you mean to say that some of them did not say, "Then you will lose the election?"—No. I told them there was to be no money.

9209. Did anybody tell you that evening that if there was to be no money the Tories would come in?—No.

9210. When did you first learn that there was that impression in your ranks, that you were losing the election because you were not going to spend money?—I think that impression was certainly in the commencement of the morning.

9211. What morning?—The morning of the poll.

9212. Do you mean to say that until the morning of the poll you had no idea that those who took an active part in the election were not apprehensive that if there was no money they would lose the election?—The rule is, they never know whether there is to be any money or not till the morning of the poll.

9213. That is the time for knowing it?—That is usually the time.

9214. Then if you told these bribery agents, amongst others, some days before that there was no money coming, it is not of much consequence. The question is, what was told them on the morning of the poll?—Yes; that is considered the proper time as the rule.

9215. Who told them on the morning of the poll?—I do not know.

9216. Who gave them their instructions on the morning of the poll?—I do not know.

9217. Probably some of these people will be able to tell us?—Yes.

9218. Some of them did not vote until money was going. Now, is it not the custom in Bridgwater, even when money is intended to be used on the morning of the poll, to put forth an expression of purity before the poll, just to blind the public?—I do not know. The agents themselves do not know there is to be bribery till the morning of the poll.

9219. (Mr. Price.) Then it is not known till the morning of the poll?—Not as a rule.

9220. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did you say is the person who decides that there is to be money or not? Is that left to the members themselves till the last moment?—I do not know for the moment.

9221. (Mr. Price.) The attorneys?—The attorneys.

9222. Do they meet on both sides and say, "We will have money?"—What the Liberal and Conservative sides?

9223. Yes?—No, I do not think so.

9224. They did not on that election meet together and say, "We will have money?"—No.

9225. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not this borough entirely in the hands of the two knots of attorneys, Liberal and Conservative?—It looks very much like it.

9226. At this very election, for instance, did the two knots of attorneys agree to what is called an armistice?—I have not heard of it.

9227. I did not ask you that. Do not you know that?—I heard it yesterday.

9228. Did they come together and agree upon an armistice; that there was no bribing, I suppose, but certainly no canvassing until the 26th October; was not that the agreement?—I do not know. I had nothing to do with it.

9229. Did not both knots of attorneys coalesce into one large knot the very day after the election, and try and bring about a quiet compromise of the thing without an election petition?—That I do not know.

9230. Therefore, you are not sure whether the attorneys, who have the borough entirely in their own hands, do not meet from time to time, and settle those questions entirely amongst themselves?—I do not know.

9231. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will you give me Pollard's christian name?—George.

9232. (Mr. Price.) Are there any other names that you have not mentioned?—There are one or two other names I have not mentioned that I am not certain about.

9233. Is there anything more with regard to 1868 you can tell us about?—Yes.

9234. Then tell us about it?—On the Sunday evening when I had the meeting with those men at my house, amongst them was James Alway, a grocer here, and a person named Robinson, a brewer, of Wembdon. After the other men were gone they stopped behind. It had been arranged by some one that Alway should have charge of the color men; we fly colours here at elections; and also to engage a band of music, that they have here as a rule.

9235. You knowing that both were irregular and illegal?—Yes. And, at the last moment, Alway told me that he had ordered the band; he had some band coming from near Burnham, and he should have nothing to do with it, and the men were coming the following morning. On the following morning the men were in the town, on that Monday morning. I said, "It will look a good deal like a funeral, no colours and no band;" and I went up to his house, and I said, "Are you going to pay these men?" and he said, "I shall not pay them until I have the money." I said, "You will have to pay the band as you engaged them," and he said, "I shall do nothing of the sort;" and I paid him the money for the band, or rather, I paid it, but it was to come from somebody else.

9236. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever had the money repaid to you?—No.

9237. Do you expect to get it back?—I do not know.

9238. (Mr. Price.) What does it come to?—60*l.* or 70*l.*

9239. To whom do you look for the money?—As a rule, for that sort of thing, I have had it paid through Mr. Lovibond, and I should look to Mr. Lovibond for this to be paid.

9240. And you will have to look for a very long time?—Yes.

9241. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it not the practice in all those cases to look to the lawyers, whoever they are, for payment, either immediately or at the next contested election, when the new candidate has to pay the bad debts of the old?—Just so.

9242. (Mr. Price.) Therefore, if there ever is another election for this borough, your claims, and those we heard of yesterday, Mrs. Cape's claim on Gilbert, and so on, will all be paid by the fortunate "stranger" which the Liberal attorneys will bring down here?—I think so; I am not sure.

JOHN BOUCHIER recalled. J. Bouchier.

(Witness.) Allow me to hand in these papers. This is the first for which I was asked, and here is the other (papers produced).

(Mr. Coleridge.) I do not quite understand—

"Lulham v. Bouchier.

"Received this 31st day of July 1866 of Messrs. "Reed and Cook, by cheque, ten pounds, of debt "and cost herein.

"£10. LUMLEY & LUMLEY.
"W. C. L."

9243. You were sued upon this bill?—Yes.

9244. And what appears in the corner of that cheque that has been put in was "Lulham v. Bouchier"?—It was.

9245. I see. Then "July 30th, 1866. On demand, "I promise to pay Mr. Henry C. White, or order, the "sum of ten pounds nine shillings for value received. "—JOHN BOUCHIER." What was the 10*l.* 9*s.*? Was the 9*s.* interest?—It was.

(Mr. Price.) That is quite cleared up then?

(Witness.) It must be so, sir.

9246. (Mr. Price.) This makes it quite clear that that 10*l.* which you say was debited in Mr. White's banking book to him on the 3rd of August is, in point of fact, the cheque which he drew on the 30th July, which you must have sent away on that very day?—Yes.

9247. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is this difficulty. You said that you were in the habit from time to time of taking perhaps 6*l.* or 7*l.* to Mr. White, wanting 2*l.* or 3*l.* more to make up the amount with, and he gave you a cheque for 10*l.*?—It was not always so.

9248. On this occasion there is 9*s.* on the bill. This is a bill at sight, and 9*s.* interest is charged upon 10*l.*?—Yes.

9249. How do you account for that 9*s.* being charged for 10*l.*; at sight, you know. That, you know, is one hundred per cent?—I am quite aware of that.

9250. Was Mr. White in the habit of dealing with you generally on those terms of one hundred per cent.?—He would expect me, if I borrowed 2*l.* or 3*l.* of him, to pay 6*d.* a week in the pound.

9251. Sixpence a week?—That is what he expected; consequently I never kept the money more than three or four days.

9252. Is he a regular money lender?—No.

9253. Do you know other people to whom he lends money on those terms?—No. When I went to him about the money I asked him for the money for my vote which he promised me, and he said he had not yet received it, but he would try and get it. I said, "If you have not got it you must lend me 10*l.*, for I "must have 10*l.*"

9254. (Mr. Price.) Then you paid him the 10*l.* back before you got the money for your vote?—Oh yes, for certain I did.

9255. He might have allowed the money for your vote out of that?—I do not think it is likely. I am not clear upon that point.

9256. (Mr. Coleridge.) But your recollection is that you received that money in gold from him?—Yes, that is what my fancy led me to.

NINTH DAY.

J. Bouchier.

1 Sept. 1869.

9257. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you paid him this money, and did he take 9*s.* besides the 10*l.* ?—The 9*s.* was for interest.

9258. I understood you gave him 6*l.* or 8*l.* ?—Not in this case I did not, because I was expecting the 10*l.* from him ; money that he owed me, as I considered.

9259. Did you pay him that 10*l.* back that you owed him, when he owed you 10*l.* for your vote ?—I am not clear upon that point. I think it must have been so, or I should not have had that paper. I got that back again.

9260. That might have been given back to you ?—That is the difficulty in my mind.

9261. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any recollection, if he allowed you 10*l.* for your vote to settle this claim, of your giving him 9*s.* besides, to pay the interest ?—I knew that 9*s.* was for interest.

9262. But supposing he had allowed you his instead of your paying it back, he would have allowed you 10*l.* for your vote, and would he have exacted the 9*s.* from you ?—Yes, he would.

9263. (Mr. Price.) Did you pay the sum of 9*s.* only, and nothing more ?—I am not sure on that point.

9264. Cannot you recollect whether you paid him the mere sum of 9*s.* ?—I have been trying to tax my memory with it, and my wife's too, but I cannot recollect.

9265. That is all consistent with Mr. White's story, because, if he paid this cheque to you, he might say it was, in point of fact, for your vote ; because he could say, "When I came to consider the money for his vote "I allowed him to go free of 10*l.* which I lent him, "which he might otherwise have had to pay me ?"—Possibly ; but I do not recollect. I will try and recollect. I did not find these papers till last evening.

Mr. J. Smith.

Mr. JOHN SMITH recalled.

(Mr. Price.) We will now go on with you.

(Witness.) Will you be kind enough to take 1868 again ?

(Mr. Price.) Yes, we have not finished with 1868.

(Witness.) After I told you that I saw Mr. Lovibond, and he told me that it was not his fault with reference to the money, in the morning, I then called Mr. Henry Lovibond, or rather I walked over to Mr. Reed and said, "Do you know what Mr. Henry Lovibond is saying to me ?" and he said, "No, I do not." I then called Mr. Henry Lovibond over to Mr. Reed, and then I told Mr. Reed verbatim what Mr. Henry Lovibond had told me.

9266. (Mr. Coleridge.) About the mismanagement ?—About the mismanagement. And Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook were both together, and they said it was not so ; they were prepared equally with Mr. Lovibond, but at that hour of the day they were not going to flood the streets of Bridgwater with money.

(Mr. Coleridge.) What time was that ?

9267. (Mr. Price.) That was the early part, you mean ?—That would have been about a quarter to 12. After Mr. Lovibond had made that statement to me I took him over to Reed and Cook.

9268. I was going to put a question to you which would have brought out that. It has been proved to us that by a remonstrance made by Allan to Reed and Cook, they said, "We have been all waiting. D——n that Lovibond ! Where is Lovibond ?" I was going to ask whether that was at all consistent with Mr. Lovibond's remark to you. You have explained it. One retorted on the other, that one was waiting for the other.

9269. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the meaning of Reed and Cook being prepared and Lovibond not ? Does that mean that Kinglake was prepared and Vanderbyl not ?—No, I should take it from the retort that Mr. Reed gave to Mr. Lovibond that he was prepared.

9270. Mr. Lovibond said to you, "I am prepared. "We are prepared, but the others are mismanaging "it." Does that mean to say that they were prepared on Kinglake's side to bribe, but they were not prepared on Vanderbyl's side ?—That was the inference, no doubt.

9271. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything else, Mr. Smith ?—I think not. Things may crop up.

9272. What we say to others we say to you. In every point of view it is much better to make a full disclosure, whatever happens. As far as you are personally concerned of course it is an advantage, but as far as the whole interests of the borough are concerned it is better that the whole truth should come out, that we may decide upon it. Well, now, I think we asked you whether you knew at all during that day of money going on the other side, or not. I ask you now ?—I did not. The only reason that I was in the room was that the poll sheet was kept there, and a return brought every half hour, I believe, of the persons who voted. Well, I watched that poll list carefully, and I think that I know the principal men who poll in Bridgwater, and I could see nothing at all that looked suspicious until half-past 10, and then I saw the names of two men that I knew very well had either been promised or been paid.

9273. (Mr. Anstey.) Why ?—Because they never polled in their lives without being paid.

9274. (Mr. Price.) Give us those names that you saw had polled ?—One was a new voter ; at least he had been a voter, but he had left his house, and he was not in the ten pounds then, but he was an old voter. The first man that I saw that aroused my suspicion, and that would never go to the poll without being paid, was a man named Abraham Frost, of West Street. He never polled in his life without.

9275. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was the other ?—A man of the name of Hooper, who lived then in Bath Road.

9276. (Mr. Anstey.) What is his christian name ?—I believe it is William. He works at Spiller and Brown's mills. Then about 12 o'clock another man polled, and I felt convinced there must either have been a promise or money.

9277. Who is that man ?—John Squires.

9278. Is he a relation of the man of whom we have heard so much, Benjamin Lovibond's old clerk Foster ?—I think not.

9279. Nor any relation to the clerk of Mr. Bates of the same name ?—I do not know ; I think he is some relation.

9280. John Squires, what is he ?—A wheelwright.

9281. Where does he live ?—I believe in Polden Street.

9282. These three names represent men who, in your experience, never vote without a payment, or the promise of it ?—Yes.

9283. How did they vote ?—On the Conservative side.

9284. That was the first intimation you had of money going on that side ?—Yes.

9285. Did they vote for the Conservatives ?—Yes.

9286. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had either of these men ever voted Liberal for money ?—Yes, I believe all three of them. I know they have.

9287. (Mr. Anstey.) At what election ?—I believe in 1859, and I believe that Squire had at Bagehot's election—Bagehot's or Vanderbyl's, I won't be sure which.

9288. In one of the elections of 1866 ?—Yes.

9289. You are sure it is William Hooper, of Bath Road ?—William Hooper previously lived in Bath Road. Yes, I think he is in Bath Road now.

9290. There are two William Hoopers in Bath Road. There are a great many on the register, and two in Bath Road, and there are two in St. John Street ?—There are two in St. John Street, but I think only one in Bath Road.

9291. "Hooper, William, Bath Road," voted for Westropp and Gray ; and again, "Hooper, William, Bath Road," voted for Westropp and Gray. Is that father and son?—That I do not know, but the William Hooper I know is a corn meter here.

9292. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Smith, we will go to the second election of 1866, Vanderbyl's election. Just tell us, if you please, what part you took in that election of 1866?—Oh, a very active one.

9293. And when did you first know that Mr. Vanderbyl was coming down; when did you first hear of it?—I think about a couple of days before the nomination.

9294. Whom did you hear it from?—I saw a placard posted in the town or in a shop, I believe.

9295. Did you put yourself in communication at all with the legal gentlemen on the Liberal side then?—No.

9296. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they put themselves in communication with you?—Yes, they did.

9297. (Mr. Price.) Just tell us about it?—On the nomination day Andrew Allan came to me.

9298. What did he say?—He said Mr. Vanderbyl was a candidate for Bridgwater, and bound to win. I had complained to him even at that election that I would have nothing to do with it.

9299. 1866?—1866, the last one.

9300. Before he came to you had you had any communication with him then about the election?—Which one?

9301. 1866?—No.

9302. I understood you to say so?—At Bagehot's I complained.

9303. At the previous election of 1866 you complained to him that you would have nothing more to do with elections?—That I would not again.

9304. He came to you?—He did.

9305. What passed?—He said Mr. Vanderbyl had come down. Of course I had seen his address. He said, "Now, look here, you have made a complaint to "us that you won't have anything to do with this elec- "tion." I said, "Yes; I have nearly the whole work "to do—the writing part, and to prepare all the lists "for the whole of Bridgwater." Then I had; and I said, "I shall have nothing to do with your election at all." He says, "Look here, there are four of us; we are determined to win this election." Five, I believe; that was myself, Bulpin, James Alway, and Captain Bussell. And he said, "Now, if you win this election you will have 25*l.* apiece."

9306. He said that to you?—He said that to me, "The five of you shall have 25*l.* apiece."

9307. (Mr. Coleridge.) Bussell, Alway; who was the other?—Myself, Bussell, Alway, and Bulpin.

9308. And Allan?—I suppose he meant himself, too.

9309. (Mr. Price.) Did he say, "We shall have"? Just give us his words.—"You." "You shall have 25*l.* apiece."

9310. But he was addressing you?—Yes; I say he said "you." He did not say "we."

9311. Did he mention the other names?—Oh, yes.

9312. And said, "You will have 25*l.* apiece"?—Yes, and he told White also.

9313. (Mr. Coleridge.) White is another. You have not mentioned him?—I forgot him at the moment.

9314. (Mr. Price.) He said Bulpin, White, and these other men, and then he said, "and you," "You will have 25*l.* apiece"?—Just so.

9315. If you win?—Yes.

9316. What did you say?—I made no particular remark about it.

9317. Did you seem to assent to the proposition, or did you say you did not want 25*l.*?—I did not.

9318. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did it cure your disinclination for electioneering, this promise of 25*l.*?—No.

9319. It did cure it so far that you were very active?—I was.

9320. Was it not the 25*l.* that cured your disinclination? You say you had complained that you would have nothing to do with the election. After that you tell us you were very active. Was it the promise of 25*l.* that made you so?—It might have been.

9321. (Mr. Anstey.) What Bulpin was that?—Charles Bulpin.

9322. (Mr. Price.) Did you assent, and say, "Very well;" or what did you say to him?—Yes, I did.

9323. What did you say to him?—"Very well."

9324. Well, what then?—Well, nothing occurred then till the nomination day.

9325. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long before the nomination was this?—Oh, two or three days.

9326. (Mr. Price.) Well, then, what next did you say, or whom did you see, or what next did you do?—He brought the money to me on the nomination day; I believe it was, I won't be sure.

9327. Did you in the meantime see anyone else connected with the party?—No.

9328. No one?—No.

9329. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he bring you?—I do not remember.

9330. Gold?—Gold; yes.

9331. What amount?—My impression is about 400*l.*

9332. (Mr. Price.) On the nomination day?—On the nomination night.

9333. To your house?—To my house.

9334. Did anything pass between you when he brought it?—No more than he said, "Smith, there is the money."

9335. What did you do the next day?—I paid some voters.

9336. How many did you pay?—I hardly know.

9337. How much did you pay them?—Well, I remember that I went after my money was expended, and I gave to Mr. Allan a statement of my account; the money I had received, and the money I had paid.

9338. Had you spent the whole 400*l.*?—Yes.

9339. By what time in the day?—By 4 o'clock.

9340. Then you had no more money from him?—Yes, I had some more money. I believe I went for a hundred pounds, and he could only let me have sixty. That I am not clear of.

9341. (Mr. Coleridge.) He has given you in as 500*l.* at that election?—I won't say that he is right or wrong, but the whole of the money that I received I gave him in a voucher for; the number of men, and what I had paid.

9342. (Mr. Price.) How much per man did you pay; different sums?—Yes.

9343. They varied?—Yes.

9344. Have you got any record?—Yes, I have got a record.

9345. Did you pay some 10*l.*?—I went into the Conservative ranks, but I cannot remember till I see the particular lists. I polled every man that I had polled at Bagehot's election, and I went into the Conservative ranks, and I polled 11 or 13 men, I do not know which, but it was one or the other.

9346. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you find the Conservative voters?—In the streets.

9347. (Mr. Price.) How did you know they were Conservative voters?—Because I know them all by heart.

9348. Men who polled late?

9349. (Mr. Coleridge.) Balance men?—Balance men. The number I am hardly sure of. I cannot tell till I have seen that list.

9350. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Lovibond's list?—I do not mean his list, I mean my own statement.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Did you hand it in?

(Mr. Price.) No, he read it out.

(Witness.) I have not read it out yet.

9351. What do you mean by saying you saw him?—After Vanderbyl's election of that day I gave Mr. Allan an account—a voucher of the money that I had received from him, and also of the way in which I had expended that money. For instance, we will say it was 500*l.*

9352. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you keep any copy of it?—I never kept a copy of it.

(Mr. Coleridge to Mr. Andrew Allan.) Have you got that account, Allan?

NINTH DAY.

Mr. J. Smith.

1 Sept. 1869.

(Mr. Allan.) I passed it to Mr. Henry Lovibond at the same time. It was one of the slips that I wanted.

9353. (Mr. Price, referring to list.) I see you are put down here for two hundred and forty at one time?—Pounds.

9354. Yes, "John Smith, 240*l.*" "Same," (I suppose it is the same) "a hundred." That is 340*l.* "Smith 96*l.*" That is all you are put down for here, 340*l.* and 96*l.*—436*l.* These are the three different sums. Do you remember?—I cannot remember; but I put it on the statement that I gave to Mr. Andrew Allan. I believe that I received the money, and I accounted for it.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Allan, did you put down these payments to Mr. Smith from his document, his return to you? Did you put down the different sums?

(Mr. Allan.) I sent his voucher in in his own handwriting, just as he gave it to me.

(Mr. Price.) Are you sure you paid it in these separate sums?

(Mr. Allan.) The first 240*l.* I believe I gave him myself at his own house.

(Mr. Coleridge.) This is the sum which he seems to think to be 400*l.*

(Mr. Allan.) He thinks that I gave him 400*l.*?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Yes.

(Mr. Allan.) How much is it?

(Mr. Price.) 240*l.* is the first sum he is debited with, and then 100*l.*, and then 96*l.*

(Mr. Allan.) Every farthing of that he had, every shilling.

(Mr. Coleridge.) The question is in what manner it was given.

(Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure about that, Mr. Smith?

(Witness.) The 400*l.*?

9355. Was it in a lump sum?—I believe I had the 400*l.* in a lump sum; but I do know this, that as the money was received by me from Mr. Allan I put it in my cash statement.

(Mr. Price.) The only importance of what I am asking now is, that this is a document of considerable importance with regard to other matters we have had before us. I wanted you, therefore, to be good enough to try and recollect (this being a great question of the exact correctness of these sums, and the mode in which they are put down here) whether you can still say that you received it all in a lump sum, or whether you received it as put down here, in a sum of 240*l.*, 100*l.*, and 96*l.*

(Witness.) I won't be sure of that.

(Mr. Allan.) It was received by everyone just in the manner that it is put down here.

(Mr. Price.) So you said. I wanted that there should not be a greater contradiction than is absolutely necessary, and I wished to see whether Mr. Smith is sufficiently clear to say whether it was in one sum.

(Witness.) I am not clear.

9356. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you deduct your own 25*l.* from these sums, or did you get that separately?—Oh, I never had that.

9357. Never got it?—Never.

9358. Did you never ask for it?—No.

9359. (Mr. Anstey.) Did the others get it?—No.

9360. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean to say that you did not say to Allan, "You have taken us in?"—No. He said he did not get it, and there was an end of it.

9361. Did you ask him for it?—No, he volunteered that.

9362. (Mr. Anstey.) You say he volunteered it. Did not you mention it to him?—I never mentioned it to him from the time he promised it to me till he spoke of it.

9363. Do you know if Bulpin and the others all got theirs?—I do not know.

9364. (Mr. Price.) You say the whole of the money you expended, and you made a return to Allan of the way in which you expended it?—I did; and at the end of the day, when I made my cash-sheet out, I found I was 20*l.* short of the money that appeared to be received from Allan, and because I would not be short of the money I received from him I took 20*l.* from my own cash-box to make it up.

9365. How do you account for the 20*l.* short?—I cannot tell. I must have paid a voter that I did not put down; but I was 20*l.* short. I will swear that.

9366. (Mr. Price.) You may have paid away in notes a higher note than you thought you paid?—Mine was gold.

9367. All gold; and you paid the men yourself?—Yes.

9368. Did not you jot it down as you paid them?—I put down the names on slips of paper as I paid them.

9369. If you had done that correctly every time you ought to have been able to account for the 20*l.*?—Yes, I know, but I could not have done so, by the reason that I must have missed one name, perhaps two. I tried that very day to find it out, but I could not.

9370. Was that all the money that you got at that election?—I believe it was; I cannot remember.

9371. But did you get money from anybody else?—Oh, no; from Andrew Allan, from no other person.

(Mr. Coleridge.) This is the only paper I find. You asked for something that Mr. Lovibond has handed in to us. That is the only thing that we can find. It is the payment of different bills and things, 100*l.* (The paper was passed to the witness.)

(Witness.) That is not the document, sir, but those were paid by me.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is the only one that Mr. Lovibond has handed in.

9372. What kind of document was it that you handed to Allan?—It was a large sheet of blue folio paper, a little larger than that.

9373. You put down the names of the men you had bribed?—Yes; it was on a double sheet. I put down the names of the men I had polled, the 10*l.* men and the 20*l.* men, and the amount of money I had received from Mr. Allan.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Lovibond, have you got it?

(Mr. Lovibond.) I have put in another document with a number of names upon it, on a half sheet of foolscap. That is the only document I recollect, and the wrapper. I think you will find some names upon that in Mr. Smith's handwriting.

(Mr. Coleridge, producing a paper.) Is this it?

(Mr. Lovibond.) Yes, this I recollect. There was a wrapper. This is another document.

(Mr. Price.) Did you ever see a document like that described, two sheets of foolscap paper?

(Mr. Lovibond.) Never. There was a wrapper of some bill paper.

(Mr. Price.) This has been torn.

(Mr. Lovibond.) It has been torn considerably. I think that is the one.

(Mr. Coleridge to witness.) Just look at this lot, and see if what you refer to is amongst them (papers passed).

(Witness, after looking.) No, sir.

9374. (Mr. Price.) Then your recollection of it is a piece of paper very much like that (exhibiting a sheet of foolscap)?—Similar to that; hardly so large. White paper, drawn lines.

9375. Lines?—Lines.

9376. And containing names on all sides of it; all three sides, or two sides?—Oh no; I think only on one side.

9377. That would be a half sheet?—I believe it was two half sheets. One half sheet would not take it in columns.

9378. It would be written on both sides of one half sheet?—No, I think on one side only on the double sheet, so that if it was opened similar to what you are opening that both accounts would be shown.

9379. Do you mean in this way?—No, up and down; only the cash received would be one side, and the men that I paid on the other side.

9380. That you furnished to Allan?—Yes; and it was passed by him as being correct with the money I received from him.

9381. That was all the money you received that day?—Yes.

9382. From anyone?—I received from nobody but Mr. Allan.

9383. You could not state the names?—I could not do that, for this reason, the men that I polled at Vanderbyl's election I possibly did not poll at Bagehot's. They would not be similar in Bagehot's election to Vanderbyl's, and vice versâ.

9384. (Mr. Côleridge.) Because the Conservatives got hold of your men?—No, I got hold of the Conservatives.

9385. (Mr. Price.) The mass of the men whom you polled and bribed at Vanderbyl's election were Conservative men?—Yes.

9386. A great number were?—Yes.

9387. There were about 10 or 11 of your own?—I think I polled 11 or 13 of the Conservatives.

9388. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had the Conservative fellows whose ranks you went into got nobody looking after them, and trying to keep them together?—Really I do not know.

9389. You got them in the street?—In the street, as a rule.

9390. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you got the names?—I have got the names of a few. I cannot remember them all. I remember at the time showing Mr. Henry Lovibond the "Mercury" paper where the names of the men were, and I put an asterisk in the margin against the men I polled.

9391. Was that the "Bridgwater Mercury"?—Yes, I will try to get it.

9392. Can you get that sheet of the "Mercury"?—I went to the office, and the very paper is lost. I went to the office for it.

9393. What date would that be?—July 19th or 20th I believe.

(Mr. Anstey.) Here is the "Bridgwater Mercury" of the 18th July.

(Mr. Price.) It is the 13th.

(Witness.) It was the Wednesday after the election.

(Mr. Anstey.) The election was on the 11th. The "Bridgwater Mercury" is always published on the Wednesday. Therefore it is the 18th.

(Mr. Price.) What was the list which you saw in the "Mercury"?

(Mr. Anstey.) The returns hour by hour?

(Witness.) It was with regard to a certain class of men. A letter was sent to the "Mercury," and also to the "Standard," and they wanted to know the reason why the men whose names were given who polled for Patton at his election, why it was that in a month or six weeks they polled for Mr. Vanderbyl.

9394. (Mr. Price.) Can you tell us the names by looking at the hours?—No. I saw the names of the men mentioned.

9395. Is it the 13th of July?

(Mr. Anstey.) That could not be. That would be on a Friday.

(Witness.) It was the Wednesday following Vanderbyl's election.

(Mr. Price.) Here is the "Mercury."

(Witness.) It was the 18th or 25th I think. However, I have hunted over the record, the file at the "Mercury" office, and they had not got it.

9396. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, you said you would give some of the names. Can you give them?—Yes.

9397. Let us have them, then; the Conservatives whom you bought?—Yes, the Conservatives. There was a man named John Stone of Chippenham, living at Chippenham at that time.

9398. Go on. You need not wait. The shorthand writer will take them?—A man named Baker, Polden Street.

9399. What is his christian name?—John Baker.

9400. What is he?—A cheese merchant, a cheese dealer. Philip Crump; he used to be a printer here. Richard Cooper.

9401. Where?—Eastover. William Hensley. John Dyer.

9402. What is John Dyer?—He is on the line; I believe a packer, or something of that sort; George Harwood; I think I told you him before. That is all I can remember.

9403. Do you know, conversely, any cases of Liberal voters bought by the Conservatives in that election?—We polled every man we had polled before. We polled every man at Vanderbyl's election.

9404. (Mr. Price.) I see Mr. Smith at the end of that election talked about the election being won by Dutch metal. Is that because Mr. Vanderbyl is supposed to be of Dutch extraction?—Very likely that was the reference.

9405. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know when Mr. Vanderbyl came down here to fight that battle with Dutch metal; did you know his previous reputation?—Oh yes, I knew of him being at Yarmouth.

9406. Was it, or was it not, because of that reputation, and not in spite of it, that the Liberals of Bridgwater—I mean the attorneys, of course—the Liberal attorneys of Bridgwater, chose that rich man to come down here on that occasion?—I cannot tell.

9407. Was it on that account that you supported him, because he had money, and was said to have a conscience in the disposal of it?—No.

9408. Not on that account?—No.

9409. Then, pray, why did you support him, an utter stranger to you and your borough, and only known by those favourable antecedents?—He was a Liberal. We could not help ourselves.

9410. And also because you had 25*l.* promised you for your vote?—I never asked Mr. Allan for that.

9411. (Mr. Price.) You have told us very candidly that you had made up your mind not to interfere in elections again, and that Mr. Allan induced you, you know, to give up that resolution by the promise of the 25*l.* Do you mean to say that you never took any steps to get that 25*l.*, and did not get it back out of the money you have had?—I did not; I have never taken any steps about it.

9412. Did not you consider yourself, after what Mr. Allan had said, entitled to keep the 25*l.* out of any money you got?—No.

9413. Then how did you intend to make Mr. Allan perform his promise, if it was not by getting money from him out of which you were to pay yourself; how did you intend to keep him up to the mark?—He said that we should be paid that 25*l.* after the election.

9414. After the election?—After the election.

9415. Then you won the election, you know?—I know.

9416. And you paid this money honestly away; at least distributed it amongst the voters, and did not you then consider you were perfectly entitled to 25*l.*?—No; he kept on telling me that he had not the money. He mentioned the subject first to me by saying, "It is a bad job, I have not got that money for you." I said, "Very well, I cannot help it."

9417. Did you make any claim at all?—No.

9418. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you paid anything at the last election for making out those lists?—No.

9419. Were you promised anything?—No.

9420. (Mr. Price.) You are 60*l.* out of pocket for what you did in 1868 in the way of bands and colours?—Yes.

9421. You also received no remuneration for making out the lists; you are also 20*l.* out of pocket because you could not make out the expenditure of this 430*l.*; you could not vouch for it all to Allan?—I vouched for it.

9422. You said you took 20*l.* out of your own money, therefore that makes 80*l.* actually out of pocket, and 25*l.* promised you, which you never got?—Yes.

9423. Therefore you are 105*l.* to the bad in connexion with the second election of 1866?—Yes.

9424. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you say that you were 20*l.* short, do you mean that you had paid 20*l.* out of your own pocket, or that you could not account for it?—I paid 20*l.* to somebody, I could not tell who, from the money I received from Allan, and when I made up my cash account at the end of the day I then found myself 20*l.* short of the money that Allan had given me.

NINTH DAY.

Mr. J. Smith.

1 Sept. 1869.

9425. Did you keep all this money together till you wanted it?—Yes.

9426. How did you get 20*l.* of your own money mixed with it; as I understand you were only expending Andrew Allan's money?—Yes.

9427. Then having that cash, as you told us, from Andrew Allan, how came you to go to your own cash box for money?—When I made my cash up at the end of the day I found I was 20*l.* minus.

9428. Do you mean you had received 20*l.* too little, or expended 20*l.* too much?—I do not know.

9429. (Mr. Price.) Did you hand 20*l.* over to Allan?—No.

9430. What did you do with the 20*l.* you took from the cash box?—I put it in my accounts because I would not be wrong in my cash account with Allan.

9431. All you had to do was to show Allan you had expended the money he gave you, and in making up that list you found there was 20*l.* to which you could not attach any names?—Yes.

9432. Then, instead of telling him that you omitted to put down these names, you say you went to your cash box, and took 20*l.* out; if you handed that over to Allan I can understand then that you made the amount correct?—I put that amongst the other cash.

(Mr. Coleridge.) This was at the end of the day.

9433. (Mr. Price.) You say you had paid everything away, expended the whole 430*l.*, or whatever it was. When you were going to make up your account with your vouchers you then found that you could not account for a certain 20*l.* Then I can understand that if you had to return the balance you might have gone to your cash box, and say to Allan, "I found I did not want this 20*l.*" Instead of that you say that you went to your cash box after you made up your account?—Yes. I do not think that account was made up for two or three days. I had some cash left in the house, and at the end of the day of the poll I made up my cash, but I had got some cash left in the house. It was not all paid away then; if I said it was all paid away I was wrong.

9434. That accounts for the whole thing. If you had had to make a return of what you had expended, and that return would make a balance in hand which you would have to give back to Allan, then I quite understand that you went to your cash box and took that balance out of your own money?—I did.

9435. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to have money unexpended at the end of the day?—I had so. I had made a mistake; there are some men we do not pay for two or three days.

9436. The day after, or at the close of the poll, how much money had you in hand of Allan's?—It might have been 70*l.*

9437. Then instead of seven you had to pay nine voters 10*l.* apiece, and so you added 20*l.* to make it come right?—That is so.

9438. That is intelligible?—I thought I had spent all the money.

9439. (Mr. Price.) You are therefore, as I said before, 80*l.* out of pocket by the party, besides the 25*l.* that you were promised for your own vote by Allan?—It was not for my vote. It was for my trouble.

9440. It is no good refining about such a thing. You said you would not have taken part in the election without that; and that is so?—Yes.

9441. And from that hour to this you never said a single word, nor did you in 1868, when they asked you to make out the lists, say that you had not been paid for your trouble before?—They knew it.

9442. Who knew it?—Allan.

9443. Mr. Cook was the gentleman who came to you in 1868 to ask you to make out the lists?—Yes.

9444. He could not expect that you would stay away from your pleasure, or whatever it was, for nothing. Did you not then say to him, "I have not been paid for the trouble I took at the last election?"—I did not say that.

9445. Are you positive of it?—Positive.

9446. Did you never mention the last election?—No.

9447. Nor that you had not been paid for the band and colours?—That was 1868.

9448. You are in this position. Mr. Cook begs you not to leave the town, but to assist them in making out the list. At that time you had not received your 25*l.* for your trouble at the election of 1866, and you say that you never mentioned that to Mr. Cook and never claimed anything for your services, and there was more spent. You spent 60*l.* in bands and colours?—I did.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I should just like to ask Mr. Allan a question. (To Mr. Allan.) You never told us anything about this 25*l.* that each of these paid agents was to have?

(Mr. Allan.) They did not have it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I asked you generally, "Was it the habit to pay the bribers as well as the bribed?" and you said, "No, it was always done for the love of the cause."

(Mr. Allan.) It was, as far as I know.

9449. Did you promise Smith and Bussell and Alway and Bulpin 25*l.* apiece at this election?—They say before the election.

(Mr. Allan.) I had no power to promise.

(Mr. Price.) Never mind the power. Did you have this conversation with Smith?

(Mr. Allan.) Never heard anything about the 25*l.* till the accounts were closed, and then they made claims upon me.

9450. You never said a word about it?

(Mr. Allan.) Not till after the election; and then 25*l.* apiece was claimed by White and Smith.

9451. Did you promise it previous to the election, on the nomination morning as I understand, before the nomination?

(Witness.) Before the nomination.

(Mr. Price.) On the nomination day?

(Witness.) No, when Allan came to me and told me that Mr. Vanderbyl was coming he said it.

(Mr. Price, to Mr. Allan.) Then you said to him, "We are determined to win the election," and then, mentioning the names of the other men, "You shall have 25*l.* apiece."

(Mr. Allan.) I positively deny it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) At present it stands that Mr. Smith has acknowledged himself to be bribed with 25*l.* to act at that election. You say you never did bribe him with 25*l.*

(Mr. Allan.) I do.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Well, Mr. Bussell is in court. I should like to have him. (To Bussell.) Did Mr. Allan previously to Vanderbyl's election, a day or two before, promise you 25*l.* for what you were going to do at that election?

(Mr. Bussell.) A day or two before, I rather fancy it was Tuesday, Mr. Allan came down and asked me if I intended to take an active part. I said I did, the same as usual; and Mr. Allan said, "Now, go in and win, and if you go in and win you shall have 25*l.*"

9452. He said that to you?

(Mr. Bussell.) Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Now, Mr. Allan, after hearing that may you not be under a misapprehension when you say you did not offer that sum to Smith which Bussell corroborates Smith in saying you offered to him?

(Mr. Allan.) I say they wanted the money, and after the election they made a claim.

(Mr. Price.) Was there no previous bargain?

(Mr. Allan.) There was no previous bargain, to the best of my belief. I never heard of 25*l.* till after the election and the accounts were closed.

(Mr. Coleridge.) In reality they are acknowledging more against themselves than you are acknowledging against them, therefore they have no interest in doing it. Did not you go over to Mr. Smith and say, "We "must go in and win, win at any hazard; there will "be 25*l.* apiece for us five," including yourself, and the others being White, Bulpin, Bussell, and Smith; "25*l.* each for us five." Have you any recollection of that?

(Mr. Allan.) I have not the slightest recollection of any such circumstance.

9453. There is nothing you can suggest that can account for the impression both on the mind of Mr. Smith and Mr. Bussell that something of the sort did take place?

(Mr. Allan.) No more than that claim after the election.

(Mr. Price.) When they made that claim did they allude to the fact that you had promised before, or that they supposed you had promised it before?

(Mr. Allan.) No; they said, "We worked at the "last election and lost it; we have worked at this one "and won it, and we want 25*l.* apiece." That is, to the best of my recollection, the way in which the matter stands.

(Mr. Price.) Well, then, Mr. Smith, do you still say there was this previous bargain?

(Witness.) I still maintain that Mr. Allan told me we should have it. Mr. Bulpin is in court.

(Mr. Price.) Where is Mr. Bulpin?

(Witness.) He is here (pointing).

(Mr. Coleridge.) The names were Bulpin, Bussell, Alway, yourself——

(Witness.) And White.

CHARLES BULPIN called and sworn. C. Bulpin.

9454. (Mr. Price.) Now you have heard what has been said by Mr. Smith. Had you any promise made to you by Mr. Allan previously to the second election of 1866 as to any sum of 25*l.* that you were to be paid if you would exert yourselves?—I understood we were to have 25*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) Who told you?

9455. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Allan say so to you?—Yes, he did.

9456. You had it from Mr. Allan's own lips. Tell us what he said, and when?—I cannot recollect now clearly whether it was before the day of the election, or in the afternoon afterwards; I am not clear.

9457. You see the whole question is, before you took any part in the election of 1866, the second election, had Mr. Allan promised you that you should have 25*l.* for what you did?—I do not remember.

9458. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or any other sum?—I do not remember any before.

9459. (Mr. Price.) Your impression is that it was said to you, but it might be after?—I distinctly recollect that there was a promise of 25*l.*, but I won't say whether it was before the morning of the election, or in the afternoon.

9460. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Smith has given his reason for acting at that election as a promise of 25*l.*, therefore if Mr. Smith is correct it must have been before the election?—I am not clear about it.

9461. (Mr. Anstey.) Either the morning or afternoon you say?—I am not sure whether it was the morning or afternoon of the poll day.

9462. It was either one or the other?—Yes.

9463. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you recollect the words that Allan said to you, or the way in which he said it?—No.

9464. (Mr. Anstey.) You are an accountant also?—I am a commercial traveller.

9465. Did you receive any money for your vote in the previous election of 1866?—No.

9466. Or did you bribe anybody in 1866?—Yes.

9467. Well, then, are you the Mr. Charles Bulpin who in the May of 1866 signed the petition of the 80 to the House of Commons, praying a suspension of the writ, describing yourself as "Charles Bulpin, accountant"?—I do not remember doing it.

9468. The 25th signature down?—I do not remember doing it.

9469. Is there any other Charles Bulpin?—I do not know.

9470. (Mr. Price.) You are a commercial traveller?—Yes.

9471. Do you ever describe yourself as an accountant?—Very likely.

9472. Have you told anybody that it was after the election that the 25*l.* was promised?—No.

9473. Never mentioned that to anybody?—Not that I remember. I mentioned it to Allan. I have brought it to his recollection that such a thing was promised. I never expected it till I heard the promise.

9474. Have you said to anybody besides Allan that a promise was made after the election?—I have talked to Mr. Bussell and Mr. Smith. It has been mentioned together between us.

9475. Have you ever said so to Mr. Barham?—I do not remember. I think I have to Mr. Lovibond, though; I think I saw him after.

9476. Then you have made a claim upon Mr. Lovibond?—I have not made a claim at all.

9477. How did you come to mention it to Mr. Lovibond?—Because it was promised by Mr. Allan. I never asked him for it.

9478. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you, on the whole, agree with Allan in his statement, namely, that it was not a promise made before you undertook the work of bribery agent, but it was a promise made at the end of the election, or just when the election was coming to an end?—I am not clear whether it was promised before or after the election, that is, whether in the morning or afternoon.

9479. You know the distinction between promising two or three days beforehand, and saying, "Will you do the work?" and promising whilst the work is being done, or when it is ended. You think it was promised either in the morning or afternoon of the polling day, and therefore when your business was nearly concluded?—It was either in the morning or afternoon.

9480. Then at that time your business was nearly concluded?—It would be nearly concluded in the afternoon, but I am not clear whether it was morning or afternoon.

(Mr. Allan.) I beg to call the attention of the bench to the fact that this promise, if it was made, was made only five weeks after I was initiated into the mysteries of the Bridgwater elections. Is it likely that a young man of only five weeks standing would make such a promise?

(Mr. Price.) That is argument, Mr. Allan; we cannot enter into that.

Examination of Mr. SMITH resumed. Mr. J. Smith.

9481. I understand you to say, Mr. Smith, that but for that promise you would not have acted?—Yes.

9482. Allan says you would not have acted in the election but for that promise?—That is right.

9483. But for that promise you would not have acted?—No.

(Mr. Coleridge.) So Bussell says.

9484. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to relate to us with regard to the second election in 1866?—I think so, with the exception of this: I paid a bill of Thompson's for powder owing from the last election of 8*l.* or 9*l.*

9485. You paid a bill of Thompson's which had been incurred at the previous election?—Just so.

9486. (Mr. Coleridge.) The previous election, or a previous one before that time?—Bagehot's election.

9487. (Mr. Price.) There was no firing at Bagehot's election, because he was defeated?—There was.

9488. (Mr. Coleridge.) Although beaten?—The early part of the morning, or before.

9489. (Mr. Price.) It is not a celebration of triumph, but a signal of the coming fight?—The signals.

NINTH DAY.

Mr. J. Smith.

1 Sept. 1869.

9490. It is not a signal that there would be money going ?—Not that I ever knew.

9491. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the object of firing these cannons ?—It is an old custom with the Liberal party here; they fire gunpowder, and the Conservatives claim the church bells.

9492. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Conservatives claim the bells and pay the ringers, and the Liberals pay the powder dealers and the firing of the powder ?—Yes.

9493. So that they are only different ways of expending money ?—That is all.

9494. (Mr. Price.) It is not a signal that money is going ?—No, they soon leave off if they are going astern.

9495. (Mr. Anstey.) There is nothing more as to that election ?—No.

9496. (Mr. Price.) You know the election of 1866, when Mr. Westropp had been unseated ?—Yes.

9497. What part did you take in Mr. Bagehot's election then ?—Rather an active part.

9498. Give us the history of it ?—I had some money from Allan then, but what it was I do not know.

9499. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long before the election ?—I cannot tell whether that was the evening or the morning of the election; I am not sure.

9500. If the evening it would have been when the election was over ?—The nomination evening.

9501. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you to do with it ?—Give it to the voters.

9502. What voters ?—To vote for Bagehot.

9503. A list of voters ?—No, I had my own list.

9504. Were they the same persons as in the other list ?—No, there was a difference.

9505. Have you the list here ?—I have both lists here as far as I can judge. I have Mr. Vanderbyl's election, No. 1, July 12th; some of these names might be wrong; they might be at another election. This is Vanderbyl's first election. John Peach ——

9506. Are these the men you bribed ?—Yes. John Peach, Henry Osborne, John Tucker, Frank Westlake, William Hooper, William Francis, St. Johns's, William Fisher, stationer, Dabinett, Henry Harris, George Webb, John Hawkes, Going Murray, William Sendall, Charles Collins, John Hodge, Frederick Hodge, Robert Wilkins, Nathaniel Wilkins, Stephen Crocker, Champion, John Dyer, Joseph Reed at the station, and Pollard.

9507. That was at Vanderbyl's election ?—Yes, so for as I can remember.

9508. How many names have you given us, for it would not account for the whole 436*l.* ?

9509. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was not always 10*l.*; the price was altered ?—Oh, no.

9510. What was the highest price given them ?—I should it averaged 20*l.* to 25*l.* each.

9511. Those that you bribed at Bagehot's election in 1866 ?—There might be a mistake in the names.

9512. Now, whom did you bribe at Bagehot's contest ?—The first is a man I polled on one election, but which I do not know, — Coombes, of Barclay Street, John Peach, Henry Osborne, Faulkner, John Tucker, Frank Westlake, William Hooper, William Hooper, William Francis, Stephen Colin Jones, William Fisher, John Hawkes, Going Murray, William Sendall, Charles Collins, John Hodge, Frederick Hodge, Nathaniel Wilkins, Robert Wilkins, Gilbert, George Harwood, Philip Powell, and I think I polled a man named Dennis.

9513. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did they get ?—Averaged about 10*l.*, I think.

9514. (Mr. Anstey.) Were both of these William Hoopers there of Bath Street ?—No, both of Saint John Street; one a sawyer, and the other a painter.

9515. Different from the Hooper we had before ?—Yes.

9516. (Mr. Price.) There are four Hoopers altogether ?—I believe there are.

(Mr. Anstey.) And those two Williams are of Saint John Street.

9517. Living in the same house ?—No.

9518. Give me a description ?—William Hooper is a painter, and the other a sawyer.

9519. And the other William Hooper ?—He is a corn meter.

9520. (Mr. Price.) How much did you get at that election ?—I cannot remember the amount.

9521. Give some idea ?—I believe it was about 200*l.*

9522. It would hardly go 10*l.* for all those names ?—Twenty names. There is a mistake here in two names. Philip Gilbert told me another day that I did not pay him. I would not be sure, but I paid him once.

9523. Is that all you got at that election ?—I cannot say.

9524. Did you get anything from Allan ?—No.

9525. Anything for yourself ?—No.

9526. Not for your own vote ?—No.

9527. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you promised any ?—No.

9528. Did you ask for any ?—No.

9529. (Mr. Price.) Was that the first election you had acted at ?—No.

9530. Then they knew you before ?—Yes.

9531. Do you know how much was spent altogether at that election ?—I never heard till I heard the other day, and I thought the amount more than it really was.

9532. Do you know anybody employed besides yourself at that election ?—I think the same as now.

9533. Is that all the information you have to give us with regard to that ?—I think so.

9534. Was there a great deal of money spent on the other side ? Mr. Patton got in by a majority of seven; did you hear anything said about the amount spent ?—No, I did not, not more than this—they said not very much.

9535. The bribes could not be very high, though the majority was a narrow one ?—Yes.

9536. That is what you believe ?—Yes.

9537. The constituency was polled out at the same time we hear; how do you account for the very small majority, with a constituency polled out, and yet less money spent than you expected ?—I believe we had virtually won the election in the morning; of course it was done by paying voters money, and I consider from my experience they left off about 20 minutes before they ought to have left off.

9538. That is what the mismanagement was as to which Bussell or Allan said the men were disgusted with the way the election was lost, and therefore were hanging back at the next election very much ?—Vanderbyl's No. 1 election ?

9539. Yes ?—They were, no doubt.

9540. (Mr. Anstey.) One witness says the word went forth from Mr. Lovibond's office, I think, "No more money is to be spent;" and from that time Mr. Bagehot's election declined ?—Yes, Mr. Lovibond told me that his ownself.

9541. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the occasion when the voters were bottled at the "Clarence" ?—Yes.

9542. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see them there ?—No, I do not go to the "Clarence."

9543. Did you see them bundled out ?—No, I took no part until half-past 11 or 12.

9544. Who kept the "Clarence" at that time ?—I think it was a man named Longhurst; if it was, he is now living at Penzance.

9545. Did the present landlord have nothing to do with it ?—I do not know whether it was the present landlord.

9546. There were two different cases of bottling at the "Clarence" at two different elections, one at the second election of 1866, or at the last election ?—That would be Mr. Vanderbyl's election; there was no bottling there then.

9547. Any at the last, Kinglake and Vanderbyl's ?—I do not know. I was not over the bridge.

9548. (Mr. Price.) Is there any system, so far as you know, of paying at tradesmen's shops large prices for articles of small value ?—I never heard of it.

9549. It is not done, then ?—I think not.

9550. Used it to be done in former days, though not now?—I never heard of it in my life.

9551. You never heard of anything being bought for 100*l.* which was worth only 5*s.*?—I never heard of it.

9552. (Mr. Coleridge.) You never got 100*l.* for a ham?—No.

9553. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote in 1865?—Yes.

9554. I believe you had the honesty not to sign the petition of 80 presented to the House of Commons a few days before the contest between Bagehot and Patton?—I did not.

9555. Was it because you were conscious that it was not exactly fit that persons who engaged themselves in such practices should sign a petition of that purist nature?—I thought it was bad taste.

9556. (Mr. Price.) You were asked to sign?—Yes.

9557. Who asked you?—I cannot remember.

9558. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it not the fact that some of the money, if not the whole of the money, used at the two elections of 1866 passed through the hands of Sealy and Prior?—I have no knowledge where it came from.

9559. Did you ever hear of old or young Mr. Prior bringing 500*l.* in one sum for bribing purposes?—Not until in this court.

9560. You are aware that the first name in this petition is that of Mr. Sealy the banker?—I am.

9561. Now we go to 1865, when Mr. Westropp was elected with Mr. Kinglake, and Sir John Shelley stood?—Yes.

9562. What part did you take at that election?—Previous to the election day I had acted as before.

9563. What did you do previous to the election day?—Similar to what I have done.

9564. What money did you get?—No money.

9565. But "similar;" what did you get to bribe with?—None whatever.

9566. Did not you bribe at all then?—No.

9567. But you said "similar"?—I said before the nomination day, up to the poll.

9568. On the nomination day what did you do; when did you get any money to go and bribe with?—I got none at all; no money.

9569. (Mr. Anstey.) Promised money?—Very likely.

9570. (Mr. Price.) You said you took an active part; "similar"?—Yes.

9571. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew there was money got at a quarter past three in the afternoon?—What for—Sir John Shelley's election?

9572. Yes?—I do not believe it.

9573. (Mr. Price.) You do not believe any was spent at all?—No.

9574. At either Mr. Kinglake's or Sir John Shelley's?—I never saw a farthing. I should have known it.

9575. (Mr. Coleridge.) Only treating?—There was treating.

9576. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get any promise to settle bills, bad debts, bribery monies at former elections, or anything of the kind?—Emanating from Sir John Shelly's election?

9577. I do not know what you mean by "emanating"?—Coming from.

9578. Do you know of any payment being made, either payment or promise of payment made at that contest in respect of demands, legal or illegal, arising out of the former election, such as unpaid bribes, unpaid drapers' bills, unpaid treating bills, and the like?—No.

9579. But there may have been for aught you know?—There might have been.

9580. (Mr. Price.) It has been said over and over again that this borough is a Liberal borough; how do you account for the fact that Sir John Shelley, who was a Liberal of Liberals, was rejected if there was no bribery?—I have no idea.

9581. Does not that rather go to show that the opinion that it is purely a Liberal borough is wrong, because Mr. Westropp, a Conservative, came in?—It occurred to me when you put that question that you meant money spent on our side.

9582. On both sides?—There was money spent on the Conservative side no doubt, but not on ours.

9583. Therefore you say with other witnesses that if it had not been for money the two Liberals would have come in?—No doubt of it. My impression is that if Mr. Edwards had come from Barnstaple at that time he would have got in too.

9584. He came here for an hour or two and went away?—Yes.

9585. Do you know whether he came attended by any other gentleman?—I think not.

9586. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you see a Mr. Wellington Guernsey with him?—No, I never heard of him.

9587. Four or five days before to see how the ground lay?—No.

9588. Can you tell us the circumstances of Mr. Edwards coming up from Barnstaple?—No, not the slightest.

9589. Did you hear anything about him, or who he was?—No, not more than he was up at Barnstaple, and these was not much chance of success there, and he came here.

9590. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you attribute Sir John Shelley's rejection on that occasion to Mr. Westropp bribing, or to the fact that Sir John Shelley, before coming down, exacted a public promise from Mr. Lovibond, his agent, that upon his word of honour as a man and a gentleman nothing had occurred or should occur that could in any way implicate him with improper practices, and secondly during his canvass Sir John Shelley repeated that statement to Messrs. Reed and Cook, who were bursting out laughing at the idea of voting for Mr. Most, and saying to them, "I will not have anything of the kind, and if 5*l.* "given improperly will win me the election I will "not give it." Now which was it, Mr. Westropp's bribery or Sir John Shelley's honesty?—Sir John Shelley's honesty, I believe.

9591. Was there a single instance to your knowledge at Bridgwater before of any candidate telling the voters openly, not through agents, that there should be no bribery?—I think not.

9592. And therefore the more remarkable that in that case there was a signal defeat?—It was so.

9593. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you can tell us about the election of 1865?—I think that is all; I know nothing else.

9594. Now at the election of 1859 did you take any part?—I was intended to have taken the same part in 1859 as I have all through.

9595. The bribing part?—Yes; a circumstance happened there; I believe only three of us knew it.

9596. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first begin these practices, at what election?—Well, I became acquainted with a person named Foster. I came in 1851, and between 1851 and 1865 made his acquaintance. He was then a clerk of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

9597. Was it at the 1852 election?—No, not at all.

9598. 1857?—I had a sprained ankle, but intended to have gone in then. I commenced in 1859. I believe those three I mentioned were myself, Mr. Henry Faun, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and nobody else.

9599. Faun is dead?—Yes.

9600. That was 1859?—Foster died in May 1861. Previous to the election of 1859 I undertook the same part as now. I knew the voters then, a good many of them, and about half-past nine in the morning, Foster lived at what we call Castle Field, alongside the river, he sent his little boy to me, and I went down directly. He was lying in the front room on the sofa, and said to me, "Smith!" "Well." "What do you think I have done?" "I do not know," I said. "Why," he says, "I have lost every shilling of money." I said, "You have?" "Yes." "How much is it?" "Well," he says, "it is about 950*l.* or 960*l.*" I asked him where he had lost it, and he said he did not know. He then reclined on the sofa. I said, "Never mind." He said, "What you had better do is to go and tell Mr. Lovibond." So I went up.

9601. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you believe he had lost it?—Yes. I went up to Mr. Lovibond and told him that Foster had lost this money. The remark he made to me was, "The devil he has." I stopped there some little time, I suppose about 10 minutes, and he said, "Smith, you must meet me on the south side of the market house."

9602. Mr. Lovibond said so?—Yes, "Meet me on "the south side of the market house in 15 minutes, "and Faun will meet you in Fore Street in 20 "minutes." That was on the morning of the poll. I went there, and saw him going into the church gates, and I followed him, and he went into the porch of the old church, and then he gave me some money in a bag.

9603. How much?—I should think it was about 200*l.*

9604. (Mr. Price.) Was that the only time you saw Mr. Benjamin Lovibond in the church porch?—I think it was. Then he said, "Meet me in 20 minutes in the fish market." I met him in the fish market in 20 minutes, and 20 minutes later than that I met him in Castle Street, and each time he gave me some money.

9605. How much in the fish market?—One bag similar to the first.

9606. About 200*l.*?—I should say so.

9607. And the third?—Similar. I had to go to Faun, in Fore Street.

9608. Who was the Liberal candidate at that election?—It was Kinglake and Tynte.

9609. Who was Mr. Lovibond acting for then?—I do not believe that Mr. Lovibond at that time had anything to do with it. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was the man then.

9610. (Mr. Price.) We are speaking of the man who came to the church porch?—Benjamin Lovibond.

9611. Who was acting for Colonel Tynte?—I will not be sure he was not acting for both.

9612. Who acted for Kinglake?—Mr. Lovibond was a sort of general here then; he acted for the Liberal party.

9613. What did Mr. Bate do?—I never knew him mixed up in electioneering in my life.

9614. Was not Mr. Brice concerned for Mr. Kinglake then?—No.

9615. He had not turned Tory then?—No. I think when Mr. Brice was connected with the Liberal party was 1865.

9616. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not Mr. Bate at that time Mr. Kinglake's regular agent?—He was.

9617. How was he his agent if he did not act for him politically? What do you mean? What sort of agent was he?—He used to canvass with him. I never knew Mr. Bate in any other way than just walking about. It was understood here he was his confidential friend, or something like that.

9618. If Mr. Bate had been paid 1,100*l.* for legal expenses after the election you would be very much surprised?—I should be.

9619. You would also assume that part of that was what he paid to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—It is just possible.

9620. (Mr. Price.) Then you took this, and was that all the money you took at that time?—No.

9621. Have you anything more to say about that?—No; but Faun took the money. I do not know where, down Fore Street.

9622. Foster was clerk to Mr. Lovibond?—Yes, at that time; I believe an articled clerk.

9623. And therefore entrusted, I have no doubt, with large sums of money?—No.

9624. Do you think it really was a loss?—That election was virtually over by a quarter to 12, I should think.

9625. How much was spent altogether?—I have no idea.

9626. On your side?—I have no idea.

9627. How much was spent by yourself?—I do not think I polled more than three men, it was 11 before I left off. I went to Foster again; he walked with me to Henry Faun's. He had been there the evening before it appeared, and had laid on the sofa, and the moment he got into the room he said, "I remember what I did with my money, I put it under the mattrass;" and he lifted up the mattrass, and there was the money.

9628. At Faun's?—Yes.

9629. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was done with that?—That was taken back to Mr. Lovibond. Foster walked up to the house with it.

9630. In gold?—Partly in gold, and partly in notes. I only polled three men there, for the reason that the election business was over.

9631. You had won the election?—Yes, before I could get back.

9632. What did you give those three you polled?—10*l.* each.

9633. Did you take that out of the three bags you received?—No; Foster gave me the money.

9634. What did Foster give you?—I believe he paid me for two men 20*l.*

9635. Is that all you had from him?—That is all.

9636. Nothing for yourself?—No, nothing.

9637. Not for your work?—No, I never had a shilling in my life.

9638. Do you know that it is the general opinion we have heard, it is a rumour or impression rather in the town amongst the humbler class of voters, that nothing like the amount of money gets down to them, but it is all stopped midway?—That never applied to me; I never received a shilling.

9639. Does it apply to anybody?—Not that I have heard.

9640. Do you really believe that the money gets into the hands of the voters who are bribeable, and who are expecting their money?—There is no doubt about it.

9641. Or stop on the way?—There is no doubt they get it.

9642. (Mr. Anstey.) As a general rule?—Yes, always, I should think.

9643. But after the experience you have had in these inquiries you think probably there are one or two exceptions to the general rule?—I should think not.

9644. (Mr. Price.) How can you account for this rumour being so strongly impressed on the minds of bribeable voters, that they really do not get the plunder, but some one else does?—They have always said that here. All I can say is, that I never had a shilling in my life.

9645. (Mr. Anstey.) You have heard of cases of persons less punctual than yourself?—I have.

9646. Now you have mentioned this man Foster, whose acquaintance with you led you into this sort of connexion?—Yes.

9647. Was he an old hand at it before you made his acquaintance?—I believe he was.

9648. But he was only an articled clerk in 1859?—He was with Mr. Lovibond from a boy I believe.

9649. A paid clerk first, and afterwards I suppose Mr. Lovibond gave him his articles; was that it?—I believe it was.

9650. Do you recollect what salary he had as a paid clerk from Mr. Lovibond?—No; he never told me.

9651. Did it vary, do you know? One quarter it appears by Mr. Lovibond's books it was 13*l.* Can you state any reason why the next quarter it should amount to 20*l.* or 30*l.*?—No, I cannot.

9652. Can you tell me how it happened that Foster, being in the employment of and also under articles to Mr. Lovibond, was allowed to charge for professional services rendered by himself?—No, I cannot.

9653. Assuming that you cannot tell me that, then can you tell me how it happens that his name appears for professional services for the same fee twice or three times in the same election in the same month, and on the same day of the month?—No, I cannot.

9654. From your knowledge of the man should you suppose that those extra payments were in the nature of gratifications or bribes to himself, or made to him for the purpose of enabling him to bribe others, or honest payments; which of the three?—I do not know, I am sure.

9655. Did he bribe largely?—No, he did not himself; not very largely. He had a staff always about him. He was generally the centre.

9656. Can you tell me in whose handwriting these counterfoils are (handing a cheque book)?—It is not Lovibond's.

9657. I know it is not, but whose is it—Mr. Cook's or Mr. Reed's?—I should think it was Mr. Cook's. I will not be sure.

9658. Was Foster in embarrassed circumstances when he died?—No.

9659. Was he accurate or not—accurate in his money accounts?—Very accurate I should think.

9660. Do you recollect anything about that circumstance occurring either at the election of 1859 or at the previous election of 1857, and which was revived in 1859, about Heal's 40*l.*?—No more than he told me.

9661. Who?—Foster.

9662. When did he tell you about this?—Eight or nine times in his lifetime.

9663. Since the election of 1857?—Decidedly.

9664. He told you what?—That in 1852 he had entrusted Heal with a sum of money, and that when he brought in his report he was 100*l.* short. In 1865 Heal was at Gloucester and had no vote here, and in 1859 he was down here. In 1852 he was described as an accountant, and in 1859 as a brewer. In 1859 he came down here, and then, as Foster told me, he overpaid 40*l.* more than Foster let him have. When Heal went to Foister for the 40*l.* he had overpaid, Foster made this remark to him, as he told me, "Bill, you "have done me in 1852, now I shall do you in 1859; "you shall not have the money."

9665. Foster told you that himself?—Yes.

9666. (Mr. Price.) How much short was he in 1852?—100*l.*

9667. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you to say that Foster in effect had admitted to you that there was 40*l.* coming to Heal for bribing services in the election of 1859?—Yes.

9668. And that he, Foster, instead of paying that money, said, "I shall do you out of that as you did me out of the 100*l.* in 1852"?—That is right.

9669. Therefore he did not deny the claim, but said he would not pay it?—No.

9670. Are you sure the money was claimed in respect of the election of 1859 and not of 1857?—Oh yes; Heal was not here 1857.

9671. He was in 1859?—He was in 1859, described as a brewer.

9672. Foster, as I understand, was the nephew of Faun?—Yes.

9673. Also a nephew of the other Charles Faun who was examined yesterday?—Yes.

9674. May I ask you how far your recollection of the elections goes back; I do not mean as voting or taking part, but as to the fact?—I can just remember 1852.

9675. That is all you have to say?—Yes.

9676. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now 1857?—I know very little of 1857; I merely recorded my vote.

9677. (Mr. Price.) Is that all?—That is all.

9678. You had not been introduced to this bribing business in 1857?—No; I was going to, but could not act.

9679. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had a sprained ankle?—Yes.

9680. And Foster had asked you to bribe in 1857?—Yes, before 1857.

9681. In 1857 you were prepared to have gone on, and were not able to get about?—Just so.

9682. Had you any money brought you?—No.

9683. Who were you to have got your money from?—Foster.

9684. And what amount?—Not a very large amount then.

9685. Then in 1852 was it that Foster first seduced you?—I took very little part as regards electioneering.

9686. You have said it was first of all in 1857; when was it he prepared you for the place you took afterwards?—That was between 1852 and 1857.

9687. There was no election?—No.

9688. What was it that induced him to fix on you?—We got friendly in that time.

9689. And then Foster said, "When the election comes on I shall have some work for you"?—Very likely.

9690. Did not it occur to you to ask what you would get for it?—No.

9691. Do you mean that when he proposed to you a position of labour and danger you never asked him what you were to get for it?—Never.

9692. And he never offered you?—Never.

9693. In any shape or way?—No.

9694. (Mr. Price.) When did you first come to Bridgwater?—I believe Christmas 1850.

9695. We understand you have not only been this money out of pocket which you have told us at one or two elections, but you have never received a farthing but suffered considerably in our business in addition?—Oh, yes, there is no doubt of it.

9696. You have made a clean breast of it, have you Mr. Smith?—All that I can think of.

9697. You have told us everything?—Yes. I should be very glad if these statements could be found relative to cash.

(Mr. Anstey.) If you recollect anything more we shall be glad to hear it.

Henry Chapman Bussell recalled.

H. C. Bussell.

9698. (Mr. Anstey.) About this election in 1859, you know there was a petition against Tynte?—And Mr. Kinglake.

9699. Do you recollect going to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's office, or people coming to you from the office to get you to put down in writing or to dictate to them the evidence you were going to give if the election petition went on before the Committee of the House of Commons in defence of the seat?—I do not recollect it.

9700. I have here a brief and a draft of a brief, and the draft of the brief professes to have been drawn from your instructions, and the brief professes to be a copy of the draft of the brief. Can you recollect, from what you told us about the large amount to which you yourself bribed at that election, and were cognizant of other people bribing, whether Mr. Benjamin Lovibond invented this story for you to swear to it,—whether you told him you were prepared to swear to it: "Bussell, Henry Chapman, served with warrant on "the blank day of blank. He is a respectable inn-"keeper and shipowner. The inn he keeps is called "'The Anchor,' and is situate on the West Quay in "Bridgwater. The petitioners have selected him as "a witness, expecting that he paid money to voters to "vote on behalf of the two sitting members. Mr. "Bussell will prove that he paid no money to any "voter whatever, and is not aware that any money "was paid to any of the Liberal voters for their "votes"?—I never gave any such instructions.

9701. (Mr. Price.) This must have been an invention of Mr. Lovibond's?—Or Foster's, I suppose.

9702. Of Foster?—Yes, Foster was there then; because if I had I should have had to admit when I went into court I had paid voters.

9703. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought it right to give you an opportunity of hearing in public what was recorded against you in private, that you might give it either confirmation or contradiction?—I distinctly deny ever giving such instructions at all. I never knew that they got a brief up.

NINTH DAY.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR sworn.

Mr. J. Prior.

1 Sept. 1869.

9704. (Mr. Price.) Are you in a banking firm here?—I am.

9705. As a partner?—Yes.

9706. What firm?—Sealy and Prior.

9707. Now, at the election of 1868, was there any money deposited at your bank to the credit of Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

9708. Of Mr. Kinglake?—No.

9709. Was there any credit opened at your bank a short time before the election in any person's name?—No; at least the evening after the nomination Dr. Kinglake, the brother of the late member, sent for me, and said he wanted 1,000*l.* to assist his brother's election.

9710. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the last election?—This is the last election.

9711. (Mr. Price.) Where does Dr. Kinglake live?—At Taunton, and he asked me what he had better give me for the 1,000*l.* I told him that he had better give me his cheque, which he did. He gave me a cheque on Stuckey's Banking Company, Taunton. This was the evening after the nomination.

9712. The evening of the nomination?—Of the nomination, the next morning, just before 12, he called on me at the bank, and said, "Have you made use of that cheque?" I said, "I have not." He said, "Please give it to me." And I returned it to him, and he put it in the fire, and he said, "Now this is just as if nothing had happened."

9713. As if what?—Nothing had taken place between us.

9714. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where was the money all the time?—It was a cheque on us, and I was to have disposed of the 1,000*l.* as Mr. Lovibond should direct.

9715. (Mr. Price.) That is what he told you?—That is what he told me.

9716. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then he had no money?—Then he had no money. He kept his account at Stuckey's, at Taunton.

9717. You would, on the face of his cheque on the bankers at Taunton, have allowed Mr. Lovibond to draw to the extent of 1,000*l.* on you?—Yes.

9718. He told you that was so, that Mr. Lovibond was to draw against that 1,000*l.* cheque of his?—Yes.

9719. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it to be drawn by cheques, or did you authorize him to authorize Mr. Lovibond to come for the money without cheque?—There was nothing about his drawing cheques.

9720. That would not have been necessary, perhaps?—No, it would not.

9721. (Mr. Price.) Would you have handed it over to Mr. Lovibond without drawing a cheque?—I should.

9722. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Lovibond keeping an account at your bank?—Yes.

9723. (Mr. Price.) We should like to see Mr. Lovibond's account at that time. Do Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook bank with you?—They did at that time.

9724. At the last election?—At the last election.

9725. We shall want their account also?—They are at the bank; I will send for them.

9726. I suppose it would be more convenient for you to have them here in the morning?—Yes.

9727. Then we shall want your son in the morning, and will have them then. Was any money drawn out of your bank in any way whatever; large sums on the day of the election?—About a quarter before three on the day of the election, Mr. Mogg rushed into the bank.

9728. Who is Mr. Mogg?—He is a friend of Mr. Lovibond's.

9729. A resident in Bridgwater?—Yes.

9730. Where does he live?—In the square. He rushed in, and wrote on a piece of paper that I was to send 500*l.* directly to Allan's.

9731. To Andrew Allan?—Yes.

9732. You knew who Andrew Allan, was then?—He is a customer of ours.

9733. You knew pretty well what it was for?—Well I guessed what it was for; of course I asked no questions.

9734. Did you send the 500*l.*?—I did.

9735. By your son?—By my son.

9736. Whom did you debit with that money?—I have not debited anyone, because I did not know who to debit it with; I put a memorandum.

9737. It remains unpaid?—Yes. I put a memorandum in my cash book to balance our accounts.

9738. To balance your account you put a memorandum to show that that sum had gone under Mr. Mogg's name?—Well, of course I expected Mr. Mogg to make an explanation to me.

9739. You have not that memorandum here?—I have.

9740. (Mr. Anstey.) What o'clock was that as Mogg came rushing in?—As well as I remember it was a quarter before three.

9741. Had you seen him earlier in the day?—No, I had not seen Mr. Mogg to have any communication with him earlier in the day, or anyone else during the day upon the matter.

9742. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Mogg a customer of yours?—No.

9743. Then on what authority did you give 500*l.* for that bit of paper he signed? Upon what authority did you give this to Mr. Mogg; an unusual transaction for a banker, was it not?—Well, I relied entirely upon his seeing me right of course, and for an explanation.

9744. What did you know of Mr. Mogg?—I know him well; he lives next door to me.

9745. You knew him to be a friend of Lovibond's?—I knew him to be a friend of Lovibond's.

9746. Should you give any customer money if he ran into the bank for 20*l.* and said, "I have no time to write a cheque"?—Well, I was led astray.

9747. (Mr. Price.) But should you?—No, I should not.

9748. If so, it would be a nice bank to go to?—However, I was led entirely astray by that communication of Dr. Kinglake's.

9749. How do you mean you were led astray?—Because he told me that Mr. Lovibond would give me instructions what to do.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But then that transaction was at an end.

9750. (Mr. Price.) He had taken his cheque away?—I know, but I have heard since that Dr. Kinglake never told Mr. Lovibond it was closed.

9751. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were in the bank yourself at the time Mr. Mogg came in?—Yes.

9752. Have you not already told our secretary that you do not remember any of these circumstances?—No, I have not; I have had no communication with your secretary.

9753. Then it is your son, I suppose?—No, I believe it is Mr. Sealy, and he is ignorant of this.

9754. Do you mean this was kept from Mr. Sealy?—Yes; when I came to think of it the next day I thought, "Well, I have not consulted Mr. Sealy upon "this, for he was not in the bank, and therefore I must "get this money back again in the best way I can."

9755. Mr. Sealy was your senior partner?—Yes.

9756. (Mr. Anstey.) What money was this you were prepared to give out in this way without cheque; was it your own, or your depositors?—It is my own, because I make it good if it is never forthcoming.

9757. (Mr. Price.) It was your own you advanced?—I am responsible for it.

9758. It was not any depositor's money?—It was not.

9759. What I want particularly to know is, is there any understanding or practice at your bank with regard to elections, by which there shall be a certain fund considered to be guaranteed or answered for by certain persons, and then for anybody who is understood to be an agent to go and get the money out of it?—No, nothing of the kind.

9760. Did you pay this 500*l.*, and would you have paid the 1,000*l.* at the personal risk of you, Mr. Prior?—No, I should not, the 1,000*l.*

9761. But you would have paid the 500*l.* at your own personal risk?—I should.

9762. (Mr. Coleridge.) And not have charged it to the bank?—I should not have charged it to the bank.

9763. (Mr. Price.) If you had had an opportunity of consulting your partner, and he had consented to the thing, then it would have been mutual?—A bank transaction.

9764. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there ever any transaction of that kind to which your partner was privy with yourself?—Certainly not.

9765. Neither at this election nor the former one?—Well, I do not know whether in the election when——

9766. For instance, look at this with reference to the election of 1865, and tell me whose handwriting is that in the first counterfoil?—I do not know whose writing that is.

9767. Is not that Mr. Reed's or Mr. Cook's?—I think not. I am not certain. I could not swear to the writing. If I saw the signatures I could.

9768. (Mr. Price.) Was there any other money drawn out of your bank on that day?—No.

9769. The day of the election?—No.

9770. No other sum?—No.

9771. (Mr. Anstey.) That day you have stated this was somewhere about a quarter before three?—Somewhere about that.

9772. About two hours before that, when Mr. Mogg came in about the money, and you gave him the money; you went home to dinner, I believe, at 1 o'clock, did not you?—I did.

9773. Do you know Mr. John Brown the magistrate?—I do.

9774. Did you see his coachman, Honyball, as you were going home that day to dine?—I did.

9775. I suppose you know that Honyball's connexion with the bribers in the Liberal interest has been stated in the course of this inquiry to be that he went driving them about, and so forth. Did he say anything to you about the election not yet being lost?—Not to me individually.

9776. What did he say?—There were three or four persons talking. I think young Mr. Carslake and two or three others, and we were speaking of the state of the poll, and he passed on at the time, waving his handkerchief, and saying "We have not lost yet." That is all I know about that.

9777. Did he make any allusion to money?—No, he did not stop; he was running on.

9778. You had not seen Mr. Mogg at that time?—No.

9779. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you give Allan this money; in gold or notes?—It was in gold.

9780. I suppose that made it rather more suspicious, did not it?—Well, I do not know.

9781. (Mr. Price.) Did he ask for it in gold?—No, he did not say whether gold or anything else.

9782. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you knew pretty well what was going on, so you gave it in gold?—Well, I expected so.

9783. (Mr. Anstey.) The night before, when Dr. Kinglake deposited the cheque, did he tell you the money was to be asked for over the counter?—No, he did not.

9784. How did you arrive at that understanding that you were to honour any demand, though not made in writing?—He did not say a word about writing. He said Mr. Lovibond will order the disposition of it.

9785. Does not that generally mean order in the sense of drawing a cheque or endorsing one?—No, because I had his cheque, and it is just as if he brought a cheque of our bank to get it cashed, or lodged it there for me to cash it. When that cheque was cashed, that cheque would then be entered in our books.

9786. But supposing it was cashed in small sums of 100*l.*, 200*l.*, 250*l.*, and so on?—Then I should have entered it.

9787. But you would have given up those sums to Mr. Lovibond without a cheque?—Yes, I should have done so.

9788. Therefore there must have been some understanding between you and Dr. Kinglake as to that?—He told me when Mr. Lovibond ordered the disposition of it, whether he did it personally himself or not, I was to supply that money.

9789. (Mr. Price.) Was not it an understood thing that there should be no record of that kind in your books, which there would have been if the money had been drawn from time to time, by cheques? Was not it arranged that there should be no record of that kind in your books, and therefore simply Mr. Lovibond was to send down and say 50*l.* or 60*l.* or 150*l.*, and you would have shovelled the sovereigns over the counter?—Well, that is how I understood it.

9790. There was to be nothing to show for it afterwards, if possible, in your books?—Yes, at the close of the day I should have sent on his cheque to Stuckey's at Taunton.

9791. (Mr. Anstey.) That was deposited with you?—Yes.

9792. (Mr. Price.) But no record in your book?—No.

9793. It would be only a question of balancing your account at the end of the day; any clerk of yours paying the money over the counter to Mr. Lovibond's order would have to account, so that the books might be balanced?—Yes.

9794. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you suggest any reason for Dr. Kinglake going to make that arrangement except this, that those thousand pounds were intended to be spent for an illegal purpose, which it was desirable therefore to keep secret?—Well, it certainly was intended, you know, for the purchase of his brother's seat.

9795. Votes?—No doubt.

9796. You have no doubt of that?—No.

9797. (Mr. Price.) Is Dr. Kinglake a man of large fortune?—Yes.

9798. Is he likely to advance a thousand pounds for his nephew?—Yes, if he had given me a cheque for three or four thousand I should have been content.

9799. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is he an uncle or brother?—A brother.

9800. Elder brother or younger?—That I cannot say.

9801. (Mr. Price.) Is that all that took place, so far as you are concerned, in the election of 1868?—That is all.

9802. Are you the bankers for the Liberals generally here?—No, we are not.

9803. Have you any money deposited on the other side; any Conservative money?—Certainly not.

9804. (Mr. Coleridge.) What bank does that sort of business for the Conservatives at elections?—I do not know; I cannot say.

9805. Do any of the Conservative gentlemen keep their accounts at your house; I mean Mr. Trevor or Mr. Brice?—No, none of them.

9806. There was no money drawn out of your bank on the election day in a large sum except the one you have told us of, 500*l.*?—That is all.

9807. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing the day before in a large sum?—No.

9808. Can you recollect when Mr. Lovibond before the election drew a large cheque?—I cannot now. He is in a very extensive business, and therefore I should not notice anything.

9809. (Mr. Price.) After the election, within a day or two, had you any large sums drawn out to Mr. Lovibond's order, or to Messrs. Reed and Cook's?—I am not aware of any.

9810. Do you know anything of any money being taken out of your bank in 1866 under similar or

NINTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

analogous circumstances; Vanderbyl's second election in 1866?—Yes.

9811. What?—I cashed two cheques, one for 100*l.* and the other for 300*l.*

9812. What day?—On the morning of the election.

9813. At the polling?—Yes, at the polling.

9814. Who were they drawn by?—Mr. Brogden.

9815. Mr. Vanderbyl's friend who came down?—Yes.

9816. Was there any credit to Mr. Brogden arranged with your bank before the election?—No.

9817. He merely came and drew a cheque and you trusted his name?—No; those cheques were brought us by Mr. Barham. The first cheque was given us by Mr. Barham, and the second was sent from Mr. Barham.

9818. Sent by your son?—Yes; the fact is Mr. Barham gave me the cheque for 100*l.* Just before the bank was opened I sent my son over to Mr. Barham with it. On my son's return he brought a cheque for 300*l.*, which was cashed in the same way.

9819. You say it was drawn in Mr. Brogden's name, and having come from Mr. Barham you cashed them?—Yes, that is it.

9820. What bank were they drawn on?—A Manchester bank.

9821. (Mr. Coleridge. Does Mr. Barham bank with you?—No.

9822. Where?—At the West of England.

9823. Then I suppose you sent your son to Mr. Barham to inquire about it?—No; I sent my son with 100*l.* for the first cheque, and Mr. Barham then gave him this for 300*l.*, and asked him if he would cash it.

9824. Why did you send your son about the 100*l.*?—Because Mr. Barham asked me to do so.

9825. To do what?—To send the cash for the cheque.

9826. You said the cheque. The cheque came down in the regular way?—Yes, in the regular way.

9827. Who presented the cheque?—Mr. Barham presented the first, and the second he sent by my son.

9828. The first cheque you cashed to Mr. Barham himself?—I sent the cash to him just before the bank was opened.

9829. Was that all the money drawn at that election?—It is.

9830. That day 300*l.* and 100*l.*?—Yes.

9831. Any more at any time afterwards at that election?—Not that I am aware of.

9832. (Mr. Coleridge.) Any large payments made to Mr. Barham shortly after the election?—No, Mr. Barham does not keep his account with us.

9833. Were there for Mr. Lovibond?—Not that I am aware of. Mr. Lovibond is in the habit of bringing large sums of money into our bank.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We must have the books to-morrow.

9834. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of the other election of 1866, Patten and Bagehot?—Nothing at all to do with it.

9835. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor the election of 1865?—Nor the election before that.

9836. 1865?—No, 1859, Kinglake and Tynte. On that occasion I think Mr. Bate came to me and asked me for either 350*l.* or 400*l.*; I cannot speak now for which. He gave me notice and asked me if I would give that to Foster.

9837. (Mr. Coleridge.) He gave you notes for gold?—He gave me notes for gold.

9838. And then asked you to give the gold to Foster?—If I would give the gold to Foster, which I did.

9839. How long after he was there did Foster come for the gold?—It was the morning of the election.

9840. (Mr. Anstey.) That was Mr. Bate?—Mr. Bate, who was Mr. Kinglake's friend.

9841. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Bate was merely to get change in fact?—Yes, it was that.

9842. No money drawn out?—No money drawn out.

9843. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean Foster the managing clerk of Mr. Lovibond?—Yes.

9844. Is that all you know about the election?—That is all I know about that.

9845. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1857?—I had nothing at all to do with it.

9846. In 1852?—No.

9847. (Mr. Anstey.) 1847?—That was before I was in the bank.

9848. (Mr. Price.) We have exhausted your personal knowledge as to banking transactions with respect to elections?—Yes.

Mr. E. Prior.

Mr. Edward Prior, jun., sworn.

9849. Are you clerk at your father's bank?—I am.

9850. We understand that you took this 500*l.* to Allan?—To Allan.

9851. Was the instruction merely from your father?—Merely from my father; he showed me a paper.

9852. This paper (handing it)?—Yes, that is it.

9853. He having shown you that paper you took the 500*l.* to Allan?—I took the 500*l.* to Allan.

9854. Is that all you had to do with it?—That is all I had to do with it.

9855. You had heard nothing about it before or afterwards?—No.

9856. Nothing afterwards?—Well, I guessed it was used for bribery, but that was all; I was not told anything.

9857. Do you know Mr. Mogg at all?—Yes, I am acquainted with him.

9858. Have you never had any conversation with him about it?—Never.

9859. Did he go to Allan with you?—I did not see Mr. Mogg.

9860. You merely went alone to Allan's?—I merely went alone to Allan's.

9861. And saw Allan, and handed it over?—And saw Allan, and handed it over.

9862. Did you take any acknowledgment from Allan?—No, none whatever, or said anything to him.

9863. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is this the only transaction you have been concerned in which on a bit of unsigned paper you gave some money up?—Yes, it was the first.

9864. And I suppose it will be the last; I mean it is not your usual practice at the bank?—I did it all by the instruction of my father.

9865. If any customer of the bank comes in with a bit of paper like that, however good an account his might be, would you cash his cheque?—I should not take the responsibility on myself.

A. Allan.

Andrew Allan recalled.

9866. (Mr. Price.) You have heard the whole of Mr. Smith's evidence; do you wish in any way whatever to correct or qualify any statement you have made with regard to the part you took as to these sums of money?—No.

9867. As to the 25*l.* promised?—I do not remember that; that is the only qualification I make.

9868. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not recollect that promise to any one of the four men?—I do not recollect it.

9869. (Mr. Price.) The claim was made to you, and you say you did not recognize the claim, or did you, by saying it should be paid?—I do not recollect making the promise.

9870. Had you any authority whatever to offer them anything?—No.

NINTH DAY.

A. Allan.

1 Sept. 1869.

9871. Or say that they should be paid?—I had no authority.

9872. Smith and Bussell were men who would take or expect to have something for their services?—I have not the slightest doubt they would expect it.

9873. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have heard that they both took it and expected it?—In fact they made the claim after the election.

9874. Did you know whether any other election they made their claim or got it?—No, I had only been electioneering six weeks at that present time. I had no prior experience.

9875. (Mr. Anstey.) You have heard Bulpin's evidence. He fixes in his own mind the time when you made him a promise on the day of election, only he is uncertain whether it was the morning or afternoon part of the day, is he correct?—I can only repeat what I have already said, that I have no recollection.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

TENTH DAY.

Thursday, 2nd September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

TENTH DAY.

A. Allan.

2 Sept. 1869.

9876. (Mr. Price.) We want to say to you that we have been given to understand that we have not had a full disclosure of the expenses at Mr. Bagehot's election. As you have been mixed up a great deal in these money matters, we wish to tell you, however truthful your evidence may be as to the part you yourself have taken in elections, yet, if you have not made a full disclosure as to the amount of money which was spent as far as you know at that election, and if we should discover afterwards that there was a much larger amount, and that you must have known it either by its passing through your hands or otherwise, we shall not then consider that you have within the meaning of the Act of Parliament made a full disclosure of all the facts to your knowledge. Having told you that, and that we have been informed that the sum of money which I think you mentioned as the amount spent at Mr. Bagehot's election does not anything like represent the expenditure on behalf of that gentleman, we want to ask you whether you have given us the fullest information on that head that you can?—I said the amount of money spent according to my opinion and recollection of what passed—I have no document—was 1,100*l.* or thereabouts. I have no knowledge that it exceeded that one farthing.

9877. That is to say all of which you have any personal cognizance?—Every farthing. I accept all responsibility if anything can be shown that I have any knowledge beyond that.

9878. Because it is a matter, not only for you, but other witnesses to consider, that although you may be protected by certificate as to all matters which you have answered, tending to criminate yourself, if we think you are entitled to it, yet at the same time there are other matters in the Act of Parliament which would entitle us to withhold a certificate from you if you have not made a full disclosure which may not criminate you, but which may throw light on the conduct of the elections at Bridgwater, because after all, that is the important matter which we have to consider?—I have told you everything I know of Mr. Bagehot's election. I know nothing more than I have told you. As to the matter of Mr. Bagehot's election, the money I named was the amount I reckoned for when we closed up the matters for the election so far as the polling of votes went, but after Mr. Vanderbyl's election, in making up the accounts for that election, we had an account which was subdivided between Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Bagehot, and Mr. Kinglake. Those were Sir John Shelley's expenses and Mr. Kinglake's expenses, at the same time as Sir John Shelley was here, beerhouse and other accounts connected with Mr. Bagehot's own election, and the expenses which are outside the direct bribery at Mr. Vanderbyl's election. The sums coming in after the election of Mr. Vanderbyl was over were subdivided between the three.

9879. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the whole?—I cannot say.

9880. About?—I cannot say.

9881. Mr. Kinglake paid one third, Mr. Vanderbyl paid one third, and Mr. Bagehot one third?—It was not divided equally. I think Mr. Vanderbyl paid more than either, according to the best of my recollection.

9882. (Mr. Anstey.) When was the payment made?—The account was made up after Mr. Vanderbyl's election.

9883. The first or second election?—The first election.

9884. (Mr. Coleridge. Who can give us the account?—Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Barham are the only two I know.

9885. You have no idea what the amount was?—I have no idea. If I knew I would tell you.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR recalled.

Mr. J. Prior.

9886. (Mr. Price.) I want to state to you in the first instance, as you are bound in duty to make the fullest possible disclosure, not only as to matters which may in any way criminate you, I do not say it offensively, but incidentally as to any witness, you ought to make the fullest disclosures as to anything you know respecting money matters at the elections. Now we wish to ask you this question, do you mean to say, really that Mr. Sealey, your partner, had no cognizance of the transaction you related yesterday, with regard to this cheque deposited by Dr. Kinglake the memorandum for 500*l.* which passed across the counter?—I am quite sure of this, that he knew nothing about it until it came out in court about the 500*l.*

TENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

2 Sept. 1869.

9887. But about the 1,000*l.* cheque?—I never mentioned it to him.

9888. Would not it in the course of business become known to him as your senior partner?—It was lodged with me in case it should be wanted.

9889. You did not put it in your pocket?—I put it in the drawer.

9890. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not it pass through the books that night?—No, because nothing passed for it.

9891. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say the next day, after business hours began I suppose, Mr. Kinglake called again and asked for the cheque?—Yes.

9892. Destroyed it and said, "This must be as if it had never happened"?—He did.

9893. Surely, in the interval, business hours having commenced at 9 or 10 o'clock, you had done something with the cheque?—No, I had not.

9894. Then do I understand you to say from the time Dr. Kinglake gave it to you until the time you gave it to him it remained in your drawer?—It remained in my drawer.

9895. What time did you give it up?—About 12.

9896. And what time do you open the bank?—At 10.

9897. As that is a remarkable circumstance, especially as the amount is very large, I must ask you, did you keep it in your drawer, that is to say, did you hold it from passing in the usual way through the bank and into the bank books in consequence of any arrangement or understanding between you and Dr. Kinglake?—Of course I should not make any use of the cheque.

9898. Will you kindly answer the question as put? Was the manner in which you disposed of that cheque, keeping it in your drawer, and not allowing it to go through the banking account into the books, in consequence of any arrangement between you and Dr. Kinglake to that effect?—The fact is this——

9899. Will you answer the question, yes or no?—The fact is——

9900. Will you kindly answer the question. Was there an understanding or arrangement between you and Dr. Kinglake to that effect?—Dr. Kinglake never told me——

9901. Will you have the kindness to tell me that?—But if you will allow me to explain that.

9902. Say yes or no, and then you can explain afterwards?—There was no understanding to that effect.

9903. He called after business hours and give you this cheque. Was it part of the understanding or arrangement then come to between you that you were to keep that cheque out of the bank books, not to deal with it?—Yes.

9904. Did he tell you why he wished that to be done?—No, he did not.

9905. But you inferred it?—I inferred it.

9906. What did you infer?—That I was not to make use of that cheque unless I was asked for the money.

9907. Did you infer the reason why it was not to be made use of was that the transaction was to be kept secret from all the world?—Well, it would not have been secret if the money had been demanded.

9908. But in the meantime?—Well, it would, of course.

9909. Did he further tell you when he gave you the cheque, anything to this effect: "The money may not "be wanted, therefore I do not want it to go into the "bank books until it will be wanted?"—Well, he did not make any remark of that kind to me.

9910. Nothing to that effect?—Nothing to that effect.

9911. Did you understand that was so?—Well, I understood that it was provisional in case the money should be wanted, that is it.

9912. Then instead of 1,000*l.* the next day, 500*l.* were wanted?—Yes.

9913. With regard to that 500*l.*, you say you advanced that on your own responsibility. Has that 500*l.* which you certainly paid out of the bank from your monies been made good to you to this day?—It has not.

9914. (Mr. Price.) I suppose it appears in your books that 500*l.* was paid out on that day?—No, it does not. I put a memorandum in the cash—balanced the cash.

9914*a*. A memorandum to the effect that you owed the bank 500*l.*?

9915. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Sealey knows all about that, of course?—No, he did not at the time.

9916. (Mr. Anstey.) When did he first know of it?—About two or three days since.

9917. (Mr. Price.) This memorandum of yours is a kind of I.O.U. to the bank?—Yes it was.

9918. That would appear amongst the securities of the bank?—Yes, it would in our cash.

9919. Would it not be entered in the day book, waste book, or ledger?—No.

9920. There would be 500*l.* amongst your other cash at the close of the day less?—This memorandum made up our statement of account.

9921. Surely there would be a book somewhere kept by some clerk, or else the clerk who had cashed cheques at the counter that day would have to account for the deficiency of 500*l.*, or some one would?—I placed my memorandum in the cash account.

9922. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that memorandum as if you had drawn out that money for your own uses?—It was not stated.

9923. Supposing you had wanted 500*l.* for your own purposes, is that the way you would have taken the money, and then put a memorandum to balance it?—Exactly so.

9924. (Mr. Price.) Have you that memorandum?—I destroyed it. I debited myself yesterday when I went from here with the 500*l.*

9925. (Mr. Anstey.) Yesterday for the first time?—Of course—in our books.

9926. For the first time?—For the first time in our books.

9927. Have you not a book of your own not connected with the bank?—I do not keep any cash account.

9928. But do you keep any book in which you enter sums that are owing to you?—No, nothing more than our ledger.

9929. Do you mean to say that when you sent your son with this large sum of money on the day of the election, you did not put down in any memorandum book, or account book, or book of any kind the fact, and the name of the person to whom you were to look for repayment?—No, I did not.

9930. (Mr. Coleridge.) To whom do you look for repayment first of all?—Through Mr. Mogg and Mr. Lovibond?—

9931. Which should you sue if it was not paid?—That I should be advised by a solicitor.

9932. Have not you been already advised?—No.

9933. Not at all?—I have not.

9934. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any doubt that you will be repaid that money?—I have no doubt.

9935. Who will repay it to you?—That I do not know.

9936. Recollect this is a serious thing?—I know it is.

9937. Do you mean to say that a year nearly having elapsed, you do not know which of those two persons, if either of them, is to pay you the money when it will be safe to pay it?—Mr. Lovibond has told me he should get it from Mr. Kinglake, Dr. Kinglake.

9938. You said Mr. Kinglake just now?—Dr. Kinglake. Mr. Kinglake does not know anything about it.

9939. Speak for yourself: we shall have to determine whether he knows anything about it?—Of course.

9940. Then in point of fact it is to Dr. Kinglake that you look, not immediately, but ultimately through Mr. Lovibond?—I expect so.

9941. Supposing (a great supposition) that Dr. Kinglake were to refuse authority to Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Mogg, for the repayment of this money, you would address yourself to Dr. Kinglake, I suppose, direct on the subject; supposing Mr. Mogg and Mr. Lovibond were to tell you that Dr. Kinglake absolutely refused to pay you the 500*l.*, would not you look to Dr. Kinglake ?—Well, I should apply to him for it.

9942. (Mr. Price.) It seems incomprehensible to me. The 500*l.* is gone that day out of the bank; you say you deposited a memorandum in your cash book, that is to say, "Memorandum D.," or whatever it may be, "500*l.* self" ?—Yes.

9943. Is that the way you entered it ?—Yes.

9944. "Memorandum D, self 500*l.*" ?—Yes.

9945. The cash book will show us that ?—No, the cash book would not.

9946. How would your partner, if he had been informed, or knew, as he might well, at the end of the day that 500*l.* had gone out of the bank for which no cheque was drawn, and which did not appear in the books—he would have made an investigation, I suppose; would he be satisfied as to that 500*l.* ?—That 500*l.* was coupled in with the gold for the day, and there did not appear to be any alteration in our cash.

9947. You must have had less by 500*l.* than in the morning ?—But then the memorandum stood in the place of the gold.

9948. Would not Mr. Sealey, if he had seen that, known? Supposing he had gone and balanced the books himself that night, he must have discovered it ?—Then he would not; he was not in the way.

9949. Then has it never been discovered or talked of from that time to this ?—Never, till yesterday.

9950. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you your cash book at the bank ?—Yes.

9951. I think the most satisfactory thing would be for you to bring us that here, and show us from that book how it is made out ?—The cash book would not show it.

9952. The cash book would show it negatively; it would show what you had not done which ought to have been done ?—It would.

9953. (Mr. Price.) If done in the ordinary way of business ?—It was not.

9954. But if it had, what would you have done? If a customer had come in, and you had given him 500*l.* over the counter, what would be the first thing ?—I ought to have debited him with it.

9955. In the day book ?—In our journal.

9956. But it would have gone through two or three, would not it ?—Yes.

9957. First, the book you keep on the counter ?—A journal, cash book, and ledger.

9958. And then at the end of the day they would balance each other ?—They would balance each other.

9959. With the balance you have in hand it ought to be a clear balance ?—Yes.

9960. And everything correspond ?—Of course.

9961. And if done in that way would [the deficiency of 500*l.* be discovered in any way by a clerk going through the balance ?—Of course it would.

9962. Then the clerk would find out at the end of the day there was a sum of 500*l.* gone ?—Yes.

9963. Would he not call the attention of the head of the bank if he did not find a security or memorandum in the books ?—Yes, but there was a memorandum put in with the gold showing there was 500*l.*

9964. (Mr. Coleridge.) Upon a separate bit of paper ?—Upon a separate bit of paper.

9965. (Mr. Price.) Then he would enter that memorandum ?—He would do so.

9966. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean that it went into the box with the gold ?—Yes; we do not count over our gold every day.

9967. (Mr. Price.) He would take it that the gold was not diminished; he would not see the memorandum ?—He would not.

9968. He would take it that the gold was not diminished ?—Yes.

9969. How would you check a clerk who chose to walk off with 500*l.* ?—I should be able to check it.

9970. How ?—Because I should.

9971. Supposing a clerk walked off with 500*l.*, how should you check it ?—We should soon find out that.

9972. By counting ?—Or by weighing.

9973. (Mr. Coleridge.) You never count gold; it is all done by weight ?—Chiefly done by weight.

9974. If you paid away 100*l.* over the counter you would weigh it ?—We count and weigh them.

9975. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you tell us that this is an isolated transaction ?—It was.

9976. Have you never personally on your own account taken out so large a sum as 500*l.*, and left no voucher for it ?—I have not.

9977. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you taken out any sum and left no voucher for it ?—I have not.

(Mr. Price.) You must get us that cash book.

9978. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it a regular or an irregular transaction, according to your ordinary way of business ?—Well, it certainly is irregular.

9979. According to your way of doing business ?—Yes.

9980. (Mr. Coleridge.) Since that transaction another year has come; did not you at the end of the year balance the accounts of the bank ?—Yes.

9981. The profits and loss, and everything ?—Yes.

9982. When you came to this 500*l.* how did you account for it to Mr. Sealey ?—That memorandum still remained in the gold.

9983. (Mr. Price.) Was it seen; a memorandum would not weigh anything ?—No.

9984. It would not weigh 500*l.* ?—No, but we do not weigh over our sovereigns.

9985. When you struck a balance at the end of the year, could 500*l.* have gone out of your sovereigns, supposing there was no paper put in, and never be discovered ?—I should have discovered it.

9986. Why ?—Because I took the most active part.

9987. How would you discover it ?—Because I go to the strong-room every day.

9988. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does Mr. Sealey never see the box in which this memorandum with the gold was put ?—He never interferes.

9989. Does he not from one end of the year to the other ?—He sees the books and gold there.

9990. Was this memorandum loose, or in a bag ?—It was put into a bag.

9991. With gold ?—With gold.

9993. (Mr. Price.) Are your bags 500*l.* each ?—We keep it in bags of 500*l.* for convenience.

9994. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing a person went to take a bag of 500*l.* by your direction—your son, I presume ?—Yes.

9995. Supposing he had taken two, and kept one himself on this occasion, how should you have found it out ?—I should have seen it, because he would have passed before me with the gold in his hand.

9996. Supposing he had taken the bags and concealed it ?—The memorandum was not in the bag when he took it.

9997. You were not in the room where the gold is kept when he took the bag ?—No.

9998. Supposing he had gone and taken two or three bags, taken advantage of those irregularities, and concealed one or two, and came to you with one, what was to prevent that ?—I should soon have found that out.

9999. (Mr. Price.) Then you would be the only person, as I understand, as between you and Mr. Sealey, who would have detected any such abstraction as that ?—I am.

10,000. The only person ?—The only person.

10,001. (Mr. Anstey.) Then why destroy the memorandum ?—Because I debited myself with it.

10,002. That was only yesterday ?—Because I did not wish Mr. Sealey to know.

10,003. When did you destroy this memorandum ?—Yesterday.

TENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

2 Sept. 1869.

10,004. (Mr. Coleridge.) After you had been examined here as a witness ?—Yes.

10,005. (Mr. Price.) That was very wrong indeed ?—I was not aware of it.

10,006. (Mr. Anstey.) Let us look at your subpœna ? (The witness handed it.)—I considered it was a document of my own—private.

10,007. You are not the person to judge of that.

10,008. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing is private to us.—If I have done wrong I did it in inexperience, I can only say that.

10,009. (Mr. Anstey.) What were the words of the memorandum ?—"J. P."

10,010. (Mr. Price.) You could not but suppose that this was a document which would come within one or other of these words : "You are to produce "all books, papers, deeds, and writings in your pos- "session or custody, or under your control, which re- "late to any of the matters to be inquired into by us." Were you quite sure that a matter inquired into by us would not be the money which passed into your hands, and this was a paper relating to this matter ?—It was my own paper.

(Mr. Price.) That makes no difference.

(Mr. Anstey.) Your papers are our papers.

10,011. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was written on it ?—"J. P., 500*l.*"

10,012. Is your name John Prior ?—Yes.

10,013. Was there any signature to it ?—Yes.

10,014. (Mr. Price.) I do not see your object in destroying it as far as Mr. Sealey is concerned. I suppose he reads the papers, and will read the history of this transaction ; therefore your destroying that, and debiting yourself with it does not seem to make any difference ?—If I have done wrong I have done so ignorantly.

10,015. (Mr. Anstey.) Surely. You were told that we could not go on to this part of the case without documentary evidence before us, and you were told to have the books in court to-day ; did not you understand that ?—Yes.

10,016. Did not we tell you distinctly that without the items, entries, and so on, referring to this matter, we could not satisfactorily to ourselves conclude your examination ; and then after being told that, you go and destroy the only voucher of this bribery transaction, namely, the paper which Mr. Mogg gave you when he rushed into the bank ?—Well, I was not aware that that was anything connected with the election.

10,017. It was your own memorandum ?—It was my own memorandum.

10,018. Made at the time ?—Made at the time.

10,019. (Mr. Coleridge.) Under what date have you debited yourself with this 500*l.*, yesterday's date ?—Yesterday's date.

10,020. Have you your books here ; we want your journal and cash book for last year ?

10,021. (Mr. Price.) Tell us why you debited yourself with this 500*l.* ?—Because from the evidence which I gave here yesterday I stated that Mr. Sealey knew nothing about it. He knew nothing about the transaction. It was a foolish thing for me at the time ; I was taken by surprise, and did it without thinking.

10,022. (Mr. Anstey.) Do not you know that other people knew of this transaction if Mr. Sealey did not ?—I was not aware of it.

10,023. Were you not aware it was the talk of the town ?—I was not aware of it.

10,024. You never heard that the people here were fully aware that money had been obtained at your bank over the counter that day by someone on behalf of Mr. Kinglake without a cheque ?—No, I never heard of it.

10,025. I am not a Bridgwater man, but I must say that I have heard of it.—I have not heard of it

Mr. Carey Bailey Mogg sworn.

Mr. C. B. Mogg.

10,026. (Mr. Price.) Are you a merchant carrying on business in Bridgwater ?—Yes.

10,027. Are you a member of any firm or in business for yourself ?—I am in business for myself.

10,028. Have you taken an active part in electioneering matters in this town ?—Well, I do not know ; I have taken an interest, not an active part.

10,029. But have you taken a part in the management of elections ?—No.

10,030. Have you been in consultation with anybody about the management of elections ?—Occasionally.

10,031. With whom ?—I am sure I cannot say.

10,032. With any of the lawyers ?—No.

10,033. Never ?—Never.

10,034. (Mr. Coleridge.) Always on the Liberal side I suppose ?—On the Liberal side.

10,035. (Mr. Price.) But never had any connexion with the lawyers regarding the management of election matters ?—Certainly not.

10,036. In any way whatever ?—In any way whatever.

10,037. Have you ever been entrusted with any secrets of theirs with regard to election matters ?—No.

10,038. None of them ?—No.

10,039. Have you never interfered in any way with regard to money matters at elections ?—Never in my life.

10,040. Did you go down to the bank on the day of the last election ?—I did.

10,041. How came you to go to the bank ?—Mr Lovibond asked me to deliver a message for him.

10,042. Did he not tell you what the message was ?—Yes ; "500*l.* to Allan."

10,043. Do not you call that having confidence reposed in you with regard to election matters ?—The last election ?

10,044. Yes ?—Yes.

10,045. I am asking you about the last election, whether you were in communication with the legal gentleman on election matters ?—The last election I was.

10,046. Then you were in communication with them ?—Mr. Lovibond.

10,047. How often ?—Only that once.

10,048. Had you had any conversation with him before you went down to the bank ?—No.

10,049. Nothing ?—Nothing except what I told you.

10,050. Did he come to you ?—He came to me.

10,051. Why did he select you to go down with a note "500*l.* to Allan" ?—He did not give me a note.

10,052. How came he to come and tell you to go ?—He came up to me in the street and asked me to deliver a message to Mr. Prior for "500*l.* to Allan."

10,053. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he say to Mr. Prior ?—Yes ; and in the excitement of the moment I went and did it.

10,054. (Mr. Price.) What excitement were you under ?—Electioneering excitement.

10,055. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you voted at that time ?—Yes.

10,056. (Mr. Price.) Then you have taken an active part in the last election ?—At that moment.

10,057. You say you were under excitement about the election ?—Yes.

10,058. You had taken an active part I suppose to excite you ?—Well, I am soon excited in election matters.

10,059. Then in a state of excitement you went down to the bank ?—I did.

10,060. Had you no other conversation with Mr. Lovibond whatever ?—Not any.

10,061. Did you know who Allan was ?—Yes.

10,062. That he was bribe agent ?—Yes.

10,063. And therefore Mr. Lovibond mentioned him as a person you perfectly knew ?—Yes.

10,064. You knew it was bribe money you were going for ?—I had no doubt about it.

10,065. And you did not refuse in the excitement of the moment to do so?—I did not.

10,066. You knew you were to go and get money at the bank to take it to Allan for the purpose of bribing it?—I did not take it, I was only to deliver the message.

10,067. You knew you were to be the means of getting the 500*l.* to be put into Allan's hands to bribe with?—Yes.

10,068. That is what you knew?—I thought so, I was not told it.

10,069. You had no doubt of it?—I had no doubt of it.

10,070. Were you ever asked at any time before in your life to take a message for money to Mr. Prior about money?—No.

10,071. (Mr. Anstey.) Therefore you went with the intention to get Allan 500*l.* to bribe with?—No doubt about it.

10,072. (Mr. Price.) You had voted you say?—Yes.

10,073. When you went to the bank and got this what did you do?—I saw two persons in the bank, and then I asked for some paper, and wrote down on that paper "500*l.* to Allan."

10,074. Who did you see at the bank?—I think it was Mr. Prior and his son.

10,075. Anybody else?—I did not.

10,076. What did you do after that?—Nothing.

10,077. You were not a customer of the bank?—No.

10,078. How did they know you as a person in authority from Mr. Lovibond?—They did not know it at all. I was very much surprised they did not ask me any question.

10,079. You were not a stranger to them?—Certainly not.

10,080. Your personal appearance was known?—Yes.

10,081. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Prior or his son give you to understand that he knew perfectly well that he knew someone was coming?—I thought it was made up before.

10,082. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you mention Mr. Lovibond's name to him?—I did not; I was in such an excited state that I forgot Mr. Lovibond altogether.

10,083. And all you said was "500*l.* to Allan"?—Yes.

10,084. And that you said on paper?—That I said on paper.

10,085. And you were so excited that you did not mention Mr. Lovibond?—I did not.

10,086. And you were not a customer of the bank, yet Mr. Prior immediately honoured your order?—He did.

10,087. What did he say to you?—Not a word passed more than that.

10,088. Did he say "Yes" or "All right"?—No, he handed it to his son.

10,089. Handed what?—The paper.

10,090. What did the son do?—I do not know.

10,091. You went away?—I went away.

10,092. You were told by Mr. Lovibond to deliver the message and immediately to leave. When he told you to deliver those words "500*l.* to Allan," did he also tell you "As soon as you have delivered the message to come away"?—No, he did not say anything. I did come away.

10,093. Then why did you come away immediately after you had put those words down on paper?—I had delivered my message, and had done with it.

10,094. He did not say "All right"?—No.

10,095. Neither of them?—Neither of them.

10,096. Was it in the bank parlour or the counter?—In the bank.

10097. In the office?—In the bank; in the public room.

10,098. You wrote it on paper for fear that it should be heard by other people?—I did.

10,099. And that is the reason why you did not speak?—Yes.

10,100. What o'clock was it?—I think about a quarter to three.

10,101. When you saw Mr. Lovibond first?—Yes.

10,102. Did you tell him "Our party," that is your party "is beaten"?—Yes.

10,103. Did you tell him also "The brickyard men of Brown's you know will not vote without being paid?—I had heard so.

10,104. You told him you had heard that?—Yes.

10,105. Were you still under the impression that they would not vote without being paid when you received the message from Mr. Lovibond?—Yes.

10,106. And that being so, you say you had never being engaged in a transaction of this kind before?—Never.

10,107. Did it not strike you that you were mixing yourself up in a discreditable transaction?—No, it did not. I was so excited I forgot where I was. That is how it is.

10,108. (Mr. Anstey.) You were three hours and a half active?—Yes; but the election was given up, and I went home to dinner.

10,109. (Mr. Price.) You had sufficient knowledge of what you were doing to know that you were going to get money to bribe with?—Yes.

10,110. You were sufficiently cool to know that?—No, Mr. Lovibond spoke to me. I was not.

10,111. Not what?—Cool enough.

10,112. Enough to be aware that you were asked to get money to bribe with?—Yes.

10,113. Then as you were cool enough to know that Mr. Lovibond wanted you to go and order this money to bribe with, did not it strike you as a man in your position, that it was a transaction that you ought to have had nothing to do with?—I had no time to think about it, I did not think at all.

10,114. Had not Mr. Lovibond spoken to you about making yourself useful the day before?—No.

10,115. When had you first any conversation as to the part you should take?—Then.

10,116. Did he come into the house?—He met me in the street.

10,117. And merely upon that representation, you having voted and done with your own voting, you went down and asked for this sum of money?—I did.

10,118. You knew perfectly well what the money was for?—No doubt about it.

10,119. Who told you these men would not vote without being paid?—The report was in the town.

10,120. Who told you?—I cannot say now.

10,121. Had Mr. Lovibond told you?—No.

10,122. Any of the lawyers?—Not one of them.

10,123. Was it any official person who told you?—No.

10,124. Any personal friend of yours?—It was generally reported.

10,125. By any personal friend?—No.

10,126. Any member of your family?—No.

10,127. Then I do not understand if there was no teller how you could have heard of it?—It was reported in the town that Brown's people would not vote unless they were paid.

10,128. Then if you did not hear that report the fact of their being such a report would not have informed you?—I did hear.

10,129. Who indicated it to you?—I cannot say. I heard it from hundreds.

10,130. Hundreds of persons told you?—I do not know; a large quantity.

10,131. How many persons did you describe under that name "Brickyard men of Brown & Co."?—I should think 400 or 500.

10,132. Are they all new voters?—I do not know that.

10,133. Are all those men voters?—I cannot say.

10,134. Most of them are?—I should think so.

10,135. Who had never voted before?—I cannot say.

10,136. You say most of them were new voters?—I did not know one in 20 of them.

TENTH DAY.

Mr. C. B. Mogg.

2 Sept. 1869.

10,137. But from your knowledge of their condition in life should you be of opinion that those who were voters would have no vote but for the last reform Act?—I should think whether old or new voters they would all take the money.

10,138. But from your knowledge of the place would you say they were men in that condition who were enfranchised the first time by Mr. Disraeli's Act?—I should think many of them were old voters.

10,139. But the majority of them?—I cannot say; I do not know.

10,140. (Mr. Price.) Do you employ men under yourself?—I do.

10,141. How many?—Several.

10,142. How many?—Four or five.

10,143. Voters?—Yes.

10,144. How do they vote?—With me.

10,145. (Mr. Anstey.) Whichever way that is; whichever way you go?—I do not know that.

10,146. But always with you?—Two were new voters.

10,147. And they voted with you?—Yes.

10,148. As the old ones had?—Yes.

10,149. Then it strikes me as being an extraordinary thing if you had not taken a more active part at the last election that Mr. Lovibond should have rushed up to you to make you a co-conspirator with him unless you had taken an active part. I cannot understand it; therefore, unless you make some fuller disclosure it will be a very great question whether we shall believe you are giving us the whole truth?—I know nothing else.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then it was very extraordinary to make you go, a stranger in bribing matters, if you had not been in their secrets, or taken a more active part than you say.

10,150. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Lovibond put him and his party entirely in your power. Was he likely to have done that unless there was some reason for knowing that you should be trusted? Had you done anything at former elections for them to know that you were a fit and proper person to undertake a delicate matter?—I had not done anything with him, or voted with him.

10,151. But had you done anything at all? I do not say anything about money, but shown by your zeal at former elections that you were a person to be trusted?—To be trusted.

10,152. Yes?—No doubt about that.

10,153. Had you business relations with Lovibond?—No.

10,154. Were you a client of his?—Yes.

10,155. (Mr. Price.) Under pecuniary obligations to him?—Not the least in the world.

10,156. And never been?—I have never been.

10,157. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you had money transactions or business transactions of any kind with him?—Never in my life.

10,158. Then you must give us some reason why in your opinion Mr. Lovibond selected you to become a bribe agent?—I do not think he selected me, first of all. He selected some others first.

10,159. Whom did he select first of all?—I do not know.

10,160. Why do you think he selected others?—Because I have been told so.

10,161. Who told you?—Mr. Ford.

10,162. Mr. Ford told you what?—That he had asked a person before me.

10,163. And who was that person?—I do not know.

10,164. And that person had refused?—I suppose so.

10,165. Mr. Lovibond being refused by that person, whoever it was, came to you and asked you. What reason had Mr. Lovibond for supposing that you would, without a word of explanation, immediately undertake the office of bribery agent, and put yourself on a level with the Bussells and Allans, and those he had previously employed?—I cannot say that.

10,166. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you have four or five men; two are new voters. How many voters altogether have you under you?—Four.

10,167. Are any of them persons who had been bribed on this occasion?—Not to my knowledge. Yes, I beg your pardon, two.

10,168. (Mr. Price.) What names?—George Luckes and Frederick Jones.

10,169. Did you tell them where to go and get the money?—I?

10,170. Yes?—Never in my life.

10,171. Did you tell them you had been getting money for Allan, and Allan would pay them?—I did not know they were bribed until I saw Mr. Bussell's evidence.

10,172. (Mr. Anstey.) Were they two new voters?—Two old ones.

10,173. Were the other men in your employ old or new?—New.

10,174. Did they get bribed?—I do not know.

10,175. What names?—William Court and John Cuff.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

10,176. (Mr. Anstey.) Are either of these names known to you as men who receive bribes?—I do not recollect at that last election.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

10,177. (Mr. Anstey.) Are either of those names known to you?—Luckes has been returned. He did not vote for the last election. He was not here; Cuff was.

10,178. Was he bribed?—Not that I know of.

10,179. Did not Luckes vote?—He was not here.

10,180. Was he bribed?—No.

10,181. We are asking about this election. Were either of the four men bribed at this election?—Three at this election; three voted.

10,182. Were they all three bribed?—I do not know.

10,183. Was the other man bribed, Jones?—Jones had no vote.

10,184. Luckes?—He was not here.

10,185. The other man?—Torr was here.

10,186. (To the witness.) Is that a man in your employment?—Yes, he was mate of my vessel.

10,187. You have not told us his name. You say Cuff, and Jones, and Court, and another man. Was he a new voter or an old one?—A new one.

10,188. Any relation of Torr, the Wesleyan preacher?—I cannot say. I think not.

10,189. Did he vote?—Yes.

10,190. Did he get any money for it?—Not to my knowledge.

10,191. (To Allan.) Do you know that name?

(Bussell.) I do not know him; he is master of a vessel.

(Mr. Anstey.) Did he get any money?

(Bussell.) No.

(Mr. Anstey.) Did he ask for any?

(Bussell.) He asked me afterwards for his expenses. I telegraphed for this Torr.

(Mr. Price.) That is one of the men you telegraphed for?

(Bussell.) Yes, and he asked me for his expenses.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Was he one of those you gave 5*l.* to?

(Bussell.) No, that was a former election.

(Mr. Anstey.) Did you promise Torr?

(Bussell.) I told Torr if I could get anything for him I would.

TENTH DAY.

H. C. Bussell.

2 Sept. 1869.

(Mr. Anstey.) For his vote?

(Bussell.) For his expenses.

10,192. (Mr. Anstey.) But for his vote did you promise him anything?—No.

10,193. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is Torr's christian name?

(Bussell.) George Torr.

10,194. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) Have you anything else to tell us, because it is not a satisfactory account which you give of the way you were mixed up in this transaction of the 500*l.*?—Nothing at all.

10,195. You best know whether you wish it to go forth that you, an apparently respectable man, without having done anything of the kind before, consented at once to become bribe agent, because Mr. Lovibond, to whom you were under no obligations, asked you?—The only excuse I can make is that I went in the excitement of the moment, without thinking about it.

10,196. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the first election you voted at?—I cannot tell you now.

10,197. In 1835?—Forty years ago.

10,198. Have you at any election from that time to this received or given anything to any person for a vote at any election?—Never in my life.

10,199. (Mr. Anstey.) Is this Luckes' name James?—George.

10,200. What is James Luckes?—I do not know.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

H. C. Bussell.

10,201. (Mr. Anstey.) You also telegraphed to James Luckes, did not you?—Yes, I did.

10,202. You brought him from Cardiff?—Yes, he was in another employ.

10,203. Was he anything to George Luckes?—A brother.

10,204. Did he get a bribe?—I never saw him at all, and he has never spoken to me since about the matter. It appears he came over and voted, but I never saw him at all.

10,205. Who saw him?—I do not know who; I never saw him.

10,206. Did you not meet him at a quarter to three, as he was going over the bridge, and say to him, "Luckes, have you polled"?—That is another brother again.

10,207. No, the same one I am asking you about?—No, that is William Luckes.

10,208. I am quoting from the report of the proceedings before Mr. Justice Blackburn. "Did he get "any money for his vote?—I do not know whether he "had it from our opponents; he did not have anything, "not from us." Did you promise him anything?—I did.

10,209. Did he ask for any?—No; he stood on the bridge. A lot of men who stood by said to me, "Here is Luckes up there. Why do not you go and speak to him?" I said, "I do not like to have anything to do with him." I can get witnesses to prove that.

10,210. Why not?—I thought he was rather a dangerous customer to have anything to do with in election matters. I was afraid he would go and tell if I had anything to do with him.

10,211. Had he generally voted in the Conservative interest?—He had, and generally voted without money, and had gone for them, and he wanted it at former elections from us.

10,212. This is another instance of one brother taking bribes on one side, and another the other side?—I believe he is the first who ever did.

10,213. Nevertheless, you sent that telegraphic message to him?—To James, another brother.

10,214. Did you send a telegraphic message to William Luckes?—No, he was here at the time.

10,215. But you are stated on the evidence of James Luckes himself, not William, before Mr. Justice Blackburn, to have sent him a telegram?—That is right.

10,216. To have brought him over by that telegram, and then on the day of the poll to have met him going over the bridge at about 15 minutes to three. The rest I will give you in his own words. "Captain Bussell "said 'Luckes, have you polled?' I said, 'Hours "'ago, sir.' That is all I said to Bussell, and all "Bussell said to me"?—I do not recollect seeing any of the Luckes, only the one, that is William Luckes. I do not recollect seeing any of the others.

10,217. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you go, Mr. Mogg, I think it fair to tell you, on this point I, for one, and, I believe the other Commissioners also, at all events I for one, shall require a great deal more information before we consider you have given any answer to our question—the question I put to you, to which the answer I got from you at last was "I can-"not explain it," that is to say, "Was there any "previous communication with Mr. Lovibond, which "could have made him believe that he would find in "you a ready bribery agent?" I do not consider you have answered that. You say you cannot explain it more than you have?—I cannot answer it more than I have just now.

(Mr. Anstey.) You had better think over it, and give your explanation at a subsequent hour of the day, if possible, otherwise, I am afraid it will be very hard against you.

10,218. (Mr. Price.) Had there been any intimate relations between you and Mr. Lovibond of any kind whatever?—I had been on terms of friendship with him.

10,219. Intimate friendship?—Yes.

10,220. Had there been any communication between you and him as to the mode in which elections had been conducted?—We had a conversation.

10,221. Had you ever had any communication with Mr. Lovibond as to the mode in which elections had been conducted?—No. He never spoke to me on the subject that money had been spent at elections.

10,222. (Mr. Anstey.) You must also give some explanation of the facility, with which you, a stranger to the bank were trusted in the way in which you describe yourself to have been by Mr. Prior, without any person being there on Mr. Lovibond's behalf, and without your having told them that you came from Mr. Lovibond?—Perhaps Mr. Prior will explain that to you.

10,223. No, I will have it from you?—I cannot answer more than I have.

(Mr. Anstey.) Very well. The same remark applies to that answer.

Mr. W. JOHN FORD recalled.

Mr. W. J. Ford.

10,224. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Mogg tells us that you said to him that Mr. Lovibond had applied to somebody else to do this work, and that person was refused?—Yes.

10,225. Who was that person?—That Mr. Lovibond spoke to?

10,226. Yes?—Charles Robert Bate. We happened to meet in last evening, and I told him then.

10,227. I understood from Mr. Mogg that you told him at the time?—Only last night.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR recalled.

Mr. J. Prior.

10,228. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you the books?—Yes. (The witness produced some banking books.)

10,229. Which is the journal?—This is it.

10,230. Turn to the entry of the 15th November?—The 17th November it is.

10,231. Is Mr. Andrew Allan a customer of your bank?—He is.

TENTH DAY.
Mr. J. Prior.
2 Sept. 1869.

10,232. Did he on the day before the election, draw out a sum of 42*l.* 10*s.* ?—If it is entered there.

10,233. Is this entry the day before the election (referring) ?—This is a credit to Allan.

10,234. It does not show who it was paid in by ?—No, we do not put it. For instance, if John Thomas paid in anything for himself, we should put in John Thomas's name ; but where it is paid in by anybody else, it is concluded.

10,235. Is this the side "drawn out" ?—No ; this is the debit side, and this is the credit side.

10,236. (Mr. Price.) Where is the transaction of Dr. Kinglake's cheque paid in on that day, where would it have appeared ?—It would have appeared in this book, had it been cashed.

10,237. On Monday 16th ?—No, on Tuesday.

10,238. Where would it appear here, if you had paid the 1,000*l.* ?—If it had been cashed it would have appeared here. We cashed a cheque of 10*l.* for Dr. Kinglake, and that was sent on to the bank.

10,239. (Mr. Price.) It ought to have appeared there, if it had been carried out ?—Yes.

10,240. Show us the book in which the 500*l.* would have appeared, if it had been properly drawn out by cheque that day ?—This is the book (referring).

10,241. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is that ?—This is the cash book of the 17th.

10,242. Where is the book in which you have debited yourself with that 500*l.* last night ?—When I say "last night," it was done this morning. I did not go to the bank last night.

10,243. (Mr. Price.) What is that ? When was that drawn out ?—That is from our London bankers.

10,244. Is that a debit to Mr. Lovibond ?—That is a debit to Mr. Lovibond.

10,245. When was that drawn out ?—I cannot tell the date of the cheque.

10,246. You say it came through the London house ?—From Williams. Williams's is our London bank.

10,247. He must have drawn a cheque which went to London ?—Yes.

10,248. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is Williams, Deacon, and Co., I suppose ?—Williams and Deacon.

10,249. Now show us where you have debited it ?—Here (pointing to the book).

(Mr. Coleridge.) "John Prior. Money 500*l.* Re Kinglake. Lovibond. Per Allan."

10,250. (Mr. Anstey.) How much is it ?—500*l.*

10,251. No interest ?—No. I have not charged it.

10,252. No ; but you have not debited yourself with interest ?—I have not.

10,253. (Mr. Coleridge.) When Mr. Sealey looks at this book, he must know all about that, just the same as if the memorandum had been kept ?—Oh yes.

10,254. Then what is the object of destroying the memorandum ?—I was not aware that I was doing wrong myself. It did not show any particular transaction connected with the election.

10,255. (Mr. Anstey.) What did the memorandum contain which you destroyed ?—"J. P. 500*l.*"

10,256. Nothing else ?—Nothing more.

10,257. What date ?—The 17th November.

10,258. Anything about the election ?—No.

10,259. What was your motive in destroying it ?—I thought it was of no consequence when I had debited myself with it. There was nothing said about election purposes.

10,260. (Mr. Price.) I understand you to mean to represent you kept this, so as at any time to be ready to show to Mr. Sealey that you meant to debit yourself with it ?—I did.

10,261. (Mr. Anstey.) Where did you keep it ?—In the bag with the gold.

10,262. Always ?—Yes.

10,263. In the bag with what gold ?—In another parcel of gold, another bag of gold.

10,264. I do not understand you. The gold to which that memorandum referred was surely spent and gone ?—No.

10,265. The 500*l.* mentioned in the memorandum, had all been spent and gone ?—Oh no.

10,266. I thought you gave the 500*l.* to your son to take down to Andrew Allan ?—I did that.

10,267. Where did you put that ?—In the adjoining bag.

10,268. For what earthly purpose did you do that, the adjoining bag having nothing to do with the transaction ?—No. It was to show that I had taken the money.

10,269. I do not understand you. How would it show that ? It would show that you had not taken the money with which the memorandum was, that is all it would show. You say there were bags of 500*l.* each ?—Yes.

10,270. When were those bags filled ?—Oh, perhaps a twelvemonth or more before.

10,271. One of those bags is abstracted ?—Yes.

10,272. Then, in lieu of the bag, you left no memorandum in its place, but you put a memorandum in another bag which is not abstracted and which has nothing to do with it. Allow me to ask you this : If any calamity had befallen you or your son, and after your death this matter had been inquired into, how would the memorandum, if it contained nothing more than you say it contained, in a full bag of 500*l.*, show that there had been another bag of 500*l.*, which had been emptied by you on the day named ? Just consider that ?—That memorandum of mine would show I was accountable for 500*l.*

10,273. How would it do that. It did not say, "Debtor to the bag." On the contrary, it might have meant, if it is only what you describe it, and that makes me regret more that I have not got it ; it would rather show that you were the owner, or claimed to be the owner, of 500*l.* in the bag, where you put that memorandum. All that you say in the memorandum is this : "17th Novr. 1868. J. P. 500*l.*" Would not any person finding that memorandum, and counting the money in the bag in which he found it, say, "Oh, this "must mean that this bag of 500*l.* belongs to J. P.—"Mr. Prior" ?—I do not keep any private bag there, you know.

10,274. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say, in answer to what Mr. Anstey suggests, that if you had died the next day, and your son had not known anything of the transaction, or if he had been absent from England, that by finding that memorandum in that full bag, Mr. Sealy would have judged that you owed the bag 500*l.* ?—Yes, he would.

10,275. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it not the case of a book in a library ? When a person takes out a book in a library, he puts a memorandum of his having taken it, and he puts it in the place where the book was ?—Yes.

10,276. But if he put it in the middle of another book which is not taken out, what would it show ?—I put it in the bag so that it might not be lost sight of.

10,277. By whom ?—Yes.

10,278. But you and your son were the only persons in the bank privy to the transaction ?—Yes.

10,279. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would it not have been better to have put it into the empty bag to represent the gold ?—It would have been so ; I did not think of that at the time.

10,280. (Mr. Price.) If you had done that it would have disclosed to anybody who had gone there that 500*l.* had gone ?—Yes.

10,281. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure that that memorandum did not show, on the face of it, some earmark by which that missing money could have been traced, more than what you have said ?—As I have represented, the memorandum was "J. P. 500*l.*"

10,282. Are you sure it contained nothing more than that ?—Nothing more than that.

10,283. Then it contained nothing at all according to you ? Is that what you mean to say ?—It showed that I was accountable for it.

10,284. (Mr. Coleridge.) Just tell me about this. Here is Reed and Cook, the day after the election, 310*l.* ?—Yes.

10,285. What is that ? Is that drawn out or paid in ?—That was paid in.

10,286. By Reed and Cook?—By Reed and Cook.

10,287. And here is another 100*l.* paid in by Reed and Cook?—Paid in to Paul Reed.

10,288. Two days after the election here is 371*l.* paid in by Henry Lovibond?—Yes.

10,289. Is he a regular customer of the bank?—Yes.

10,290. That had nothing to do with the repaying of the 500*l.*?—Oh no, not at all.

10,291. (Mr. Anstey.) Who goes to get the gold when more gold is wanted on the counter?—I generally take it.

10,292. Who else?—It is open for the rest.

10,293. And no other clerk was privy to it except your son?—No.

10,294. I ask you this question supposing more gold being wanted on a given day on the counter, some clerk, not your son, went in and took out this bag which contained the memorandum, and emptied the contents on the table, what would become of the memorandum?—He would have seen it.

10,295. But supposing he did not see it. Supposing that in turning it out it was lost, where would have been your voucher then?—We keep sufficient gold in the banking room from day to day for the purposes of the day, we keep a great deal more in our banking room.

10,296. Supposing a run on the bank happened to come one day, that is the meaning of my question, then you would have to go and get the gold out of this room into the public room?—Yes.

10,297. Supposing a person came to ask for 500*l.*, you would give him the bag and gold and all?—No, we would not.

10,298. Did you not give away this bag?—Yes, I did; that is not our ordinary practice.

10,299. You gave the bag as well?—The bag and all went.

10,300. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you deviated from your ordinary practice on that occasion?—I did.

(Mr. Price.) It is my duty to inform you that we entertain a very strong opinion as to the impropriety of your conduct in destroying that document last night, because although it may be perfectly true, as you profess, that you have given us a true account with regard to what took place as to this 500*l.*, it cannot but strike us as a matter of suspicion, that the document which was a kind of record of the transaction at the time, has been destroyed by you, and cannot be inspected by us. It is the more to be reprehended of course considering your position, and we are convinced that it is a matter which cannot be passed over without rebuke, and we intend to consider during the course of this inquiry what further light we shall consider that conduct in; but I make this announcement to you now on the part of myself and my brother Commissioners, as a warning to all persons who are summoned here as witnesses, that it is their bounden duty, whether it may be supposed their examination has been concluded or not, it is their bounden duty according to the tenor of the summons which they have received, to produce at once when they are called into the witness-box "every "document, paper, and writing which has relation to "the matter" upon which they are called as witnesses. That was a document which had an important relation and bearing upon the matters which you came here to depose to, and the destruction of a document under those circumstances is a very great contempt of the court before which you appear. Now under those circumstances, Mr. Prior, we shall consider whether any other notice ought to be taken of it; but we wish that to go forth to the public and to the persons who will be called here, in order that if we should have occasion to visit with punishment conduct of that kind on the part of any other person, it may not be said that we passed over lightly, and without the gravest censure, conduct of a similar kind pursued by a person in your position in the town.

10,301. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you destroyed it last night?—I did.

10,302. But you also said that you made that entry in the book this morning, and not last night, because you did not go the bank last night?—Yes.

10,303. How could you destroy that document last night if you did not go to the bank?—I only went to the strong room. I merely went to the bag and destroyed it. I did not go into the bank.

10,304. Have you got the pieces?—No, I have not.

10,305. What has become of them?—I dare say they have gone into the fire.

10,306. Is there a fire there?—No; the person who clears our offices, and takes the waste paper away is allowed to burn them.

10,307. (Mr. Coleridge.) Could you find them if you were to take the trouble?—I think not. I beg to state that what I did was done ignorantly. I had no idea of any contempt of court at all. I take it as a private memorandum of my own, and not for election purposes.

(Mr. Price.) It is with that view that we have not visited upon you a very heavy fine for contempt of court; but still at the same time we could not allow it to pass, particularly as it is in the case of a gentleman in your position in the town, without stating that you committed a gross contempt of court in destroying that paper, and that it was deserving every mark of reprehension on our part.

(Mr. Anstey.) And understand we reserve even now our determination as to whether we shall deal further with this contempt or not.

Mr. John Lovell Sealey sworn.

Mr. J. L. Sealey.

10,308. (Mr. Price.) You are the head of the firm of Sealey, Prior, & Co., are you not?—Yes, myself and Mr. Prior.

10,309. Yourself and Mr. Prior are the firm—Yes.

10,310. You have no other partner?—No.

10,311. Now we will go at once to the matter we have been examining Mr. Prior to. Is it the fact that you knew nothing at all of this transaction at the last election?—Nothing whatever.

10,312. Then are we to understand that you took so little interest or interfered so little in the matter of balancing up the accounts and seeing what amount there was that an abstraction of 500*l.* from your coffers during the day should be undiscovered for a twelvemonth?—It was done in a way purposely to conceal it from me.

10,313. And do you mean to say that your partner could abstract 500*l.* in a day or any day from your bank without its being discovered by you?—He not only did abstract it, but I was not aware of it till within three or four days ago. I consulted my other clerk about it, and he was not aware of it either.

10,314. (Mr. Anstey.) Could he abstract any amount he pleased?—Well, no, I do not say that.

10,315. (Mr. Price.) What limit would you give him?—I cannot tell.

10,316. Has he taken out 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.* at an election?—No.

10,317. (Mr. Anstey.) You heard probably there was a little agreement the night before which would have led to the abstraction of 1,000*l.*?—

(Mr. Price.) Without a cheque?—What agreement?

10,318. Dr. Kinglake had called the night before, and had paid in a cheque of 1,000*l.*?—I heard Dr. Kinglake's name mentioned for the first time last Sunday.

10,319. This was the state of things represented by Mr. Prior?—I never heard of a cheque of 1,000*l.*

10,320. We want to ask you a question. Mr. Prior said Dr. Kinglake came in the night before and handed

TENTH DAY.
Mr. J. L. Sealey.
2 Sept. 1869.

him a cheque as his bankers for 1,000*l.*, but it was not to be entered in your books to Mr. Kinglake's account, but it was to be held as a kind of security if Mr. Lovibond required 1,000*l.* for Mr. Kinglake's election, and that he was to hear from Mr. Lovibond about it. Now was it possible that the whole of that 1,000*l.* could be abstracted from your coffers any day without its appearing in your books, and without your getting a knowledge of it until a year afterwards?—The 1,000*l.* was a cheque as I understand it.

10,321. Yes?—Lodged with Mr. Prior.

10,322. Not entered in your books in the ordinary way?—No, clearly not.

10,323. (Mr. Anstey.) A cheque to be lodged in your bank in his hands or his private house?—I presume he put it in his pocket.

10,324. (Mr. Anstey.) No; he kept it in his drawer.

(Mr. Price.) Was that a thing which your partner had a right to do?—It is impossible to draw the line. You may take a sovereign more or a sovereign less. It is impossible to say how much he might take without my finding it out, but this money was taken without my detecting it.

10,325. Can you give us any idea of how you account for the fact that Mr. Prior, a partner of yours, should lend himself to a transaction of that kind which he has studiously endeavoured to conceal from you; can you account for that?—Yes, I can account for it. He did not wish me to know it clearly.

10,326. Why?—He knew that I should have been vexed at it.

10,327. Had he mixed himself up so much in political matters or with Mr. Lovibond as to agree to become co-conspirator with him for bribing purposes?—I do not believe there was any agreement whatever.

10,328. Mr. Prior says there was. Dr. Kinglake comes and says to him, "Here is a cheque for 1,000*l.*; "keep it, but do not let your partner know it, and let "us have the 1,000*l.* to-morrow if Mr. Lovibond "wants it."

(Mr. Anstey.) On an oral demand?

(Mr. Price.) And without a cheque?

10,329. (Mr. Anstey.) And the whole or any part if Mr. Lovibond should require it?—What is your question?

10,330. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything in Mr. Prior's political life and intimacy with Mr. Lovibond, which can account for such a transaction between him and Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Lovibond kept an account at our bank, and so far there was an equal relationship between us in the way of business.

10,331. Is that what operated on your mind?—In what way?

10,332. The fact of his keeping an account. One would suppose it ought not to have been kept from you if it was a bonâ fide transaction?—It was not a bonâ fide transaction.

10,333. Why did he wish to keep it from you?—Because it was a transaction they wished to suppress, and did not wish to appear.

10,334. Why?—Because it was money they wished to spend in corrupt practices.

10,335. Did Mr. Prior wish you to know it?—He says he did.

10,336. Would either of them, according to your opinion, either Dr. Kinglake or Mr. Lovibond, or Mr. Mogg, dare to make to you the same proposal as they did to Mr. Prior?—No.

10,337. (Mr. Anstey.) The chairman put this question to you, and I should like to hear it answered. Do you remember anything of any kind in Mr. Prior's antecedents which would lead them to think that he would be more easily dealt with, and induced to take a part in bribery, than you would?—I remember some cheques being cashed in 1866. I think I have communicated it to Mr. Purcell.

10,338. (Mr. Price.) Will you be good enough to tell us about it?—That which I remember about it is this——

10,339. Is that Vanderbyl's election?—Vanderbyl's election, 1866. I went into the bank rather earlier than usual; about 20 minutes to nine, and Mr. Prior showed me a cheque of 100*l.* I had the keys; and he said to me, "Mr. Barham wants me to give him gold for this cheque." I made a remark upon that.

10,340. You must tell us what you said?—I said, "What the devil do you come to me on such a transaction as that for." That is all I know.

10,341. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the amount of the cheque?—100*l.*

10,342. A cheque on your bank, or some other bank?—No; I have referred to it since Mr. Purcell spoke to me. It was on a bank at Manchester.

10,343. (Mr. Price.) Brogden's bank?—Brogden's cheque.

10,344. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you say, "What the devil do you come to me on such a transaction as this for"? What transaction did you allude to?—It spoke for itself. It was Brogden's cheque.

10,345. (Mr. Price.) You knew Brogden was down here on the election, and you knew Barham was acting for the party?—I presumed Barham was acting for the party, by bringing the cheque and asking for gold.

10,346. That was a transaction which you became aware of yourself, and which leads you to suppose that that was the reason that Mr. Lovibond induced Mr. Prior to act himself as an agent?—No.

10,347. (Mr. Anstey.) That was my question to you just now, and to that question you have made that answer?—Will you kindly repeat it.

10,348. (Mr. Price.) You were asked what reason you had for supposing that Mr. Lovibond thought he could deal more easily with Mr. Prior than he could with you, with respect to this transaction?—I suppose he thought he could deal more easily with a clerk than with a principal. Mr. Prior, although he is my partner, was my clerk at one time, and was also clerk to my father for a great many years, and I suppose he thought he could deal with a clerk more easily than with the principal.

10,349. You said you remembered some cheques being cashed in 1866, and that Mr. Prior showed you a cheque for 100*l.*, and said that Barham wanted gold for it, and thereupon you rebuked him, and I thought you were going on to say that that led you to believe in consequence, that they thought your partner could be more easily dealt with than you?—No, nothing of the sort.

10,350. Then why did you give us the anecdote of 1866?—I suppose I misunderstood the question.

10,351. (Mr. Anstey.) I will repeat my question to you, to which that statement of yours was certainly an answer. My question is certainly answered, or unanswered. If it is unanswered, you will please to answer it at once. What was there in the antecedents of Mr. Prior, which should have led Dr. Kinglake, the night before the election, and Mr. Lovibond on the day of the election, and Mr. Mogg on the same day, to suppose that a mala fide transaction of this kind, could be more easily accomplished through him than through you?—I do not understand the question.

10,352. I understand that you said it was not a bonâ fide transaction?—Clearly.

10,353. Then, if it was not bonâ fide, it was mala fide?—Clearly.

10,354. And you say you suppose the reason they did not come to you was, that they thought you would not approve of such a thing?—I think that was it.

10,355. Now I ask you again, what was there in the antecedents of Mr. Prior, the mala fides, if you do not know what that means, I will explain it to you, which should have induced Mr. Mogg, Mr. Lovibond, and Dr. Kinglake, the three agents, to suppose that Mr. Prior could be more dealt with than you?—How can I say what induced Dr. Kinglake to do it, or what induced Mr. Lovibond to do it, or Mr. Mogg, or anybody else.

10,356. What was there in the antecedents of Mr. Prior, that should induce them to think he could be more easily dealt with than you?—I think that why they went to Mr. Prior, and not to me, was because they thought they would receive a sharp answer from from me, and that from him they would not.

10,357. Why should they think that they would not receive a sharp answer from him?—Because he is a man of a milder temper than I am.

(Mr. Price.) In answer to Mr. Anstey's question as to whether you knew anything of Mr. Prior's antecedents, which you supposed would induce them to think that he could be more easily dealt with than you, you volunteered a statement that you remembered that some cheques were cashed in 1866, which I understood you gave as a reason why he could be more easily dealt with. Perhaps it would be better that the short-hand writer should read the answer.

(Mr. Anstey.) He had better read both my question and the witness's answer to it.

The short-hand writer then read the question and answer as follows:—"Mr. Anstey: Do you remember anything of any kind, in Mr. Prior's antecedents, which would lead them to think that he would be more easily dealt with, and induced to take a part in bribery, than you would?—Answer: I remember some cheques being cashed in 1866. I have communicated it to Mr. Purcell."

10,358. (Mr. Price.) You volunteered that as an answer to my friends question as to whether you knew of anything in the antecedents of Mr. Prior, or his relations politically with Mr. Lovibond, which would lead Mr. Lovibond to think that he could be more easily dealt with than yourself. In answer to that question you say there was a transaction with regard to some cheques in 1866, and therefore you gave that as a reason why Mr. Lovibond could more easily deal with him?—I wish to state that as a transaction in 1866.

10,359. You gave that as an answer when you were asked if you knew anything in the antecedent of Mr. Prior, and you then said "I knew of those cheques?"—It is perfectly true.

10,360. (Mr. Anstey.) One of those cheques was for 100*l.*?—Yes.

10,361. What were the others?—The other was one of 300. I communicated it to Mr. Purcell.

10,362. Never mind, Mr. Purcell. Who presented that cheque to be cashed?—Mr. Prior told me when I came into the bank, "Mr. Barham wishes me to cash him this cheque in gold." I believe those were his words.

10,363. That is the 300*l.* cheque?—No, the 100*l.*

10,364. I am asking you about the 300*l.* cheque?—My attention was not drawn to the 300*l.* cheque at all.

10,365. I asked you the question just now, what were the other cheques besides the 100*l.*, and then you began, "There was one of 300*l.*" Was that one of the cheques to which you referred as having in 1866 produced a certain impression on your mind with regard to Mr. Prior?—No, I referred to that as having been cashed by Mr. Prior. I do not know that it produced any particular impression.

10,366. Who presented it?—I understood Mr. Barham presented it.

10,367. And upon what bank was that cheque drawn?—It was drawn on a Manchester bank.

10,368. And the 100*l.* cheque the same?—Yes, both.

10,369. Do you remember whether it was on the polling day that these two cheques were presented by Barham?—The first one, the 100*l.* one, was shown to me on the morning of the election day.

10,370. The polling day?—Yes, the polling day.

10,371. When were you told of the 300*l.*?—I do not think I saw the 300*l.*

10,372. When were you told of it?—I do not think I was told of it at all.

10,373. You said just now that Mr. Prior had told you that Mr. Barham wanted the 300*l.* cheque cashed also?—No, nothing of the kind.

10,374. I understood you to refer to the 300*l.*, and not the 100*l.* I wish you would attend to the questions?—I am giving you all the attention I possibly can.

10,375. What was the transaction about the 300*l.*?—All I know about it was, that the cheque of 300*l.* drawn on the bank at Manchester had been cashed.

10,376. (Mr. Price.) After it had been cashed?—After it had been cashed.

10,377. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you see it?—I believe it was on the evening of the polling day, I am not sure.

10,378. When had it been cashed?—I believe it had been cashed that same day; that is my belief.

10,379. Had you been consulted by Mr. Prior about it, as you had been about the 100*l.*?—As an answer, may I refer to the answer I gave to Mr. Prior when he brought me the first cheque?

10,380. Will you answer the question, yes or no?—I objected to the cashing of the first, and I presume I should have objected to the cashing of the second.

10,381. (Mr. Coleridge.) You would not carry your objection so far as not to allow it to be cashed?—No, I only went so far as the strong-room door, and I did not get the money.

10,382. It was cashed?—Yes.

10,383. Is there anything in your books to show it was cashed in gold or notes?—Yes.

10,384. How was it cashed, in notes?—In notes.

10,385. (Mr. Anstey.) And the 100*l.*?—Yes.

10,386. Did you speak to Mr. Prior, or remonstrate with him with respect to his coming to you on that morning in that unusual way for the purpose of getting that cheque cashed for Barham, which was drawn on a bank at Manchester?—No.

10,387. Are they both signed by Brogden?—Both signed by Brogden.

10,388. Would there be any entry of the names, dates, and amounts in your books?—I have referred to it, and it is as I have stated. I will refer to it again if you wish it.

10,389. First of all, before you do that, was there any other cheque?—No, not at that time.

10,390. Those were the only two?—That is all.

10,391. (Mr. Coleridge.) This was in 1866?—Yes.

10,392. You would have passed them through Williams and Deacon's bank?—Yes.

10,393. It would appear in your account if it appeared anywhere?—Yes. It is not in this book (referring.) I can send for the book, if you desire it.

10,394. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there any unpleasantness, or did any words pass between you and Mr. Prior on the subject of these two cheques for 100*l.* and 300*l.*?—That expression I referred to, I used when he showed me the cheque for the 100*l.* He did not show me the cheque for the 300*l.* I did not see that at all. I did not know anything about it. I saw the 100*l.* cheque.

10,395. Did you speak to him about the cheque for 300*l.*?—I forget. I did not know of the 300*l.* until it was entered in the book, and I came, I believe, to refer to our account with Williams, Deacon & Co.

10,396. (Mr. Coleridge.) When it was too late to object?—That is all.

10,397. (Mr. Anstey.) And having objected, and that unsuccessfully, and the 300*l.* having been paid, did you not object the next day, and point out to Mr. Prior the grave consequences that would ensue to your bank if this sort of thing went on?—I forget.

10,398. Had you not signed the petition to the House of Commons in that year; were you not the promoter of it, the first person who signed it?—No, I was not the promoter of it.

10,399. But you signed it?—Yes.

10,400. Here is your name, "J. L. Sealy, banker and justice of the peace for the county of Somerset?"—Yes, I signed it.

10,401. Then, having taken that step only two months before, did you not point out to your partner the serious consequences in which he would involve not only your bank but also yourself personally?—Well, he did not involve me in very serious consequences.

TENTH DAY.

Mr. J. L. Sealey.

2 Sept. 1869.

10,402. Did you speak to him about it?—I do not remember.

10,403. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he clerk or partner in 1866?—He became a partner in 1865.

10,404. Then he was a partner at the time of this transaction?—Yes, the beginning of 1865.

10,405. Then who promoted this petition if you did not?—I believe it originated in this way; I have endeavoured to refresh my memory, as I had forgotten all about it. It was suggested by Sir Harry Verney, and we had a meeting.

10,406. Is Sir Harry Verney connected with this borough?—No, not at all.

10,407. Do you know what constituency he was representing at that time?—No. I believe an application was made to Sir Harry Verney, if possible to delay the issuing of the writ for a time.

10,408. Because the Tory candidate had spent a great deal of money at the election before, and that would diminish the chance of a Liberal getting in?—No. We thought we should have to fight the battle.

10,409. Was it not so; because the Tory candidate had spent a great deal of money at the election previously, and it would tell very much against the chance of a Liberal getting in?—No, I do not think that was much the feeling; but it was because there was much irritation felt with regard to the petition, and we wanted Sir Harry Verney to make an application to the House of Commons to delay the issuing of the writ——

10,410. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand that the object of Sir Harry Verney and yourself, and the other persons who were concerned in getting up this petition, was not the purification of this borough, but the delay of the issuing of this writ for some time, so that a Tory could not get in?—That is a very ingenious question; but the object was to delay the issuing of the writ because we might enter upon a contest——

10,411. (Mr. Price.) At less disadvantage?—At less disadvantage.

10,412. And the Tory would not come in so easily?—Well——

10,413. Is not that it? You put it with a great deal of circumbendibus. Is not the meaning of all this that if you had to fight the battle you would stand in a much worse position if you did not get the writ delayed? You know enough of politics to be aware that there is always a strong feeling against those who petition, if they offer themselves again as candidates?—Exactly.

10,414. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it not that you were conscious that there was so much bribery on both sides that the effect of a Royal Commission would be not only the setting aside of the election, but the disfranchisement of the borough?—Well, I do not think we attached very much importance to that.

10,415. I have had the misfortune to put to you a great number of questions to which you have not deigned to give an answer?—I wish to answer as well as I can.

10,416. Was not the real influence operating on your mind that the result would be, if there was an inquiry, the certain disfranchisement of the borough?—Well, I cannot tell.

10,417. Then it was no part of your purpose that there should be an inquiry before a Royal Commission as to the corruption of the borough, with a view to disfranchisement at that time?—I cannot tell. There was some talk, I remember.

10,418. I am speaking of yourself. It was not your wish that there should be a Royal Commission?—Will you allow me to explain?

10,419. I will, as soon as you have answered my question. Was it or was it not your wish at that time that a Royal Commission should not issue to inquire into these practices?—I cannot tell at all.

10,420. You say the motive which operated upon Sir Harry Verney's mind, and the reason you did not wish the writ to issue was, that you should stand in a more advantageous position?—I did not say Sir Harry Verney's mind was operated on by any motive.

10,421. You suggested his name, and I am bound to suppose you row in the same boat. Was the prayer of your petition all sham for the purpose of imposing on the House of Commons, or was it seriously meant? "Your petitioners further pray that your honourable "house will be pleased to direct that a Commission "be appointed to inquire into the practices above "referred to, with the view to the adoption of such "measures as may prevent a recurrence of the same." Those practices being thus described in the second paragraph of the stating part, "That your petitioners "are informed and believe that should an inquiry be "instituted, a much larger number of cases of bribery "would be disclosed than is apparent from the evidence "taken before the committee appointed by your ho-"nourable house to hear the petition against the return "of Henry Westropp, Esq., inasmuch as the case of "the petitioners was stopped by the committee when "a few cases only had been heard. That the peti-"tioners against the return of Henry Westropp, Esq., "were induced to abandon their intention of proceeding "to a scrutiny, on account of the very great expense "which they were advised would be thereby incurred." Was that portion of the stating part of the petition to which your name appears as the first signitary, and the corresponding portion of the prayer, boná fide intended by you; or was it only introduced with a view to carry the other object, namely, the suspension of the parliamentary writ, so as to prevent Henry Westropp being returned?—It was an absolute fact there were a great many more cases.

10,422. Did you boná fide intend this?—It is impossible to remember what my intention was three or four years ago, and at a particular hour.

10,423. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where was Sir Harry Verney representing at this time? Was he representing Buckingham?—I had no communication with him.

10,424. What made him take it up?—I think there was somebody waited upon him from this town, and asked him to take some steps to prevent the writ being issued so speedily.

10,425. He had not been chairman of the committee?—No, he was not chairman.

10,426. Was he on the committee?—No.

10,427. (Mr. Price.) How was he put in motion as far as Bridgwater was concerned?—I am inclined to think that Mr. Francis Thompson and Mr. Sully went to London and had a communication with him. That is my impression. And then he asked for some document to strengthen his hand. I believe that was the origin of the petition.

10,428. (Mr. Anstey.) What information can you give this Commission, the present Commission, when we come to that election by-and-by, as to the facts which you have declared to be undoubted, namely, the number of cases——?—Oh, that rests on this. At one of our meetings Mr. Benjamin Lovibond produced his brief. He had got up the cases, and he showed a sufficient number of cases to reduce Mr. Westropp's majority over Sir John Shelley.

10,429. Mr. Henry Lovibond?—No, Benjamin. The cases had been got up in his office by him and Mr. Fletcher.

10,430. Taking your own expression, this petition was "got up," not by those who signed it, but by Benjamin Lovibond and Fletcher, neither of whom has signed it? Are you aware of the fact?—You mistook me. I was not speaking at that moment of the petition. I was speaking of the case—the petitioner's case.

10,431. I am talking of the petition. Who first of all, drew up the petition?—I was appointed as one of a committee to draw it up and to embody the views which were propounded at a meeting which was held.

10,432. (Mr. Price.) And the information you had got from Mr. Lovibond about the number of cases?—Well, that we had a long time before, there was no doubt.

10,433. You embodied them, you say, in the petition?—Yes.

10,434. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any information on which you proceeded when you took the very grave step of presenting this petition to the House beyond the information you had got from Benjamin Lovibond and Fletcher?—I say he produced his brief in which all the cases were which he had prepared for evidence to lay before the House.

10,435. You have not answered my question, and you told me that before. Had you any information ultra that, beyond that, when you proceeded to draw up this petition for signature?—I do not remember that we had.

10,436. Therefore, in point of fact this petition, like the brief, was got up by Benjamin Lovibond and Fletcher, the clerk?—No it was not, not a bit of it. Mr. Chairman, I must appeal to you whether you understand it so.

(Mr. Price.) Well, if you appeal to me I must say that I understand it to be a party manœuvre, if you ask me what I think of it.

(Witness.) Well, put it in that way. It may have been so for all I know.

10,437. (Mr. Coleridge.) But would you not have been rather disappointed at that time if a Royal Commission really had been issued, the main object being to get the writ delayed, not to get a Commission?—The main object, as I understand it, or as I recollect it I should say, was the delay of the issue of the writ.

10,438. And you really did not wish sincerely in your hearts for a Commission to come down and inquire into the corrupt practices?—I remember it was asked for, but I cannot remember all that was on my mind at that particular time. I forgot all about the petition till it was referred to.

10,439. Carrying your recollection back to that part of the prayer of the petition you must be glad now, Mr. Sealey, that you have an opportunity of inquiring into the practices which the petition refers to?—Well, you see, if they had granted the Commission then these revelations would never have been necessary.

10,440. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you explain the fact that neither Benjamin Lovibond nor Fletcher who took such a part in the getting up of the briefs, and in contributing the information at least on which the petition was got up by somebody, can you explain how it was that neither of them signed the petition?—I cannot recollect whether they signed it or not.

10,441. But if they did not, can you explain that important circumstance?—Why did they not?

10,442. Yes.—How can I explain why another man does not do a particular act?

10,443. Well, you cannot explain?—Oh dear, no.

(Mr. Price.) There is nothing more Mr. Sealey, there is nothing more to ask you.

(Witness.) You sent for a book. It will be here directly.

(Mr. Price.) Very well. If it will be an inconvenience to you to stay you may go, Mr. Sealey.

(Witness.) Here is the book.

(An account book was produced by the witness and inspected by the Court.)

(Short adjournment.)

Mr. Charles Robert Bate sworn.

10,444. (Mr. Price.) You are a solicitor, practising in the town?—No, I am a member of Lincoln's Inn. I am practising under the bar.

10,445. As a conveyancer?—Yes.

10,446. You are a son of the Mr. Bate, of whom we have heard in this election inquiry?—Yes.

10,447. The only son?—The only son, by the first marriage.

10,448. Do you practise in Bridgwater as a conveyancer?—I do.

10,449. The first thing we will ask you about is the matter we mentioned this morning. It has been stated to us by Capt. Ford that you had been applied to by Mr. Lovibond, on the morning of the polling day, to go to Sealey's Bank and say, "Five hundred pounds for Allan," or something of that kind. Will you tell us what passed?—It was almost in those words. I had left the committee room to run up the street.

10,450. Had you been acting on the committee for the candidates?—Oh no, I never acted in the election except as a personal friend of Mr. Kinglake. I took no active part. I canvassed with him many times.

10,451. Tell us what happened on the occasion in question?—About half-past 2 I think, I cannot exactly say the time—it was after 2 I believe—I went up the street, to know what was going on at the other polling booths. I met Mr. Lovibond on the bridge. As I passed him he stopped me, and asked me to go to Sealey's with that message; to go to Prior and tell him to send 500*l.* at once.

10,452. Did he tell you to go to Prior?—He told me to go to Prior.

10,453. "Five hundred pounds for Allan, wanted immediately"?—No, nothing more. "500*l.* for Allan."

10,454. What did you say?—I turned with the intention of going, but it suddenly struck me that if I did anything of the sort I should be as much implicated as anybody else in these practices. I turned round to speak to him, and I pulled him by the sleeve as he was going, and said, "I decline to deliver that message. You had better send one of the paid agents," or words to that effect.

10,455. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who were the paid agents that you referred to?—I referred to himself.

10,456. And who else? Whom did you consider as paid agents; did you consider Allan a paid agent?—No, I knew nothing about Allan at all.

10,457. Did you consider Bussell a paid agent?—No, I knew nothing about the man.

10,458. (Mr. Price.) By the "paid" agents you mean the legal agents?—Yes.

10,459. (Mr. Anstey.) It struck you that you would be implicated in these practices?—Yes.

10,460. What practices?—It struck me that if I was sent to ask for 500*l.*——

10,461. I wish you to explain your answer. You said that you turned to go, and then it struck you that you would be "implicated in these practices"?—The bribery, of course.

10,462. Was there anything in what Lovibond said to you which tended that way?—No; I have told you the exact words he said to me.

10,463. What made you think it had reference to these practices?—I concluded it must be so.

10,464. Was it on account of Allan's name being mentioned?—Not in the slightest.

10,465. Was it the 500*l.*?—The 500*l.* being sent out of a bank to a man of that sort I naturally thought had something to do with bribery.

10,466. On account of the largeness of the sum, or the name of the person?—Oh, it is such a sum!

10,467. But what led you to think that; I cannot be myself in your mind?—I cannot give you the idea that passed through my mind at the moment.

10,468. What made you suspect improper practices?—Why, I really cannot give any more information than I have done.

10,469. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it not the nature of the transaction?—Yes, exactly.

10,470. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you heard of Allan's name before that in connexion with such practices?—I am not prepared to say I had before.

10,471. Was not it that which made you suspect improper practices?—I did not say "Yes." I said, "No, I am not prepared to say I had before."

10,472. Had you never heard of Allan?—Not in that way—as connected with bribery.

10,473. I cannot understand what made you not only expect corrupt practices, but dread being drawn

TENTH DAY.

Mr. C. R. Bate.

2 Sept. 1869.

into them yourself?—Mr. Kinglake went away by the express train. I had been down to see Mr. Kinglake go away by the train, for he thought the election was lost. When I came back somebody told me that the election was rallying, I then went to the committee room and saw the state of the poll, and I found everything in full swing. When I had left everything was perfectly dead, but when I came back there was a sudden reaction, and I concluded something had been done.

10,474. In the way of bribery?—Yes.

10,475. You thought that it was for that purpose that Mr. Lovibond made this application to you?—Yes. You asked me why I thought so at the time. I could not tell you what came into my head, but I naturally concluded it was so.

10,476. Now you have answered my question. What time did Mr. Lovibond speak to you?—I went to the station with Mr. Kinglake for the express; that I think, was about half-past 1. I came back then and made up my mind to go home. I should think it was about half-past 2.

10,477. (Mr. Price.) At that time the state of the poll had been so changed with respect to Mr. Kinglake's position, that you really thought that there had been money expended, to account for it?—I thought there must have been, to account for such a change as that.

10,478. That was another motive, or another idea rather, which made you shrink from being mixed up with this transaction?—Yes.

10,479. (Mr. Anstey.) You had gone with Mr. Kinglake to the station?—Yes.

10,480. On the way to the station had he told you that he believed the election was lost?—No, I went and told him so first of all.

10,481. You were the person that informed him of that?—No, I did not inform him first, but I did mention it. I said that I was sorry to say it was all over. He said, "I am afraid it is." I advised him not to leave.

10,482. Why?—Because on a former occasion he had not; but he said this was a hopeless beating.

10,483. (Mr. Price.) He was so hopelessly behind?—He was so hopelessly behind, and he made up his mind to leave the town.

10,484. (Mr. Anstey.) You saw him leave?—No, I did not see him leave.

10,485. Were not you at the station with him when he left?—No.

10,486. Did you see his brother Dr. Kinglake leave?—I rode in the carriage with him to the station.

10,487. And they both left you there?—No, I left them there.

10,488. That is to say, you went one way and they went another?—No, I came away and left them in a private room.

10,489. Well, you left one another. Did you hear any conversation pass between Dr. Kinglake and his brother?—No; there was very little conversation for this reason, that I was entirely broken down by the idea of my old friend being turned out, that I could hardly speak, and Mr. Kinglake was standing at the chimney-piece writing his farewell address while I spoke to him; and I went away feeling that I could hardly speak to him at the time. I said to him, "allow "me as the last thing that I can do for you to have "that address published."

10,490. (Mr. Price.) Did you telegraph to him?—I did.

10,491. Afterwards?—I did.

10,492. What did you say to him?—"Come back! You are at the head of the poll."

10,493. And it was in consequence of that telegram he came back?—I conclude so.

10,494. When did he arrive?—I am not prepared to say the time. It was the next day. I telegraphed to him on the line, and at his club, I think.

10,495. Did you see him the next day when he came?—I did.

10,496. Did he tell you then that he was afraid his election had been procured by corrupt practices?—He did not say one word about it. He was coming up the town in the carriage, and I was standing with Mr. Sealey at the bank door. It was the market day here. I went and shook hands with him.

10,497. Have you ever been told by Mr. Kinglake that he was afraid that corrupt practices had been used at that election?—I never had any conversation with him about it.

10,498. He never expressed any surprise to you at the wonderful revulsion of feeling in his favour at that hour?—No.

10,499. (Mr. Anstey.) He was not the only person that left that day. Mr. Barham left?—I believe so.

10,500. Where did he go?—Home.

10,501. Who else left?—I cannot tell you any other.

10,502. Was or was not the time at which Mr. Barham left the same time or nearly the same time as that at which Mr. Kinglake left?—No, it could not be the same time, because it was after that I came back from the station that I saw him.

10,503. How soon after you came back did Barham leave?—That I cannot say.

10,504. Have you any reason to believe that the departure of these gentlemen, or one of them was in some way so timed as to leave the town in the possession of the bribers?—I do not quite understand.

10,505. Was the departure of either of these gentlemen occasioned by the intention to leave the town in the hands of the bribers without their presence?—Yes, I concluded that it was.

10,506. Which of them?—Mr. Barham's.

10,507. Not Mr. Kinglake's?—No, certainly not.

10,508. (Mr. Price.) Then you have no doubt, as I understand Mr. Bate, no doubt in your own mind, that, before you were applied to by Mr. Lovibond, certain proceedings had taken place which had altered the state of the poll, and that they must have been the result of money?—I thought so. He was so hopelessly behind.

10,509. The thing was so hopeless at the time Mr. Kinglake left that it must have been something of that kind which led to the extraordinary diminution of Mr. Kinglake's minority down to seven, which it would be about the time you were asked by Mr. Lovibond to go for the 500*l.*?—I think it would be about half-past two. I cannot tell the time at all. In the excitement of a day like that I cannot tell the time.

10,510. That is all with regard to the conversation which took place between you and Mr. Lovibond. Now is there anything else with regard to that election, the last election, that you know with regard to what took place as to the spending of money, after you had had the conversation with Mr. Lovibond and refused to go, which you can give us—any information as to how the thing was managed?—Oh, not the least. I know nothing about it.

10,511. You know nothing about it?—I know nothing whatever about it.

10,512. Did you interfere at all actively after Mr. Kinglake had left the town, or after Mr. Lovibond asked you to go to the bank and you refused?—No. I asked one man for his vote.

10,513. Do you know at all what sum of money was spent? Can you give us any information?—Not the least. I have no information whatever to give you about it.

10,514. We must go into the previous election in which you did not take part, but in which your father is supposed to have been concerned?—Yes.

10,515. He did at one time act as Mr. Kinglake's confidential agent?—I always considered him Mr. Kinglake's agent. Yes.

10,516. His confidential agent. When I say confidential, I mean the person who more immediately managed?—My father brought him here. He was the means of his coming to Bridgwater.

10,517. Therefore he would be his confidential agent here?—I conclude so.

10,518. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the history of his coming here? Just tell us how it was?—"What was the history?"

10,519. (Mr. Price.) You say your father brought him here?—It is a very long story, that. I believe it goes back from the Gaselee election.

10,520. Was your father a very active political partizan in matters here for several years?—Yes.

10,521. And he had acted so far back as the election in which Mr. Serjeant Gaselee was here?—He and Mr. Ford between them paid the whole expenses of the contest; every farthing.

10,522. What Mr. Ford?—The uncle of him that was here.

10,523. I understand, then, that at that time your father and Mr. Ford paid the expenses of contesting the borough?—Mr. Ford and my father, I believe, were annoyed that the whole control of these matters was out of their hands entirely. They were never consulted about anything.

10,524. In whose hands was it, that it affronted them?—Oh, Benjamin Lovibond's.

10,525. They were affronted that the whole borough was under the control of Benjamin Lovibond?—Yes.

10,526. Therefore they wished to take it into their own hands?—They wished to be represented, to have a voice in the matter.

10,527. They wished to have a voice in the matter? Up to that time how had it been?—That is almost the first I can recollect.

10,528. (Mr. Coleridge.) When he brought Kinglake in the first instance, did they also pay his expenses?—I do not think they did. Mr. Kinglake being a native, you know, would be known to the borough.

10,529. (Mr. Price.) Are you aware or not whether Mr. Kinglake had to pay a sum of 1,100*l.* to your father which he had advanced for Mr. Kinglake in the contest of 1859?—Well, I heard the first of that when you opened the Commission here the other day.

10,530. That is the first you heard of it; that your father had advanced that to Mr. Kinglake?—I believe it was stated by one of the Commissioners. I am not quite sure.

10,531. Had you never heard of that before?—No, I had not.

10,532. You have no means of telling us whether that is so or not, from your knowledge of your father's papers?—No. I can produce all his papers, and then you can judge for yourselves. I can produce all his books and papers.

10,533. But you have looked through them?—I have looked through them casually. I see nothing that would mark any particular sum for any particular purpose.

10,534. There is no record, so far as you know, in your father's papers, of any sum of 1,100*l.* paid on Mr. Kinglake's behalf, which was afterwards repaid by Mr. Kinglake?—Do you mean his first election?

10,535. No; 1859.—I cannot tell. You shall see the books.

10,536. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you looked into the books with reference to that sum?—Since I heard you had mentioned it; since the commencement of the Commission.

10,537. That was in 1859?—There is a sum in 1859 which may possibly be connected with it. That you must judge. It is many months afterwards.

10,538. (Mr. Coleridge.) What sum is that?—Nearly the sum you have mentioned. I can give you no other information, not the slightest.

10,539. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the amount mentioned?—A thousand and seventy.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is very near it.

10,540. (Mr. Price.) In what book does that appear?—In one of my books.

10,541. In one of your father's books?—Yes.

10,542. What book?—A ledger book.

10,543. Will you produce it? Let us have it on the notes?—It is not here. I have ordered my clerk to make a schedule of all the books. I did not know you were going to call me to-day.

10,544. Having heard the question suggested by us to one of the witnesses, that a sum of 1,100*l.* was spent by your father on behalf of Mr. Kinglake, and having reference to what you have discovered yourself, have you any doubt there was just about such a sum so spent?—I cannot say that. Some time afterwards security was given by some one for that sum. You shall see the books yourself. It may not have anything to do with it.

10,545. Tell us who that person was?—Mr. Kinglake's brother.

10,546. Do you know of any business transactions which your father would have had with Mr. Kinglake's brother which might possibly have induced him to give the security?—No, I do not know that. I could show you by the books many transactions that have taken place between the family.

10,547. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it Dr. Kinglake that you mean by Mr. Kinglake's brother?—Yes.

10,548. (Mr. Price.) You say there are many transactions?—The family have been clients of my father's for many years. You will find a lot of transactions which you must judge of yourself.

10,549. You find a particular transaction for 1,070*l.*?—Yes. It happens to coincide very nearly with that you mention.

10,550. In point of time?—Yes; within about seven months or nine months after.

10,551. Is the security given by Dr. Kinglake apparently for some advance to him?—Yes; the note is.

10,552. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the security?—A note and deposit.

10,553. A deposit of deeds?—Yes.

10,554. What deeds?—I do not know. It is all over. I have only got the notes.

10,555. (Mr. Price.) You will let us have the books, Mr. Bate?—I will.

10,556. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not told us anything about the election of 1857. Do you know anything about that?—Who were the candidates?

10,557. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Kinglake was first returned then?—I can give you no information whatever about that election except this, that I took an active part with Mr. Kinglake in always being ready to go with Mr. Kinglake when he wanted me.

10,558. I will put to you the same question as I put before. Is there anything with regard to this election,—for our inquiry is of a public nature—is there anything which you know with regard to the conduct of the election of 1868 beyond what you have told us of the conversation between you and Mr. Lovibond, or with regard to any previous election, which you have not disclosed?—No, not that I know of.

10,559. Because we expect you to give us the disclosure without putting us to the necessity of cross-examining to test your knowledge. Therefore we trust you will tell us anything you do know about it?—I do not think I can give you any more information.

10,560. Not with regard to 1868?—No.

10,561. Have you any idea as to what sum was spent?—I have been sitting in court, and heard the examinations. I never had the slightest idea before that.

10,562. In Mr. Bagehot's election did you take any part?—I was not in Bridgwater.

10,563. Therefore you did not interest yourself at any time except when Mr. Kinglake was a candidate, and only at the last election?—No.

10,564. Before that you had not been in Bridgwater during the elections?—I had been in Bridgwater at most of the elections except this one of Mr. Bagehot's.

10,565. Did you interest yourself in Vanderbyl's election?—No, nothing whatever except natural curiosity to see how matters were going.

10,566. (Mr. Coleridge.) You voted, I suppose?—No; I had no vote.

10,567. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Bate, I understand that what Mr. Lovibond said to you, when he asked you to take charge of the 500*l.*, or rather of the message about the 500*l.*, was an intelligible sentence which was something to this effect: "Will you go and deliver such and such a message"?—As far as I remember it was something like this: "I wish "you would run up and tell Prior to send 500*l.* to "Allan."

Mr. C. R. Bate.

10,568. Would not you have been very much astonished if Mr. Lovibond had stopped you in the street and said to you only these words, "Go to Prior and say 500 for Allan"?—I should say that is much the same import.

10,569. What, "500 for Allan." Supposing he had given you the message only in those words "500 for Allan," would not you have thought it very extraordinary?—If he had not told me where to get it, of course I should.

10,570. If he had not told you that he was to give 500*l.*?—Yes, I should not have known what he meant.

10,571. Supposing he had said, "Go to Prior and say, '500*l.* for Allan,'" that is not saying, "Give 500*l.* to Allan." Would not you have thought it very extraordinary if a truncated message like that had been given to you?—I should suppose it was much the same thing; I supposed there was some understanding.

10,572. (Mr. Price.) It was done as elliptically as it could possibly be?—Yes. My idea is that he asked me, "Will you run up to Prior's and tell him to send 500*l.* at once." I cannot tell exactly the words. I am not giving you the words, I am only telling you what my notion is.

10,573. Then you will let us have the books?—Shall you want to retain the books, because they are all my ledgers.

(Mr. Price.) No.

10,574. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did your father die?—In 1867.

10,575. Then he was concerned in the election of 1865?—I think 1865 was not Kinglake's?

10,576. Yes, a general election?—Oh, he would be connected with that.

10,577. Then we shall want the books of that year.

(Mr. Price.) It was the election in which Mr. Westropp was successful, and was petitioned against, and Mr. Kinglake was successful.

10,578. (Mr. Anstey.) Who was the confidential clerk of your father when he was in practice, from the year 1857 downwards?—The confidential clerk?

10,579. Yes?—Well, in our business we have none. You can hardly say a man is a confidential clerk at all.

10,580. I must explain my question. That question was put to a witness who professed to know all about your father, and his first answer was this, when asked that question: "Well, there was his son, Mr. Charles Bate." Were you ever in that position towards your father, as confidential clerk?—I can hardly tell what you mean by "confidential clerk." We have no business which requires any confidence from a clerk at all.

10,581. The clerk who would know about the money matters?—The money matters are in the books open, and any clerk might know about them if he has brains to understand the books. We never keep a money clerk, a bill clerk, at all.

10,582. That is an answer; you had no clerk?—No confidential clerk.

10,583. Who were the other clerks besides yourself, if I may call you one. Was Mr. Squires?—Squires was at one time; I cannot tell you when.

10,584. Mr. Squibbs?—Squibbs was.

10,585. Any others?—I cannot tell you the others. Squibbs succeeded Plowman as managing or conveyancing clerk.

10,586. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was your father a solicitor, or merely a conveyancer as you are?—A conveyancer as I am.

10,587. (Mr. Price.) A member of one of the Inns of Court?—Yes.

10,588. Therefore he would not be one of what you would call the legal paid agents in the election?—I have no idea that my father ever received anything.

10,589. I mean he was not a solicitor practising here; and generally those are the persons who are the legal agents. Was your father in that capacity, or merely acting more as a friend to Mr. Kinglake?—I should say he managed anything that Mr. Kinglake consulted him about.

10,590. Did he send any bill of costs to him?—Oh no. I have never seen any entry.

10,591. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he pay his election expenses; his legitimate expenses; for him? I mean, were they paid through your father?—I conclude that he did.

10,592. Then there would be an entry of them?—Yes, I should conclude so. I can show one or two entries about them.

10,593. Being a conveyancer your father was not in a position to act as solicitor to the petition?—No, he merely paid the money.

10,594. (Mr. Anstey.) Are there any entries at the date of the election?—I shall be glad to show you. I will show you all.

(Mr. Price.) If you will allow our secretary to look at them he will make an arrangement with you to go down to your chambers and go through the books with you. Then he will be able with your assistance, no doubt, to give us the extracts.

(Witness.) I will show him every entry.

(Mr. Price.) That will do, Mr. Bate. We understand Dr. Kinglake is here, and wishes to come forward.

Dr. Kinglake.

Dr. KINGLAKE entered the witness-box.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Dr. Kinglake, since you received a summons from the Commissioners certain disclosures have been made in the evidence here which deeply implicate you in the furtherance of corrupt practices in this borough; and having in view the reasons for our being sent down here, which are twofold; first, that we should inquire into the mode in which elections have been conducted in Bridgwater from time to time; and secondly, with a view to put a stop to these practices by the enforcement of the law against individuals who have contravened the different Acts of Parliament, we have come to the conclusion that in certain cases we shall not examine persons as witnesses who might, by receiving an indemnity at our hands, be protected from further proceedings; and we think it right, therefore, to inform you, and we shall, probably, think it right to inform other witnesses who may have been implicated, that not seeing the necessity for getting further information from those persons on oath as to the part they have taken, and having in view the second consideration for our being sent down here, we will allow them to make any statement they like, which they must make at their own peril; but we shall not give them or assist them in any protection which they might demand at our hands if we had examined them as witnesses, and shall not swear them. Now, therefore, it is my duty to inform you that we have come to the conclusion that you are a person deeply implicated in corrupt practices here on behalf of one of the candidates; that certain disclosures have been made, and evidence has been given which would place you, no doubt, in considerable peril; and that, therefore, we have determined for the present not to examine you as a witness. You may make any statement you like; but the statement you make will be made at your peril as to proceedings being taken against you.

(Dr. Kinglake.) I do not exactly understand, sir, what you wish that I should do.

(Mr. Price.) Well, you understand now we have no wish at all in the matter; but your name has been mixed up with corrupt practices in so distinct a manner, that there can be no doubt whatever a primâ facie case has been made out against you as an accessory to bribing, and that being a misdemeanor, as a principal, therefore, in bribing, and part of our duty being to report from time to time so that the Attorney-General may be in a position to exercise his office as a prosecutor for bribing, we think it right at present not to examine you as a witness, but leave it to your discretion whether you will make a statement voluntarily, or not. That statement not being under the protection of an oath may be used against you if any proceedings are instituted hereafter against you. Therefore we decline to examine you as a witness, or to give you the protection to which you would be entitled perhaps if you had been examined as a witness and made a true disclosure. We decline to put you in that position, because we think that your position with regard to this matter is a very grave one; a much more grave one than the case of those in a very different position in life, who have been tempted from time to time to take bribes by persons who have provided money for the purposes. The words of one of the witnesses were, "If the gentlemen would not bring the money we would not do the dirty work for them." Now, you being in that position, we tell you that we shall not examine you as a witness. You may take full time to consider whether, under those circumstances, you choose to make a statement having reference to the evidence which has been given implicating you, or not. We do not ask you to do so; we do not press you to do so at present. You may make a statement whenever you like, after full consideration of the position in which you will then be placed, and after fully considering the evidence which has been alleged against you. We have no wish in the matter. We have simply a public duty to perform; and we cannot forget it has been told us that unless the gentlemen brought the money the bribing would not take place.

(Dr. Kinglake.) Are you alluding to the evidence of Mr. Prior?

(Mr. Price.) I cannot tell you what I am alluding to. It is not my business to tell you any more than that; the evidence at present implicates you very deeply in the assistance in bribery in this borough.

(Dr. Kinglake.) Well, I should wish to state, sir, everything that I know respecting this.

(Mr. Price.) You must state it upon your own responsibility, Dr. Kinglake, entirely. You will stand in the position now, if you make a statement, of a person not entitled to ask at our hands any certificate of indemnity against any proceedings which the Attorney General may think it right to take against such person.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You had better take time to consider.

(Mr. Price.) It is a serious thing, and under those circumstances we have thought it right to announce it to you, as being the first person in your position, we have an opportunity of telling. Therefore we do not wish to hurry you into any conclusion; and if you like to take time for any days, or weeks if you like, to consider whether you will make a statement or not, you are perfectly at liberty to do so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry Lovibond recalled.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

(Mr. Price.) You are sworn, I think?

(Witness.) I think—— Yes, I am.

10,595. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are sure?—Yes; I was sworn the other day.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Lovibond, before I begin to examine you, I wish to tell you and also those of your profession who are here present representing both sides, both parties in this borough, that we consider it due from the position in which you stand to the town, and from the position which you hold in the profession, we think it is due to us, you knowing who we are and under what powers we sit, that we should not be put to the trouble of "cross-examining," as it is called, or of testing, or going into very great detail for getting at the truth from you professional gentlemen. We expect, whatever part you may have taken in the proceedings in this town, that now the time has come when you will give us the frankest and the fullest and the freest disclosure, and not put us to the trouble, as I said before, of cross-examining for the purpose of getting at those facts which are notorious to everybody.

(Witness.) I will bear your observations in my mind, and I came with the fullest intention of doing as you say.

10,596. (Mr. Price.) I am not addressing you personally, but I trust that you and the other professional gentlemen will bear it in mind. Now we shall first proceed to examine you with regard to the election of 1868. When did you first have any communication with Mr. Kinglake with reference to the mode in which the contest was to be conducted at the last election?—Immediately after the address of Mr. Westropp, which I think was in the month of October. I then said to him that Mr. Westropp was a candidate, and, knowing his antecedents, I was afraid he would spend a great deal of money in the election. I also stated to him that I would have nothing to do with money matters; and his answer was, "You are perfectly right, "Mr. Lovibond. I am glad to hear you say so; and "it is my wish, and I will have nothing to do with "money matters," or, "I will not spend any money."

10,597. That was in October?—That was in October.

10,598. Was Mr. Vanderbyl then announced as a candidate?—I am not certain whether he was announced, but I was perfectly aware he was a candidate. I am not aware whether his address was written; I think not.

10,599. We may take it, I suppose, that you more peculiarly acted as legal agent for Mr. Kinglake?—Well, I was acting for both.

10,600. For both?—Yes; but I believe I was in greater confidence with Mr. Kinglake than any other professional man, because it was I who introduced him into this town with Mr. Bate.

10,601. And you had acted for him in every election in which he had been a candidate?—In every election.

10,602. Did you know at all, at that time, what were Mr. Vanderbyl's views with regard to spending money at the election?—I did not.

10,603. When you spoke to Mr. Kinglake?—I did not. I may say that I never had any communication at all with Mr. Vanderbyl in reference to money matters.

10,604. Never?—Never.

10,605. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you know what he had spent in the election of 1866?—I did.

10,606. (Mr. Price.) Going for a moment to that election, and only for that question, did you act at all in the election of 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl was elected?—I did.

10,607. As legal agent or as one of the agents?—As one of the agents.

10,608. Retained as agent for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Certainly.

10,609. Well, that being the conversation between you and Mr. Kinglake, tell us when next you had any communication with him with regard to electioneering matters. Was there any compact entered into, in the first place, with the agents on the other side as to when active proceedings should be commenced?—There was.

10,610. What was that?—That was as to the time for canvassing. We thought it would be to the advantage of both parties that we should not commence canvassing so soon as was talked of, because of the excitement it would cause in the town, and we were anxious to delay it as long as we possibly could before the election.

10,611. Well, that being so, when did Mr. Kinglake come down—come into the town, and begin active proceedings?—In the month of October.

10,612. How long after you had had this conversation with him?—My own impression is he was down for that purpose at the time.

10,613. I understood you to say you had agreed that proceedings should be suspended?—Oh, yes; you are quite right. That was so. Then I think he left the town, and came down again for the canvass.

10,614. When about was that?—I think he came the second time about the latter end of October or the beginning of November.

10,615. (Mr. Coleridge.) What day was arranged to begin canvassing?—My own impression is that it was about a fortnight before the election.

10,616. To save expense?—To save excitement in the town.

10,617. (Mr. Price.) You know there had been a new element introduced into the constituency. Had not any canvass been made between the time you saw Mr. Kinglake and the time he came finally to canvass?—No; we had not made any.

10,618. You made no canvass of the new constituency?—No.

10,619. Did you give Mr. Kinglake any idea at all as to which way the new constituency was likely to go, when you spoke to him about spending money?—I did. I gave him this idea, that the new constituency, most of them, were working for the Liberal employers, such as the brickyard men, and for some other large employers of labour, and that I thought they would, in all probability, go with their employers without money.

10,620. (Mr. Anstey.) But Mr. Lovibond, are you sure that they had not all, or the greater part of these new voters, been canvassed by Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Quite certain, before the time we fixed for canvassing.

10,621. The canvass was completed on the 12th of November, was not it?—I think it was somewhere about that time. I said we commenced somewhere about the 1st of November.

10,622. Wait a moment. Are you not wrong in your dates? Was not it completed about the 12th of November?—I should think it was.

10,623. And the armistice was commenced before that time?—About that time.

10,624. That you may not think we are without dates, I have before me an address of Kinglake and Vanderbyl, beginning, "Having completed our canvass, "and called upon the very large number of consti- "tuents," and stating that if there were any whom they had omitted they would rectify it before the day of the poll. Had not that canvass been going on before that?—I said so. I said we commenced about the beginning of November or the end of October; about the 26th.

10,625. Was not the canvass a joint canvass?—It was.

10,626. And did not Mr. Kinglake pay Mr. Vanderbyl compliments, and make complimentary speeches in his favour at the nocturnal meetings?—Yes, he did.

10,627. (Mr. Price.) From that time when the canvass commenced down to the day of the nomination you were of course in constant communication with Mr. Kinglake?—Whilst he was in the town.

10,628. Was not he here continuously from the canvass to the nomination?—I do not think he was. I think he left, I am not sure whether a few days after the canvass was over.

10,629. Where did he live?—In London. He has a brother at Taunton, Dr. Kinglake, whom he frequently goes to see.

10,630. No place of his own?—No place of his own.

10,631. You were in constant communication with him while he was in the town?—Yes.

10,632. During the canvass up to the time of the nomination had you any reason at all to change your views with regard to the question of spending money?—From what time?

10,633. In consequence of the results of the canvass had you any reason whatever to change your views with regard to the necessity of spending money?—No.

10,634. None?—None.

10,635. Was the canvass a successful one?—Yes.

10,636. Did it show a majority for Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

10,637. New and old voters?—I had only one section of the town, the south ward, but I went through with my friends, Mr. Reed, Mr. Barham, and Mr. Cook, and we made it up after; and it was somewhere about 100 majority.

10,638. For the two?—For the two.

10,639. You made it up with Mr. Barham and Mr. Cook, you say. Did they act conjointly with you for the two candidates?—They did as I understood.

10,640. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you, and, as far as you know, the others, a regular retainer?—No, no retainer whatever. I have never had a retainer.

10,641. (Mr. Anstey.) Were not you, in fact, yourself conducting your own political interest as representing the Liberal body in this borough?—I do not quite understand you.

10,642. Were not you and the other attorneys on your side representing your own position as representatives of the Liberal interest in this borough?—We were acting for the Liberal party in this borough.

10,643. Were not you the representatives of the Liberal interest in it?—I imagine so.

10,644. Has it always been so at every election?—Certainly.

10,645. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you employing the candidates or were the candidates employing you, to put it in plain language?—I apprehend the candidates coming here employed us.

10,646. (Mr. Anstey.) You brought them, you introduced these candidates?—Not at this election; they were the old sitting members.

10,647. But they had at one time been introduced?—They had, and approved of by the committee.

10,648. My question is, were not they introduced by you?—They were.

10,649. And the same thing happened on the other side I suppose?—I believe so.

10,650. Then in point of fact the candidates were originally employed by the attorneys and not the attorneys by the candidates?—No, the practice was to introduce them to the constituency. Then they attended a meeting, and the meeting passed resolutions whether they approved of them or not after hearing their principles.

10,651. (Mr. Price.) In point of fact did you ever know of any candidate being introduced to the constituency except through the medium of the legal gentlemen on one side and on the other?—Yes.

10,652. Who?—I believe Lord Henley was.

10,653. Is that the only instance?—That is the only instance.

10,654. (Mr. Anstey.) And he failed most egregiously?—Yes.

10,655. (Mr. Price.) He signally failed?—He signally failed, no doubt.

10,656. Then it does come to this, the members for Bridgwater are the delegates of the legal gentleman of the town?—I can scarcely go to that, because I have been in the habit of consulting a few of my friends.

10,657. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you come to the last election, I will ask you what took place some months before. Is it true or false that some months before the contest there was a negotiation going on for returning one and one, Mr. Westropp, and one of the two sitting members, either Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl?—I never heard of that.

10,658. If so it was Mr. Vanderbyl, and not Mr. Kinglake?—Certainly.

10,659. If Mr. Kinglake was party to that you would have known of it?—I should have known of it.

10,660. That was some months before?—That was some months before.

10,661. Now I come to not some months before, but the Saturday and Sunday before the election, the nomination day was Monday?—On Monday; the election on Tuesday.

10,662. (Mr. Price.) Had you any communication with the Conservative side before the day of the nomination with the view to some compromise such as has been suggested?—I had not.

10,663. Or anybody to your knowledge?—They had not. I never heard of it until I heard it talked of in this court.

10,664. You never heard of such a thing being done?—No.

10,665. You were in confidential communication I suppose with your legal brethren, Messrs. Reed, Cook, and Mr. Barham, and never heard that there had been any idea of getting rid of the expense and possible exposure after the contest?—No.

10,666. And Mr. Kinglake was never a party, as far as you know, to anything of that kind?—Never. It is right for me to state this perhaps, that in the month of July or August I was travelling with Mr. James Trevor, the solicitor on the other side, and the subject of the elections of Bridgwater came up.

10,667. (Mr. Anstey.) That was after the election?—No, the end of July or August in the last year, and it was whether something could be done so as to prevent the corrupt practices. I think it was Mr. Trevor said the legal agents could take each others word. I said, "No doubt of it; but how about the "persons who are immediately under us. Although "we could take each others words," I said, "how "about some other persons of your party; would you "be answerable for them?" He said, "No, I am afraid I could not." That is the only conversation ever I had before the election in reference to it with the other side, except as to the canvass.

10,668. (Mr. Anstey.) I am sorry to be obliged to direct your attention specifically to this case, after your general denial, but I must do it. Do you recollect being present at a meeting of the Shepherds' Society, when you all had grog, and yourself, Mr. Barham, Messrs. Reed and Cook, and the candidates on your side became honorary members, and paid a guinea each. That was on the motion of a bribery agent called Stephen Colin Jones?—You ask if I recollect that meeting?

10,669. Yes?—I do.

10,670. And I have stated correctly the fact of the payment?—I paid my guinea there.

10,671. And each of you?—I do not know what the others did, but we were all there, I believe.

10,672. Do you remember a day or two after that a rumour was circulated that Mr. Vanderbyl, following Mr. Kinglake's example, had declared that there should be no money paid by him either, in bribery?—I do not recollect that.

10,673. I will recal it to you. Do you recollect that in consequence of something Mr. Vanderbyl had said, it was seriously proposed by Mr. Kinglake's friends, or some of them, that Mr. Vanderbyl should be requested not to stand, and that the reason for the request should be alleged to be disclosures that had then been made in the case of the Lundy Island Granite Company?—I recollect that circumstance of the Lundy Granite Company, but I do not recollect that was to be put forward as a reason for asking Mr. Vanderbyl to resign because he would not spend any money.

10,674. I ask you whether, in your own belief, the real reason was not that as Mr. Kinglake was not going at that time to bring out the money, and as Vanderbyl, the only other source, was not, it was thought desirable some other person should be brought down who would?—It was not; in fact Mr. Kinglake, a few days before that time, was prepared, because Dr. Kinglake had called on me and said he would make arrangements for bringing a sum of money.

10,675. For bribery?—For bribery.

10,676. Dr. Kinglake had told you that?—Dr. Kinglake had told me that.

10,677. How many days before the nomination?—I should think it must have been about a week.

10,678. So long as a week before?—So long as a week before.

10,679. Do you recollect that on the Saturday and Sunday there was a motion and counter motion made for a compromise with Mr. Westropp, first of all by Mr. Vanderbyl's friends, or rather first of all to Mr. Vanderbyl, by Mr. Spinks, of Hennett and Spinks, and secondly to Mr. Kinglake?—No, I never heard of it at the time, but since I have heard of that there were negotiations going on by Mr. Spinks, for the purpose of procuring a coalition between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl; but I think I heard of that at the time of the petition which was tried in this hall. There were never any negotiations that I am aware of going on with Mr. Vanderbyl or any of his friends and Mr. Westropp.

10,680. I am asking you as to Mr. Kinglake?—I say, most decidedly not.

10,681. Did not you, as Mr. Kinglake's particular friend, and so describing yourself, call or invite the attendance of about a dozen leaders of the Liberal party on the Sunday night, at the very time that Fennelly was at Hennett's house about the negotiation with Mr. Vanderbyl?—I called a meeting there, but without the slightest notion of Fennelly.

10,682. As a matter of fact, you called a meeting of Mr. Kinglake's friends at the house of Henry Nicholls, draper and magistrate?—I did.

10,683. Was it not discussed at that meeting what would be the effect upon the prospects of the members if the Conservatives were to resort to bribery, and Vanderbyl and Kinglake were not?—I have no doubt it was.

10,684. Then upon that, and it being stated that Mr. Vanderbyl was not going to bribe, was it or not proposed that Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp should if possible coalesce?—No.

10,685. Was it or not suggested that Mr. Vanderbyl should be got to retire?—It was; but that was in consequence of the reports that had been circulated in the town relative to the evidence he had given at the Examiner's Chancery Office, relative to the Lundy Granite Company.

10,686. That was the pretext put forward?—It was.

10,687. Who was to succeed Mr. Vanderbyl?—I recollect calling on Mr. Sealy the first thing in the morning, and stating that after hearing these reports had been circulated on Saturday night, I found two or three of the Liberal party expressing a doubt whether they should vote for Vanderbyl; I thought it was most damaging to him.

10,688. Did not you know that all those damaging reports had already been discussed on Saturday, the 14th of November, some time before, and a meeting had been held, and the result was that Mr. Sealy, who took a part in the discussion, and some others, waited on Mr. Vanderbyl to say that the Liberals here had inquired into those reports about the Lundy Island Granite Company, and found nothing in them which would prevent his standing?—I do not recollect.

10,689. Very late on Saturday, but a few hours before the nomination this discussion took place?—It did.

10,690. Who was it proposed to put up in lieu of Mr. Vanderbyl, if he had retired?—No one.

10,691. You swear that?—I do.

10,692. What money arrangement was to be come to then for the sale of Mr. Vanderbyl's seat to Mr. Westropp?—None. Upon my oath I never heard of it.

10,693. Then what was to take place?—This, which I think might possibly have taken place, that if Mr. Vanderbyl retired, most likely one of the Conservatives would retire.

10,694. Who was that?—Mr. Gray.

10,695. Yes, he was the catspaw all through?—That was my impression.

10,696. Not a willing candidate?—I did not know that, but that was my impression.

10,697. (Mr. Price.) Had you been communicating with Mr. Gray yourself?—Most certainly not.

TENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

2 Sept. 1869.

10,698. (Mr. Anstey.) But you had with Mr. Trevor ?—Certainly not.

10,699. You said yourself that you had had some communication long before, in August ?—Yes, that was before Westropp and Gray were announced ; it was with reference to getting rid of the corrupt practices.

10,700. Then what was done at this meeting ; what was decided on Sunday, the 15th November ?—That a deputation should wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl to ask him to resign.

10,701. There was a majority and minority on that question, whether there should be a deputation wait on Mr. Vanderbyl, requesting him to resign ?—I do not know whether it was put to the vote or not.

10,702. At all events, if it was you were in the majority yourself, and were in favour of that ?—I was.

10,703. Did he decline to listen to the suggestion ?—I was not one of the deputation.

10,704. At all events the nomination took place the next day ?—Yes.

10,705. After the deputation had seen him ?—Yes, quite so.

10,706. Have you any reason to believe that between the reception of that deputation and the election Mr. Vanderbyl changed his purpose, if he had ever formed it, which he had announced, of not bribing, and had determined to bribe ?—I believe he had changed his mind if he had ever formed it.

10,707. What period ?—In the period of the night.

10,708. That Sunday night ?—Yes.

10,709. Mr. Kinglake's brother prepared to bribe a week before, and Mr. Vanderbyl, at all events, prepared to bribe the day before the nomination ?—Yes.

10,710. (Mr. Price.) Now, go on and tell us ; you say that Dr. Kinglake had told you he was prepared to make arrangements ?—Dr. Kinglake called upon me.

10,711. When ?—I think about a week or ten days before the election, and asked me what I thought about the election. My answer to him was this : that, judging from Mr. Westropp's antecedents, I was afraid money would be spent. He stated he should like his brother to be returned again, and asked me what I thought it would cost. My reply to him was that I would have nothing to do with any money matters ; at last he asked me whether it was possible, and I could not tell him, and I then recollect his stating that the end of it was he should be willing to spend 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.* rather than that his brother should lose the election.

10,712. Dr. Kinglake said that ?—Dr. Kinglake said that, and on another occasion he called on me two or three days afterwards, and asked me if I could raise the money for him. I said, " Certainly not ;" that he had tried some places, I think, but could not raise it, and he asked me whether I could raise it through Messrs. Sealy and Prior. I said, " Certainly not." I would not raise it ; I would have nothing to do with it. The next I heard was that the money was raised. He said he would raise it, and he told me the day before the election, on the nomination day, that he had made arrangements with Mr. Prior to advance the money.

10,713. How much ?—My own impression was it was 1,500*l.*

10,714. (Mr. Anstey.) When you say " the day before the election," do you mean before the nomination or the poll ?—I believe the nomination day.

10,715. That would be on Monday, the 16th ?—That would be on Monday, the 16th ; I think that was the day.

10,716. On Monday, the 16th, he told you he had made arrangements with Mr. Prior for the advance of 1,500*l.* ?—The day before the election.

10,717. Did Dr. Kinglake remain in the town ?—No, he went home. I did not see him again till the middle of the next day.

10,718. Did he come again on the polling day ?—The next morning I saw him early, on the polling day, after the voting at Taunton he told me.

10,719. Did he say anything to you then ?—Nothing about money matters.

10,720. Did you talk over with him the prospects of Mr. Kinglake ?—I did.

10,721. Was anything said about it ?—Yes.

10,722. What ?—Nothing was said before——

10,723. At that time Mr. Kinglake was very much behind, was not he ?—Yes, and I may tell you, in consequence of his being so much behind I attended a meeting at the " Globe," with Messrs. Reed and Cook, and I think Smith, Allan, and Bussell, and at that meeting I asked, " How is it the Liberals are so much " behind ? There must be some mystery about this I " am sure." There was no answer to that, and then I think it was that Mr. Reed said, " Well, can we win the election now ?" And Smith said, " Yes." Mr. Reed said, " Will 3,000*l.* do ?" Mr. Smith, I think it was, answered " No." I think some one asked would 5,000*l.* do, and there was no response to that. Upon that I retired with Messrs. Reed and Cook, talked over the matter with them, and said, " You see " by these men that they want to make a market, to " get the money into their hands. Now, it appears to " me we are so much behind——"

10,724. (Mr. Coleridge.) What men did you refer to ?—To the bribery agents.

10,725. (Mr. Price.) Give the names ; Bussell ?—I referred to Bussell as one, and John Smith.

10,726. Allan ?—Not to Allan. I did not see much of Allan ; John Smith.

10,727. Who else, Henry Cornelius White ?—He was not then, as I have heard, so much an agent.

10,728. Heal ?—He was not in my mind. I have referred generally.

10,729. Symons ?—I was not referring by name to the men, but to the men generally who distributed the money. I said, " Well, if we inundated the streets " with money I am doubtful whether we should get " an election, and if we did we should not retain the " seat, and I will not have anything to do with it." And Messrs. Reed and Cook expressed the same opinion.

10,730. (Mr. Price.) Is there any truth in what is told us, when you were remonstrated with by Mr. Smith. I think it was that you said, " We were " prepared early in the morning. It is all Messrs. Reed " and Cook's fault ?"—No, I believe that is a pure invention on the part of John Smith. I could not have said so for this reason——

10,731. We must get first a distinct negative. Do you say that did not take place ?—I do.

10,732. Now explain ?—For this reason, that I knew perfectly well, as I had it from Mr. Cook, that Mr. Vanderbyl was prepared, therefore I could not state that Reed and Cook were not prepared with the money.

10,733. Did you state " We were all ready ?"—No.

10,734. Or, " All prepared early in the morning ?" —Certainly not, because I had made up my mind over night, and communicated with Allan also in the morning, and to Bussell also that no money was going to be spent ; and there was another expression which Mr. Cook made use of, that he stated he had advised us he would not spend the money because the streets would be inundated. Those were my words, and not Messrs. Reed and Cook.

10,735. You have told us that Dr. Kinglake told you that he had made arrangements the night before for the advance of 1,500*l.* ?—Yes, that was the night before.

10,736. Dr. Kinglake having told you that he was prepared with that, and that he was anxious that his brother should succeed, may not you have said to Smith, " We were prepared early in the morning ?"—I do not think it is likely. I have no recollection of seeing Smith that day by himself.

10,737. (Mr. Anstey.) At all events you were prepared early in the morning ?—No doubt.

10,738. And you had been prepared in posse at least a week before ?—For several days before.

10,739. (Mr. Price.) That being so, why not say to Dr. Kinglake, "I do not care what money you are "prepared with for the sake of your brother, because if "you are going to do it I will have nothing more to say "to you. I will walk out of the transaction altogether?" —Well, that was the resolution I came to somewhere about a fortnight before the election, and I stated it to Mr. Sealy and one or two others.

10,740. If you really had been sincere in your determination to put it down, in furtherance of the kind of agreement you had entered into with Mr. Trevor, when Dr. Kinglake said he was prepared with 1,500*l.*, why did not you say, "I will be no party to "such a transaction, and therefore if that is going to "be the mode I will have nothing to do with it, and "I will leave your brother to fight his own battle?" —I have great difficulty in answering that question. I admit I ought to have done so.

10,741. Now, did Dr. Kinglake tell you anything about having gone the night before to Mr. Prior and made the arrangement you have heard of?—He said nothing about the night before. I saw him on the afternoon of the nomination day, when he told me he had seen Mr. Prior and made the arrangement.

10,742. Did he tell you anything about the 1,000*l.* affair, and the substitution of some other arrangement in lieu of it?—No.

10,743. Then did you know what proportion the 500*l.* he has spoken of bore to the money he had actually brought into the town, or got in the town?—I believe he had 1,000*l.* down in the bank, which I have heard Mr. Prior was prepared to advance, and 500*l.* of that was spent.

10,744. Mr. Prior has stated that instead of 1,000*l.* credit, which he was to have drawn according to the arrangement of the night before, he had 500*l.* only on that day, that he got that 500*l.* through you, and therefore you must have known a great deal more at that time about the place where the money was and the amount than you have hitherto told us?—Dr. Kinglake told me himself that he had made arrangements with Mr. Prior for me to obtain this money from the bank.

10,745. That is only 500*l.*?—No 1,000*l.*; it was either 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.*

10,746. When did he tell you that?—The day before.

10,747. The nomination day?—I am talking of this morning. He never said a word about it on the polling day.

10,748. How do you reconcile that statement which on his authority you have just made with the statement you have heard him make, that the arrangement between him and Mr. Prior the night before was for 1,000*l.* only, and that that was put an end to by his withdrawing the cheque on the following morning?—I never heard of his withdrawing it until after the petition was presented.

10,749. Has Mr. Prior told us the whole truth?—I have no doubt.

10,750. Mr. Prior never communicated with you?—Never.

10,751. Nor Dr. Kinglake, that he had cancelled that 1,000*l.* cheque?—Until the petition was presented.

10,752. (Mr. Anstey.) Therefore the 1,000*l.* before and the 500*l.* on the morning making 1,500*l.*; have you any doubt in your mind that Dr. Kinglake had made arrangements with Mr. Prior for that amount?—Not the slightest; I acted upon it.

10,753. (Mr. Price.) You have no doubt that it was arranged for 1,500*l.*?—No, 1,000*l.*

10,754. (Mr. Anstey.) You said 1,500*l.* just now?—If I have made myself misunderstood by the Commission, I will put it right. The sum was talked of 1,500*l.* when Dr. Kinglake first called on me, but afterwards we found only 1,000*l.* paid into the bank; a cheque drawn for 1,000*l.*

10,755. (Mr. Price.) Was Dr. Kinglake present the whole day during the election?—I think he came by the 9 o'clock train in the morning, and left at half-past one by the express.

10,756. After his brother?—After his brother; the trains met at half-past one.

10,757. (Mr. Anstey.) They went together?—As far as the station, and then in opposite directions.

10,758. There is only five minutes difference between the trains?—I believe so.

10,759. (Mr. Price.) When did you make up your mind during that day that you would draw this sum at Mr. Prior's bank?—At half-past one, or a little later. I met Mr. Henry Nicholls, and he asked me to go and take some lunch with him. I was very much depressed in spirits, and whilst having some lunch with him, I suppose I stayed three parts of an hour, or perhaps more, a message came for me from Mr. Cook, stating that I was wanted at the "Globe" immediately. I went shortly after to the "Globe" hotel, and there I saw Mr. Cook. I think this was about half-past two. Mr. Cook said, "You must do something for Kinglake." "What?" I said, "Well, you see the position we are in, and you must let us have some money," or something to that effect. I replied, "Well, cannot you go on if you have been spending money?" Judging from the number that had then polled we were very close, Kinglake and Vanderbyl were, to Westropp. "Had not you better go on?" He says, "No; we have exhausted one lung and almost the other." I understood him to mean that they had spent all their money.

10,760. (Mr. Price.) That was at what time?—Half-past two; and he said, "Now Kinglake must do something." I hesitated some little time, and then I said, "I will see what can be done." I saw Andrew Allan in the room; he was very much excited. He came to me and said, "If I had 500*l.* I could win the election." "Well," I said, "you are very excited, you had better go home." He did so. I left the committee room. The first person I saw was Charles Robert Bate.

10,761. (Mr. Price.) Did you say nothing more in answer to what Mr. Cook said; you gathered from him that they had spent all the money they had?—I do not think I did then.

10,762. (Mr. Anstey.) The first person you saw was Charles Robert Bate?—Yes; I asked him if he would call at Sealey's bank and request Mr. Prior to take 500*l.*

10,763. (Mr. Price.) Had not you told Allan? You say you said nothing more to Allan, but that he had better go home?—He perfectly understood what I meant, I believe that he was to go home.

10,764. Not that he was to go to bed on account of his excited state, but to be paid money?—No, Allan is too old a hand for that.

10,765. (Mr. Anstey.) He did understand, you say?—No doubt about it.

10,766. (Mr. Price.) You went to Mr Bate?—Yes, and Mr. Bate I think said yes and hesitated, and said "No, I decline it," immediately after Mr. Mogg came up I asked him, and he went at once. I delivered the same message to him; he asked no questions, but went simply, and I believe did everything I asked him.

10,767. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you ever any reason to believe from Mr. Bate's antecedents that he was capable of becoming a bribery agent in that manner?—I really had no thought upon it at that time. I was acting under great excitement. What my thoughts were I really cannot say at the time.

10,768. Had you any reason, founded upon the antecedents, or what you knew of the antecedents, of Mr. Bate to suppose him capable of deliberately entering into an affair of that kind?—No.

10,769. Had you any such reason with respect to Mr. Mogg?—Certainly not.

10,770. But the difference between Mr. Bate and Mr. Mogg being that the one refused, and the other instantly accepted, how do you account for that?—I cannot account for it.

10,771. Had Mr. Mogg done anything of the sort at a previous election?—Never.

TENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

2 Sept. 1869.

10,772. Not to your knowledge?—Never; I never heard the slightest imputation against him.

10,773. Then he obeyed your solicitation at a word?—He did. I have no doubt he was under great excitement; we were all.

10,774. (Mr. Price.) Was that the only sum so far as you know that was spent on Mr. Kinglake's behalf?—The only sum.

10,775. During that day?—The only sum, or at any other time.

10,776. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the only sum?—500*l.*

10,777. But there was more in the town disposable by Dr. Kinglake?—No, I never heard of a shilling.

10,778. Disposable?—Certainly not.

10,779. You have said already that Dr. Kinglake had made arrangements for 1,500*l.* afterwards reduced to 1,000*l.*?—You misunderstood; they first talked about 1,500*l.* I find from the evidence here that only 1,000*l.* was advanced.

10,780. Then there was 1,000*l.* disposable here in bribery on Mr. Kinglake's side?—Certainly.

10,781. What reason have you to suppose that the whole of that was not spent by some one?—Because Mr. Prior has sworn it was not.

10,782. What has become of the other 500*l.*?—The other 500*l.* has never been spent at all.

10,783. Was it raised?—It was never raised or spent. There was only 500*l.* raised by Mr. Prior.

10,784. Do I understand that every farthing of this 500*l.* and the other 500*l*, that was not spent, was to be considered money that Mr. Prior was to advance, and as to half of which he did advance upon your verbal order?—From my verbal order, out of Dr. Kinglake's funds?

10,785. Yes?—Certainly.

10,786. In point of fact, it was Mr. Prior's money or the bank's which you were authorized verbally to order to the extent of 1,000*l.* if necessary?—I do not know whose money it was. I understood it was Dr. Kinglake's money.

10,787. I mean to say it was not brought into the town by Dr. Kinglake, but procured here in the town on his own credit?—From the evidence I have heard here of Mr. Prior. I do not know.

10,788. Was the arrangement between Dr. Kinglake and yourself, perhaps Mr. Prior was a party or not to that arrangement, simply this, that you were to be authorized verbally to withdraw monies from that bank to the extent of 1,000*l.* if you thought necessary, and as you thought necessary?—Certainly.

10,789. But you only found it necessary to withdraw in the way you have described to the extent of 500*l.*?—That is so.

10,790. And every farthing of that was actually spent in bribery?—I cannot tell you.

10,791. But it was intended?—Intended to be so spent.

10,792. And you have had no account of its application?—No.

10,793. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom do you consider as liable to the bank for that money now?—Mr. Kinglake.

10,794. (Mr. Anstey.) Dr. Kinglake?—Dr. Kinglake.

10,795. And Mr. Kinglake?—No, I do not believe Mr. Kinglake had the slightest knowledge of it.

10,796. (Mr. Price.) That is your impression?—That is my impression and is founded upon 17 or 18 years' acquaintance with Mr. Kinglake.

10,797. That is to say his brother is in a position to spend 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.* for mere love of his brother?—Certainly; I do not mean to say but what he may be recouped some time or other. I have found him a most truthful man; he would never have sworn in this court.

10,798. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are aware that Mr. Kinglake did spend some 1,100*l.* in corrupt practices in 1859?—I have heard so to-day for the first time.

10,799. (Mr. Price.) Therefore Mr. Kinglake, you see, keeps back some things even from you?—I should think it is very likely.

10,800. Therefore your answer is from what is merely your own personal knowledge of Mr. Kinglake, but does it strike you as at all wonderful that he should have known of his brother's generosity with regard to this 1,000*l.*, when he paid Mr. Bate this 1,100*l.* in 1859?—I do not believe that Mr. Kinglake was aware that any money was spent at the time he gave that evidence on his behalf.

10,801. When?—At the last election.

10,802. Do you mean really to say that Mr. Kinglake, having left this town in despair at one o'clock in the day in a minority of over 200, honestly believed that the election was won, and the minority turned into a majority without bribery?—No; but I mean to say this, that I believe Mr. Kinglake believed the money must have come from Mr. Vanderbyl, and not from him.

10,803. (Mr. Anstey.) Come from whom?—Come from Mr. Vanderbyl, because he left with the full intention of giving up the election.

10,804. What earthly difference does that make in respect of Mr. Kinglake's purity, that he thought the money was to be provided out of Mr. Vanderbyl's purse, and not his own that he was privy to?—He was not privy to it at all.

10,805. You said you verily believed he was privy?—No, I have not said anything of the kind.

10,806. You said this moment you verily believed that Kinglake thought the money was Vanderbyl's?—No, I say he might have thought so. I did not say verily believed.

10,807. I wish you would not use that expression "might have thought so?"—Excuse me, you put words which I said which I did not.

10,808. I did not put words into your mouth, it was your own expression volunteered, namely, an expression of opinion that Mr. Kinglake thought the money came from Mr. Vanderbyl. My question founded on that is, what difference does that make on the subject of his purity, that he thought the money came from another's pocket than his own. I am asking you a question of opinion?

10,809. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Kinglake must have been perfectly certain as anybody must have been that that election was won in his favour by bribery?—I have no doubt of it.

10,810. Everybody must have thought so?—I have no doubt of it.

10,811. (Mr. Anstey.) I will ask you still further, assuming that he did not know it on the day of the election, did not you or some one inform him of it, somewhere in the interval which elapsed between that day and the day of the trial before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Certainly not.

10,812. He was never informed that there was evidence against the party with which he was connected, of bribes having been given to persons to induce them to vote at that election?—Never.

10,813. And you his friend allowed him to go up to Mr. Justice Blackburn and give evidence on his oath there that he was under the impression that no money of his had been spent in bribery at the election?—I never communicated anything of the kind to him.

10,814. You allowed him to come up and give evidence there under that impression. Do you swear that?—Mr. Kinglake did it acting on his own advice, not upon mine.

10,815. (Mr. Price.) When Mr. Kinglake gives this in answer to the question "This evidence has "brought facts to your knowledge of which you were "perfectly ignorant? Entirely," do you believe that he was entirely ignorant that he won his election by bribery?—I do.

10,816. (Mr. Anstey.) You said the contrary not five minutes ago?—Excuse me; you asked me about Mr. Vanderbyl, and I said possibly he might have suspected.

10,817. (Mr. Price.) He said he was entirely ignorant of the facts, which facts were bribery practised at the election. Do you believe that he at that time could honestly say he was entirely ignorant of bribery having been practised at that election. I do not care whether Mr. Vanderbyl's or his?—I cannot go to that extent, but my knowledge of Mr. Kinglake——

10,818. (Mr. Anstey.) You have already said the contrary, that he was aware that bribery had been practised at the election?—I am not aware of it. If the shorthand note is read——

10,819. Twice you have stated it within the last 10 minutes.

10,820. (Mr. Price.) You said he must have known. I put the question to you, Must not Mr. Kinglake have known as well as anybody else that that election was won by bribery, and you said, "I should think so"?—I did not understand the question with regard to Mr. Kinglake.

10,821. Then again, must not he having left the town in despair at one o'clock in the day in a minority of 200, and found himself returned when he came back again, have known that the minority was turned into a majority by bribery?—I really cannot answer that question. Mr. Kinglake has sworn to the contrary, and I have found him always a truthful and honourable man.

10,822. Did he make no inquiry? Do you mean to say that having come down here and having gone away in despair, he came down here again, and to his enormous astonishment found he was returned member for Bridgwater, and never had the curiosity to say to you, his financial agent, how has this happened?—I will declare on my solemn oath he never did.

10,823. It is an extraordinary thing he should come down here and find himself a member, having gone away at one o'clock in the day, and have never discussed the question with you at all?—We never did from first to last.

(Mr. Price.) Then he must have wilfully abstained from it.

10,824. (Mr. Anstey.) Were not his fears of an exposure, I do not mean of himself, but of the whole party, such that he concurred in certain measures that were taken, I believe, with your full knowledge, if not your advice, after the election, to prevent a trial of the election petition, by submitting to a compromise first of all with Mr. Westropp only, and afterwards with Westropp and Gray, both?—He was.

10,825. (Mr. Price.) Then what induced Mr. Kinglake, who was in the position of being a member of the town to condescend to a negociation for the purpose of burking an election inquiry unless he had known there was bribery committed?—I cannot answer that question, what could have induced him.

10,826. What was said by you to induce him to do it? How came he to condescend to do such a thing?—I cannot possibly tell you.

10,827. Did you never have any conversation with him?—Never about bribery.

10,828. But the question is, whether he was a party to the trying to get rid of the petition which resulted in Mr. Justice Blackburn coming down here, and you say he was a party to that?—Yes.

10,829. Could he possibly have been a party unless he had been informed by you or some one that there was danger of having the bribery exposed on his side?—(No answer.)

10,830. Here is a man whom you say supposed himself to be returned honorably by the unbought votes of the electors, and yet he condescends to a compromise to get rid of the inquiry; what motive induced him to do so unless he had been informed that bribery had been going on. Can you suggest it?—No; I cannot suggest it.

10,831. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, I will give you the dates as well as I can of your visits to Mr. Trevor, and other persons on the subject. First, there is that affair which you repudiated all knowledge of, namely, the interview between Mr. Vanderbyl and James Trevor in London, some months before the election. Now I will come to your own. Was not it a notorious fact, and known to you at least immediately after the election, that the Conservatives were going to present an election petition against Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl?—I heard it so reported.

10,832. And that Mr. James Trevor had actually gone to London within the following week on the subject?—I do not know the following week, but soon after.

10,833. Did not you inquire for him at his office, and ascertain that fact from his brother?—I did.

10,834. Did you ask also his address in London?—Yes.

10,835. And follow him the same day that you obtained the address, to London?—Yes.

10,836. And went down to his hotel?—I did.

10,837. Did you at that time open negotiations for a compromise on the terms that one seat should be given up to the Conservatives on condition that the petition was withheld?—I did.

10,838. Which seat was that; Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl's?—That was to be left open.

10,839. Open to what, to bribery or what?—Open for the members to decide.

10,840. They were to decide?—They were to decide.

10,841. And which of the two was to come in, Mr. Westropp or Mr. Gray?—Mr. Westropp was to come in.

10,842. That was not to be left open?—That was not to be left open.

10,843. But the question as to which of the two Liberals was to go was to be left open to the electors to decide?—No; I think it was to be left to some gentleman who was to be called in, as to who should resign.

10,844. Was not it left to you lawyers to decide?—No.

10,845. To gentlemen to be appointed by you lawyers?—I think not.

10,846. Then who was to appoint the gentlemen?—Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake.

10,847. Alone?—Alone.

10,848. Had you authority from Mr. Kinglake to make that proposal?—I do not think I had.

10,849. Did you ask Mr. Vanderbyl to make that proposal?—I think not at that time.

10,850. Do you mean you acted as confidential agent of Mr. Kinglake, and believing that he knew nothing at all of bribery, went to London behind his back, and without communicating with him at all entered into a compromise which might have resulted in his sacrificing his seat as member?—That was so. My first interview was with Mr. Trevor, and afterwards I called on Mr. Kinglake. I declare that I saw Mr. Trevor first and opened the negotiation.

10,851. Was that proposal rejected by Mr. James Trevor, and if so, on what ground: that first proposal of yours?—Well, I am not quite sure whether that was rejected or not.

10,852. Did you tell him that you had full authority to make it?—I really cannot tell you.

10,853. (Mr. Price.) Come, Mr. Lovibond?—I will give you an answer.

10,854. Did you tell him you had authority to act for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl in the matter?—I have no recollection that I said so.

10,855. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not Mr. Trevor reject it on the ground that you had not full authority?—I have no recollection of it.

10,856. Did he reject it at all?—I do not think so; I think he entertained it.

10,857. Were not these negotiations afterwards renewed by you?—They were.

10,858. From time to time?—From time to time, and agreed to.

10,859. (Mr. Price.) In the meantime had you yourself any communication with your client Mr. Kinglake?—I had.

10,860. And told him what you were doing?—Yes.

10,861. (Mr. Anstey.) Had his authority?—Had his authority.

10,862. (Mr. Price.) Had you told him it was in consequence of what had taken place in the borough

TENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

2 Sept. 1869.

that you asked him to allow you to act in the matter? —I do not think I mentioned the word "bribery."

10,863. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell him it was in consequence of corrupt practices he could not keep the seat?—No, I am not aware.

10,864. (Mr. Price.) What inducement did you hold out to him, who you say believed he got in by unbought votes in the most miraculous manner, to induce him to put his seat in peril in any way when the question of the petition was coming on? What inducement did you hold out to Mr. Kinglake to put his seat into your hands virtually, if the negociation had been carried out, to induce him to do that, if he had not been guilty of bribery?—Well, to my knowledge——

10,865. Assuming that he believed himself his election to have been won without bribery, and you thought that his state of knowledge, what inducement did you hold out to him to induce him to put his seat into your hands in the sense in which it was put?—I really cannot answer that question.

10,866. You must have said something?

10,867. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say you did not tell Mr. Kinglake this, "Stop the election petition "at any cost; if it goes on you will lose your elec- "tion; it is much better to keep one seat even though "you do not win it. We shall lose both if the peti- "tion goes on." In all probability, did you tell him anything of that kind?—I do not recollect.

10,868. Could you have told him anything short of that, in order to induce him to run the risk of losing his seat?—I cannot say.

10,869. Then pray answer this next question. That negotiation not having come to anything, did not you afterwards, with Mr. Kinglake's full knowledge and consent, and I presume Mr. Vanderbyl's also, but certainly with Mr. Kinglake's, propose to give up both the seats to the Conservatives, on condition that the exposure which an election petition would cause should not take place?—I did not.

10,870. Was not Mr. Kinglake present on an occasion in London when this proposal was discussed?—No.

10,871. Was he present in London on any occasion when a compromise of any kind, founded upon a withdrawal of a seat or seats, was discussed?—He was.

10,872. At what meeting?—At a meeting at which Westropp was present.

10,873. When and where?—That was at the "Tavistock Hotel."

10,874. How long before February?—A short time I should think; it must have been a week or ten days before the petition was presented.

10,875. (Mr. Anstey.) Who proposed it at that meeting; was it from you or the Conservatives?—I should think it emanated from them.

10,876. And what was it, that both should be given up?—No; that one should be given up.

10,877. And whose was that?—That was to be left open.

10,878. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that Mr. Kinglake being present at this negociation, and you having proposed in his presence that either his seat or Mr. Vanderbyl's should be sacrificed, do you mean to say that Mr. Kinglake heard of this and had not up to that had no intimation that his election had been won by bribery?—Well, it is very difficult for me to answer.

10,879. Do you mean us to believe that he would, as a man of honour, have stood by and heard you, as agent, propose that his seat should be put in peril, when no intimation had been given him, that corrupt practices had taken place? Why should he condescend to such humiliation?—It is difficult for me——

10,880. Why should a gentleman condescend to such humiliation as you were putting on him before his political opponent, Mr. Westropp, unless you or someone had told him that his seat was in peril for bribery. No gentleman would condescend to such a humiliating proposition.

10,881. (Mr. Anstey.) I will refresh you a little more. I have mentioned you, and mentioned Mr. Kinglake, and you have mentioned Mr. Westropp; were not Mr. Barham, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Cook also present on these occasions in London?—I think not on the occasion of our meeting with Westropp.

10,882. But every other occasion they were?—No, not every other occasion; one or two occasions.

10,883. If the number is so small you will be able to recollect distinctly. Did not Mr. Reed—and remember I am speaking now from a paper prepared by Mr. Trevor, who was present—did not Mr. Reed formally propose to offer both seats, saying that the petition must not go on?—No, he did not propose that to Mr. Trevor.

10,884. Not in your hearing?—Not in my hearing, but it is right for me to say that Mr. Trevor told me he had proposed that.

10,885. Did not you yourself also state in the hearing of Mr. Barham, or Mr. Barham state in your hearing to Mr. Trevor, that although you two were not personally mixed up in the matter, you believed you could not say so much as to some of your friends, who had got into a mess, to use your own expression, and that you must save them if possible?—I think that is very likely to have been said; I do not recollect the words.

10,886. Was Mr. Kinglake present when that was signed?—Certainly not.

10,887. Was Mr. Vanderbyl present on any of those occasions?—No.

10,888. Then all that was done behind Mr. Vanderbyl, but not Mr. Kinglake?—No, it was done behind both.

10,889. Mr. Kinglake was present at the "Tavistock" meeting with Mr. Westropp?—Yes, I communicated to him afterwards.

10,890. Not at the time?—No, I saw him at the meeting.

10,891. Having regard to the fact that this was notorious in the town that a sum of money had been taken without cheque in a body from the bank, had you any doubt that what everybody else had heard, and you in particular, and those other attorneys knew full well, even your opponents, was not at all to some extent known to Mr. Kinglake at least before the time when he gave his evidence in the presence of Mr. Justice Blackburn?—I must confess it does look very much like as if he did know something of it from the fact, but I was alluding more particularly to his own statement.

10,892. (Mr. Price.) Do consider the position in which you are placing Mr. Kinglake. You say you went and undertook on his behalf to sacrifice his seat, or to put it in peril, and that you did that in his presence, and that he was to condescend to the humiliation of being turned out, and Mr. Westropp put in his place. If so, do you mean to say you did not talk the thing over with him as his adviser, and present the state of things to him as existed at the election?—I may say this, I had not talked over anything about bribery with him.

10,893. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you talked it over with Mr. Bate, his financial agent?—I think very likely I may have done so.

10,894. All you knew about bribery to Mr. Bate, and Mr. Bate conveyed that to Mr. Kinglake?—It is quite possible I may have said so to someone else.

10,895. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Kinglake express surprise to you, and say, "Good heavens! Mr. Lovibond, what have I done to be placed in this position?" —No, he did not.

10,896. He never remonstrated?—No.

10,897. (Mr. Anstey.) Now with regard to the secresy, was not it a fact that you and Mr. Trevor were on opposite sides?—Yes.

10,898. Was it not a fact between you and Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook, although you were on the same side, there was anything but a friendly feeling in regard to some of these election circumstances?—It was so.

10,899. And the same with regard to Mr. Barham? —No, I do not know with regard to Mr. Barham, not on my part.

10,900. But between them and Mr. Barham?—I really cannot answer.

10,901. At all events, you were all more or less parties to these dialogues?—Certainly.

10,902. At the meeting at which Mr. Kinglake was present at the "Tavistock," do you mean to say that no allusion was made either by Mr. Trevor or Mr. Westropp about the mess in which some of your friends had got, and out of which you wanted to help them?—I mean to say I do not recollect that.

10,903. There must have been some allusion to it, because else what was the meeting about?—The meeting was for the purpose of getting one of the members to resign.

10,904. Was not it one of the concessa on your side of the question at that meeting that there was a sufficient case against you to make it worth your while to propose a compromise?—No doubt.

10,905. Then you must have made that admission in Mr. Kinglake's presence?—It may have been understood before.

10,906. Understood, and submitted to without a protest by Mr. Kinglake?—Certainly; that is, submitted to without a protest by Mr. Kinglake.

10,907. Was there ever such a thing known as a compromise before proposed by, not to the Liberal party in Bridgwater?—I cannot possibly answer that question.

10,908. Do not you claim to be in a majority here, to have the strongest interest?—We do.

10,909. Did you ever hear in the course of your long life of a compromise of this kind being proposed by the sitting members of the Liberal interest, or on their behalf, to Conservative petitioners or Conservative opponents?—No, I cannot recollect one.

10,910. And therefore, does not the mere fact that such a compromise was offered and so pertinaciously persisted in by you for months prove this, that those with whom and for whom you acted knew well the case would not hold water if it came before the unerring eye of the election judge?—That was my impression that it would not.

10,911. That being so, I will just draw your attention to a passage in Mr. Kinglake's evidence, which I think has escaped observation. The questions which were read to you, and the answers to those, by my learned colleague the Chief Commissioner are preceded by this question and answer: "As we are "aware you were a candidate at the last election, in "conjunction with Mr. Vanderbyl, in the Liberal "interest," and the answer is, "I was." And all the other questions and answers that follow refer therefore to the joint acts of himself, and the joint election of himself and Vanderbyl, and so forth; and yet although the facts are what you have stated them to be, and although Mr. Kinglake knew what he was about, his own acts, and the acts of his own friends and suspected or believed that Mr. Vanderbyl at least was contributing money, when he is asked this question, "Had you taken every "step, by directions to everyone about you, to secure "a pure election here, whatever might be the result?" He answers, "The determination to conduct the elec- "tion within the strict bounds of legality origi- "nated, I must say, with Mr. Henry Lovibond, my "agent." His attention being called to the evasion of the question, he is asked, "Had you any knowledge "whatever from the instructions given or from com- "munications that there was the probability or possi- "bility of Bussell or anyone," including Mr. Vanderbyl, "resorting to any corrupt practices.—None whatever. "Did you strive by direction, and by personal interfer- "ence in every way you could, to secure a pure election "in this borough."—He answers, "I did." And then the question is put, "This evidence has brought facts "to your knowledge, of which you were perfectly "ignorant;" and he says, "Entirely." Suggesting that it is not until the 26th of February 1869 that he became aware of the existence of those acts. I ask you, revieving the evidence you have already given, and recollecting all that has taken place whether you have given any evidence on it or not, whether you can reconcile this statement with the truth, and if so, how?—I do not know how to answer that question, sir, possibly.

10,912. Then I will ask you the same with reference to Mr. Vanderbyl. He is asked, "You were "the colleague of the last witness, Mr. Kinglake, in "the recent election?—I was." Then he is asked, "Did you as well as Mr. Kinglake give your agents "direct instructions to avoid all such irregularities as "might place the election in jeopardy if you suc- "ceeded?—I did. Had you any personal know- "ledge of these matters at that time, these transac- "tions by Bussell and other parties?—I had not. "Did you give any instructions or authority to any "person in the world," including Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook, you know, who could have sanctioned it?—"I never did." I ask you again, Can you tell me how these answers are to be reconciled with the truth of the case?—I cannot.

10,913. (Mr. Price.) Are we to understand from you, all you did in the matter of bribery at the last election, and all that was done by Reed and Cook and Barham on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl in the same way was done in direct contravention of the distinct orders of your clients, the candidates?—It was so far as I know. I had nothing to do with Mr. Vanderbyl at that time.

10,914. Warning you of the position you stand in, you confess yourself now to have taken upon yourself the office of a briber directly by your own inspiration, and determination to win the election contrary to the orders of the candidates?—No, the order was given by Dr. Kinglake.

10,915. Then you surrendered your judgment and conduct of the election to Mr. Kinglake's brother, Dr. Kinglake?—That is so, no doubt.

10,916. (Mr. Coleridge.) And who gave the order for bribery on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl?—I do not know.

10,917. Who acted most confidentially for him?—I believe Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook.

10,918. (Mr. Price.) I ask you as a respectable man, when Dr. Kinglake instructed you to commence bribery in this borough at the last election, do you believe that could have been done by Dr. Kinglake without the knowledge in any way of his brother?—I think it could; I must answer I think it could.

10,919. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you think it was?—Yes.

10,920. On your oath, do you think it was the fact that Mr. Kinglake had not even a suspicion that his brother was acting for him?—Well, I cannot answer that as to a suspicion, or what his thoughts were.

10,921. Or belief?—I really cannot answer that.

10,922. Or information, that he was not perfectly alive to what his brother was about. Had you any reason to believe that?—As I stated from his having sworn in this court I cannot.

10,923. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Kinglake was your client?—He was.

10,924. Dr. Kinglake was not?—Dr. Kinglake was not.

10,925. In an ordinary transaction between an attorney and client, would not you have told any gentleman who came to interfere, that your client was the only person from whom you would receive instructions?—Most undoubtedly.

10,926. Then why if you honestly wanted to put down bribery did not you say that you had been instructed to carry on the election purely, or that that was your intention to do so, and that Mr. Kinglake's instructions were to put down bribery?—Because I had not the moral courage at the time to do it.

10,927. (Mr. Anstey.) You know the greatest bribe master after he has provided his fund, or before, invariably begins by an assertion of purity, which he takes care shall not reach the ears of the electors. Is not that the case?—Yes.

10,928. But if he means purity he reverses the proceeding, he does not provide money, but informs the bribeable electors that they had better make up their minds, for not a farthing shall they have, let his agents assure them whatever they may?—That I cannot say.

10,929. You have had no experience of a pure election?—Very little experience of that at Bridgwater; not a pure election.

10,930. (Mr. Price.) Do not you judge as a man of the world and a professional man that the strict reticence observed between you and Mr. Kinglake as to how the election was won, was caused by some knowledge in Mr. Kinglake's own mind that it was better not to inquire into it?—That is quite possible.

10,931. (Mr. Anstey.) How did that meeting end at the "Tavistock Hotel"?—Which meeting?

10,932. At which Mr Westropp was present a few days before the trial?—I think Mr. Westropp agreed to it.

10,933. To the compromise?—To the compromise.

10,934. Why did it fall through?—Mr. Westropp afterwards ran wide, he broke through his agreement.

10,935. Was anything done to implement the agreement after Mr. Westropp had agreed to it; anything done to decide who was to go?—Nothing.

10,936. Was not it Mr. Vanderbyl who was to go?—Most likely it would have been, because it was suggested, because Mr. Vanderbyl was the junior member.

10,937. And also the least popular?—Well, I was concerned for both.

10,938. Did Mr. Westropp notify to you through his attorneys that he was not going to be bound by the agreement?—He did.

10,939. When?—Very shortly after.

10,940. Have you the letters with reference to that?—No.

10,941. Then the trial went on?—Then the trial went on.

10,942. (Mr. Coleridge.) I understood you to say that you had no doubt that Mr. Kinglake would at some time or other recoup his brother this money?—Yes.

10,943. Do you know any former occasion when Dr. Kinglake had advanced money for his brother and had been recouped again?—I do not.

10,944. Do you know any former occasion on which Dr. Kinglake had advanced money?—I do not.

10,945. (Mr. Anstey.) Or only one on which he advanced money for Mr. Kinglake?—No.

10,946. No date for instance?—No.

10,947. Why had you no doubt that Mr. Kinglake, who had given such strong and positive directions, would nevertheless recoup his brother the large amount he had expended in bribe money?—Mr. Kinglake being an honourable man, and taking an advantage of that money, I should presume he would pay his brother.

10,948. Would not you rather imagine that being an honourable man he would on discovering the fact take advantage of the bribe money, vacate his seat, and say, "I will not touch the accursed thing"?—Such a thing I never heard of in the House of Commons yet.

10,949. Never heard of it?—No.

10,950. Never heard of the members of the House of Commons doing that?—No.

10,951. It is not for me to give you information, but I recommend you to study the case as to that.

(Mr. Price.) What money was spent by Mr. Vanderbyl?—I cannot tell; I never heard from that moment to this.

10,952. You have no idea?—Not the slightest.

10,953. They kept that from you?—Entirely.

10,954. We understand you divided the borough into three districts?—We did.

10,955. You each acted independently?—So far as canvassing.

10,956. And the manipulation of the electors?—Certainly we carried out the same principle in the polling, or intended to do as we did with the canvassing.

10,957. What money was spent on the other side?—I cannot tell you at all. You are speaking of the Conservative side.

10,958. Yes?—I cannot tell you; Mr. Trevor never informed me.

10,959. But you may have heard?—No, I never heard.

10,960. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present at the trial when it went on?—Yes; do you mean in this court?

10,961. Yes, before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Yes, I was here nearly all the time.

10,962. I presume you are fully alive to the responsibility incurred by the client who instructs the attorney, and the attorney who instructs the counsel as to what shall be said to the court, the speeches to be addressed to the court, and the line to be taken. Presuming that, I wish to ask you whether it was by your instructions that Mr. James made this statement: "My Lord, under ordinary circumstances I should not "seek to add one word to what has been stated by my "learned friend, but I am sure, my lord, your lordship "will forgive me if perhaps from over anxiety at this "moment I ask leave to say one word on behalf of "Mr. Kinglake. My Lord, so long as my learned "friend's case was unfinished in respect to the allega-"tion of corrupt practices that could be proved, it "was the wish of Mr. Kinglake, and every one con-"nected with him, that no step should be taken to stay "this inquiry." Did you instruct Mr. James to make that utterly false statement?—I did not.

10,963. Who did?—I think he must have taken that on himself.

10,964. (Mr. Price.) "But, my Lord, it may now be "taken that every fact that can be brought forward to "prove that corrupt practices prevailed within this "borough has been placed before your lordship"?

10,965. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you instruct him to make that false statement?—I did not. That was the license of counsel.

10,966. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know anything about the way Mr. Vanderbyl's money came down?—I have not the slightest idea.

10,967. (Mr. Price.) You know Mr. Brogden, of course?—Perfectly.

10,968. He came with Mr. Vanderbyl in the first instance?—Yes.

10,969. What did he come down here for; what connexion had he with Bridgwater?—None——yes, he had some little: he trades. He had some large coal mines, and he has a wharf at Highbridge.

10,970. (Mr. Coleridge.) On the Welsh coast, you mean?—Yes.

10,971. (Mr. Price.) And at Highbridge?—He has a depôt here, and at Highbridge; but he came down more as a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl.

10,972. (Mr. Coleridge.) How was the original appointment made of all these sub-agents whom you have made use of as those immediately under you?—I believe Mr. Smith gave you an answer to that. It was done by Foster originally, and has been continued from that time with Smith at the head of them.

10,973. Had not you yourself something to do with the appointment of Andrew Allan?—Andrew Allan I had, certainly.

10,974. Tell us how that was?—Which election do you mean?

10,975. I mean, how originally did Allan come into the responsible place of trust he has since held in this bribery and conspiracy?—I knew him as taking a very active part in the election of Sir John Shelley, and also in getting up evidence for the petition against Mr. Westropp: and he has been a client of mine for many years, and I have found him a very trustworthy man, and I asked him, I believe.

10,976. What did you ask him; what was the position you proposed to him?—To have the control of the expending of the money over Smith and others.

10,977. He was to be the go-between between you and the active bribers?—No doubt.

10,978. Was he to have any remuneration for that?—None.

10,979. Did you propose to him a stranger in this place, and a man who could make his own way in the world, to put himself in that peril, and undertake to work without any pay at all?—Yes; I had known him for 10 years, and he being a client, I was constantly in the habit of seeing him.

10,980. That was no reason why you should ask him to work for nothing?

10,981. (Mr. Price.) To make himself liable at every election to prosecution. That is the position you offered him?—Whether he volunteered or I asked him I have not the slightest idea.

10,982. That is what we want to know?—I cannot possibly answer that question.

10,983. Do you mean to say that it has not been the custom to pay the sub-agents anything?—Never.

10,984. There has been a good deal of dispute about it, as Andrew Allan says he did not offer 25*l.* apiece to five men, and two, if not three say he did?—I know that Allan came and told me of it some time afterwards; after, in fact, he had seen a publication of the proceedings at Great Yarmouth, where it turned out the bribers received so much money, and he said that was the reason he supposed why they asked for money now.

10,985. Was it after the election?—It was after the election.

10,986. What did he tell you, because there is down right contradiction?—He told me there was a man named Henry Cornelius White, and Smith, and Bulpin. I think as many as seven or eight of them, that they ought to be paid, that they expected 25*l.* each for their services.

10,987. Was Bussell one of those?—I do not think he mentioned the name of Bussell.

10,988. (Mr. Price.) You know Bussell well of course?—Perfectly well.

10,989. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you at any election in accounting for these different monies any sums put down as being allowed to bribers and not bribees?—Never.

10,990. About this 500*l.* at the last election that was got, did Andrew Allan return you the account of how it was spent?—He never did from that day to this.

10,991. How was that?—Because an inquiry took place, the petition was to be heard directly, and Andrew Allan went to America.

10,992. You do not know who had that money, or what became of it?—I have not the slightest idea. The last thing I said about it was to Mr. Mogg. I know nothing of it since whatever.

10,993. Had you, or Mr. Kinglake, or anybody on his behalf, anything to do with advancing the money that Smith gave to Bussell to keep out of the way?—Certainly not. I never heard of it until Smith gave his evidence in this court.

10,994. Was Smith a sort of man that would be likely to advance money in that way?—Not a very likely man out of his own money.

10,995. Because he tells us he is nearly 100*l.* out of pocket?—Yes.

10,996. He says he has paid from 60*l.* to 80*l.* for bands and colours, did you ever hear of that?—A man applied to me, Alway, for a band, and I refused it.

10,997. Was he in a position to spend 80*l.* for bands and colours out of his own pocket?—I do not know sufficient to answer that question. I should think he was not a very likely man to pay that out of his own pocket.

10,998. Does it surprise you to hear that he did pay it?—It does.

10,999. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you intend to reimburse him?—Certainly not.

11,000. Does Mr. Kinglake?—I should think not.

11,001. How is he to be reimbursed?—Perhaps by Mr. Vanderbyl.

11,002. You have heard what he states, that these debts are considered bad debts if not paid at once, and are kept over until a new election, when the next rich stranger is called upon to pay them?—I regret that is too often the practice.

11,003. We have it in evidence that that was done to your knowledge with several military bands with respect to former elections. Does not that account for what my learned colleague asked you just now, as to how Smith took on himself to do that; the hope of being paid either immediately or at the next election?—I did not understand the learned Commissioner's question. I thought it was how it was, he was a man to advance the money.

(Mr. Price.) I did not put that.

11,004. (Mr. Anstey.) The other question was, how he was reimbursed. You know nothing of what has become of the 500*l.*?—No.

11,005. It may have been embezzled?—I heard Allan give an account of it.

11,006. It would not come back to you, I suppose?—Not likely to.

11,007. The advance was made to you, as we understand from Mr. Prior's evidence and your own. You gave a verbal order, which was delivered, and the advance was made?—Yes, the verbal order was given by me to take the 500*l.* out of the funds lodged by Dr. Kinglake.

11,008. The order came from you?—Yes.

11,009. No writing passed at all?—None.

11,010. Either between you and Mr. Kinglake or you and Mr. Prior?—None.

11,011. But as far as the verbal order was concerned, it came from you, and the money was advanced?—Yes.

11,012. Now, supposing Messrs. Sealey and Prior (it is very likely after the indignation expressed to-day by Sealey) apply to you to pay back every farthing of the 500*l.* with interest on the money paid or advanced nearly a year ago, what shall you do?—Defend the action.

11,013. (Mr. Price.) On what ground?—On the ground that I was not liable.

11,014. (Mr. Anstey.) On the ground that it was for an illegal purpose?—On the ground that it was advanced on Mr. Kinglake's account and not mine.

11,015. And for an illegal purpose?—Certainly I should not take advantage of that, I should take a bonâ fide ground, not any technical ground.

11,016. (Mr. Price.) Who was liable to pay?—Dr. Kinglake.

11,017. The position would be this, that Dr. Kinglake would set up to Mr. Prior, which Prior could not deny that he went to him afterwards and told him that transaction was cancelled and tore up the cheque?—Yes.

11,018. Supposing you became aware of that circumstance, Dr. Kinglake states and Mr. Prior acknowledges, how would you stand?—I should not have given the order.

11,019. Mr. Sealey must pay the money?—Lose the money himself, or Mr. Prior must.

11,020. Because Mr. Prior ought to have told Mr. Sealey in order to tell you that Dr. Kinglake had cancelled the cheque?—Certainly.

11,021. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you defended the action it must be brought against you. Suppose they were to apply to you now for the money, what steps should you take?—I should refer them to Dr. Kinglake.

11,022. Would not you write to Dr. Kinglake yourself?—No; I should refer them to Dr. Kinglake.

11,023. Would you say, "Dr. Kinglake, you know "very well these men have no ground of action, "it is an illegal transaction, but still, for the reputation "of your brother and yourself I recommend you to "settle it." Would not you do that?—Well, I can hardly tell what I should do.

11,024. You would stand on the strict law of the case?—I should certainly deny my liability.

11,025. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were Mr. Kinglake's legal expenses returned at the last election?—I cannot tell you. Mr. Barham was his agent.

11,026. (Mr. Price.) We understand you positively to say you received no remuneration in any shape or way from Mr. Kinglake for any services rendered him in 1868?—I do.

11,027. (Mr. Anstey.) About these election expenses I have it here. Mr. Eustace Barham's abstract bears date the 18th January last, a month or so before the trial of the election petition. It states the election expenses of Mr. Kinglake at 200*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.*, and of Vanderbyl at 166*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.* Now I need not ask you after all you have said, yet I must ask you, is not this an entirely false statement?—No doubt, if all the money was spent.

TENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

11,028. Generally, has not it been the practice ever since Parliament interfered and required a statement of expenditure both under the new law and under the old, the professional men of this borough have evaded or rather violated the law by making these false returns of election expenses?—The practice has been to return the strictly legal expenses. Any illegal expenses you never find in those accounts.

11,029. When there was an election auditor was not it just the same?—Yes.

11,030. And yet the election auditor—I hold a declaration here in Mr. Wilton's handwriting—makes this statement equivalent to an affidavit by Act of Parliament. "I solemnly and sincerely declare that I have not "knowingly made, authorized or sanctioned, and that "I will not knowingly make, authorize, or sanction "any payment on account of this election otherwise "than through the election auditor, save and except "as allowed by the Corrupt Practices Act." Have not those declarations and these abstracts of accounts which are now published, in fact all the instructions required to be taken by the law been made a mere delusion and a mockery by the systematic disobedience which has been shown towards them on the part of the professional men of this place?—No doubt about it.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Friday, 3rd September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. J. Prior.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR recalled.

11,031. (Mr. Anstey.) I wish to call your attention to the 500*l.* taken out of your bank on the polling day of 1868. I suppose you were aware within the next week an election petition was threatened; you were aware from report?—I heard a report to that effect.

11,032. And perhaps Mr. Kinglake, or Mr. Mogg, or some of your friends told you about it?—No, I had no communication with Mr. Kinglake.

11,033. Or Mr. Lovibond?—Or Mr. Lovibond, or Mr. Mogg.

11,034. But you must have heard it from some one; can you give the person?—I cannot say who the party was, because it was a conversation in the town.

11,035. And that petition was not brought to trial until the ensuing month of February?—Yes.

11,036. The result of that petition was such that it was quite clear that a commission of inquiry would go some time in the course of the summer, into this borough. Putting those things together, I wish to ask you, supposing there had been no petition, or threat of petition, would you have been repaid that 500*l.*?—I suppose I should have been by some party or other.

11,037. Is your not having been paid to this day owing entirely to the pendency of these different inquiries. Is it or not attributable to the pendency of these successive inquiries?—I have no doubt it is.

11,038. When this inquiry is over, and all its results are at an end, whatever they may be—we cannot tell what the legislature may or may not do—do you expect then to be immediately repaid?—Well, I shall certainly look out to get the money.

11,039. But not till then?—Well, I cannot.

11,040. Not till then?—Well, I have debited myself with the cash, and there I stand.

11,041. You do not expect until then to be repaid?—I do not know to whom to apply.

11,042. Have you had any conversation with anyone you can recollect on the subject I have been directing your attention to this morning, namely, the pendency of these inquiries, and the necessity of those inquiries being brought to an end before you can be told the name of that person who is to make you the repayment?— All I can say is, that I have spoken to Mr. Lovibond upon it, and he said he would endeavour to get that made all right with me.

11,043. When was this?—I suppose about a fortnight or three weeks ago.

11,044. I do not want to inquire impertinently into anybody's money affairs, but I must ask this question. When the 500*l.* was taken out, as you have described, at your own risk you put it, had you thereby overdrawn your private account at the bank?—I do not keep any private account myself.

11,045. Then you have a share in the bank?—I have.

11,046. I presume you do not divide profits until you have ascertained first of all the gross assets, and next the losses, if there are any?—At the end of the year.

11,047. That being so, I want to know why it was you did not debit yourself with 10 or 11 months' interest on that 500*l.*; why you did not do that, and why, instead of putting the true date down on the advance, as you described it, you put the date of the day before yesterday, or the day before that?—It was only about six weeks before Christmas, and we never debit interest before a year. For instance, if money is drawn out in November, we should not think of debiting that interest until the following November.

11,048. Is it your intention to debit yourself with interest next November?—I must do so.

11,049. Is it your intention?—Well, I shall.

11,050. Is that in consequence of something which passed at this court yesterday?—No.

11,051. In consequence of your conversation with Mr. Sealey the day before yesterday?—No, I should feel in duty bound to pay the money for my indiscretion.

11,052. To debit yourself with interest?—To debit myself with interest.

11,053. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you have done so if Mr. Sealey had known nothing about it?—Certainly.

11,054. Then he would have known it?—Then he would have known it.

11,055. Then your object in concealing it would be gone?—I should debit myself with the interest.

11,056. And then your object, which you have told us was to conceal it from Mr. Sealey, would have been destroyed by your doing so?—Of course it would.

11,057. The very reason you have given us for keeping this from Mr. Sealey would have been destroyed?—It would have been destroyed.

11,058. And you would have undertaken to do that?—I must have done so.

11,059. But should you?—I should have done so.

11,060. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember what took place that morning when you went to Mr. Sealey with the 100*l.* cheque of Brogden's which had been given to you by Mr. Barham?—I had forgotten the circumstance of Mr. Sealey speaking to me on the matter which he said yesterday; it is very possible he did; he must have done.

11,061. Did you understand from Mr. Sealey's mode of speaking to you that you were not to interfere in the matter at all, and cash the cheque, or did you merely understand him to say, "You may act on your own discretion," only not to let him know what you were doing?—It was before the bank was open, and that is the reason why.

11,062. Your recollection being refreshed as to what passed, did you understand Mr. Sealey, from the expressions he used, to reprimand you, and prohibit you from doing what you were asked to do by Mr. Barham, or did you merely understand him to say, "Do not let me know anything about it; act on your "own discretion;" which of those did you understand from his manner?—The latter part of your question.

11,063. Not to prohibit, but merely not to let him know what was going on?—Yes; the management of cash affairs he leaves to me.

11,064. You merely understood it to mean, "Do not trouble me about the matter?"—Yes.

11,065. "But do as you like?"—That is the way in which I mean it.

11,066. And acting on that you cashed the 300*l.* cheque in a subsequent part of the day?—I did.

11,067. (Mr. Anstey.) You say the management of the cash affairs of the bank he leaves to you?—Yes.

11,068. Has that been the distribution of business ever since you have been a partner?—Yes.

11,069. When was that?—Nearly five years.

11,070. The whole of that period, I understand, therefore, whether he really disapproved or not of your proceedings at those two elections, what you did was quite within your power as sole manager of the cash affairs of the bank?—It was.

11,071. (Mr. Price.) If that was so, why did you ask Mr. Sealey that morning? Was it because the bank was not open?—Because the bank was not open.

11,072. Therefore you would have to get the key of the strong box?—Yes, Mr. Sealey had the key.

11,073. You understood that Mr. Barham wanted it directly?—Yes.

11,074. Just before banking hours?—Yes.

11,075. He came about what time?—About half-past nine, I suppose.

11,076. Did you go to Mr. Sealy's house?—I did not.

11,077. Was Mr. Sealey at the bank at that time?—He comes down and stands about the door just before the opening of the bank.

11,078. (Mr. Anstey.) When you gave up the 500*l.* were you in a state of great excitement, or as calm as a banker should be?—I was in a state of excitement at the time; we were balancing up; but I had not been out in the town to cause it.

11,079. (Mr. Price.) What excitement—political?—Well, that and the bustle of making up our books.

11,080. (Mr. Anstey.) That is all?—That is all.

11,081. You were not carried away by party enthusiasm?—Not at all.

11,082. (Mr. Price.) What were you balancing the books for?—For the day; it was about a quarter before three.

11,083. You were beginning to balance for the day; that does not put a banker into a state of great excitement—a thing which he does every day of his life, or put him into a great flutter?—Well, it does that.

11,084. I can understand if the bank is in a tottering condition; but if it is prosperous, do you mean to say that you are fluttered?—If you had been here and seen the confusion going on in the street——

11,085. (Mr. Coleridge.) But that had nothing to do with your accounts?—It had nothing to do with our accounts.

11,086. Do you mean us to understand that you are in a chronic state of flutter when you balance your books?—No.

11,087. Are you a nervous man?—I am that; I am of an excitable temperament certainly.

11,088. (Mr. Anstey.) Having a clear recollection of the depositing of the cheque the night before, and its destruction, and your being nevertheless liable to answer Mr. Lovibond's orders and demands, whatever they might be, in the course of the day, at a quarter to three, when you were going to balance the books, did you begin to be in a flutter about that particular transaction?—No, you misunderstand me. Mr. Mogg rushing into the bank as he did, I was taken by surprise.

11,089. That was afterwards; you began to balance your books at a quarter to three, and that put you in a flutter?—I did not know what I was about.

11,090. When you opened the books in order to balance them, did you consider with yourself, "what "will become of this 1,000*l.* cheque business of last "night, and the demands which Mr. Lovibond will "probably make on me for money to pay the bills "withal"?—That cheque for 1,000*l.* was destroyed previously.

11,091. But the transaction remained?—No.

11,092. Do you mean to say that, notwithstanding the destruction of the cheque that morning, you were fully prepared to expect a message of some kind or other for money from Lovibond, in Mr. Kinglake's name, in the course of the day?—I did not expect it. I was really taken by surprise.

11,093. This throws new light on your evidence. Do you mean to tell the Commissioners, being in a state of excitement yourself, that when Mr. Mogg came in, without any warrant from anybody who was a customer of yours, and without mentioning the name even of a customer of yours (for that he has sworn), and put down on a piece of paper these words only, "500*l.* to Allan," do you mean to tell the Commissioners that you honoured that order without any previous intimation from Mr. Lovibond, or some one else, that if such an order came in in the course of the day you were to honour it?—No, I had no idea at all of the kind.

11,094. (Mr. Price.) Did not it strike you then when this "500*l.* to Allan" came, or bring to your recollection the important transaction of the night before of the 1,000*l.* cheque, and the destruction of it, and that that matter was to be considered cancelled, and did not you consider, "What right have I to do this when that 1,000*l.* business is at an end"?—Well, I did not duly consider what I was about, otherwise I would not have done it.

11,095. (Mr. Anstey.) Did anybody else then come to you in the same way?—No.

11,096. I really do not comprehend this. Do you swear positively, that when Dr. Kinglake came to you and said, "Give me the cheque, and let this cheque be "as if it was not drawn, and this matter, as if it had not "been opened," do you mean to say he did not then give, or had not then given you to understand, that notwithstanding the destruction of the cheque, you might still be called upon for money in the course of the day?—He did not.

11,097. (Mr. Price.) You knew it was bribe money?—Well, I expected it was for that purpose.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

3 Sept. 1869.

11,098. It could not have been a bonâ fide transaction, or it would not have come to you in that form?—It was not; I was taken, as I solemnly declare, by surprise, in the hurry of the moment, I did not know what to do.

11,099. (Mr Coleridge.) Assuming that you were taken by surprise, and admitting as you have almost everything, will not you fairly state at once that you knew this money was brought for the purpose of bribery?—I expected it was.

11,100. But did not you know it?—Well, I did not.

11,101. Coupling it with the transactions of the night before, Dr. Kinglake bringing the 1,000*l.* cheque, and the very unusual sum of 500*l.* being given to the person whom the cheque was to be dealt with by, did not you know it was for the purpose of bribery?—Well, I pretty well understood.

11,102. Had you the remotest doubt?—Well, I did not give it a thought.

11,103. (Mr. Price.) You, a banker, giving 500*l.* under such circumstances, did not you give it a thought?—Well, I did not at the moment.

11,104. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you seen Dr. Kinglake since he appeared in court yesterday?—I have not spoken to him since.

11,105. Had you seen him before he appeared in court yesterday?—Not that day.

11,106. Before he came into the witness-box?—I did not.

11,107. Nor after?—Nor after.

11,108. Have you had any conversation about this with Mr. Lovibond, or anybody else since you gave us your evidence?—No.

11,109. (Mr. Coleridge.) You heard Mr. Lovibond say he certainly should defend the action if you brought it against him?—Well, I heard that from some one, but was not in court to hear it; I heard that he had said so.

11,110. (Mr. Price.) I think you said you kept no account, but you draw money out from time to time, and it is taken into account when you divide the profits?—I do.

11,111. (Mr. Anstey.) If the 500*l.* had been withdrawn bonâ fide from your own private account for that year, would it have exceeded your share of the profits or not?—Well, it may have exceeded my share of the profits.

11,112. How much?—Well, I cannot say, perhaps a couple of hundred.

11,113. Did you not account for that last Christmas?—No; because the memorandum was there, showing that I had had the money.

11,114. Were not you debited with an excess when you and your partners came to divide the profits last Christmas?—It was not. It is no uncommon thing when money is taken from cash to put a memorandum in the cash-box for whatever it may be.

(Mr. Anstey.) But this was not in the cash book, or whatever it may be; it was an independent bag of gold which nobody had touched.

11,115. (Mr. Price.) It was not taken into account when you divided profits last Christmas?—The 500*l.* was taken as cash.

11,116. When you say taken as cash, was it enumerated?—It was.

11,117. (Mr. Price.) How?—By my memorandum.

11,118. Was Mr. Sealey aware of it?—Mr. Sealey was not.

11,119. Then in point of fact it was not; it was only in your mind?—There was a memorandum to show that.

11,120. But if it had been an ordinary transaction, a proper transaction, you would, when you divided the profits with Mr. Sealey, have said, "I have already had 500*l.* on account," if it had been a bonâ fide regular transaction?—If it had been for my own private use.

11,121. That is what I call a bonâ fide transaction?—Yes.

11,122. Therefore you entered into the profits as if no such transaction had taken place?—Yes.

11,123. (Mr. Anstey.) If you did what you understood Mr. Sealey meant you to do in 1865 or 1866, that is to say, kept those things to yourself, did you imagine if you did keep them to yourself, and not trouble him about it, that he would not have disapproved of it when the time arrived for making it known to him?—I think that he would have disapproved of it.

11,124. Did you then think so?—When I gave the 500*l.*?

11,125. Yes?—I did not give it a thought.

11,126. The night before, when you made the compact about the 1,000*l.*, did you think then, if I succeed in keeping this so that Mr. Sealey may be able to say to all the world he knows nothing about it, when the time comes for closing the account, and getting back this money, then I shall tell him, and then he will not disapprove of what I have done?—If that 1,000*l.* had been drawn, or any part of it, that cheque then would have gone forward by the following post, and the entries would appear regular.

11,127. Then he would not have disapproved of it. Did you think so?—I did not think anything about it; it was one of those transactions that bankers have. If a customer brings a cheque, or anybody brings a cheque, and we have confidence that it is all right——

11,128. (Mr. Price.) But he was not a customer?—He was not a customer.

(Mr. Anstey.) He did not bring it to "us," but to you personally.

11,129. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was not passed into your books in any shape or way?—No; because I was not to pass it if it was not wanted.

11,130. Assuming, for the sake of argument, if Mr. Sealey had done what you did, put this memorandum in a bag, and then have died suddenly, should you have known what that memorandum meant?—I should.

11,131. Explain; what do you mean. That he had taken 500*l.*?—That he had taken 500*l.*

11,132. (Mr. Anstey.) If he had put it into another bag that already contained in counted money 500*l.*, you would have thought that that paper without more referred to another bag not there, and which had contained 500*l.*, and which had been dissipated. Do you mean to say, that if you had known nothing of the transaction described by my learned colleague, and supposing the transaction had occurred as he has stated it to you, and then Mr. Sealey had died, and you had found it not in an empty bag, but in another bag containing exactly the sum of 500*l.*, that you would have understood the memorandum "J. S. 500*l.*" referred not to the bag it was in, nor to the money which accompanied it, but to a bag not there, and money of which there was no trace. Do you mean to swear that?—I do.

11,133. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have not told us yet, was the memorandum dated?—I have made out a copy of the memorandum as well as I recollect it (handing it in).

11,134. (Mr. Price.) Is that your name?—"J. P." are my initials, and on examination of our books that will be found to be my initials all through.

11,135. (Mr. Anstey.) I must tell you, that before the time comes for our consideration of the question, highly painful for us to consider in any case, whether the witnesses have answered our questions, I shall certainly expect that you will give the Commissioners in general, and myself in particular, information that at present I consider you have not given; namely, how it was that if the transaction was entirely at an end that morning between you and Dr. Kinglake, by the destruction of that cheque, and if you had no communication from him, or from others preparing you to receive messages that day for money, how it was that you handed over to a perfect stranger to the bank, without any written security or order whatever, the large sum of 500*l.*, which it was not yours to hand over. I warn you of that, and therefore you must consider between this and the close of our inquiry what you have to do; and I must further warn you, if I get the information from anybody else I shall not want yours. Mr. Lovibond, being himself now under examination, may probably supply us. I will ask you while you are in the witness-box, are you the John

Prior, banker, who signed the famous petition of 80 in 1866, praying the House of Commons to do its best to prevent bribery and other corrupt practices in Bridgwater, by the suspension of the writ, and an address for the issue of a Commission?—I am the party, and if that petition had been acted upon I should not have been here now.

11,136. (Mr. Price.) That you cannot tell at all, because I suppose your object would have been served, like the object of Mr. Lovibond; since it was a party manœuvre to get the writ suspended until you were prepared with a candidate likely to beat the others?—I never thought about the writ.

11,137. What did you think would be the result of the petition?—An inquiry into the practices of the town.

11,138. And would result probably in the disfranchisement of the borough?—That I should have been very glad to have seen. I have expressed my opinion on that for years.

Mr. Ford recalled.

Mr. Ford.

(The witness.) May I be allowed to correct a statement which appears in the "Bridgwater Mercury" of last night, and ask your shorthand writer if his notes agree with that? Mr. Bate is reported to have said that his father and my father, Mr. Thomas Ford, introduced Mr. Gaselee and Mr. Kinglake to Bridgwater. I wish it to be distinctly understood by you that Mr. Thomas Ford was not my father, only an uncle. My own father had nothing to do with the introduction of Mr. Gaselee or Mr. Kinglake into Bridgwater. I should be sorry for you to imagine that my father was the Mr. Thomas Ford connected with it.

(Mr. Anstey.) If the evidence requires correction, what you say now will be a sufficient correction.

John Smith recalled.

J. Smith.

11,139. (Mr. Price.) You stated to us yesterday that they knew you would have nothing to do with bribery, in answer to the questions which were put to you: "I should like you to explain how it was when "they began to bribe they did not entrust you, you "being the accredited agent of the town, with the "knowledge of the fact that they were bribing?—"They knew I would have nothing to do with it." And then I put to you, "You had a virtuous fit, and "therefore would not have anything to do with it," and your answer is, "They knew it." You do not answer my question about having a virtuous fit, and then you are asked, "You told them that you had been "convinced of the impropriety of the whole thing, "and you would have nothing else to do with it," and your answer is, "I did not tell them that." And the question is, "Can you tell us why you broke off "with the party, and gave up this electioneering "business. Did they distrust you?—Oh, no, as I "told you before I had lost by the electioneering, and "had been ill for a long period before that." "That "is the reason, because you had lost your business, "and had been ill?—Yes." Now, I wish to ask you, do you adhere to that statement as a reason why you determined to give up having anything to do with bribery?—I do.

11,140. As the sole reason?—As the sole reason.

11,141. I wish to ask you whether there was not a reason operating on your mind that you had placed yourself under an obligation to Mr. Westropp?—No.

11,142. Will you swear?—I do.

11,143. And that you had written to him that you would never oppose him?—I did write to him; I do not recollect the contents of the letter.

11,144. Did you write to him that you would never oppose him?—I do not remember that.

11,145. Will you swear you did not?—I will not.

11,146. If you say you might have done so, on what ground did you write that to him; what induced you to write to the candidate opposed to you politically that you would never oppose him, and against whom you had voted before?—In the fore part of last year I was in London with Mr. Symons, of the firm of Symons and Colthurst, who had lost a large vessel, and the only man saved from the vessel was a dark man. I found him in London, and it occurred to me that was a case to go before the Board of Trade. I went to Mr. Kinglake and asked him if he could give me an introduction, I think it was to General Peel. He said he did not think he could, for the reason that their government was not in office, and it was always difficult to approach any office upon the opposite side. I found that I could not get an introduction through Mr. Kinglake, and I thought it would appear, on my part, stupid to come back to Bridgwater without doing that which they sent me up for; and it then occurred to me to go to Mr. Westropp, at his club, at Charing Cross.

11,147. (Mr. Price.) What had General Peel to do with it?—Whether that was the name I cannot say; I think it was Mr. Peel or Mr. Watkins, not General Peel.

11,148. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean Mr. Arthur Peel, the secretary of the Board of Trade, not General Peel?—Mr. Peel.

11,149. (Mr. Price.) Were you interested in that vessel?—I was not.

11,150. What do you mean by saying, "The case "we had, about the end of last year, a vessel called "the 'George.'" What did you mean by writing that to Mr. Westropp?—I do not know that I wrote "we."

11,151. Did you say, "The case is, we had about "the end of last year a vessel called the 'George,' "that vessel was run down by a steamer called the "'Anglia,' in Yarmouth Roads, no one saved but "a coloured boy, the steam ship picked him up, "took him to Dundee; there he made a statement, "and the captain also (enclosed); the coloured boy "says that what they say he said he never did say "(he cannot read or write). This I will explain, when "I see you; amongst other things they report he said "the oil was bad;" and so forth. Do you remember writing that?—I think it is very likely.

11,152. And telling him that you had had letters from the Duke of Richmond about it?—Yes.

11,153. Were you or not interested in the vessel?—I was not.

11,154. What do you mean by saying, "We had a vessel"?—The word "we" there is a mistake; I had no interest whatever in the vessel.

11,155. Do you mean that the town had a vessel?—No; it was Mr. Symons' vessel, and he deputed me to go to London.

11,156. Why did you say "we"? You do not say "Mr. Symons had a vessel," but, "The case is, we "had at the end of last year a vessel called the "'George'"?—Yes.

11,157. What do you mean by saying, "The case is "we had a vessel"?—I cannot answer that in any other way. I put the word "we" in; it was a mistake on my part.

11,158. Was that letter dated February 1st?—It was about that time.

11,159. Had you previously written to him in these terms on the 30th January 1868, "Will you kindly "say, per return, if you are in London"?—I did, I believe.

11,160. And he wrote to you to say, "In reply to "yours of yesterday, I am in town, and shall be for "some time. I received your letter on my return "from the country this evening too late to reply as "you wished, by return." Is that so?—Yes, that is about it.

11,161. And then you wrote this long letter to him

ELEVENTH DAY.

J. Smith.

3 Sept. 1869.

in which you said this, you were going to ask a favour of him by this letter?—Was that in town?

11,162. Yes?—Was that after I had been to London and seen him?

11,163. I should suppose it could not have been, because it follows immediately one to you, directed to Bridgwater on the 30th January, "I received your "letter on my return from the country this evening "too late to reply as you wished by return." You wrote immediately from Bridgwater, so I conclude that you had not seen him, now you wanted a favour from him?—I think I wrote to him to that effect.

11,164. Now, in that letter did you say to him, "Before I commence laying a case before you, in "which I, Messrs. Colthurst and Symons, Captain "Hunt, and James Harwood are interested in, I would "just say one word, and, of course you will hold my "writing for it, which is pretty well known, that I "hear from pretty good authority that you intend to "contest our borough again. I am glad to hear it, "and no act of mine shall stay you whenever that "time may arrive; however, on that I should very "much like to see you, and I would suggest that after "you have read the papers through, you may know "some one belonging to, or in authority at the Board "of Trade." Do you remember writing that to him?—I think it is very likely.

11,165. Do you mean to say, therefore, that your abstaining from election proceedings was not influenced to an extent by the fact that you knew Mr. Westropp had under your hand an expression on your part that no act of yours should do anything to damage him when he came down?—If you will allow me I will explain that.

11,166. Answer the question. When you say you determined not to act at that election, had not the fact that you had written in these terms something to do with it?—I had a cause for so doing.

11,167. Had you, or not, and did that operate on your mind, the fact that you had written in those terms to Mr. Westropp, in determining you to abstain from anything like political action?—It did for some time.

11,168. When did it cease to operate?—Well, about a week, I should think, or two or three days before the last general election. If you will allow me to explain——

11,169. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did vote?—I did vote.

11,170. For the Liberals?—For the Liberals.

11,171. (Mr. Price.) You told us just now that the whole cause of your not voting was your ill health and loss of trade?—So it was.

11,172. Now I understand you to say the fact also of your having written to Mr. Westropp?—For some time it did.

11,173. When did it cease?—When I went to London I went to his club at Charing Cross. I saw him, and he introduced me to the Board of Trade. Walking down Parliament Street he complained of how badly he had been used at Bridgwater. I was ill at that time, and had conversations about it, and he mentioned the names at Bridgwater, and I told him at that time I had nothing more to do with electioneering, and after I came back I wrote to London to him. I may explain that some years ago my son was in a boarding school in London. About that time I had a presentation for him to the Bluecoat School. He came to see me in the holidays, and was in the street with some boys. A marble rolled out of his hand into the road, and he ran after it and was run over by a gentleman of the name of Tucker, of Clay Hill Farm, and killed. Having that presentation for the Bluecoat School by me I was asked, having no boy old enough of my own, to go to Colney Hatch by a friend of mine in London to give it to some woman whose husband was a butcher, and I transferred the presentation that I should have had for myself over to this person who lived in London for her boy to go to school. When I was in London, having another boy getting the proper age for going there, and having lost my patron who gave me the presentation for my first boy, it then occurred to me that I would ask Mr. Westropp whether he had any influence at the Bluecoat School.

11,174. (Mr. Price.) What year was that?—February of that year when I was in London. At that time when I got home, I will not be sure, I wrote.

11,175. This is not the only business you asked him about. You went up to see about the presentation of your boy?—I wrote to him.

11,176. That is part of the business you went up to London about?—No, it never occurred to me until I was there in conversation. I heard that he was connected with city merchants, and his club at that time was principally composed of city merchants, and then it occurred to me after I got home.

11,177. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it the Union Club?—Yes. Then it occurred to me, if so what he told me—there was no possible harm—he could procure me a presentation for me himself. I did so, and he told me it could not be done.

11,178. Why?—He said he had no interest. I never mentioned my interview with Mr. Westropp. What he told me was with reference to agents or men here; he named two or three particularly whom he said had swindled him. I never mentioned it till two or three days or weeks before the last election. I happened to go up the town to Mr. Whitby, the stationers. We had then a building society meeting, and first I remember it was winter time, for the reason that the shop was shut, and on the outside the door, as near as I can possibly remember, were two men standing on the kerbstone, who repeated verbatim the letter I had sent to Mr. Westropp.

11,179. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean this long letter?—I mean the letter with reference to where I wrote to Mr. Westropp, asking him to be kind enough to interest himself to get my boy into the Bluecoat School, and that was said verbatim outside the door, exactly or nearly so, how I had written to Mr. Westropp. Then it occurred to me that I had not mentioned Mr. Westropp's name to any living person here, and it occurred to me that he had broken faith with me.

11,180. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ask him not to mention it?—No.

11,181. Then how do you mean he had broken faith?—Because I had told him I should have nothing to do with the election as far as he was concerned.

11,182. You told him this while you asked him a favour?—I asked him a favour, no doubt.

11,183. You offered to abstain from bribing against him on condition that he did something for you?—I cannot imagine how it was that he thought I should have broken faith with him in the election; I never did; but it occurred to me that he must have told some one in Bridgwater I had written that particular letter to him, and that it was a favour. I stated it to my friend at the time—that had no effect on me. Mr. Collins I will call as a witness to prove that my friend at Shepton Mallett expected to see me there on Saturday morning. I had written to him there saying that I should be there.

11,184. What has this to do with it?—Nothing.

11,185. (Mr. Price.) Having told him that you would do nothing to hinder his success, and having been under a certain obligation to him, and asking him for a further obligation, why was it you turned round?—I do not think I asked him any further obligation with the exception of my boy.

11,186. It is a long letter begging him to interfere?—Just so.

11,187. It was a favour then?—It was a favour.

11,188. You asked one for yourself and another for your party, which was Symons and Co.?—No.

11,189. What was it made you, after your solemn promise to Mr. Westropp if he would do this, that you would not act against him; and he had performed his part of the contract, for he seems to have gone to the Board of Trade, only they would not inquire—having done what you had asked him as far as Mr. Symons was concerned, and told you his inability about your boy, what made you break your part?—I felt a little annoyed about the letter being made public.

11,190. (Mr. Anstey.) Why should you have felt annoyed if it was an honest transaction?—Because I wrote on the top of that letter "private."

11,191. Did you mark it "confidential" also?—No, I did not.

11,192. (Mr. Price.) This is a true copy, and there are some documents here which are marked "private,"—at least which are not put down here—parts of letters—because it is said they are marked "private." The long letter I read to you is not marked "private" at all, and the letter in reference to your boy is not here at all?—I sent it.

11,193. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you stipulate with Mr. Westropp that he should keep this letter a secret?—With reference to my writing?

11,194. Yes?—I did.

11,195. At the interview which you had with him?—No, I wrote to him.

11,196. (Mr. Price.) Why should you wish it to be kept private? Was there any great harm in your asking him?—No.

11,197. Then why should you wish it to be kept secret?—It occurred to me every letter I wrote to him was marked "private."

11,198. Was there anything in asking Mr. Westropp to give you a presentation for your boy that you were ashamed to have made public at the market?—No.

11,199. Then why think he had betrayed you in publishing it? Was it because of your politics? You thought your party would come down on you for having asked a favour?—No.

11,200. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it because of the presumed near approach of a general election?—No; that was in February.

11,201. Was it not notorious there would be a dissolution some time that year?—I think——

11,202. Do you mean to swear that you, a politician, were not aware, after the passing of the Act of 1867, when it was perfectly well known that the question as to the dissolution which followed in 1868 was only a question of time?—Well, it was, no doubt.

11,203. It was a pledge given?—I do not know.

11,204. You, a public man in your way, do you mean to swear on your oath that you were not aware in February that Mr. Westropp would be probably down again in the course of the year?—I will not.

11,205. You will not swear?—No.

11,206. Do you swear that you did not know it?

11,207. (Mr. Price.) Had you any doubt?—I had no doubt that he would be here.

11,208. Here you are on February 1st saying, "I "understand from pretty good authority you intend "to canvass our borough again"?—Yes, very good.

11,209. Therefore you knew well that an election was imminent. "I am glad to hear it." Were you glad to hear that your political opponent, Mr. Westropp, was going to stand again?—I cannot say that.

11,210. Why did you say that?—I cannot say.

11,211. "No act of mine shall stay you whenever "that time may arrive. However, on that I should "very much like to see you." That was on his coming forward to contest the borough. What did you want to see him about—"I should very much "like to see you"?

11,212. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you any notion of changing your side at that time?—Not the slightest.

11,213. (Mr. Anstey.) You had an intention of changing your vote?—No, I had no intention.

11,214. Then what is the meaning of those words?

11,215. (Mr. Price.) "No act of mine shall stay you." Did you mean to abstain from electioneering?—I did mean to abstain from electioneering.

11,216. (Mr. Coleridge.) From voting?—No, I merely meant to record my vote.

11,217. Did you mean to vote against him after you said you were glad he was coming forward?—I told him in London, "I certainly shall not vote for you."

11,218. Is not voting for another doing an act which will stay him?—That was done between him and myself.

11,219. Do you call voting an act?—I do.

11,220. Is it an act calculated to stay the opposing candidate when you vote for one?—It would be, one vote.

11,221. Then what did you want to see him very much for; "However, on that I should very much "like to see you," underscored. What did you want to see him for?—I cannot remember that.

11,222. If you could get this favour at Mr. Westropp's hands, did you go up for the purpose of telling him what you knew of the past history of the contest, or what chance he had?—No, I did not; I knew nothing.

11,223. You knew all about the bribery on your side?—Yes, of course I did.

11,224. (Mr. Anstey.) You said just now, not two or three answers back, in answer to the learned Chief Commissioner, upon his question, that you had told Mr. Westropp in London, that Mr. Westropp had perfectly understood you in London, that you could not vote for him?—Yes.

11,225. Did you tell him that you thought it probable that you would not vote against him?—No, I told him perfectly distinctly that I would not vote for him.

11,226. Did you tell him it was very probable that you would not vote against him; that is, not vote at all?—No, I did not.

11,227. Did you give him any reason to believe that you would not vote at all?—No.

11,228. Then what do you call those words which the Chief Commissioner has called your attention to particularly, if you did not mean that you were not going to vote against him?—If Mr. Westropp was here he would repeat the same.

11,229. (Mr. Price.) What did it mean?—I cannot say.

11,230. I think you said just now, in the same letter which you wrote about the ship you had also written about your own boy?—No, another letter.

11,231. Was it not as much as 11 days afterwards when you wrote to him again asking him to obtain something for you?—I forget what I wrote. I do not know what that something alluded to.

11,232. Is this the way in which you write to him? I want you to explain the expression, "Dear sir, I "beg thankfully to acknowledge the receipt of your "note. It would have been answered per return, but "absence from home prevented it. I should be very "glad if case of loss of 'George' could be cited by "'side wind.'" What do you mean by that? "You "know case well, but brief is in hand of counsel, and "to go into particulars would perhaps weaken our "case." Were you or not interested therefore in the loss of the "George"?—I was not.

11,233. Then why do you keep calling it our case?—Mr. Symons asked me to investigate it for him.

11,234. Were you agent for Mr. Symons?—No.

11,235. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you paid for doing it?—Yes.

11,236. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it a sort of commission?—No; I had merely my bare expenses.

11,237. You were not paid then. Do you mean to say you were not paid more than your bare expenses?—Very little.

11,238. You said just now only your bare expenses, and now a little more?—What I mean by my bare expenses is my travelling expenses. I stayed with my uncle.

11,239. Had you nothing for leaving your business here?—I believe I had 5*l.* for going up.

11,240. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said Mr. Westropp complained to you of people who had swindled him at Bridgwater. What are their names?—He mentioned Temblett's name, and I believe he mentioned Robert Bussell's name.

11,241. Anyone else?—I think not.

11,242. What did he say they had done?—That they had treated him badly, and I believe it was owing to them.

11,243. Swindling is a strong term. How did he

ELEVENTH DAY.

3 Sept. 1869.

say they had swindled him? Did he say they had kept back the money with which——?—Well, that would be a hard word; treated him badly.

11,244. You used the word "swindling?"—I did.

11,245. Did he say that they had kept back the money which ought to have been distributed in bribery?—He did not.

11,246. Did he allude to bribery in any way?—Not the slightest.

11,247. Neither on your side nor his own?—No.

11,248. (Mr. Price.) You remember writing to Mr. Westropp a letter in which you expressed great gratitude, and said he was as right as the mail?—Very likely.

11,249. What did you mean by that?—I cannot say.

11,250. Do not put us off with that. This is not answering questions?—I am aware of that.

11,251. What did you mean by telling Mr. Westropp that he was as right as the mail?—I cannot answer that.

11,252. Did you mean his election was sure?—I cannot answer that.

11,253. Did you mean his election was sure?—I might have referred to that.

11,254. What else could it have referred to?—I do not know.

11,255. And also assured him that Mr. Kinglake would not stand?—No, I do not remember that.

11,256. Will you swear you did not?—Yes.

11,257. Will you swear that you neither by letter nor word of mouth, because it may have been by word of mouth, express great gratitude to Mr. Westropp for what he had done, and tell him that he was as right as the mail; and tell him that you were assured or informed that Mr. Kinglake would not stand?—I will not swear it.

11,258. If you did that, had you any authority for assuring him that Mr. Kinglake would not stand?—I do not remember anything about that.

11,259. You say you will not swear you did not say so to him. I understand you to say that you will not swear that you did not express gratitude to him; and say that he was as right as the mail?—I cannot recollect that.

11,260. And also that you are assured that Mr. Kinglake will not stand. Will you swear you did not say that?—That I do not remember anything about.

11,261. Could you have said any such thing?—I do not think I could.

11,262. Had you any right to say it?—I do not think I had. I had no right.

11,263. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you heard that Mr. Kinglake would not stand?—I had not heard he would not stand.

11,264. (Mr. Price.) Then if you had not heard he would not stand, and if you had no right to assure Mr. Westropp that he would not stand, will you, as an honest man, tell us whether you gave that assurance or not?—I do not think I did.

11,265. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you under the impression that Mr. Westropp would get in?—I thought it was very likely.

11,266. Then do you or not agree? I thought you yourself said, if you have not all the others have here, that this is a Liberal borough, if there is any money; that the two Liberal candidates are always safe?—I believe that is it.

11,267. Did you mean by that Mr. Westropp was to bribe the borough?—I did not think he would get in unless he paid money for it.

11,268. Did you ever tell him so?—Yes.

11,269. Told him he could not get in without paying money?—Yes, he knew that.

11,270. Did you tell him about what it would cost?—No, I had no right.

11,271. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell him, "I wish "you would kindly write me a letter." "I also saw "Mr. A. W. K., who has not the slightest idea of "retiring. I merely tell you this for your own guid-"ance." Who is Mr. A. W. K.?—Mr. Kinglake.

11,271*a*. "I wish you would kindly write me a letter "stating the question in its entirety, the same as you "asked Captain Walker. You remember exactly what "it was, and for this reason I told them that an answer "with reference to 'George' would not be definite "until about Tuesday or Wednesday. I want your "name to be before them as a document for your "extreme kindness to me"—before whom?—I cannot tell you who that alluded to.

11,272. (Mr. Anstey.) Surely the Board of Trade?—It might have been.

11,273. (Mr. Price.) Or was it Mr. Symons?—No. I think, if I remember right, it was the Board of Trade.

11,274. (Mr. Anstey.) That is not the meaning of the passage which the learned Chief Commissioner has just read to you. Clearly and plainly does it not amount to this, that you asked Mr. Westropp to do a most improper thing, that is to use his private or supposed personal influence with his political friends, then in office, to obstruct the course of justice in an inquiry which was taking place with respect to this vessel, as to which the Board of Trade had public duties to perform, to the prejudice of yourself or your principal, Mr. Symons, who was examined here the other day?—No.

11,275. (Mr. Price.) What was the question about the "George" that you wished the Board of Trade to take up?—This. The "George" had come from the north of England. I believe she was sailing for Cardiff with pig iron. The Dundee steamboat, the "Anglia," off Cromer at 12 o'clock at night ran into the vessel which belonged to Mr. Symons, and they were all drowned with the exception of this black boy.

11,276. Just to shorten the thing, was there an inquiry, or was there any policy of insurance on this ship; and on claiming the insurance money was there any blame thrown on the crew of the ship "George," or the crew of the steamboat?—There was an insurance on the ship. The proprietor of the steamboat complained that the proprietor of the "George" did not show a light.

11,277. Just attend to me. I think we can shorten the matter, in all probability. In consequence of this running down, was a claim made on the underwriters?—Yes, there was.

11,278. Did they resist the claim on the ground that the ship "George" did not show lights?—No; they paid it.

11,279. Then did you ask for an inquiry on the part of the Board of Trade to see who was to blame?—I asked for an inquiry from the Board of Trade for them to investigate it to see who was to blame.

11,280. Was there an inquiry?—No.

11,281. Why not?—They said it would be a great expense, and in consequence of the dark boy making——

11,282. Did you bring an action against the "Anglia"?—Yes.

11,283. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did bring an action?—There was to be one, provided the Board of Trade took it up.

11,284. (Mr. Price.) Previous to your taking proceedings against the "Anglia" you wanted an inquiry to be made by the Board of Trade?—Yes.

11,285. And you wanted Mr. Westropp to use his influence to get an inquiry by the Board of Trade?—Yes.

11,286. And you applied to the Board of Trade?—Yes.

11,287. And they declined to interfere?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Are you aware that if this had been an ordinary matter of business with the Board of Trade, that Mr. Peel or any other member——

11,288. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Peel, I believe, was the private secretary of the Duke of Richmond?—Yes.

11,289. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, your sitting member,—Mr. Kinglake, for instance,—sitting on whichever side of the House he likes, is entitled, by a standing order of the Board of Trade, to an audience with the Board of Trade during office hours, and more than that, that he is entitled to an inspection of official documents; are you not aware of that?—I am not aware of that.

11,290. Do you mean to swear that Mr. Kinglake would tell you such a monstrous untruth as that which you have told us of, namely, that you had better go to somebody whose political opinions were in consonance with those of the then President of the Board of Trade?—No.

11,291. (Mr. Price.) It was a public matter. What did you want Mr. Peel to do for you?—I wanted Mr. Peel to get me an introduction to the Board of Trade; and he told me he was afraid he could not.

11,292. (Mr. Anstey.) If your motive was honest, why did you go and earwig a private secretary, instead of going direct to Mr. Kinglake himself?—Mr. Kinglake told me he could not do it himself.

11,293. Do you mean to tell me Mr. Kinglake told you that?—He did.

11,294. Was not Mr. Kinglake then a member; and had he not been so for some years?—He was.

11,295. Was Mr. Kinglake not fully aware of the constant practice of members on both sides of the House, of obtaining an interview with any minister, at any hour of the day?—What he said was with reference to the introduction I wanted to the Board of Trade.

11,296. Was not this what you said to Mr. Westropp, "It is a little bit of private favour we wish to "have shown to us by the Board of Trade"?—No.

11,297. Have you not used the word "favour" throughout your written communications to Mr. Westropp?—I have.

11,298. Then why did you use the word "favour;" and why did you want to put a private secretary in motion, who you know is some one entirely distinct from the head of the department?—I was there with him three quarters of an hour.

11,299. (Mr. Price.) There is no doubt you could have memorialized the Board of Trade; and that could have been done without the interference of any member at all?—I did not know that.

11,300. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say this on reflection, that Mr. Kinglake told you that with respect to mere ordinary business like that with the Board of Trade you had better go to some man of the same political opinions as the man who happened to be at the head of the department?—Yes.

11,301. Now remember, you are casting a very grave imputation on Mr. Kinglake, whom you say you would pawn your coat for?—I do.

11,302. Do you mean to say he ever told you that?—Yes.

11,303. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever tell Mr. Kinglake you had been to Mr. Westropp?—I did not.

11,304. (Mr. Price.) Why did you not do so?—It was not worth my while to tell him that.

11,305. Did you want to keep it from Mr. Kinglake and his party that you had been to Mr. Westropp and asked him to use his influence for you with respect to this vessel, with some one at the Board of Trade, so that you might get this job privately done? Why did you not tell your party?—I had been to Mr. Westropp, and through him it was that I got an audience with the Board of Trade. Everybody knew it here; it was no secret.

11,306. There is another matter I want to ask you about. The explanation you give, therefore, is, that in consequence of the publication of the contents of your letter, in which you asked for a presentation for your son, that that made you determine to vote at the election?—Mr. Westropp always knew I should vote against him.

11,307. Notwithstanding that you told him that no act of yours should stay him?—Yes, he knew it.

11,308. With that staring him in the face, that no act of yours would stay him, he always knew you were going to vote the other side?

11,309. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would it not have been very damaging to you amongst your party if it was known that you had been to Mr. Westropp to ask him to get favours done for you?—No.

11,310. Do not the Conservatives in this borough expect that every favour that can be given by their representative should be given only to them?—No.

11,311. (Mr. Anstey.) If Mr. Westropp had got this little job done for you at the Board of Trade, if the Duke of Richmond had not had the honesty to refuse it, would you have voted for him at the election?—No.

11,312. (Mr. Price.) What do you mean by saying no act of yours would stay him? That you would not vote against him?—No.

11,313. You say you did not mean you would not vote against him; did you mean you would abstain from bribery?—Yes.

11,314. Was not that the reason you abstained from bribery?—No, it was not.

11,315. It did not operate on your mind at all?—No.

11,316. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, about this question of interest in the ship: were you not a mortgagee, or something of the kind?—No.

11,317. Then, tell me, are you a partner of Mr. Symons?—No.

11,318. (Mr. Price.) Is it the Mr. Symons we have had here?—Yes.

11,319. (Mr. Anstey.) He is not in the grocery line, is he?—No.

11,320. Have you a partner in your trade?—No.

11,321. Then just explain this most extraordinary circumstance, that for 5*l.* you went up to London to make the case your own, and talked of it as "our" case, "our" job, and so on; you were there some weeks, were you not?—I was there some few days.

11,322. Can you explain to me how it happened that you were selected by Mr. Symons to do this, who could easily have gone to London himself?—Yes, I can.

11,323. Then explain it to us?—On the Wednesday, on the market day, I believe it was on the market day, the news came down that the boy had been picked up, and had gone to Dundee, and they had telegraphed to Dundee, and their agent——

11,324. What has that to do with the question?—I will come to it in a moment if you will allow me. The agent at Dundee had telegraphed back that day that he had gone back to London. Then Mr. Symons's broker said it was important that we should get the dark boy——

11,325. Who do you mean by "we?"—They should get the dark boy.

11,326. Who do you mean by the "dark boy?"—The boy they picked up. It was important to have the dark boy——

11,327. Were you at the meeting when the broker said this?—No, I was not.

11,328. Then do not tell us about that?—Mr. Symons and the broker said it was better that I should go to London to see if I could find the dark boy.

11,329. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Symons know you were going to use Mr. Westropp's influence in the matter?—No.

11,330. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to swear you were not selected to go to London, for the very reason that your conscience was not very difficult to satisfy, and that you had agreed to barter your vote for the use of Mr. Westropp's influence, or that you would abstain from acting as a bribery agent at the next election?—No.

11,331. Did Mr. Kinglake know you were sent up here to get Mr. Westropp to use his political influence for you?—No; I went first of all to the lawyers in Doctor's Commons about this dark man, and to see if we could get a Board of Trade investigation, and I was told it would be all the better; I think we shall require it.

11,332. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did this dark man say that?—No, the solicitors in Doctor's Commons.

11,333. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever tell Mr. Symons of this; that you had communicated with Mr. Westropp?—No.

ELEVENTH DAY.

J. Smith.

3 Sept. 1869.

11,334. Did you never tell him ?—I never told him.

11,335. Then you kept it purposely a secret ?—I did.

11,336. Why ?—I did not keep it secret either ; I believe I did see Mr. Westropp, and he introduced me.

11,337. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said just now you did not tell him ?—I did.

11,338. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Symons know that you were intriguing with the candidate on the other side ?—He did.

11,339. And did he sanction the intriguing with the candidate on the other side ?—He did not say anything about it.

11,340. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose it was quite regular according to the practice of Bridgwater ? What you did was in conformity with the old established practice in Bridgwater ?—I think not.

11,341. Taking bribes and inducements on both sides if you can ?

11,342. (Mr. Price.) Now attend to this ; and I wish you to be very careful in your recollection. You mentioned yesterday, you had given a man of the name of Henry Harris a sum of 20*l.* ?—Yes.

11,343. Do you remember that ?—I mentioned Harris's name, but the ones I said I had given the large amounts to were the men that polled at the previous election in the Conservative ranks.

11,344. Did you give a sum of 20*l.* to Henry Harris ?—I am under the impression I never paid him.

11,345. Did you not say so yesterday ?—I was not here yesterday. I mentioned his name among a lot of other names I know.

11,346. (Mr. Price.) Do you know Henry Harris ?—I do.

11,347. It was at the last election you dealt with him, was it not ?—No. I do not remember which election it was. I know I have dealt with him in my time.

11,348. Now here you say the powder was not used as a celebration of triumph : "What was the object of "firing these cannons ?—It was an old custom with "the Liberal party here." And then further on you say, "The voters I bribed at Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866 were" so and so, and so and so ; and amongst them you mentioned the name of Henry Harris : you say, "The voters I bribed. The Chairman—What "was the highest price paid at that time ?—If I polled "11 they averaged 20*l.* to 25*l.* a-piece" ?—Yes.

11,349. Now then, did you not intend to convey to us that one of the men bribed was Henry Harris, and that he probably got 20*l.* or 25*l.*—No ; if I did bribe him he was one of the men who got 10*l.*

11,350. But you said so, you give the name ?—As far as I recollect——

11,351. It is not "As far as I recollect." You say, "The voters I bribed." Then you go on to say, "I am not certain whether I bribed Coombes or not." So that you draw a distinction between the two men—I will just turn to the shorthand writer's note to be quite certain about it. This is it : "Are these the men you "bribed ?" First of all you were asked, "Had you a "list of voters ?" Then you say, "No, I had my own "list. Were they the same persons as in the other "list ?—No, there was a difference. Have you the "list here ?—I have both lists here as far as I can "judge. I have Mr. Vanderbyl's election, No. 1, "July 12th—some of these names might be wrong—"they might be at another election. This is Vander-"byl's first election. John Peach." Then you go on through a number of names, and among the rest you give the name of Henry Harris. Then you are asked, "That was at Vanderbyl's election ?—Yes, so far as "I can remember. How many names have you given "us, for it would not account for the whole 436*l.* ?—"Mr. Coleridge ;—It was not always 10*l.* The price "was altered ?—Oh no. What was the highest price "given them ?—I should think if it was that that I "polled it averaged 20*l.* to 25*l.* each. Those that "you bribed at Bagehot's election in 1866 ?—There "might be a mistake in the names." Now I ask you to be very careful, and say whether you will be positive that you did give Henry Harris any money at all ?—I would not be positive.

11,352. (Mr. Anstey.) At any election ?—I am under the impression I did.

11,353. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you return him to Mr. Lovibond as one of the people whom you paid ?—I cannot remember.

11,354. (Mr. Anstey.) It appears from the shorthand writer's notes of your evidence that you were positive you had bribed Henry Harris, but you were only uncertain as to whether you were right with respect to the particular election named. That you had bribed him you were positive about, but whether you had bribed him at that particular election was not clear ?—I think I told you when I mentioned the names that I was not certain of it.

11,355. No, you did not ; you were certain of the names, but you were not certain of the year and the election. You were asked with respect to two lists, one Bagehot's and the other Lovibond's, and you say, "I may be mistaken as to the election, but I am not mistaken as to the names" ?—I am under the impression now that I paid Harris.

11,356. If he denies that he ever received it in any election what would you say ?—I met him outside the door just now.

11,357. (Mr. Coleridge.) Harris says you did not pay him in 1866—Vanderbyl's election ?—I am not positive about it.

11,358. Harris, as far as I understand him, says you did not pay him in 1866 ; are you positive you paid him in some election or another ?—I am not positive of that, but whether he was paid at one election I am positive of.

11,359. Are you positive ?—Yes.

11,360. Was it 20*l.* that you paid him ?—I do not think he was ever paid so high a figure as 20*l.*

11,361. (Mr. Anstey.) You said when the learned Commissioner asked you what was the highest sum you paid at that time when Harris was bribed, you said, "If I polled 11, they averaged from 20*l.* to 25*l.* "apiece, and Mr. Harris was one of them ?—No.

11,362. Harris was one of them, and you say if you polled eleven they averaged 20*l.* to 25*l.* apiece ?—I cannot remember.

11,363. (Mr. Price.) What made you introduce the name of Henry Harris ?—So far as my memory served that he was one of them.

11,364. Therefore you say he was paid at one election ?—I am not sure he was paid at any one election.

11,365. (Mr. Anstey.) You said just now that you were ?—I am almost sure he was not paid by me, though he was paid by someone.

11,366. (Mr. Price.) You are sure of that ?—Yes, I am sure of that.

11,367. All these matters you have been asked about to-day you ought to have told us of before in point of fact ?—I did so as far as I could remember them. I have just been told it was me that bribed Harris in Vanderbyl's election.

11,368. Then you pledge your oath you gave him 20*l.* ?—I requested Mr. Charles Collins to give him 10*l.* I did give him 10*l.* to bribe Harris with, and he tells me he did give Harris 10*l.*

11,369. (Mr. Anstey.) Charles Collins ?—Charles Collins himself.

Mr. R. A. Steel.

Mr. Robert Ambrose Steel sworn.

11,370. (Mr. Price.) You are the senior clerk to this Commission ?—I am.

11,371. Have you examined the books of the late Mr. Benjamin Lovibond produced by Mr. Sully, the mayor ?—I have.

11,372. The costs book ?—Yes ; of the 1857 election, of the 1859, and of the 1865.

11,373. (Mr. Anstey.) Does that include the journals ?—And the journal also covering the election of 1865. I find no journal amongst the papers handed over by Mr. Sully, the mayor, further back than 1863, extending from 1863 to 1866.

11,374. (Mr. Price.) Do you find any journal of 1865 with reference to any matters down to the election at that time?—None whatever, not as between attorney and client, but simply as a memorandum as engaged at all the elections, but not put down under that head.

11,375. In that journal do you find business transactions entered, and charges made against them?—Yes.

11,376. Charges made against the client?—Against the client.

11,377. (Mr. Anstey.) But whereever election business comes, there is no name charged, and no amount charged?—No amount, and no client. Perhaps I had better read one.

11,378. Merely accounting for his day, I suppose?—That is all. I find under the head of the 17th of July two initial letters in the margin. "At Dunwear "in afternoon engaged on long letter to Sir John "Shelley, &c.," and on turning to the letter book of the 17th of July, and searching both before and after the 17th of July, I find no such letter.

11,379. No press copy?—No press copy.

11,380. That would be after the election?—That would be.

11,381. Long letter?—Yes. "Engaged on long "letter to Sir John Shelley, &c." Against that there is no figure carried out.

11,382. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you find anything else with regard to that election?—Of 1865?

11,383. Yes?—When the petition came on, the letter books show a long correspondence between Sir John Shelley and others, with a solicitor of the name of Ford in London, and a Mr. Cooper in London, but nothing with regard to the election.

11,384. Nothing with regard to the election trial?—Only with regard to the petition.

11,385. Yes, the election trial?—Yes, the election trial.

11,386. (Mr. Price.) Are there any copies of those letters in that letter book?—To Sir John Shelley?

11,387. No, to Mr. Cooper, and those other gentlemen?—Oh, yes.

11,388. Have you looked at them?—Yes.

11,389. They are of no importance?—No.

11,390. Nothing with reference to the conduct of the petition?—Yes.

11,391. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there anything charged there with reference to the election trial?—No; simply not headed in some cases, and in others headed "Bridgwater petition." There is nothing but cash laid out, nothing except Mr. Lovibond's expenses in London, and so on, for a week, 5*l.*

11,392. (Mr. Price.) There is nothing from which Mr. Lovibond could make out a bill of costs?—No, I should think nothing from which a bill of costs could be made out.

11,393. (Mr. Anstey.) No draft made out there?—No.

11,394. And it is not stated that it is Sir John Shelley, or Mr. Kinglake, or who it is who is to be charged with that money out of pocket?—No, not at all.

11,395. It might have been the writer himself, for aught that appears?—It might have been.

11,396. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 do you find anything with regard to the election?—In 1866 I think Mr. Lovibond had nothing to do with it. I can find no letter books. He seems to have been engaged on the election up to 1866.

11,397. (Mr. Anstey.) I will ask you this general question: Have you either in the journal, or in the letter book, or in any of the books which you have gone through, found a single item, entry, letter, or anything else, which would naturally appear there if the relation of attorney and client, with reference to these election matters, had subsisted between Benjamin Lovibond and either of the two candidates?—Not a single letter. I found letters from Colonel Tynte to Mr. Lovibond, asking directions from Mr. Foster as to whom he should deal with in Bridgwater, and letters like that.

11,398. You found letters from Colonel Tynte asking for directions?—I found one letter, sometime in 1859, from Colonel Tynte to Mr. Lovibond, asking that Foster should indicate who would be the right tradesmen whom he could deal with; "whom he could deal with safely" was the expression.

11,399. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you discovered any briefs, or drafts of briefs, with reference to the election of 1865?—1865?

11,400. (Mr. Price.) The petition?—No.

11,401. (Mr. Anstey.) The trial of 1866?—No.

11,402. I believe you have discovered amongst them a brief, and a proof of a brief, on which I examined Mr. Bussell the other day, in relation to the election of 1859?—I have.

11,403. Are those the only briefs relating to election petitions that you have found; I am not speaking of other proceedings?—Yes; I have found them amongst Mr. Lovibond's papers.

11,404. Therefore they are in court, so far as you have them?—Certainly.

11,405. Are there any bills of costs in the journal relating to the election of 1859?—None. The letter books I can only speak of. I have one journal relating to 1866; this is the only journal I have got. I have the cost books of 1857, 1859, and 1865. There are no letters.

CHARLES JAMES LOMAS sworn.

C. J. Lomas.

11,406. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A salesman. Clerk to Messrs. Fennelly, Redfern, and Co.

11,407. Where do they carry on business?—4, Wellington Chambers, London Bridge.

11,408. What are they?—Provision merchants.

11,409. Is Mr. Vanderbyl a partner in that house?—Yes.

11,410. And Mr. Fennelley also?—Yes

11,411. Is there a Mr. Redfern?—Yes.

11,412. Are you the senior clerk?—Yes.

11,413. Confidential clerk of the house?—No.

11,414. The senior clerk?—The senior clerk.

11,415. The salesman and the ledger keeper?—Salesman. I am not the ledger keeper, merely the salesman.

11,416. Do you remember the last election for this borough?—Yes.

11,417. Was Mr. Fennelley down here with Mr. Vanderbyl, do you know?—I believe he was.

11,418. When he came down to contest the borough, previous to the last election?—When he came down to Bridgwater for some days.

11,419. For some days before the election?—Yes.

11,420. Had you, before Mr. Fennelley left town, had any communication from him, Mr. Fennelley, about whether he might want any money down or not?—No.

11,421. None?—Not previous to Mr. Fennelley's leaving town.

11,422. Had you any communication with him at all as to the election in any way? Did he tell you he was coming here?—I knew he was coming down to Bridgwater or at least I heard him say when he returned that he was down to Bridgwater.

11,423. You did not know when he left town that he was coming down here?—I think I might say I did know.

11,424. His letters would have to be forwarded to him?—No; he was only away a few days, and they were kept until he returned.

11,425. He went away for a short time, and returned again?—Yes.

11,426. Before he returned to Bridgwater a second time did he say anything to you?—He said, "I think

ELEVENTH DAY.

J. Lomas.

3 Sept. 1869.

"it is just possible that I may want you down to Bridg-"water." I think he said that; I am not quite positive. I think those were the words.

11,427. Did he tell you what he wanted you for?—No.

11,428. You are positive of that?—Yes, positive.

11,429. After he got down here it would be a day or two before the election, or the day before?—Two or three days, perhaps, before.

11,430. The nomination was on the Monday, and the polling on the Tuesday?—Yes.

11,431. Did he come down on the Friday or Saturday?—I think he came down either the Friday or Saturday; it might be the Thursday.

11,432. Did you receive any communication by telegraph from him on Friday, or on the Saturday?—No.

11,433. Did you on the Saturday?—No.

11,434. Did you on the Monday?—There was no communication sent to me, it was sent to Mr. Redfern. It was handed to me.

11,435. (Mr. Anstey.) A telegraph letter?—Yes.

11,436. (Mr. Price.) To Mr. Redfern?—Yes.

11,437. Which he read to you?—Yes.

11,438. What was it, from Mr. Fennelly to Mr. Redfern?—From Mr. Fennelly to Mr. Redfern.

11,439. What was it?—Alluding to money, "Send 15 balls."

11,440. (Mr. Coleridge.) "Send 15 balls"?—Yes, "Send 15 balls."

11,441. (Mr. Price.) Do you know whether that term had been agreed upon in any way?—Not with me; there was no communication between me and Mr. Fennelley.

11,442. Do you know what that meant?—I was told what it meant. I asked Mr. Fennelley what is meant.

11,443. What did it mean?—It meant 1,500*l.*

11,444. (Mr. Coleridge.) What more did it say? Where did it say the 15 "balls" were to be sent to?—"To meet me at Paddington."

11,445. At what train?—I think it was a train which arrived in London about three o'clock on the Monday previous to the election.

11,446. So that it would give time for somebody to come down by the 10 minutes to 5 train to Bridgwater?—Yes.

11,447. Did they say, "Send the 1,500*l.*" or the "15 balls by Lomas"?—No, "Send Thomas," or somebody.

11,448. Your name is not Thomas?—No; it was Thomas in the telegraph. It was a mistake.

11,449. It was a mistake of the telegraph clerk; it meant, "Send Lomas"?—Yes.

11,450. And you, Mr. Lomas, were sent?—Yes.

11,451. Was there a cheque drawn?—Yes.

11,452. On what bank?—On the Consolidated Bank.

11,453. Did you get the cheque cashed?—Yes, with Mr. Redfern.

11,454. How did you get it cashed; in gold, or what?—To the best of my recollection it was 1,200*l.* in sovereigns, and 300*l.* in half sovereigns.

11,455. That would be 1,500*l.* in all?—Yes.

11,456. What did you do?—I went down by the 10 minutes to 5 train. The cheque was cashed, and we came up to Paddington.

11,457. Did you meet Mr. Fennelly there?—We met Mr. Fennelly on the arrival of the train.

11,458. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you take the money with you?—Yes, in three bags; one bag contained 600 sovereigns, another contained the like amount, and the other bag contained 300*l.* in half sovereigns.

11,459. Did you take that money to the station in a cab?—Yes, in a Hansom cab.

11,460. Were they kept separate?—Yes. One bag contained 600*l.* in gold, the other bag contained a similar amount, and the other bag 300*l.* in half sovereigns.

11,461. Did you put them in a carpet bag, or did you put them in your pockets?—I put them in a black leather bag.

11,462. (Mr. Price.) Was this a cheque drawn in the name of the firm?—Yes; Fennelly, Redfern, and Company.

11,463. Who actually drew it?—Mr. Redfern, and signed it.

11,464. You met Mr. Fennelly at the station?—Yes.

11,465. Did Mr. Redfern go with you to the station?—Yes.

11,466. What took place at the station?—There was a consultation held.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Let us hear what that was. It is of the greatest importance.

11,467, (Mr. Price.) First of all, who was present at the consultation?—We went to Mr. Redfern's house.

11,468. Where is that?—Porchester Terrace.

11,469. That is in Bayswater?—Yes.

11,470. Who was present?—Mr. Fennelly went upstairs with Mr. Redfern to adjust his dress and wash his hands.

11,471. Who was present at what you called the consultation?—I do not know, of course. Mr. Fennelly went upstairs with Mr. Redfern to his bedroom. Of course I do not know what took place there. I remained downstairs in the dining-room.

11,472. Did you see anybody else in the house?—No.

11,473. When they came down, what did they do?—We took some refreshment.

11,474. Was there any allusion to any money at that time?—No allusion made to that at any time; we had not much time; we were just in time to catch the train.

11,475. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did you get the black bag?—I purchased that at Hodgkinson's, near London Bridge.

11,476. Who told you to do that?—I did that of my own accord.

11,477. Was it before or after you got the money?—Before. I bought it at Hodgkinson's the hosiers, near London Bridge.

11,478. (Mr. Price.) You bought the bag, took it with you in a Hansom, and went with Mr. Redfern to the bank?—Yes; I bought the bag because I had some things to bring down with me for myself.

11,479. What, clothes?—Yes.

11,480. (Mr. Anstey.) Were they in the bag with the money?—Yes; they would not take up the whole of the room; I had some few things I brought down.

11,481. You say nothing was said at all whilst you were taking refreshment, and you went to the station?—Yes.

11,482. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Redfern go to the station with you to see you off?—I would not be positive about that.

11,483. (Mr. Price.) You cannot say?—No, I cannot say exactly.

11,484. Do you remember whether anything was said before you got to the station, or before you got into the train?—Before we got into the train Mr. Fenelley said I was to meet him to go to the solicitors, Messrs. Reed and Cook's.

11,485. After you had had this refreshment, what do you say was done?—Then we had only just time to return by the 4.50 train. We took a cab from Mr. Redfern's house to the railway. I am not quite certain whether Mr. Redfern went or not.

11,486. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is it that Mr. Fennelly said to you at the station?—Mr. Fennelly said I was to meet him and go with him to the solicitor's.

11,487. Meet him where; you went with him?—I went down by the 4.50 train and went to the Railway Hotel.

11,488. (Mr. Price.) That was at Bridgwater?—Yes.

11,489. (Mr. Coleridge.) I want to know about the journey down; after you had had the refreshment was there any conversation whatever?—None whatever; except when we got to the train, and he told me to meet him to go to the solicitors.

11,490. How did you know where you were to meet him unless he told you?—I was to meet him on the bridge.

11,491. Had you been to Bridgwater before?—Yes.

11,492. (Mr. Anstey.) Where were you to meet him?—On the bridge.

11,493. Were you to meet him with the money on the bridge or at the "Globe Hotel"?—No, on the bridge.

11,494. Now tell us his words. Did he say, "Meet me on the bridge at Bridgwater"?—Yes.

11,495. What time did he say?—At about ten o'clock.

11,496. At night?—Yes.

11,497. (Mr. Coleridge.) At what time did the train get into Bridgwater?—About 10 minutes past nine.

11,498. (Mr. Price.) Did you meet him on the bridge at Bridgwater?—Yes.

11,499. Did anything pass on the journey down?—Nothing.

11,500. (Mr. Anstey.) Had Mr. Fennelly come into Bridgwater, or had he gone off to Pightley?—Fenelley came on to the bridge to meet me.

11,501. And it was to you that he said, "Meet me on the bridge at Bridgwater"?—Yes. He either told me that before we left London by the 4.50 train, or when we got to Bridgwater; but I think it was before the train started.

11,502. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing transpired on the journey?—No.

11,503. You say you met him on the bridge?—Yes.

11,504. Who did you see?—Mr. Fenelley.

11,505. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you take the money with you in the black bag?—I took it out of the black bag, and put it in my pockets.

11,506. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you did when you met Mr. Fenelley on the bridge?—He went to Messrs. Reed and Cook's, and I followed him. I went into the house, and there were two gentlemen there. I presume they were Messrs. Reed and Cook.

11,507. Do you see them here now? Are Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook here in court?—That is the gentleman (pointing).

11,508. Are those the two gentlemen you saw?—One of them; I do not recollect the other gentleman.

11,509. Which did you see?—I saw the one near the railings.

11,510. Which is that?—Mr. Cook. He was one of them that was there.

11,511. You identify Mr. Cook as one of them?—Yes.

11,512. You cannot identify the other?—No.

11,513. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see this gentleman (pointing)?—I could not say.

11,514. Is Mr. Barham here? (Mr. Barham stood forward.) Is that the gentleman?—I could not say.

11,515. (Mr. Price.) We only ask you if you recognize him at all?—I do not.

11,516. There were two gentlemen there, and Mr. Fenelly and yourself?—Yes.

11,517. Anybody else?—No.

11,518. Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl before you went to Messrs. Reed and Cook's?—No.

11,519. When you got there what passed?—Talking about samples of tea.

11,520. Who talked about samples of tea?—I think it was the solicitor who broached the subject first of all.

11,521. Tell us who first introduced the subject of "tea." We have heard of "sugar"?—I went there, and I was introduced as Mr. Williams.

11,522. Who by?—Mr. Fenelly, who, I believe, was acting under the advice——

11,523. What did he say when he introduced you?—Mr. Williams, Mr. So-and-so. I do not know whether he repeated the names, or whether I understood who the solicitors were when I went to them.

11,524. You cannot say whether you heard Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook's names mentioned?—No.

11,525. Who spoke?—Mr. Fenelly introduced me. Mr. Williams, Mr. So-and-so.

11,526. Who spoke after that?—I cannot say who broached the first words.

11,527. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you supposed to be travelling in the tea trade?—Yes.

11,528. (Mr. Price.) Then what was first said about the tea?—I was to get up samples, so many ounces each.

11,529. Had it been arranged?—No; nothing had been arranged.

11,530. You told us you were introduced as a traveller for a tea house?—Certainly.

11,531. Did it not very much astonish you, unless you had been told that before, that you were to be considered as a traveller for a tea house?—It did not so much astonish me. I had been in the tea trade before.

11,532. (Mr. Anstey.) That is all nonsense! What was meant by "samples of tea"?—Money.

11,533. (Mr. Price.) How did you know it was money?—Because it had been spoken about once or twice.

11,534. Who spoke about it first? What was said about samples of tea?—I could not say.

11,535. One of the solicitors?—Yes.

11,536. What did he say?—He told me the business commenced very early in Bridgwater, and I was to get up at a certain time.

11,537. Did he say what time, 6 or 7 o'clock?—He did not say exactly the time. I was to get up early.

11,538. Did he say at 8 o'clock business commenced in Bridgwater?—He said oftentimes in Bridgwater business commenced at 8 o'clock. There was a good deal of business done in Bridgwater at 8.

11,539. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you what you were to do with the tea?—I do not know whether he did or not, except that I was to put it up in packets of 10*l.* each.

11,540. And they were called "samples of tea"?—Yes.

11,541. Was this done in the room there?—No; I went to Messrs. Reed and Cook's with the idea of leaving the money there.

11,542. (Mr. Price.) Will you tell us all that took place. Mr. Cook said something about there being business done very early in Bridgwater?—Yes.

11,543. As early as 8 o'clock?—I must first of all tell you that I took the 1,500*l.* to the solicitors with the idea of leaving it there in the place.

11,544. You have told us that. You had it about you then?—Yes.

11,545. You had not produced it then?—No.

11,546. You had it still in your pocket?—Yes.

11,547. You have told us business was done very early in Bridgwater, as early as 8 o'clock?—After stopping there some little time I left.

11,548. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had been told about the samples of tea?—Yes.

11,549. Who told you to make it up in 10*l.* packets? You did not do that of your own hook?

11,550. (Mr. Price.) Tell us all that passed in the office, this house, or whatever it was, where you met this gentleman Mr. Cook, and this other gentleman, and Mr. Fenelly?—I believe it was at the solicitors. I could not say.

11,551. (Mr. Price.) What did they say?—To make it up in 10 lb. packets.

11,552. To represent tea?—Yes; that was all the conversation.

11,553. Nothing else was mentioned?—No.

11,554. And you were to make it up in 10*l.* packets to represent tea?—Yes, 10 oz. packets.

11,555. Then go on?—Then I left them.

11,556. Did you take the money away?—Yes; prior to leaving them they said I was to give the money if anybody came in the morning.

ELEVENTH DAY.

C. J. Lomas.

3 Sept. 1869.

11,557. They said, "Give the 'money'"?—"Give "the 'samples.'"

11,558. Will you give us the words? To whom were you to give the "samples?"—To persons, if they should apply.

11,559. (Mr. Coleridge.) How were you to know the persons, unless they told you?—I told them I should want to know to whom they were giving the money.

11,560. That is just what I want to know.

11,561. (Mr. Anstey.) Do go on. What did they say to that?—I must have time to think, because it is so long ago.

11,562. (Mr. Price.) Take time to think; do not flurry yourself.—If they asked for Mr. Williams I was to give them up what they required.

11,563. (Mr. Coleridge.) If persons asked for Mr. Williams?—Yes.

11,564. (Mr. Price.) You were to give them what they required?—Yes.

11,565. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a private room at the "Railway Hotel"?—No, only a sleeping apartment.

11,566. (Mr. Anstey.) Go on and tell us what took place?—It so happens that nobody did come the next morning.

11,567. (Mr. Price.) Was that all that passed?—That was all that passed.

11,568. And you went away, leaving Fennelly and these two other gentlemen there?—Yes.

11,569. And you went back to the "Railway Hotel"?—Yes.

11,570. Did you see anybody else that night about the matter?—No.

11,571. When you went to the "Railway Hotel," how long did you stay up?—I should think about half an hour.

11,572. Did you go to bed?—I then went to bed.

11,373. Then did anybody come to you that night?—No.

11,574. Did you go to anybody?—No.

11,575. (Mr. Coleridge.) What became of this gold?—I took it from Messrs. Reed and Cook's entire, and then I counted some of it in 10*l.* packets until I was tired.

11,576. You left them there?—I left them that night.

11,577. Where did you put them?—Put them in the bag.

11,578. (Mr. Anstey.) Where did you keep the bag?—Underneath the dressing table.

11,579. (Mr. Price.) You locked the door?—Yes.

11,580. And went to bed?—Yes.

11,581. At what time did you get up in the morning?—I think I got up at seven o'clock.

11,582. Tell us what happened that morning, and be very accurate?—I took breakfast.

11,583. Alone?—Alone, in the coffee room. Then about 11 o'clock Mr. Fenelly came down.

11,584. Did you wait at the "Railway Hotel"?—I went about the town, and Mr. Fennelly came down and handed me a paper, which said I was to "answer "no questions to anybody. Destroy this paper as "soon as read."

11,585. What time would that be?—That would be about 11 o'clock.

11,586. Had you been about the town?—Yes; I had been walking about.

11,587. Had you seen anybody when you were walking about?—No; I was just strolling about.

11,588. Where did you leave the money?—In my bedroom.

11,589. (Mr. Anstey) Locked up?—No.

11,590. Was the bag locked up?—No; I left it underneath the dressing-table.

11,591. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it a locked bag?—Yes.

11,592. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you got that paper which Mr. Fennelly gave you?—No.

11,593. What did you do with it?—I destroyed it.

11,594. When?—At once.

11,595. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you destroy it? Did Mr. Fennelly tell you to destroy it?—It was on the paper.

11,596. What was it?—Merely, "Answer no ques-"tions to anybody, unless they give the name of "'Eureka.'"

11,597. "Answer no questions to anybody, unless "they give the name 'Eureka'"?—Yes.

11,598. "Destroy this paper as soon as read"?—Yes.

11,599. (Mr. Anstey.) In whose handwriting was this?—I believe it was in Mr. Fenelly's handwriting.

11,600. (Mr. Price.) Did he say anything to you when he handed you this paper?—Nothing at all.

11,601. Did he then leave you?—Yes.

11,602. What happened then?—That was about 11 o'clock, and I took dinner about two. I then strolled about the town.

11,603. Did you go back to the hotel?—I strolled about, and then went to dinner.

11,604. Had you any conversation at all with anybody?—Mere casual conversation about the election; asking the people how the polling was going on.

11,605. Whom did you speak to?—Omnibus people, who came into the bar.

11,606. Strangers?—Yes. One would ask a question of another, as to how the election was going on.

11,607. Where? At the hotel?—At the "Railway Hotel."

11,608. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did anybody turn up then?—No, nobody turned up at all. Mr. Fenelley came down to me at half-past two, and told me to bring up some money into a room at the "Globe."

11,609. (Mr. Price.) Did he say how much?—He did not say how much; but I brought up 900*l.*

11,610. What did you do when you got to the "Globe"?—I went into the room and undid this money. What was done up in 10*l.* I took out by themselves, and the other I turned out loose.

11,611. Who was in this room?—Nobody.

11,612. Who had shown you into this room?—I believe Mr. Fennelly.

11,613. Did you see either of the gentleman you had seen the night before?—Not till afterwards.

11,614. Then did you see nobody before Mr. Fenelley showed you into this room?—No; only people standing about.

11,615. But anybody you recognized?—No.

11,616. Did Mr. Fenelley say anything when you went into this room?—Merely told me to wait there.

11,617. Did he leave you?—Yes.

11,618. Was the room darkened?—No.

11,619. Perfectly light?—Perfectly light.

11,620. Then what happened next? Could anybody who came into the room have seen the sovereigns lying on the table? You say you shovelled them out loose?—Yes.

11,621. What was the next thing that happened? Will you give us as near as possible the time of that? Was that about half-past seven?—No, about half-past two.

11,622. Was it as late as that?—It might have been later than that, if anything.

11,623. Then go on with what happened next?—Then I took 125*l.* into another room.

11,624. Who did?—I did.

11,625. By whose orders?—By Mr. Fenelley's, who, I believe, was instructed by the solicitors.

11,626. You did not hear him instructed?—No.

11,627. Mr. Fenelly came and ordered you to take 125*l.* into another room?—Yes.

11,628. Did you do so?—Yes.

11,629. Did you leave all the other money in the room you left?—Yes, I locked the door.

11,630. On the table?—Yes.

11,631. And you then took 125*l.* into the other room?—120*l.* or 125*l.*, I could not tell which.

11,632. Whom did you see in this room?—I could not say whether I saw anybody the first time.

11,633. When you went in, what did you do with the 125*l.*?—Put it down on the table.

11,634. There was nobody there ? — There was nobody came in the first time, but the second time there was a man came in. I do not know who it was.

11,635. Somebody you do not know ?—No.

11,636. Was it Andrew Allan ?—I do not know.

11,637. Just see if that is the man (pointing to Andrew Allan) ?—I could not recognize him.

(Mr. Price.) Andrew Allan, is this the man (alluding to the witness) from whom you got any money in the "Globe" ?

(Mr. Allan.) I did not get any money from a stranger at that election.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It was Bussell ?

(The witness.) I do not know who it was.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Let Mr. Bussell stand up (H. C. Bussell stood up).

11,638. (To the witness.) Is that the man (alluding to Mr. Bussell) ?—I do not know.

11,639. Does he look like him ?—He looks something like him.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Bussell, is this the man who gave you money in the "Globe" ?

(Mr. Bussell.) My impression is that he is; but I think the man I saw had more hair on his face. He gave me 125*l.* and 60*l.* when I went into the room.

11,640. (Mr. Price to the witness.) Is that the man ?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He said you had a little more whiskers at that time.

11,641. You gave him 125*l.* ?—Yes.

11,642. Did he give you the signal, "Eureka" ?—Yes.

11,643. Had anybody told you to give it to him ?—I was told to give 125*l.* to a stranger who came in.

11,644. And did you give him the 125*l.* without being told to whom you were to give it ?—I left it on the table. I was told to leave it there.

11,645. Was the first thing that happened after you got in this person coming into the room ?—Yes.

11,646. Did you say anything to him ?—I do not think I did. I think I put down the 125*l.*, and walked out.

11,647. And left him there ?—And left him there.

11,648. What was the next thing done ?—I went back again to the former room. I gave the man a second time some more money. I could not say exactly the amount.

11,649. (Mr. Price.) Who gave you the order ?—Mr. Fennelly.

11,650. To do what ?—To leave more money.

11,651. How much ?—I think it was three or four twenties.

11,652. Did you do so ?—Yes.

11,653. What happened then ?—I paid another man 30*l.* or 40*l.*

11,654. Did you see anybody the second or third time ?—I think I saw that gentleman, named Mr. Cook, the second or third time ; I am not certain.

11,655. Where ?—When I went into the other room I saw Mr. Cook and two or three gentlemen there, and they told me they were taking a glass of wine together, and I adjourned.

11,656. You went away ?—Yes.

11,657. Did you leave the money then ?—I do not think I did. I could not be certain one way or the other.

11,658. Did they hint to you to go away ?—They might have done so.

11,659. They might have told you to go, as they were taking lunch ?—Yes.

11,660. You were told to take more money ?—Yes.

11,661. Who was there when you went the third time ?—I do not think it was this man (referring to Mr. Bussell). I think it was another man, Garratt.

11,662. It was not any person in a railway uniform ?—No.

11,663. You think that was not the same person (referring to Mr. Bussell) ?—I do not think so.

(Mr. Price.) You got two packets, Mr. Bussell ?

11,664. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) Do you remember giving him 60*l.* ?—It was either 60*l.* or 80*l.*

11,665. And besides that, you gave 30*l.* or 40*l.* to another man ?—Yes.

(Mr. Bussell.) Perhaps I can refresh the witness's memory.

(Mr. Price.) Wait a moment. If there is anything material, you shall tell me afterwards.

(The witness.) I could not tell you exactly the amount of money.

11,666. Did you put down on slips of paper the amount of money ?—No.

11,667. Did you count it out ?—Yes ; so many 10*l.* When it came to the last, there was no time to count it out.

11,668. That was the third time ?—Yes.

11,669. Then tell us what happened afterwards ?—Twice I remember speaking to this man here ; I remember speaking to him the second time.

11,670. Then you can say whether you gave him 60*l.* or 80*l.* ?—No.

11,671. It was 120*l.* or 125*l.* the first ?—Yes ; then 60*l.* or 80*l.*

11,672. Then how much did you give to the other man on the third occasion ?—I think somewhere about 30*l.* or 40*l.*

11,673. How did you get rid of the rest of the money that day ; what happened afterwards ?—That was all the money given away by me. I gave away 240*l.*

11,674. 120*l.* or 125*l.*, 60*l.* or 80*l.*, and 30*l.* or 40*l.*, altogether 240*l.* ?—Altogether 240*l.*

11,675. (Mr. Coleridge.) All for bribery purposes ?—Yes, as far as I know.

11,676. (Mr. Price.) What did you do with the rest of the money ?—I took it back to the "Railway Hotel."

11,677. What time do you think you finished paying away the money, before the poll closed ?—Before the poll closed ; about five minutes to four o'clock.

11,678. And about that time you had paid away about 240*l.* ?—Yes.

11,679. Did you see anybody before you left the "Globe," after you had finished paying money ?—I saw Mr. Fenelly.

11,680. What did he say ?—There was no more allusion made to anything.

11,681. Did he say what more you were to do with the rest of the money ?—No.

11,682. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or tell you when you were to go back to town ?—To go back to town as soon as possible.

11,683. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he tell you to take the money to the "Railway Hotel" ?—He did not tell me that, but I took it as a matter of course. There was no more to do with the money.

11,684. Did he see you with the money ?—Fennelly ?

11,685. Yes ?—He might have seen the money in the room.

11,686. Was he in the room where the money was ?—No ; he was in one room, and I was in another room.

11,687. Where did he see you when he came to give you orders ?—He came to the door of the room where I was.

11,688. And the door was opened ?—He knocked at the door, and the door was opened.

11,689. And the money was on the table ?—And the money was on the table.

11,690. Did he tell you to go back to the "Railway Hotel" ?—Yes, after the poll was over.

11,691. He was at the door when he told you to go back to the "Railway Hotel." Is that so ?—After the poll was over at four o'clock I put the remainder of the money in the bags.

11,692. Was he present when you did that ?—No, he was not.

11,693. When he told you to go to the "Railway Hotel" was anything said ?—I might have merely made the remark, "Well, you have won the election," or something of that sort.

ELEVENTH DAY.

C. J. Lomas.

3 Sept. 1869.

11,694. (Mr. Anstey.) Previously to the closing of the poll, he had come to the door when the money was actually on the table, and spoke to you?—He merely told me to take the money to the hotel.

11,695. I want to fix your attention to what took place at the end of the day. Towards the end of the day you say he came to the door. I am not speaking of the close of the poll, but what you say is, he came to the door where you had the money?—Yes.

11,696. And he might have seen it?—And he might have seen it. I put the money in the bags directly the clock struck four.

11,697. I am not asking you about that; but in the course of the day, when you were making these payments, and he came and directed you to make them, did he see the money?—He did not see the money. He merely opened the door, and said, "Bring in so much money," and went away again.

11,698. I want to have it perfectly clear. Between the time you went into the "Globe" with the money and the time of the closing of the poll did he come into the room, and see you making the payments?—No.

11,699. You say he looked in at the door and told you to bring in more money?—He came to the door, and said he wanted so much money.

11,700. And if he had wanted to see the money he could have done so?—Yes.

11,701. He could see the money lying there, could he not?—The door was so constructed that I do not think he could have seen the money.

11,702. Unless the door was widely opened?—Yes.

11,703. (Mr. Price.) Did he open the door of the room where you had the money?—Yes.

11,704. When he told you to pay so much more, did he come into the room?—No.

11,705. You are sure of that?—Yes.

11,706. Nor look in?—I am positive he did not while I was there.

11,707. (Mr. Anstey.) To what door did he come when the poll was closed?—The door of the room where I had previously entered.

11,708. And the bag was closed?—Yes.

11,709. And he told you to go up to the "Railway Hotel?"—He merely told me it was all over, and then I asked him if I was to go.

11,710. And is that all that took place?—That is all that took place.

11,711. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he say you were to go back to London?—Yes, as soon as I could.

11,712. And take the money with you?—He did not say anything about the money, but I took the money as a matter of course.

11,713. You did take the money with you?—Yes.

11,714. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you do when you got back to town?—I went to my apartments. I left the money in my apartments that night.

11,715. Locked up?—Yes, locked up.

11,716. In the morning, did you go back to your place of business?—Yes.

11,717. With the money?—Yes.

11,718. To whom did you give the money?—To Mr. Redfern.

11,719. (Mr. Price.) Was it counted up?—I gave him an account of it.

11,720. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that account which you gave to Mr. Redfern, in writing, or was it a verbal one?—Verbal.

11,721. What did you tell him?—I told him there was so much balance I had brought back to him.

11,722. What did you tell him you had done with the rest?—I told him it was used. I told him I had given away 240*l.*

11,723. (Mr. Price.) At the election?—On the day of the election. I told him I had given away 240*l.*, and handed the balance to him, as one of the partners.

11,724. Did he say anything to that?—No; he made no remark whatever.

11,725. When did Mr. Fennelly come to business again?—He came up the following morning.

11,726. (Mr. Price.) I think you have told us that you did not see Mr. Vanderbyl from the beginning to the end of that day at Bridgwater?—No.

11,727. Never?—I merely saw him in the carriage, when he was going away.

11,728. (Mr. Anstey.) You are aware that he was staying in the same hotel, the "Globe?"—I was not aware of it, more than in this way, that I saw him just outside the "Globe" in his carriage, when the band played at four o'clock.

11,729. Were you aware that he had not been staying at his own place, Pykley, six miles off, for several weeks?—No.

11,730. But was stopping at the "Globe," you were not aware of that?—I knew merely from—

11,731. From what?—From seeing letters addressed to him at the "Globe Hotel;" that is all I knew, whether he was stopping at Pykley, or at the "Globe Hotel," or anywhere else.

11,732. (Mr. Price.) You mean letters had been addressed to him from London?—Yes.

11,733. From your house?—Yes.

11,734. (Mr. Anstey.) And before that they had been addressed to Pightley?—No; I did not know that Mr. Vanderbyl had a house at Pightley at all, before.

11,735. We dare say you did not know it, but had not letters been addressed there, to Pightley?—I had not seen them.

11,736. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you had been at Bridgwater before; was it at the former election of Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, on commercial business.

11,737. Were you down at the former election of Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

11,738. Have you ever brought money down on any former occasion?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Now, perhaps Mr. Bussell, before the witness goes we had better ask you.

(Mr. Bussell.) First, I want you to ask him whether he did not, first of all, give me five packages, with 25*l.* in each package.

11,739. (Mr. Price, to witness.) Did you give that man five packages of 25*l.* each?—That was the 125*l.* I first gave him.

(Mr. Bussell.) I want you to ask him also whether, when he gave me the three packages with money in, he did not distinctly say, "Sixty pounds."

(Witness.) I stated that I said "sixty," or "eighty." I won't exactly say.

(Mr. Bussell.) He just now said eighty.

(Mr. Price.) He says he does not know which.

(Witness.) It may be sixty or it may be eighty, I cannot recollect.

11,740. (Mr. Price.) If Bussell says you gave him three packages of 20*l.*, saying "Sixty," that may be so?—Yes, I won't deny it.

11,741. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Lomas, you and Mr. Fennelly were absent, I think, from London after the petition, the election petition, had been presented?—Yes.

11,742. Was not that for the purpose of avoiding the service of subpœna upon you?—Yes.

11,743. Do you recollect that there was a sort of printed notice of your flight in a paper called the "Grocer," of the 9th of January last?—I saw it.

11,744. In which you were called "two prominent members of the provision trade" who were absent because of "the unfortunate result of the Bridgwater election." Did you see that whilst you were absent?—Yes.

11,745. Did that induce you to remain away, or induce you to come back?—It did not have any influence on me one way or the other.

11,746. But you did not come back?—Yes, I did come back.

11,747. Were you served?—No.

11,748. Was Mr. Fennelly served?—No.

11,749. When did you come back?—I came back and went away again.

11,750. When did Fennelly come back?—Two or three days after the petition.

11,751. (Mr. Price.) After the petition?—After the inquiry.

11,752. (Mr. Anstey.) After the petition, or the trial of the petition; which do you mean?—After the trial.

11,753. (Mr. Price.) After Mr. Justice Blackburn had finished the proceedings?—Yes.

11,754. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long were you away altogether?—About two months.

11,755. (Mr. Anstey.) When did Mr. Fennelly come back?—Previous to the trial.

11,756. Where did he come back to?—I do not know.

11,757. Did he go home?—I was away at the time.

11,758. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you were not away together?—No.

11,759. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you find him at the counting house when you returned, or was he absent then?—Yes, I found him there when I returned.

11,760. What is the name of the accountant at your office, Fennelly, Redfern, and Company's?—Mr. Walters.

11,761. Did Mr. Walters tell you that Mr. James Trevor had in vain endeavoured to obtain your address and Mr. Fennelly's address during your absence for the purpose of serving you with subpœnas?—Mr. Walters wrote to me and said that the solicitors for the petition had sent to the office, and inquired for me daily.

11,762. And they in vain endeavoured to obtain your address?—He did not write that at all. He merely said that the solicitors for the petition inquired daily.

11,763. For you?—For me.

11,764. He knew what your address was at the time you were absent?—Yes.

11,765. Where was it?—Paris and Calais.

11,766. Are you sure you ever left London at all?—Oh, positive.

11,767. Part of the time, I think you say you returned?—Yes.

11,768. And you were in London?—Yes.

11,769. Were you not walking about London at that time in disguise?—No.

11,770. How long were you in London during the time of your reputed absence?—A couple of days.

11,771. You were not disguised?—Not in the slightest.

11,772. Nor Mr. Fennelly either?—I do not know anything about Mr. Fennelly.

11,773. (Mr. Price.) You were not away together?—I met Mr. Fennelly once.

11,774. Where?—I met him at Brussels.

11,775. (Mr. Coleridge.) What brought you back to London?—I came back of my own accord.

11,776. Who sent you off again? Whom did you see to send you off?—I saw Mr. Redfern.

11,777. And Mr. Redfern told you to go off again?—I told him I did not like to stop away.

11,778. (Mr. Anstey.) I believe the pretext on which you and Mr. Fennelly were absent, and which was given to these inquirers was that you were abroad selecting foreign agents. Is not that the case?—During the time that I was away I called upon many——

11,779. Will you tell me; was not that the pretext? Answer my question. Was not that the pretext for your absence agreed upon to be assigned to the persons who came, and particularly to these solicitors, that you and Mr. Fennelly were away selecting foreign agents?—Not to my knowledge.

11,780. Have you been informed so at your office, at your counting house, or by anybody?—No.

11,781. Have you heard that Mr. Fennelly——

(Witness.) I beg your pardon. I must ask you to repeat the last question again.

11,782. Have you heard from Fennelly, or Vanderbyl, or any of the people at your office, that that was the pretext which was assigned for your absence?—I have not heard it officially, but I should not be at all surprised at the remark being made.

11,783. Have you not been informed of it by anybody, that this was said when people came to inquire for you in your absence, "They are away selecting foreign agents"?—No.

11,784. Then why would not you be surprised?—Because persons would naturally ask where I was.

11,785. And they would give this false reason?—I could not say.

11,786. (Mr. Price.) You were going to say that when you were away you called on some persons?—I called upon people who shipped butter to London, and I got some consignments.

11,787. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did some business?—Yes, a great deal of business.

11,788. (Mr. Price.) At Brussels?—No, at Rouen and Rennes.

11,789. Who paid your expenses?—The money was debited to me.

11,790. Who gave it to you?—Mr. Redfern.

11,791. How much did he give you for the whole time you were away?—Different sums of money.

11,792. How much was it altogether?—Sixty or seventy pounds.

(Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that that money will be deducted from your salary?

11,793. (Mr. Price.) You say it stands to your debit. Do you mean to say you consider you owe that money to the firm?—When the money was given me it was placed to my debit.

11,794. Do you mean to say that you owe that money to the firm?—No, certainly not.

11,795. Nor is it to be deducted from your salary?—No.

11,796. You mean this: that in the books it was put down that you had such-and-such a sum, and that you have to account for that sum?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) I want to ask you a question more with reference to other witnesses. Just explain to the Commissioners the difference between the Redferns?

(Witness.) Fennelly, Redfern, and Company?

11,797. Yes, and Mr. Vanderbyl's other firms, if he has any?—All I know is that Mr. Vanderbyl is a partner in the firm of Fenelly, Redfern, and Company, and I believe he is a partner in Redfern, Alexander, and Company's firm.

11,798. Also?—Also.

11,799. Any other?—Not that I am aware of.

11,800. About this Lundy Island Granite Company?—Of that I know nothing.

11,801. About this Bridgwater branch of something or other in which he is said to be interested; do you know anything at all about that?—I know nothing at all about that.

11,802. About the Cardiff business?—I know nothing at all about that.

11,803. All that you know of is that firm which carries on business in the provision trade, in whose employment you are?—Undoubtedly.

11,804. And what is the nature of the business then, of Redfern, Alexander, and Co.?—I know only by repute that they are general merchants.

11,805. Is he a bill broker?—I do not know.

11,806. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Vanderbyl is connected with the Alexanders by marriage?—That I do not know.

11,807. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there any "Co." in Alexander, Redfern, and Co.?—Mr. Vanderbyl is the "Co."

11,808. Does Mr. Brogden deal with your house at all?—No.

11,809. Did you never hear of him?—I never heard his name at all till I saw it in the Bridgwater papers.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Lomas, if you have anything more to tell us with regard to what took place at this election or any other election, but particularly at this election, you are bound to make a full disclosure. We are going to adjourn now. If there is anything you have omitted—you must not leave Bridgwater—we may want you again in the course of the day, therefore you will have time to think it over; and if there is anything you have omitted you are bound to tell us, and I hope you will do so.

(Witness.) Very good, sir.

Short adjournment.

Examination of Mr. Lomas resumed.

11,810. (Mr. Price.) What is the Christian name of Mr. Redfern, the partner in the house of Fennelly and Redfern ?—I believe it is William Edward.

11,811. Is there a Mr. Alexander Redfern that you know of?—I never heard of him.

11,812. There is a Mr. Redfern connected with the firm of Redfern, Alexander, and Company ?—He is Mr. Redfern's father.

11,813. Do you know the father's christian name ?—No.

11,814. Where is the place of business of Redfern and Alexander ?—I believe it is in Winchester Buildings. They have moved recently.

11,815. (Mr. Anstey.) Their business is raising money on bills ?—That I do not know.

11,816. Who is the person that drew the cheque ?—I believe it is Mr. Redfern, junior ; William Edward.

11,817. And the Redfern who went with you to the railway station ?—That is Mr. Redfern of the firm of Alexander, Redfern, and Company.

11,818. (Mr. Price.) Where would he be found if a telegram were sent ?—No doubt he would be found at the office.

11,819. Is there any reason why he should not be able to come down here by the five o'clock train or the mail to-day ? Is to-morrow, being Saturday, an inconvenient day for him to have a sudden summons ?—I do not suppose it is ; to-morrow would no doubt be the most convenient day of any, being a short day.

11,820. Then if we telegraphed to him to-day he could come down and be here to-morrow ?—It would be rather short work.

11,821. Where would be the best place to send a telegram to ?—If the telegram were sent at once it would reach him in two hour's time.

11,822. What time does he leave the office ?—Half-past four.

11,823. Where does he reside or where would he be found now ?—I do not know. Mr. Fennelly would know.

11,824. We cannot ask Mr. Fennelly ; you may ask him and tell us.

(Witness, after conferring with Mr. Fennelly.) If it was sent at once he would be found at the office till about half-past four. No doubt a telegram would get there in two hours and a half. If not, it could be sent to 16, Porchester Terrace.

11,825. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said that you had been here in the mercantile way, at least travelling here. Did Mr. Fennelly know that when he suggested your coming down here ?—No.

11,826. Did not know of your connexion with Bridgwater ?—He knew afterwards that I was in Bridgwater. One time we were speaking about the bridge.

11,827. You say "one time." What do you mean ?—After I had orders to come down here.

11,828. (Mr. Price.) When he told you to meet on the bridge, was it then that he learned from you that you had been in Bridgwater ?—Mr. Fennelly knew I had travelled about a great deal in the country. I was three years travelling about.

11,829. Did you then inform him that you knew Bridgwater very well, from having been down here ?—Mr. Fennelly knew previously that I had travelled three years in nearly every town in England.

11,830. Before you brought the money down did he know of it ?—No, he did not.

11,831. You say "No," but when did you first tell him ?—After I got the money.

11,832. When he told you, as I understand, to meet him on the bridge. That was, you think, before you left London ?—Yes.

11,833. Did you then inform him that you knew Bridgwater perfectly well ?—Yes, I did.

11,834. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he aware of that before, that you had been in Bridgwater ?—No more than he knew that I had travelled about a great deal in all parts of England, and I presume——

11,835. Have you any doubt that he was aware that you had been in Bridgwater amongst the other parts of England before you told him you knew Bridgwater perfectly well ?—He might have had his doubts about it. I think it is very likely he had no doubt.

11,836. Before you were selected to come down here ?—Yes.

11,837. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know anything of any transaction on the morning of the day that you brought the money down here ? of any money having been drawn out from your firm before that to come down for such a purpose as this ?—No.

11,838. Did anybody else from your house come down to Bridgwater at all ?—No, nobody.

11,839. And you know of no other transaction ?—I can state almost positively there is no money drawn out from the firm.

11,840. Are you in the habit of seeing the books of the firm ?—Sometimes I look through the cheque-book.

11,841. Do you see the pass-book ?—No ; never see the pass-book ; only the cheque-book.

11,842. From seeing the cheque-book, can you say whether, within a week before the election, any money had been drawn out to come down here ?—You might say that certainly no money was drawn out.

11,843. Have you looked at the book with that object ?—No.

11,844. (Mr. Price.) Do you know whether Mr. Vanderbyl kept a private account at the bank ?—I do not know anything of Mr. Vanderbyl's business. It is not very often he comes.

11,845. Perhaps he does not bank at the Consolidated Bank at all ?—I know nothing whatever.

11,846. (Mr. Coleridge.) He does not attend to business personally at your place ?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) You remember the warning that you had, that if anything occurs to you it would be better for your own sake by-and-by to communicate it to us.

(Mr. Price.) You had better stay here.

(Witness.) I think I told you everything as plain and straightforward as I possibly could. The only thing wrong that I said was that the telegram stated "balls," and it should be "bales."

11,847. (Mr. Anstey.) That meant 1,500*l.* ?—1,500*l.*, yes.

11,848. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know in what way Mr. Redfern paid the balance into his bankers, under what head ? as cash, or what ?—That I do not know. He could answer that for himself. I had nothing more to do after I gave him the money.

(Mr. Price.) You will have to stay here probably till after Mr. Redfern has been examined. (To Mr. Fennelly.) I don't know that you ought to make a communication to the witness.

(Witness.) Mr. Fennelly states that you spoke of "Mr. Alexander Redfern." Mr. Redfern, junior's father is Mr. William Redfern. That is the communication that he has just made to me.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then what is the true description of the Mr. Redfern of whom you have been telling us ? Is it William ?

11,849. (Mr. Price.) Do not you know his christian name ?—I do not. I think it is Mr. William Edward.

11,850. (Mr. Anstey.) Has he been called "the younger," or what ?—Mr. William Edward Redfern. The clerks in our office know nothing whatever of the father in the firm.

11,851. Is there anybody of the same name, the name of William, in the firm ?—His father is of the same name. In Redfern, Alexander, and Company, Mr. William Redfern is father of the Redfern of the firm of Redfern, Fennelly, and Company.

11,852. You may inform yourself correctly of the christian name ?—Mr. William Edward Redfern.

11,853. No other name ?—No. His father's name is Mr. William Redfern. Have you noted the alteration of "bales" instead of "balls."

(Mr. Coleridge.) Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Well, Mr. Lomas, I think you have given a very satisfactory statement, as far as we understand, thoroughly satisfactory to us; and if you remember anything I am quite sure, from what you have said, that——

(Witness.) I have told you everything I know as straightforwardly as I possibly can.

(Mr. Price.) Very well; then you may go down.

Mr. William Mayne sworn.

Mr. W. Mayne.

11,854. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Master mariner.

11,855. We understand that you are going to sea?—Yes, I expect to go about Sunday.

11,856. Not before Sunday?—No.

11,857. You will have to go Sunday?—Yes.

11,858. How long are you likely to be away?—Well, we are generally away about a fortnight, sometimes ten days.

11,859. Where are you going?—To Cardiff.

11,860. You will have to load there?—Yes.

11,861. You may be kept a fortnight?—Yes. It may be a few days less.

11,862. (Mr. Coleridge.) You go to Cardiff in ballast, I suppose, and come down with coal?—No, we carry away a general cargo, anything that is going.

11,863. (Mr. Price.) Are you loading now?—Partly loading.

11,864. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often have you been bribed at the elections?—Twice.

11,865. (Mr. Price.) Which elections?—Bagehot's and Vanderbyl's.

11,866. How much did you get?—10*l.* each time.

11,867. Who from?—Mr. Bussell.

11,868. Henry Bussell?—Yes.

11,869. Are those the only occasions on which you have been bribed?—Yes.

11,870. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

11,871. Why did not you get any money then?—I did not see any.

11,872. Did you make any bargain about it?—No.

11,873. Did you ask for it?—No.

11,874. Were you promised?—No.

11,875. Did you vote early in the morning?—No.

11,876. What time did you vote?—After dinner.

11,877. Did not you hear there was anything going?—Not till after the election was over.

11,878. Then when you heard that, did you say if there was any money going you were entitled to some?—I dare say I should.

11,879. Who to?—Anyone that asked me.

11,880. Did you say it to Bussell?—I think I did.

11,881. What did Bussell say to you?—He did not say anything to me on this occasion.

11,882. You said to him there was money going, and others had had money, and you thought you ought to have some?—I did not say anything about others having any.

11,883. What did you say?—I said if there had been any going, I should like to have it as well as the rest.

11,884. Had not you heard there was money going?—No.

11,885. (Mr. Anstey.) When you spoke to him you had?—That was in the morning part of the day I said that.

11,886. What did he say?—He said there was nothing going.

11,887. Afterwards, when you heard money had been going, you spoke to him again?—No, not till after the poll was closed.

11,888. Did you ever speak to him about money afterwards?—No.

11,889. Did you expect to have any?—No.

11,890. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first have a vote?—At Sir John Shelley's election in 1865.

11,891. You got money then?—No.

11,892. Did you have a good deal of beer?—Not much.

11,893. Whatever you had you did not pay for?—No.

11,894. Grog, too?—I might have had a drop of grog.

11,895. (Mr. Anstey.) At what house?—I think the most of what I drank was at Captain Bussell's house.

11,896. The "Anchor"?—Yes, I think.

11,897. (Mr. Price.) How much did you manage to consume?—I cannot say.

11,898. Was it such a large quantity?—Perhaps a shilling's worth altogether.

11,899. (Mr. Anstey.) Were there other people drinking?—Not very many.

11,900. Was there anything like 30*l.* or 40*l.* worth of drink that you saw expended at Mr. Bussell's?—I cannot say anything about that, because I was there only a short time.

11,901. How long were you there?—The evening before the election. I came home from Cardiff that day. I was telegraphed for.

11,902. By whom? Bussell?—Yes.

11,903. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you get 5*l.* for your expenses?—I did not get a farthing.

11,904. You asked for something?—I expected something.

11,905. You would not have come without?—No, I should not.

11,906. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get any drink at the two elections where you were bribed?—Oh, I do not know that I had anything particular.

11,907. But you had some?—Very likely.

11,908. What house?—Well, I do not know.

11,909. What houses, rather?—I do not know that it was in any house particular, one more than another.

11,910. How many houses did you get drink in?—Well, I think I had some at the "Anchor."

11,911. Where else?—I think I had some at the "Fountain."

11,912. (Mr. Price.) That is Crocker's?—Yes.

11,913. (Mr. Anstey.) Where else?—Nowhere else that I remember.

11,914. Which election was it?—Bagehot's.

11,915. And again at Vanderbyl's election?—What, this last election?

11,916. No, the first time for that member?—I do not know that I had any then.

11,917. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you had no vote in 1859?—When Sir John Shelley was elected?

11,918. No, but the time before that?—No, not before that.

11,919. How was that?—You will find it by the list of voters.

11,920. How came you, a master mariner, not to have a vote?—I did not live in a rated house.

11,921. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything more to to tell us?—Well, I can tell you that when I came here the last time from Cardiff I never had any bribe whatever.

11,922. No, but you expected to get paid?—Yes.

11,923. Was anything said in the telegram about being paid?—I was not telegraphed for.

11,924. Why did you come from Cardiff?—I knew that the election was coming on.

11,925. I thought you said you were telegraphed for?—That was Sir John Shelley's election.

11,926. At the last election you knew the election was coming off, and you came away?—Came away on purpose.

11,927. Expecting to get something?—I do not know about that.

11,928. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had plenty of drink at the last election?—No, never had but one glass of whisky all the time.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Mr. W. Mayne.

3 Sept. 1869.

11,929. Where ?—At the " King's Head."

11,930. Did you pay for it ?—No.

11,931. Why not ?—Me and another captain went in, and he offered to pay for it, but there was nothing to pay for it.

11,932. (Mr. Anstey.) On those various occasions when you had drink did you pay for the many glasses of drink you had ?—Sometimes.

11,933. On any occasions when you had drink did you pay for it ?—Yes.

11,934. Which ?—I do not know one more than another.

11,935. You told us just now you had drink ?—Sometimes, when there was plenty of drink.

11,936. Was there any payment ?—Sometimes we paid for it and sometimes we did not pay for it.

11,937. How much did you pay for at the last election ?—I cannot say.

11,938. Did you pay anything ?—Yes.

11,939. How much ?—Perhaps I spent half-a-crown.

11,940. How much did you pay at the two others ?—I cannot say.

11,941. Did you pay anything ?—Oh, yes ; there would be sure to be something paid. We could not always go into an open house.

11,942. Did you pay ?—Yes.

11,943. How much was paid for you ?—That I cannot say.

11,944. Something was paid for you ; at least, you had drink at every one of these elections ?—When there is a lot of people coming in to drink ——

11,945. You had drink at every one of these elections for which you did not pay ?—I may.

11,946. (Mr. Price.) You know that the drinking was going on at almost all these houses ?—When ; at which election ?

(Mr. Anstey.) Every election.

11,947. (Mr. Price.) All the elections you have taken part in. There was a certain number of houses in which you knew you could go and have drink without paying ?—I did not know there was anything going on at the last election.

11,948. If you had known it you would have gone ?—I should have gone and took part along with the rest.

11,949. (Mr. Anstey.) You had a glass of whiskey ?—Yes.

11,950. You did not pay for that ?—No.

11,951. I suppose you do not mean to pay for it ?—I expect not.

Mr. Fennelly.

Mr. FENNELLY called.

(Mr. Price.) I do not know whether you were here yesterday when I addressed Dr. Kinglake.

(Mr. Fennelly.) Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Well, I am going to make similar remarks to you, because we have come to the conclusion that you stand in a very similar predicament to that of Dr. Kinglake, in that you have taken a very active part in procuring money, knowing that it was going to be spent in bribery purposes, and in seeing that the money was so applied. In fact, your case is rather worse than Dr. Kinglake's on that account, that you actually took part in the distribution. Having view, therefore, to the fact that it may be necessary for us to make a report upon which proceedings may be taken against you by the Attorney-General, we shall not swear you as a witness, thereby entitling you at the same time to a certificate of protection. At the same time you may make any statement you please at your own risk ; but if you do make a statement, that statement may be used against you in case of any proceedings being instituted. As I said to Dr. Kinglake, therefore, you had better consider the question over ; but under these circumstances we shall not swear you as a witness.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

Mr. HENRY LOVIBOND recalled.

11,952. (Mr. Price.) Were you one of a deputation that went on the Saturday night to Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Mr. Vanderbyl ? No.

11,953. The deputation consisted of Mr. Sealy, Mr. Barham, you Mr. Lovibond, and a Mr. Sully, not the mayor but another Mr. Sully ?—I have no recollection of it. Is that the Saturday night before the election ?

11,954. Yes ?—I have no recollection of it at all.

11,955. Did you on any Saturday, or any day, if we are wrong as to the day ?—I have no recollection of it at all.

11,956. Do you remember forming one of a deputation consisting of yourself, Mr. Sealy, Mr. Barham, and Mr. Sully ?—I really have no recollection of that. Can you suggest what time in the day, sir ?

11,957. Saturday night I put it to you ; the evening of Saturday ?—I think not. I have not the slightest recollection of it. I attended a meeting. It is right for me to say that there was a public meeting in this hall, and there was a meeting afterwards at Mr. Sealy's house.

11,958. There was a public meeting here in the hall, and then a meeting at Mr. Sealy's ? What was that about ?—That was about a communication which Mr. Sealy had received from Mr. Fennelly relative to the Lundy Granite Company, as to the evidence which had been given in the Court of Chancery, before the examiner of the Court of Chancery.

11,959. With respect to Mr. Vanderbyl's connexion with that company ?—Yes.

11,960. What was the conclusion come to ?—The conclusion come to was that under the circumstances we thought that we should support Mr. Vanderbyl.

11,961. Did you wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl to communicate to him that you were satisfied with his conduct, you and other gentlemen, after the explanation ?—I have no recollection of that at all.

11,962. Will you undertake to say that that did not take place, Mr. Lovibond ?—Will I undertake to say that the deputation did not take place ?

11,963. That you were not present with the deputation ?—I will undertake to say that I have not the slightest recollection.

11,964. Do you remember afterwards, do you remember at a subsequent time, informing Mr. Vanderbyl that you had come to the conclusion that he must go to the wall, and his expression of astonishment by saying, " How ill I am used ! It is only so short a " time since you told me you were satisfied with my " conduct " ?—No ; but I recollect going to him at 12 o'clock on the polling day, and telling him I thought there was no chance of his being returned.

11,965. This is previously to the polling day. Did you come to any resolution afterwards, or do you know of any resolution come to afterwards by those with whom you were acting, that Mr. Vanderbyl must be told he must go to the wall ?—No.

11,966. Did nothing of the kind take place to your knowledge ?—Nothing. I have no recollection of anything of the kind.

11,967. You say you used no persuasion to make people bribe at the last election ?—No persuasion. No.

11,968. No persuasion to make people bribe. On Friday morning did you see Mr. Barham at the " Globe " ?—I do not recollect, on Friday morning, that ?

11,969. You do not ?—No.

11,970. Do you remember Mr. Fennelly being asked to go to Mr. Barham's office ?—I do ; and meeting Mr. Fennelly there.

11,971. Do you remember it being said then by you that Kinglake's party had 1,500*l.*, and hoped that Fennelly had a like amount ?—No.

11,972. Nothing of the kind ?—Nothing of the kind.

11,973. That you swear?—That I swear; but at that meeting something was said——

11,974. Let me go on; then you shall explain. Was it made a proposition to Mr. Fennelly that Mr. Vanderbyl should spend 3,000*l.* in the first instance, and you would lodge half of the sum after the election?—No.

11,975. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

11,976. Did Fennelly say that he had come down not for spending money, or that Mr. Vanderbyl had come down not for spending money, but for preventing money being spent?—He said that Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money.

11,977. Did he say those words?—I do not recollect those other words.

11,978. Why should he say Mr. Vanderbyl did not intend to spend money unless something had been said to him first about money being spent?—I believe that something had been said before.

11,979. What had been said?—I believe that Mr. Barham made some communication to him.

11,980. What did he say?—That some money would be wanted for election purposes.

11,981. In your presence?—No.

11,982. You recognize the interview, do you?—I do.

11,983. Did Mr. Barham tell you that he had said so, that money would be wanted; that he had told Mr. Fennelly?—Yes.

11,984. When?—Some three or four days before.

11,985. Now you recognize this interview, as I understand, as an interview which did take place at Mr. Barham's office?—I do.

11,986. Now, it is on that occasion that I am asking you whether Mr. Fennelly did not say that Mr. Vanderbyl was come down not to spend money but to prevent money being spent?—Not the latter part; the first part, that he had come down not to spend money.

11,987. How came Mr. Fennelly to make that remark unless something had been said to him at that interview about spending money?—Something was said by Messrs. Reed and Cook.

11,988. What did they say?—They said the election could not be won without money.

11,989. Did you take any part in the conversation?—I did. I told Mr. Fennelly that I could not advise any candidate to spend money, and Mr. Barham did the same thing.

11,990. Now you put it on Reed and Cook?—That was so.

11,991. We shall hear what they say. Did you say that you were delighted to hear it?—That he would not spend money?

11,992. Yes?—I believe something to that effect. I won't pledge myself as to those words.

11,993. Or was it Mr. Barham that said he was delighted to hear it?—I do not know; but Mr. Barham and myself took both the same part in saying we could not advise any candidate to spend money; it was an illegal act, and we could not advise it.

11,994. Did Barham say that some steps would have to be taken, for he believed arrangements had already been made to the contrary, and he should consult the other solicitors?—I have no recollection of his stating that.

11,995. Will you swear he did not?—No; I have no recollection of his stating that.

11,996. That is a very remarkable conversation. Have you a sufficiently clear recollection of what took place at that interview to say that Mr. Barham or yourself, one or the other of you, did not say that arrangements had been made to the contrary, and he should be obliged to consult the other solicitors?—My own impression is that neither Mr. Barham nor myself said anything of the kind.

11,997. Were Reed and Cook present at that interview?—They were.

11,998. How many were present?—Mr. Barham, myself, Messrs. Reed and Cook, and Mr. Fennelly.

11,999. That would be five?—That was five.

12,000. Well now, was any wish expressed to see Mr. Vanderbyl himself by anybody?—Well, I am not sure whether Messrs. Reed and Cook, or one of them, did not express a wish to see him.

12,001. Well, did, accordingly, Mr. Vanderbyl come down to Mr. Barham's office?—No.

12,002. Did he come anywhere to have an interview?—Not that I am aware.

12,003. You did not see him?—I did not.

12,004. Was a message sent up to Mr. Vanderbyl to come?—I really do not recollect. I cannot answer.

12,005. Do you remember a message being sent, and Mr. Fennelly coming back and saying——?—Well, now I have an impression that there was a message sent, and that Mr. Vanderbyl came, and that as soon as ever Mr. Vanderbyl came we left.

12,006. Whom did you leave; you were at Barham's office; whom did you leave when you went away?—I am not certain whether Messrs. Reed and Cook came away with me. I left Mr. Fennelly there.

12,007. You left Fennelly, Barham, and Reed and Cook, you think?—I think Reed and Cook. I am not sure whether they left with me or not.

12,008. I put this to you distinctly. Was not there a conversation then in Mr. Vanderbyl's presence; were not the same arguments gone through, and were you not the principal spokesman, and did you not say the election was sure to be lost if no money was spent?—Most certainly not.

12,009. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there no part of that conversation?—No, I never had such a conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl.

12,010. Did not Vanderbyl express his great surprise?—He did not. I had no conversation with him.

12,011. (Mr. Price.) Was anything said that there was no hope for Vanderbyl?—I think it very possible that Messrs. Reed and Cook might have said something of that kind to Mr. Fennelly before Mr. Vanderbyl came.

12,012. Very likely that was so. Then we will put Mr. Vanderbyl as absent. Was anything said in your presence, that there was no hope unless money was spent?—I think it is very likely there was by Messrs. Reed and Cook.

12,013. Have you any doubt there was?—I have some impression that something was said of the kind.

12,014. Do not say that you have an "impression." Have you any doubt?—I believe it was.

12,015. There is no doubt it was?—I believe something of that sort was said.

12,016. Now Mr. Fennelly is here, and he has not yet been examined. I think it right to tell you, Mr. Lovibond, that it does not impress us very well when you say "I think there was," or "I have some impression"?—I wish to give you a truthful account.

12,017. Did Mr. Fennelly say that he was prepared to take the consequences of spending 5,000*l.*, and even have a petition?—I really do not know that he did.

12,018. Did he say anything about preferring to take the consequences, and that he would spend a sum of 5,000*l.*, even if there was a petition?—I know Mr. Fennelly was very emphatic in stating that he would not spend any money.

12,019. That is not the question. Have you any recollection of his making use of this remarkable expression, that he was prepared to take the consequences, and he preferred to spend 5,000*l.*, even if there was a petition?—I really do not recollect that.

12,020. Will you undertake to say that was not said?—No; but as far as my memory serves me——

12,021. If you say you were against all bribing, and if this conversation went on, and it seems to have gone on for some time, why did not you get up and leave the room? Why on earth did not you get up and say, "I will have nothing to do with it"?—The conversation was only about a minute or two.

12,022. Did he say anything about Mr. Vanderbyl having been made a fool of?—That, sir, I do not recollect—anything of the kind said.

12,023. Will you swear that was not said?—No.

12,024. Was anything said to you about the senior

ELEVENTH DAY.

Mr. H. Lovibond.

3 Sept. 1869.

candidate being the person who ought to be preferred?—No.

12,025. Was anything said to you about the senior candidate being the proper person to be preferred?—No.

12,026. Did Mr. Vanderbyl himself say, or Mr. Fennelly say, that he must be prepared to pay one half of what his friends thought necessary?—No.

12,027. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind that I remember.

12,028. Was anything said about the junior member being the proper person to retire?—No.

12,029. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

12,030. No suggestion was made at that interview with Mr. Fennelly that Mr. Vanderbyl ought to retire?—No, certainly not.

12,031. Did Mr. Kinglake's friends say he would pay half of what his friends thought necessary?—No.

12,032. Did anybody say anything on behalf of Mr. Kinglake?—No.

12,033. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

12,034. Did you give him to understand that you would not support Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, certainly not.

12,035. In no way whatever?—Certainly not.

12,036. Then you mean us to understand that nothing of the kind at all which I suggest at this interview took place?—I do.

12,037. Then what was the interview about?—I was requested to attend the meeting for the purpose, I think Messrs. Reed and Cook requested me, of hearing what Mr. Fennelly should say in answer to a communication that had been made to him by Mr. Barham.

12,038. This was at Mr. Barham's office on Friday?—At Mr. Barham's office; I think it was the Friday.

12,039. What was the communication?—To hear from Mr. Fennelly that Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money.

12,040. He would not spend any money?—He would not spend any money.

12,041. Very well; there was no occasion to consult about that when there; you were all prepared to have a pure election. What was there to consult about?—Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook asked me to attend.

12,042. Now I ask you, and beg you to consider your professional reputation and position, you say you were going to Mr. Barham's to hear Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money. Was not that meeting for you, the lawyers, to consider whether if Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money he ought to be supported or not?—No.

12,043. Or ought to retire?—No.

12,044. Then what was it for?—My impression was this, that Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook——

12,045. No; you told us that the communication you expected to receive was that Mr. Vanderbyl had announced his determination to spend no money?—Yes.

12,046. Why was there any necessity for that if you had made up your mind to let it be well known that you did not intend money to be spent. Why should there be a consultation about that communication at Mr. Barham's office; now we will wait?—As I said before, I was requested to attend that meeting.

12,047. We know you were requested; but I ask you what did you understand, or what could be the meaning of having a consultation about the announcement on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl that he would spend no money, if you, on the part of Mr. Kinglake, had already announced your intention to spend none, and intended to spend none?—I do not know.

12,048. Now, Mr. Lovibond?—Yes.

12,049. Do you understand the question?—Yes; I think it is this——

12,050. If you understand the question, I ask you again what could be the meaning of your immediate consultation at Mr. Barham's office with respect to the alleged declaration of Mr. Vanderbyl that he would not spend any money, when you, on the part of Mr. Kinglake, had made up your mind that no money should be spent and intended to conduct the election purely?—I believe it was this, to advise with Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook, they wished me to attend and advise Mr. Fennelly to spend money on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl.

12,051. Then you were asked to go there to a consultation to encourage the spending of money?—I believe so.

12,052. Is that consistent with what I have read to you just now, that you had announced your intention that you would use no persuasion to make people bribe?—Yes, I said I would not advise any candidate to spend money.

12,053. You did. You say you made up your mind not to spend money and to use no persuasion to make people bribe. Then why did you go to Mr. Barham's office with the knowledge that you were to go to persuade Reed and Cook to get Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money?—I have not stated that I went to persuade Reed and Cook.

12,054. Then what for? I have asked you over and over again the reason why you went, and you have not told us?—I thought I had.

12,055. What was it?—That Reed and Cook wished me to hear what was said by Mr. Fennelly.

The shorthand writer read the previous answer of the witness, namely, "I believe it was this, to advise "with Messrs. Reed and Cook, that they wished me "to attend and advise Mr. Fennelly to spend money on "behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl."

12,056. How is that consistent, that you were to go down there to consult with Messrs. Reed and Cook for the purpose of advising Mr. Fennelly to get Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money, how is that consistent with your previous statement that you had used no persuasion to make people bribe, and that you intended to conduct the election purely?—(The witness hesitated.)

12,057 (Mr. Anstey.) Make haste.—I do not know how to answer that question.

12,058. (Mr. Price.) That is the answer you give us? Do you mean now to say, having told us that you went down there with the full knowledge that you were to be asked to assist in advising Mr. Fennelly to get Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money, you used no persuasion at the last election to make people bribe?—No, I have not stated so, because I had an arrangement with Dr. Kinglake. He came and made the arrangements with me for bribery.

12,059. It is very extraordinary that you do not attend. Are we to take it you have said you used no persuasion to make people bribe at the last election, I understood you to answer that in the affirmative?—Yes.

12,060. Then you do say you have used no persuasion?—Yes.

12,061. Then I ask how is that consistent with the fact that you now tell us you went to that office intending to take part in advising Mr. Fennelly to get Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money?—I advised him not to spend money at that meeting.

12,062. Why did you not, if you intended to conduct this election purely, when you were asked to go to Mr. Barham's office and assist in inducing Mr. Fennelly to spend money, say "I will have anything to do with "it because I am determined to conduct the election "purely"?—It was a meeting of all the solicitors, Mr. Barham, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Cook, to hear Mr. Fennelly himself.

12,063. To hear from Mr. Fennelly that Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend money?—Yes, and I said I could not advise him to do so.

12,064. Now you say you went by Messrs. Reed and Cook's desire to assist in advising Mr. Fennelly to spend money. You have said so?—Yes.

12,065. Having been asked to go down there for that express purpose, and not having refused to go, do you mean to impose upon us by telling us that you dissuaded him from spending money?—I do not intend to impose upon the court, but I say this, that I never at that meeting advised him to spend money.

12,066. Did you dissuade him?—Certainly, I said I could not.

12,067. Having been asked by Mr. Reed and Mr.

Cook to go down and assist in persuading him to spend money, that what you did was exactly the contrary to what you were asked to do?—Certainly.

12,068. You dissuaded him?—I said, "I cannot "advise Mr. Vanderbyl to do an illegal act."

12,069. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Fennelly is the question, not Mr. Vanderbyl?—Mr. Fennelly.

12,070. Do you mean to say you told Mr. Vanderbyl you could not advise Mr. Fennelly?—Yes.

12,071. He was not a candidate?—No.

12,072. I have listened with great attention to your answers, and I am very sorry to say there is a great vein of mental reservation running through them, and when you are asked about bribery agents and bribery and persons to be employed in that sort of thing you invariably answer thus, that you said, "I could not "advise the candidate to spend money." You do not say that you set your face against other people spending money, on the contrary you have yourself volunteered again the statement, that you were at that moment, and had been a week before, in full possession of an arrangement come to between you and one who was not a candidate but a candidate's brother and agent, Dr. Kinglake, for providing money to be spent in bribery. Is not that the fact?—Certainly.

12,073. Then are you not trimming in your evidence for the last half an hour upon the Chief Commissioner's questions which refer to bribery, generally by people on your side, in the restrictive answers which you give confined to the candidates per se et eo nomine, a distinction which we all understand. Is not that so?—No.

12,074. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then why, if you were advising Dr. Kinglake on behalf of his brother to spend money, did you advise Mr. Fennelly on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl not to expend it?—I never advised Mr. Kinglake to spend money. I was anxious not to spend money if it could be avoided at all.

12,075. Granted, if it could be avoided; but you adopted Dr. Kinglake's intention of providing money for his brother, and took steps to carry it out?—I did.

12,076. Why, having done that, did you draw a distinction between Dr. Kinglake, who we understand was not very wealthy, and Mr. Vanderbyl who was, and tell Mr. Vanderbyl he should not, and Dr. Kinglake that he should if necessary? What is the distinction you draw?—I will try and explain myself to the court if I can. It was this: I said I would not advise Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Fennelly to spend money.

12,077. (Mr. Price.) Did you say why?—Because it was an illegal act which a lawyer would not be justified in doing.

12,078. You had already conspired with Dr. Kinglake to bribe if it became necessary?—It was the own act of Dr. Kinglake, not mine.

12,079. (Mr. Coleridge.) But what distinction do you draw between advising Dr. Kinglake, who was your own particular client, to spend money, and Mr. Vanderbyl not to spend money, because according to your statement you took more care of Reed and Cook's client than your own?—I never advised it.

12,080. But you adopted his suggestion, and took means to carry it out?—No doubt.

12,081. Then why on earth if you adopted that for your client should you be so anxious for the purity of Mr. Vanderbyl?—I was not so anxious for purity on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl.

12,082. (Mr. Price.) Why were you so anxious to spare his pocket?—What I said was this, I could not advise him to do an illegal act.

12,083. Did you say the same to Dr. Kinglake, the brother of your own client, when he had the 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.* ready? Did you say as a lawyer to him, "I advise you not to do it"?—I do not think I did.

12,084. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does it come to this, that in reality what you mean by not advising Mr. Finnelly is, that you stated, qua lawyer, "I cannot advise you "to spend it in my legal capacity," but did not raise any moral objection?—No doubt about it; that is precisely the case as you put it; I did not.

12,085. (Mr. Price.) You might have told us that before, and I should like you to explain really as a professional man your own statement why you did not, as a lawyer and moral man and friend of Mr. Kinglake, give Dr. Kinglake the same advice as you were prepared to give or gave to Mr. Vanderbyl. You know the relation between attorney and client is a confidential relation; and being a personal friend of Mr. Kinglake's, why did not you use the same arguments to Dr. Kinglake to persuade him not to spend money that you say you were prepared to use, and did use, to Mr. Vanderbyl's friend, Mr. Finnelly?—(No answer.)

(Mr. Anstey.) Cannot you answer that question?

12,086. (Mr. Price.) Why did you not use the same objections to Dr. Kinglake, or urge them on Dr. Kinglake, the brother of your friend and client, that you say you urged for the benefit of Mr. Vanderbyl on his friend, Mr. Fennelly?—(The witness hesitated.)

12,087. I wish you to answer that question. Knowing your relation to Mr. Kinglake, both as professional adviser as well as friend, and as a member of the profession to which we belong?—(The witness hesitated.)

12,088. (Mr. Anstey.) Now will you answer?—I really do not know how to answer that question.

12,089. To make it more clear, as we have it on the shorthand notes of yesterday, and I believe according to the truth of the case, that at this very time Mr. Vanderbyl and Messrs. Reed and Cook, for whom you pretend now to have been so solicitous that they should not spend money illegally, were not on the best terms at that time—I am speaking politically with reference to the election—either with you or your candidate, Mr. Kinglake; there was not the best feeling at that moment on the Saturday?—I really do not know with regard to Messrs. Reed and Cook and Mr. Kinglake.

12,090. Well then, between two knots of lawyers, one consisting of Messrs. Reed and Cook and their adherents, and the other of yourself and yours?—Between myself and Messrs. Reed and Cook I believe there was an estrangement.

12,091. Any professional jealousy whatever about this getting Mr. Vanderbyl—— ?—No, nothing of the kind.

12,092. No difference of opinion?—No.

(Mr. Price.) What was the estrangement?

12,093. (Mr. Anstey.) What was it? You told us between the moves and counter-moves made by you and Messrs. Reed and Cook with respect to the retiring of one of the candidates?—That was on the Sunday previous to the election, at a meeting at which it was suggested——

12,094. Was not there some feeling between you and Messrs. Reed and Cook, or you and Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

12,095. If you were in favour of Mr. Vanderbyl being pressed to retire—— ?—I certainly was.

12,096. Was not there some feeling on that subject?—I think not.

12,097. You told me so yesterday, and it is on the notes, that there was not the best feeling at that time prevailing between you and that firm, and you added that "there was no such bad feeling between myself "and Mr. Barham, and I cannot say whether any bad "feeling between Mr. Barham and Messrs. Reed and "Cook, but there certainly was no very friendly feeling "between me and Messrs. Reed and Cook on that "subject"?—On the subject of Mr. Vanderbyl?

12,098. Yes?—I was not aware of it.

12,099. (Mr. Price.) Then what was the estrangement?—Really I cannot tell what it was.

12,100. You say there was an estrangement between you and Messrs. Reed and Cook; can you give us no idea what it was?

12,101. (Mr. Anstey.) I shall be obliged to get this out of another person, and as sure as you are standing there if I do I shall be fully prepared to take upon myself the responsibility as regards myself of ulterior measures. Did not you tell Mr. James Trevor, whom you followed up to London, did not you make to Mr. James Trevor in London when you followed him up there, that very statement which you pretend now to contradict, namely, that there was not a good feeling prevailing between you and Messrs. Reed and Cook on the subject of the question which was to be pressed to retire, Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl? Did you tell him that?—No.

12,102. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now, allow me to go back, and to put it in the most favourable way to you, and drawing the distinction which you do between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake as to the money, do you draw the subtle distinction in your mind that whereas Dr. Kinglake took the initiative in suggesting bribery to you, you were requested on the other hand to suggest it to Mr. Vanderbyl; is that the distinction you draw between the two?—No; the distinction I draw is this, I said I could not advise any person to do an illegal act.

(Mr. Price.) You declined to accept that favourable position, but would rather stand on what you said before, that you can give us no reason why you did not urge the same objection to your client's brother as you did to Mr. Vanderbyl? You prefer it to stand in that way after the suggestion of my learned colleague?

12,103. (Mr. Coleridge.) I put it to you, and it was in consequence of an answer which you made that you could not advise it; what I say is, taking the most favourable view, that you draw a distinction between the initiative being taken by Dr. Kinglake in suggesting bribery and your accepting it, and being asked on the other hand to recommend bribery to Mr. Fennelly, and for him to accept it?—Certainly, that is it precisely.

12,104. (Mr. Price.) If that is so, how on earth has it happened that you, when I pressed you over and over again, did not give it as a reason until it was suggested to you by my learned colleague?—I was anxious to give you a simple answer.

12,105. You said you could give no account of it. I asked you two or three times how you could account for the fact that you had not urged the same objection on your client's part and your friend's part with regard to bribery that you had urged on Mr. Vanderbyl's friend, Mr. Fennelly, and you said you could give no reason. It was within the hearing of all around here.

(Mr. Anstey.) And on our notes.

12,106. (Mr. Price.) You were asked two or three times, and now after this long pause you adopt my colleague's suggestion, that it was because Dr. Kinglake took the initiative. Do you mean now to say that that operated on your mind, and made you draw the distinction in the way you dealt with Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Fennelly at Mr. Barham's office?—I mean to say this——

12,107. I ask you, do you draw a distinction between his taking the initiative and suggesting it to you?—I do, certainly.

12,108. (Mr. Anstey.) What is your distinction?—As a solicitor——

12,109. As a man of honour, as a man of law, as a man of common sense, and as a moral man, what is the distinction you make?—This is it, if the candidate chose to spend money it was a voluntary act of his, and should not be advised by his lawyer to do it.

12,110. Although to his lawyer's knowledge?—Certainly, if he chose to do it.

12,111. Your meaning is this, that you were fully prepared in your personal capacity as Henry Lovibond to enter into a foul and wicked conspiracy with one Dr. Kinglake to commit bribery and use corrupt practices, but were not prepared in your capacity as a gentleman, and one of Her Majesty's attornies at law and a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, to advise Dr. Kinglake that it was safe for him to do so. Is that the distinction you take; is that it, or not?—Your question is so long I cannot follow you.

12,112. (Mr. Price.) Surely as an attorney you do not mean to represent that wishing it to be a pure election it would not have been your duty if you had acted strictly according to your duty to try to dissuade Dr. Kinglake from spending money?—Certainly not. I quite agree with you that I did not do my duty, no doubt, in not attempting to dissuade him from spending money.

12,113. (Mr. Anstey.) But you have admitted that you entered into a conspiracy with Dr. Kinglake a week before to bribe or provide money for bribery, have you not?—Yes, I have.

12,114. Now you say you were not prepared to advise the candidate that it was safe or legal to do so?—No, I said this——

12,115. That you told them at this meeting on the Sunday that you could not advise any candidate to do so?—I said I could not advise any candidate to do so; to do an illegal act.

12,116. That is, you meant to advise them it was against the law, was not it? Your meaning was that you could not advise them that it was not against the law to bribe?—I presume that was the inference.

12,117. But did not you mean that you were perfectly ready in your personal capacity as Henry Lovibond to engage and allow them to engage in it, saying that you were then and had been for a week past deeply engaged in it?—No doubt that is so.

12,118. It appears to me that if there is any difference between the two cases, your position is infinitely worse than your previous answer had made it?

12,119. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now to hark back a little. I suppose the state of the election was such that it would have been a much safer thing for Mr. Kinglake if Mr. Vanderbyl had retired?—Certainly.

12,120. And you acting for Mr. Kinglake, was not your real motive in advising Mr. Vanderbyl not to spend money because you knew he could not get in, and by not getting in he would help Mr. Kinglake?—No.

12,121. That was not your motive?—No, I was not guilty of disloyalty to Mr. Vanderbyl.

12,122. Then you meant that you were acting cordially altogether, because we have heard there was not the best of feeling between you and Messrs. Reed and Cook. Was not there a sort of jealous feeling on your part that you were rather interfered with, and your position hazarded, and that it would be better if he were to retire?—No.

12,123. I thought you said "Yes"?—No, at the meeting on Sunday.

12,124. (Mr. Price.) We will come to that presently; still I want to know what was your reason for urging on Mr. Vanderbyl's friend, Mr. Fennelly, that he had better not spend money. Was it the legal ground, or was it the moral abhorrence you had of it, or if not the moral abhorrence what was it?—Simply this, that it should not be said I ever advised Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Fennelly to do an illegal act.

12,125. You take the word "advise," and harp upon the word "advise," you did not want to advise?—Yes.

12,126. As a lawyer?—As a lawyer.

12,127. Supposing Mr. Fennelly had said, "I hear "you are prepared with a certain sum of money on "the part of Mr. Kinglake, I am prepared with a "certain sum on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl," would you then have told him, not being asked your advice, "I advise you to have nothing to do with bribery"?—No, I do not think I should.

12,128. Have done what?—Supposing Mr. Fennelly had come and said, "I am prepared with 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.* on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl," I should not have advised him or say, "Do not spend it."

12,129. Then, in point of fact, you would not take the initiative, but Mr. Fennelly you understood was disinclined to advise Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money?—Yes.

12,130. That you perfectly well knew?—Yes.

12,131. After you knew Dr. Kinglake was prepared to spend 1,500*l.*?—Yes.

12,132. Then you go to Mr. Barham's office;

asked to go to try and concur in some advice?—Not asked by Mr. Barham.

12,133. By Messrs. Reed and Cook?—Yes.

12,134. To go to Mr. Barham's office and concur in urging advice on Mr. Fennelly that Mr. Vanderbyl should spend money. Now, if you had made up your mind that as a lawyer you would not advise Mr. Fennelly to do any such thing, why did you go to that meeting at all?—I was at that meeting; I said I would not advise.

12,135. You knew what you were asked to go for, you knew you were asked to go and concur in, not to object to bribery as a crime in a moral point of view, you knowing that you were asked for that purpose, and that purpose alone; why did you go, you knowing you would not advise as a lawyer?—It was a meeting of all the lawyers; I was asked to attend the meeting.

12,136. Can you give no other answer to that question? Why did you go?—I do not think I can, except to attend the meeting with other solicitors.

12,137. But you knew the object, it was not generally to consult as to the interests of the party, but you were asked for a specific purpose by Messrs. Reed and Cook, "Will you come down and try to get Mr. Fennelly to "get Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money?" Why did not you say "Mr. Cook, I will have nothing to do with "any such transaction as a lawyer." I do not say as an act of morality, why did not you say "I cannot advise "Mr. Fennelly to do any such thing. You must "excuse me, I will not come"?—I really cannot tell why I did not say so.

12,138. That we may not have any dispute about it at all, because I may be wrong in saying that you made propositions, but in your hearing was no proposition made that Mr. Fennelly should spend on Mr. Vanderbyl's behalf 3,000*l.* in the first instance, and half of the sum should be lodged hereafter?—No.

12,139. Nothing of the kind?—No.

12,140. Was no proposition made as to any sum that Mr. Vanderbyl should spend in your presence?—No, no specific sum; only that he should spend money.

12,141. Was he informed of what you on the part of Mr. Kinglake were prepared to expend?—Certainly not.

12,142. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there any proposal as to the proportion he was to spend, namely, whether it should be the proportion of one half or one third of what Mr. Kinglake spent?—I think not.

12,143. (Mr. Price.) Then tell us what was said?—The communication was made by Mr. Fennelly that no money should be spent. Mr. Reed, I think it was, said, "It is perfectly useless to fight a Bridgwater elec- "tion without money. We will not play the fool's "game, as we did under Sir John Shelley. It is no "use to fight without money." Then I was appealed to by one of them, I do not know which, I think it was by Mr. Reed, and asked my opinion upon it, and I said, "Well, I will not advise the candidate to spend "money."

12,144. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you mean advise his agent?—Whether the candidate or his agent, I do not know.

12,145. (Mr. Anstey.) You have said all through "candidate"?—That is my impression; Mr. Barham will give you his account.

(Mr. Price.) We want your account.

12,146. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there anything you can at all refer to during the two or three days before the election which had given rise to the report that you had recommended that 3,000*l.* should be spent by Mr. Vanderbyl and half recouped, which was exactly in accordance with the arrangement made by you with Dr. Kinglake?—I cannot. I have not heard it until in this court.

12,147. (Mr. Anstey.) You swear that?—I do.

12,148. Notwithstanding the evidence you have given us of the arrangement come to between you and the candidate's brother and agent, Dr. Kinglake, the week before?—Yes, that is that Dr. Kinglake should spend 3,000*l.* and be recouped one half, I think it was.

12,149. (Mr. Price.) No, the proposition was just the other way, that Mr. Vanderbyl should spend 3000*l.* in the first instance, and then that someone on behalf of Mr. Kinglake should lodge half of that sum after the election?—Well, there was some proposition of that kind made.

12,150. You are the only person in this court who could not understand that.

(Mr. Anstey.) And your manner of giving evidence is most disgraceful to you.

12,151. (Mr. Price.) I put it to you in this form, in order that there may be no mistake or quibble as to who made the proposition and who spoke. Was there a proposition made, which was my question, that he, Mr. Fennelly, should spend 3,000*l.* in the first instance on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl, and that Mr. Kinglake's party would lodge the half afterwards. You said distinctly no?—Yes, to Mr. Fennelly. I say no proposition of that kind was made to my knowledge to Mr. Fennelly, but there was a proposition of that kind made.

12,152. Who to?—I cannot possibly tell you.

12,153. At that interview?—No, and I thought you were alluding to that.

12,154. When was it made?—I really cannot tell you.

12,155. (Mr. Anstey.) Before that meeting?—My own impression is that it was made before the meeting.

12,156. How many days?—I should think two or three days before.

12,157. (Mr. Price.) Who proposed it?—I think I did, but not to Mr. Fennelly.

12,158. Whom did you propose it to?—My impression is that it was Messrs. Reed and Cook.

12,159. Will you swear that Mr. Fennelly was not present?—I will. I never made that proposition to Mr. Fennelly.

12,160. Or in his presence?—Nor in his presence.

12,161. That you swear?—That I swear.

12,162. Who was present?—I think it was done between me and Messrs. Reed and Cook; no one else.

12,163. To your knowledge then, was not Mr. Fennelly informed of that at Mr. Barham's office?—No, to my knowledge he was not.

12,164. Will you undertake to say not?—I will undertake to my knowledge to say that he was not informed of that.

12,165. You had Mr. Fennelly there it seems to make a fool of him. Who came there first, you or Mr. Fennelly?—I believe Mr. Fennelly was there when I came.

12,166. You say your advice was not to spend money. What was said by other people there to Mr. Finnelly? Was he not informed of the negociation that had taken place between you and Mesrs. Reed and Cook as to this 3,000*l.*?—I certainly do not know. There was nothing of the kind which led me to suppose that he was or not.

12,167. What was he there for if not to discuss how much should be spent? Do you mean to say, when he was going to be urged by Messrs. Reed and Cook to spend money, that he was not informed that the proposition was one which had come from yourself to Messrs. Reed and Cook that he, Mr. Fennelly, or Mr. Vanderbyl should spend 3,000*l.* in the first instance, and be recouped one half; was not that the suggestion to Mr. Finnelly?—No.

12,168. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind at that meeting.

12,169. (Mr. Anstey,) The question is, ever?—Never to my knowledge. I cannot tell what Messrs. Reed and Cook may have done.

12,170. (Mr. Price.) Did not you intend that it should be conveyed to Mr. Vanderbyl, when you proposed to Messrs. Reed and Cook, that in the first instance Mr. Vanderbyl should spend 3,000*l.*? Did you not intend them to communicate the proposition of your side to Mr. Fennelly, or to Mr. Vanderbyl, was not the object of your telling Reed and Cook that?—I should imagine so.

12,171. Then have you the slightest doubt, having reference to that being the reason why you made that communication to Messrs. Reed and Cook, or do you still say that was not told to Mr. Fennelly at this interview?—I do.

12,172. You have no doubt, I suppose, that it had been told to him?—No. I really do not know that it had been told to him; I have not the slightest idea.

12,173. The object you had in mentioning it to Messrs. Reed and Cook was that it should be conveyed to Mr. Vanderbyl or his friend Mr. Fennelly as a proposition; was not that the object of your making the proposition, that it should be conveyed to Mr. Vanderbyl or to Mr. Fennelly or both of them?—No doubt of it.

12,174. Then have you the slightest doubt, from what transpired after, that Messrs. Reed and Cook did tell Mr. Fennelly that?—Yes; we had not the slightest idea from anything that Mr. Fennelly said at that meeting or any other meeting.

12,175. Was Mr. Fennelly, so far as he did speak at that meeting, entirely against spending any money for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Most certainly.

12,176. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had not Messrs. Reed and Cook told you that they had tried to persuade him to spend money, and that he would not do it, and they wanted you to advise him to do it?—No, I think not.

12,177. How was it you came to know of it? You were Mr. Kinglake's man and they were Mr. Vanderbyl's men. Why did you want to advise Mr. Finnelly when he was in the hands of Messrs. Reed and Cook?—My own impression is that at that time he was in the hands of Mr. Barham, and Mr. Barham asked me to come to that meeting.

12,178. Supposing he was under Mr. Barham, why were you wanted to bring your pressure upon him to induce him to spend money?—I cannot possibly tell you why.

12,179. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you tell me yesterday that at that time Mr. Barham was acting with you for Mr. Kinglake?—Yes, we were acting altogether for all the candidates.

12,180. I must say that you are not answering the questions put to you within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. You know the meaning of that intimation?—I am desirous of answering your questions, and giving you straightforward answers, if you will put the questions to me.

(The Commissioners retired for a short time, and on their return:)

(Mr. Price.) We have considered your conduct in the witness box to-day and yesterday, and considering that I gave you a caution as a professional man, that we should not expect to find that difficulty in eliciting from you answers to questions which we consider ourselves bound to put to you that we had encountered with respect to other witnesses of less intelligence and humbler position, it is our opinion that so far from obeying or falling in with the suggestion I made to you yesterday, you have wasted the time of the court by evading to give answers to questions which were intelligible to everybody in the court, and which required only a simple answer; and drawing your attention to the seventh section of the 26th Victoria, chapter 29, which provides for the manner in which witnesses shall conduct themselves before a commission, and the protection which shall be given to them if they comply with the requisites of the statute by answering every question relating to the matters which they shall be required by such commissioners to answer, which we interpret to mean that they shall be clear, simple, intelligible, and inevasive answers, we have come to the determination to put no further questions to you at present, and that if you make any statement at this time, it shall be a statement not made in answer to questions, and will not entitle you therefore to any protection whatever under that section of the statute. We shall dispense therefore at present with any further questioning of you with regard to any matters concerning the elections in the town of Bridgwater.

(The witness.) If the Commissioners will allow me to state that I most solemnly say I have not attempted to deceive the Commissioners in any way whatever, and if they will put any question to me now in reference to that meeting or any other, I will give them a straightforward answer, as I did yesterday relative to the transactions between Dr. Kinglake and myself.

(Mr. Price.) For the present that is our determination. We deal out the same measure to you that we should to any other witness, and I must repeat that in our judgment you have not answered questions put to you to-day in a straightforward manner.

(The witness.) I ask the court this, to have the kindness to suspend their judgment until they have heard Mr. Barham's evidence as regards that interview.

(Mr. Price.) Our judgment upon Mr. Barham's evidence must stand upon the manner in which Mr. Barham gives his evidence. We have considered this matter carefully both last night, and in consultation, and more than once to-day as to what course we should pursue in the case of a witness who, like yourself—had been called and sworn upon a collateral matter, as to what we should do in the case of that witness when asked as to the more material parts of the case, who should display a disinclination, as we believe you have done, to answer straightforwardly; therefore we have come to this determination, not in heat or excitement with regard to you at all, but as a deliberate determination on our part to deal in the same way with every other witness who may be called like yourself, and sworn collaterally, and who has not yet been examined as to the material matters touching this election; therefore we can hear no more from you now, Mr. Lovibond, unless you wish to make a statement, which, as I told you, you must consider will be made under no protection which that section of the statute contemplates.

Mr. E. Barham.

Mr. EUSTACE BARHAM recalled.

12,181. (Mr. Price.) We are under the painful necessity to be obliged to repeat to you, a professional man, the warning which we thought it our bounden duty to give yesterday to Mr. Lovibond. I do nothing more than to draw your attention to that warning before I proceed to examine you. You are an attorney practising at Bridgwater?—I am.

12,182. How long have you practised as an attorney?—I have practised since the year 1850.

12,183. On your own account or in partnership?—In partnership during the whole of the time.

12,184. With whom, during the first six years?—With a firm in Bristol. I came to Bridgwater in 1856.

12,185. Since you have been in Bridgwater, whom have you been in partnership with?—With my brother-in-law, Mr. Carslake.

12,186. The town clerk?—The town clerk.

12,187. Had you served your articles in Bridgwater?—The first two years of them.

12,188. Where?—With Mr. Carslake, who was then in partnership with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. That was from the 4th April 1845 to some time in the month of March 1847. I was then transferred to Bristol.

12,189. Therefore from 1847, when you were transferred to Bristol, until the time when you came back here and entered into partnership with Mr. Carslake, you had no business relations with Bridgwater?—Only occasionally business relations with reference to business going on in Bristol. I had occasionally to go to Bridgwater.

12,190. Now, as to the part you took in the last election, were you the agent in that election for any of the candidates?—Both for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

12,191. And you were returned as the agent under the statute?—As the agent under the statute.

12,192. Were you also in the position of agent, whether retained or not, for any of the candidates?—I was also the agent, politically speaking, of both Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

12,193. Did you hold their retainer?—No, I did not. I did not hold any retainer.

12,194. Were you paid for your services?—No.

12,195. Have you made any claim for them?—None whatever.

12,196. And do not mean to?—I do not mean to do so. In fact, I told Mr. Vanderbyl in reply to a question he once addressed to me that I should not make any claim upon him.

12,197. Is there any return in the election expenses which passed through your hands of agency fees?—There is some small charge for the election agent; I think it is a charge of 10*l.* which I have made as election agent, not for professional services otherwise than in superintending the payment of the bills.

12,198. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever been paid at any former election?—I was paid by Mr. Vanderbyl making me a present at some little time after the election.

12,199. A present of money?—A present of money.

12,200. But as a general rule at elections have you been paid, or is it the custom here for professional men to give their services gratuitously?—I can tell you my own practice.

12,201. From seeing the election expenses can you also tell us as to other agents?—Yes, as far as I know it has not been the practice to make out bills of costs, with only one or two exceptions. I think there was a case of Mr. Haviland who sent in a bill, and I myself did the same thing on the first occasion on which I had anything to do with elections here, namely, Sir John Shelley's election.

12,202. You say you are not in the habit of sending in a bill of costs. As far as my experience goes, the common thing is to give a lump retaining fee to the solicitor. Is there any such thing charged as 25 or 50 guineas, or whatever it may be, for a professional man's services during the election?—I recollect some such thing in the case of Mr. Haviland, not on our side.
